Q. Did I understand you to state that even before the United States entered the war, this German ownership had become harmful to the business of Spur? A. Yes; after the freezing took place, it became harmful.

Q. When did the freezing take place? A. It took place in June, 1941.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the most profitable year that Spur ever enjoyed in the long history of the company was the year 1941? A. Yes.

Q. And the reason, for the most part, for the loss following 1941 was the general, overall gasoline shortage; isn't that correct? A. I would say that was the substantial reason, yes.

1892 Q. Now, you say that your motive at that time was to free the company from German ownership. By "at that time" I am talking about, or I assume you were talking about, the time immediately preceding the entry of the United States into the war; is that correct? A. I was talking about the whole period.

Q. Of the whole period? A. The war.

Q. As a matter of fact, you were interested in freedom from the Fritz von Opel control or ownership even prior to that, weren't you? A. I don't recall; no. I am sure I would have preferred a different ownership than a German ownership, if that is what you are asking.

Q. That is my question. That was true even prior to the date— A. I think it would have been true from the day they entered it.

Q. German ownership, if it existed today, would not interfere with the operation of your business substantially, would it? A. I think it would interfere tremendously.

Q. Why? Today? A. I think so. Do you?

Q. No, I don't. I would like to know why you 1893 think so.

The Court: I do not think that makes much difference.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I do not believe this has been marked. Will you mark that, please, Mr. Clerk?

Do you have any objection to that Treasury report?

Mr. Gallagher: It is the one he testified yesterday he approved after Hines had filed it.

Mr. Burling: No objection.

(The Treasury report referred to was marked as Plaintiff's Exhibit 173 and received in evidence.)

Mr. Ingoldsby: That is all.

Mr. Baum: We will call Mr. Butler P. Crittenden.

Thereupon—BUTLER PARNELL CRITTENDEN was called as a witness and, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Baum:

Q. What is your full name, Mr. Crittenden? A. Butler Parnell Crittenden.

Q. Where do you reside, Mr. Crittenden? A. In Southbury, Connecticut.

Q. When were you born? A. November 8, 1889.

1894 Q. Where? A. In Rochester, New York.

Q. Will you state briefly for us your education? A. I was educated in the public schools of Rochester and attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where I was graduated as a mechanical engineer with a bachelor of science degree.

Q. Subsequent to your graduation from Massachusetts Institute of Technology, what has been your major occupation through the years? A. The engineering phase in the oil business.

Q. About how long have you been engaged in oil engineering or petroleum engineering? A. From 1920 to 1940.

Q. What did you do in 1940? A. In 1940 I took a position with Leonard Construction Company and the Civil Engineer Corps of the Navy in the construction of a fuel oil depot at Newport, Rhode Island.

Q. What is your present occupation, Mr. Crittenden? A. I am mechanical engineer with the firm of Westcott & Mapes, in New Haven.

Q. Did you ever do business under the name of Crittenden Engineering Company? A. Yes.

1895 Q. When was that company organized? A. In 1931.

Q. Where were your office located? A. At 420 Lexington Avenue, New York.

Q. Directing your attention to the year 1932, did you meet a man by the name of John Cole? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you meet him? A. In my office.

Q. Approximately when during the year 1932? A. Well, I would say early in the year 1932.

Q. What happened at this meeting with Mr. Cole? A. Mr. Cole called at my office and stated—

Mr. Ingoldsby: I object. I do not know what this is all about, but it seems to me like hearsay, if Mr. Cole is going to make some statement.

Mr. Baum: Mr. Cole acted as, at least, subagent for Mr. Hoffacker. Mr. Cole is the man who acquired the Spur stock, and Mr. Cole was the instrumentality in the enterprise we are coming to in Louisiana, which was also an asset of Uebersee.

The Court: You are going to connect it?

Mr. Baum: Yes; in fact, I think the answer will disclose that.

The Court: You could not connect him up as 1896 agent by what he says. Are you going to connect him up with intermediate proof?

Mr. Baum: I believe the proof of Mr. Cole's activities is already in the record, Your Honor.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I do not believe so.

The Court: You will have to refresh my recollection on that. The rule is that what an agent states is admissible; but you can't prove agency by what an alleged agent states; you have to prove it independently. If you can connect it up, I will permit it.

Mr. Baum: I will pass that. I think I can continue.

By Mr. Baum:

Q. You had this meeting with Mr. Cole. We won't go into what was said, at this point. Thereafter, did you have another meeting with Mr. Cole? A. Yes.

Q. Was anyone else with Mr. Cole at that meeting? A. Theodore Hoffacker.

Q. This meeting was held about how long after the first meeting with Mr. Cole? A. My memory is shortly after.

Q. Where? A. In the same office.

Q. In your office? A. Yes.

1897 Q. Did Mr. Hoffacker have any conversation with you at this meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what he said? A. He stated he was an agent acting in behalf of considerable, extended foreign funds, and that he was advisory and was looking around for potential investments in the oil business.

Q. Did Mr. Hoffacker make any reference to the source of the funds he referred to? A. Yes.

Q. What did he say? A. He said that he was agent for and adviser to Fritz von Opel, the son of Opel the automobile manufacturer in Germany, who had sold that company to General Motors.

Q. I ask you again, Did he say anything about what the source of the funds was?

Mr. Ingoldsby: Just a second. I object. I think that question has just been answered.

The Court: Well, he may amplify it, if there is anything further.

The Witness: Not beyond the fact that those funds were derived from the sale of the Opel Motor Works in Germany.

By Mr. Baum:

1898 Q. Did Hoffacker state what his purpose was in coming to see you? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what he stated? A. He stated that Mr. Cole had related to him our opinions on opportunities for investing money in the oil business and that he was greatly interested, and he suggested that we make a survey.

Q. Did Mr. Hoffacker ask you to do anything? A. Yes.
Q. What did he ask you to do?

Mr. Ingoldsby: When was this, please?

Mr. Baum: It has been identified, if Your Honor please, as shortly after the first meeting with Mr. Cole, which was early in the year 1932.

By Mr. Baum:

Q. Now, I believe the question is, What did Mr. Hoffacker ask you to do? A. Mr. Hoffacker asked us to furnish him an estimate of the cost of making a survey of purchasable crude oil producing properties in the Southwest and crude oil refining properties in the Southwest.

Q. Going back for a moment to your conversation with Mr. Hoffacker about those funds, did he say whose funds they were?

1899 Mr. Ingoldsby: Just a second. I think three attempts have been made at that, Your Honor, and three times the answer has been made. I object.

The Court: I will permit him to answer. I will do that.

Mr. Ingoldsby: May the conversation be placed, then, as to time and date?

Mr. Baum: It has been placed three times, if Your Honor please. It is the same conversation.

The Court: You can straighten it out on cross examination, if you wish. He may answer.

The Witness: Yes. He described the funds as funds derived from the sale of the Opel Motor Works in Germany, entrusted to the son of the owner, Fritz von Opel, and that he was an agent for Fritz von Opel and guided him solely in all of his investments in the United States.

By Mr. Baum:

Q. You just said funds entrusted to Wilhelm von Opel? A. No, I didn't say that; funds entrusted to the son by the father.

Q. Was the father's name mentioned? A. At that meeting, I wouldn't remember. It was subsequently, but it was always the owner of the Opel Motor Works.

Q. Going back to this report which you said Mr. 1900 Hoffacker asked you to prepare—or to the survey—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing) did you then undertake to prepare a survey? A. We did.

Q. Were you paid for undertaking that? A. Yes.

Q. What was your fee? A. As I remember, we asked for and were paid—it was either $12,500 or $15,000.

Q. Who paid you that sum? A. Theodore Hoffacker, agent.

Q. When you say, "we", do you mean the Crittenden Engineering Company? A. Crittenden Engineering.

Q. Some time thereafter you completed your survey; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. You submitted it to whom? A. Theodore Hoffacker.

Q. Will you tell us what happened after you submitted your survey or report? A. The report specifically recommended opportunities for acquiring crude oil producing properties and also a list of small crude oil refining properties.

1901 Shortly after the opportunity looked so favorable, there came under consideration a very much larger investment syndicate business proposition that had been discussed previously. Involved in that syndicate would have been, had it worked out, Theodore Hoffacker, Fritz von Opel, and several Chicago investors.

Q. About when was this consideration of the syndicate you have referred to? A. Very early in 1933.

Q. At the time this syndicate was under discussion, did you receive any further information about the funds which were to be invested? A. Yes.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I object. I think he should identify the source of the further information.

Mr. Baum: First, he has to show if he did receive any.
The Court: He can answer yes or no and tell.
The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Baum:

Q. From whom did you receive such information? A. The Crittenden Engineering Company employed agencies, first, to learn more about Theodore Hoffacker; and secondly, as to the ownership of the funds that Hoffacker had stated were in this country.

1902 Q. At this time did Mr. Hoffacker say anything to you about the funds? A. Mr. Hoffacker never deviated from the fact that the funds were funds derived from the sale of the Opel Motor Works and entrusted to the son, Fritz von Opel, by his father, and that he was agent.

Q. Did you ever hear the expression "usufruct contract"? A. Yes.

Q. When did you hear that expression? A. Some time later. Some time later, after these business undertakings were created; and then I heard it directly from Fritz von Opel himself on the trip I made to Germany.

Q. What happened to this proposal for a syndicate? A. The Chicago group decided that they would not participate.

Q. So the matter was dropped? A. Yes.

Q. At or about that time did you become—

The Court: Are you going to leave out what was said on this trip to Germany?

Mr. Baum: Yes. Do you wish me to do it now?

The Court: No.

Mr. Baum: All right.

1903 By Mr. Baum:

Q. At or about this time that the syndicate proposition fell through, did you become associated with a corporation known as Oil Refineries, Incorporated? A. After the decision that the syndicate operation would not be carried on, Hoffacker elected and instructed us to submit to him a management contract pertaining solely to the operation of crude oil refining properties which were available. That contract was written between Theodore Hoffacker, agent, and Crittenden Engineering Company, and provision of salaries, earnings participation, and so forth, were set forth.

Q. I believe I asked you about Oil Refineries, Incorporated? A. Correct.

Q. Did you ever become associated with such a corporation? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us when? A. In 1933 a company was formed, as I recall it, by the Corporation Trust Company, and later—very shortly later—that was a Delaware corporation, and it was reformed in Louisiana as a Louisiana corporation.

Q. And it had its office where? A. In Shreveport, Louisiana.

1904 Q. What was the business of Oil Refineries, Incorporated? A. Under its charter, an overall business; but essentially that of purchasing and refining crude and the sale of refined products.

Q. Did the corporation own a refinery? A. Yes, it purchased one.

Q. It did? A. At Overton, Texas.

Q. Who were the officers of this corporation? A. Theodore Hoffacker, as I recall it, was president; I was a vice president; Martin J. Grogan was a vice president.

Q. Where did the corporation get the funds to buy this refinery? A. Theodore Hoffacker, agent.

Q. How much money was invested in the corporation? A. As I recall it, 125—somewhere between $90,000 and $150,000. May I state this all occurred in 1933? This was 15 or 16 years ago. I have no records. If I hesitate, it is to try to recollect.

Q. Was there any relationship between Oil Refineries and Crittenden Engineering Company? A. Yes.

Q. Will you please tell the Court what that rela-1905 tionship was? A. A management contract in which Crittenden Engineering undertook to manage—purchase, manage, and consummate the sales of refined products for the corporation Oil Refineries, Incorporated.

Q. In the year 1933 did you become associated with a corporation known as Oil Production, Incorporated? A. Yes.

Q. Will you state who the officers of that corporation were? A. The same individuals, Theodore Hoffacker, Crittenden, and Grogan.

Q. Was that corporation formed in the year 1933? A. I would say yes, late in—very late in 1933 or perhaps early in 1934.

Q. Will you tell us what was the business of Oil Production, Incorporated? A. The purchase and operation of crude oil producing properties.

Q. When you say "crude oil producing properties," do you mean oil wells? A. Yes.

Q. Was there any relationship between this corporation and Crittenden Engineering Company? A. There was.

It—Crittenden Engineering—had a management 1906 contract.

Q. Did this corporation purchase crude oil from those properties? A. It did.

Q. How much was invested in the purchase of such properties? A. Well, from first to last, in round figures, I think between $400,000 and $500,000.

Q. Where did those funds come from? A. There was a change in the financing. Those funds came from—bonds were issued in the name of Oil Production, Incorporated, and purchased by the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation—bonds issued in the exact amount of the expenditure.

Q. The offices of Oil Production were located where? A. In Shreveport, Louisiana.

Q. At the time those corporations were organized, had you met Fritz von Opel? A. At the time those corporations were organized? Yes, I think I met Fritz von Opel in the period between the formation of Oil Refineries, Incorporated, and Oil Production, Incorporated.

Q. Where did you meet Fritz von Opel? A. My recollection is that my first meeting with him was either at Theodore Hoffacker's home in Scarsdale or with 1907 Theodore Hoffacker in Shreveport, at our offices there.

Q. In Shreveport? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, he was introduced to you by Theodore Hoffacker? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what Theodore Hoffacker said at the time he introduced Mr. von Opel to you? A. Not particularly, no.

Q. Now, some time after this meeting with Fritz von Opel and the formation of these corporations, did there come a time when you were considering selling some of the assets of Oil Production, Incorporated? A. Yes, we were asked to.

Q. Who asked you to? A. Theodore Hoffacker.

Q. Will you tell us under what circumstances and when he asked you to do that? A. He stated that Fritz von Opel's father had become involved with the Nazis in some way or another and needed funds, and could we contribute funds. We asked him how much, and he outlined a round figure of a hundred thousand.

Q. When was this? Was this a conversation with Mr. Hoffacker? A. Yes.

1908 Q. When did this take place? A. Well, I would think in 1934 or 1935. I know that we had purchased several leases and operated them. I therefore think it was probably in 1935.

Q. You stated that Mr. Hoffacker asked you to raise some money. What did you reply to him on that occasion? A. We told him that we would, as I recall it—the only way we would have of raising funds would be the sale of a crude oil producing lease.

Q. Did you thereafter sell one of the leases? A. Yes.

Q. About how much money was raised by that sale? A. Well, I think we recovered the cash expenditure on the lease and assigned obligations and made some—perhaps $150,000, I think, or thereabouts. I don't remember the exact sum.

Q. Do you recall where that money was transmitted? A. Well, it was transmitted to the bank in New York and exchanged for bonds.

Q. Exchanged for bonds which were surrendered? A. Redeemed bonds.

Q. Do you remember the name of that bank? A. No, I don't.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to meet Mr. Fritz 1909 von Opel in Montreal, Canada? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us approximately when that occurred? A. Oh, I have got to project the thing. Maybe 1935 or 1936. In the summer of 1936.

Q. Under what circumstances did you go to Montreal? A. Mr. Hoffacker requested that I go with him and Walter Bayer to Montreal to meet Dr. Hans Frankenberg and Mr. Fritz von Opel.

Q. Where did you go in Montreal when you arrived there? A. Well, as I recall it, the Windsor Hotel.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Frankenberg? A. Yes.

Q. Had you known him before? A. No.

Q. Who introduced him to you? A. Why, as I recall it, Hoffacker.

Q. Do you recall what he said when he introduced Mr. Frankenberg to you? A. Why, he explained to us that Dr. Frankenberg had assisted or was a representative of Fritz von Opel and knew his father in many ways.

Q. Did you have any business discussions with Mr. Fritz von Opel and Mr. Hoffacker in Montreal? A.
1910 Mr. Bayer—at the request of Hoffacker, we reviewed the operations of the two companies and made projections into the future as to what might be expected.

Q. How long did those discussions last? A. Oh, it was very brief. As I recall it, it was in the morning.

Q. How long did you stay in Montreal? A. That one day and left that night.

Q. You left that night? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were not engaged in business conferences throughout the day? A. No.

Q. Now, directing your attention to the year 1937, did you have occasion to make a trip to Germany in that year? A. I did.

Q. Will you tell us under what circumstances that came about? A. At Hoffacker's request, I went to New York, and he told me that Fritz von Opel wanted him and he wanted me—I mean Mr. von Opel wanted Mr. Hoffacker—or Mr. Hoffacker invited me to join a technical congress tour of European manufacturing properties.

1911 I told Hoffacker that if the corporation was willing to spend money on that kind of business, I had what I considered a very much more useful reason for going to Europe.

Q. What was that reason? A. I had an old friend in the oil refinery engineering business in Wichita, Kansas, by the name of Fred Koch, of the firm of Winkler & Koch; that Koch and I had been investigating the usefulness of potential business opportunities in the development of the then rather obscure process known as the Fischer-Tropp process, which had been developed on full plant scale in Germany.

Q. By the way, what was this process? A. It was a process to synthetically produce gasoline from natural gas or from coal, and Koch's interest and my interest were in the American rights to develop the process of manufacturing gasoline from natural gas; and I explained to him that Fritz von Opel's connections in Germany, I considered, were valuable to the extent that he could probably arrange a meeting between Koch and myself and those individuals in Germany who were in a position to grant such a license or contract.

Hoffacker apparently thought that was a good reason for making the trip to Germany and, as I understood it, communicated with Mr. von Opel—Fritz von Opel—and it ended up by Mr. von Opel agreeing or stating that he would assist us when we went to Germany.

1912 Q. When did you go to Germany, approximately? A. Well, April or May of 1937.

Q. Who were in the group that went to Germany? A. Theodore Hoffacker, Fred Koch, and myself.

Q. Did you go by ship? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember the name of the ship? A. Queen Mary.

Q. Where did you go when you arrived in Europe? A. Well, we went to Berlin by Cherbourg and Paris.

Q. Where did you stay in Berlin? A. At the Bristol.

Q. Did you meet anyone in Berlin? A. Yes, I met Fritz von Opel.

Q. How long did you stay in Berlin on this occasion? A. Upward of a week.

Q. What did you do while you were there? A. We had —we—that is, Theodore Hoffacker and Koch and Fritz von Opel and myself—through the instrumentality of Fritz von Opel we met with a group who, as I recall it, I thought were the directors of the Ruhr Chemie. Now, there is a whole long string of words out from here, but it was a chemical corporation with a plant in Oberhausen.

We met with that group, our purpose was stated, and subsequently it was arranged that we could or 1913 would be permitted to visit the plant and talk to the plant director and the plant manager.

Q. Did you do anything else while you were in Berlin? A. Yes. In the meantime, Mr. von Opel extended every courtesy: took us to Potsdam, took us to night clubs, took us to galleries, and many points of interest.

Q. Mr. von Opel took you around Berlin, in other words? A. Yes, he did.

Q. Did he make any comments about Berlin while he was taking you around?

Mr. Ingoldsby: I object.

The Court: What is the materiality?

Mr. Baum: Its materiality is that Mr. von Opel has testified that he was a great anti-Nazi. I think it is material on that point.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Is the question of Naziism at all material?

The Court: I do not know that we are going into that. Are we? Is it brief?

Mr. Baum: It is very brief.

The Court: All right. Go ahead.

The Witness: He deplored the effect of the Nazis—Berlin Nazis, as he called them—on Berlin and described to me the changes in the city: They had cut trees 1914 down along the Unter den Linden; and the Emperor's Palace was shabby; and so it went.

The Court: I think we will take a five-minute recess now.

(At 11:15 a.m. a short recess was taken. The following then occurred:)

1915 By Mr. Baum:

Q. Mr. Crittenden, before we took the recess I believe you stated that you had conferences in Berlin and had arranged to go to Oberhausen; is that correct? A: Correct.

Q. Did you then go to Oberhausen? A. We went to Essen and stayed at a hotel there, and then, as business required, went from Essen to Oberhausen.

Q. And who is "we"? A. Mr. Fritz von Opel, Theodore Hoffacker, Fred Koch, and myself.

Q. And what did you do in Essen or Oberhausen? A.

We met the director, resident director, of the manufacturing undertaking, a Dr. Martin, and his assistants. There were a number of these conferences, in the first of which we stated what we wished to do, the type of contract we wished to develop.

They would take that under consideration. We would return to Essen and then, on notification, go back to Oberhausen.

Q. How long did you stay in Essen at this time? A. Upward of two weeks.

Q. I see; and during those two weeks you had conferences from time to time with officials of this plant? A. Yes, sir.

1916 Q. Did these conferences concern this Fischer-Tropp process you referred to? A. Tropp.

Q. What was your purpose in conferring on this Fischer-Tropp process? A. Koch and I had some knowledge of it from technical reviews and individuals who had been in Germany in connection with the construction of the plant. It was a plant in which there was certain accessory equipment furnished and installed by American companies.

At that time there was in the United States a great drive for additional crude equipment properties—let us say crude oil reserves, exploration—with the meager information we had, the Fischer-Tropp process looked like a highly commercial undertaking, inasmuch as there was a tremendous amount of natural gas being produced and being discovered all in the area in which I operated.

Q. And what did you propose to do with this process? A. Beg your pardon?

Q. I say, what did you propose to do with this process? A. We wanted the development rights of manufacturing synthetic gasoline from natural gas.

Q. By "we," whom are you referring to in this connection? A. At that time it was confined solely to 1917 Koch and myself. There was no solicitation of funds from Fritz von Opel.

Q. Did you conclude these negotiations in Oberhausen? A. We concluded negotiations there.

Q. And what was the conclusion of these negotiations? A. And were subsequently notified that there were American interests that had those rights. They, therefore, could not write a contract with us.

Q. Now, while you were in Essen, what was the relationship between Mr. Fritz von Opel and Mr. Theodore Hoffacker? A. Poor, growing to bad.

Q. What do you mean by your answer? A. Well, the conversations between Mr. von Opel and Hoffacker were in German, which I do not understand sufficiently to have followed them, but Hoffacker would be very abusive, very dominating, and leave the room and later recite to me this, that, and the other thing. I could best describe it, he considered Fritz von Opel a play boy, an incompetent, and that if it had not been for him, Hoffacker, Mr. von Opel would have lost his shirt. That was always his expression—that he considered Mr. von Opel very ungrateful.

Now, over the period—When I say it went from poor to worse, I recall driving back from Oberhausen and we came to a railroad crossing and a very violent argument occurred as we crossed the railroad crossing, and 1918 Mr. Hoffacker flourished his walking cane at him and then got out on the street and got in the car again. I don't know what it was about, but it was noisy.

Q. While you were in Essen did you have occasion to have dinner with Mr. von Opel? A. Oh, yes, nearly every night.

Q. Did you have dinner with him on the day of this incident in the car you referred to? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us about this dinner? A. Well, we returned to the hotel, and Hoffacker was very angry and would have nothing to do with Mr. von Opel, and, as I recall it, he and Koch went off to dinner together, and Mr. von Opel and I had dinner.

Q. And what was the discussion between you and Mr.

von Opel? A. Well, after dinner I asked Fritz von Opel what his relationship was to Hoffacker, and I also asked him who owned the funds and how he was operating.

Now, to give you a very general description, he told me that he was entrusted with the use of a considerable amount of money by his father under what he described as a usufruct contract and, in a general way, he had the handling of the funds and accounted back to his father; and also at that time related that he had a cousin, whose

In response to my question about Hoffacker—and I think the question was properly put—here we were in business with Hoffacker, agent—little knowledge of the background—and at that dinner he told me that his father was very much exercised as a result of a report that his father had caused to be made as to who Hoffacker was and what kind of an individual he was, and apparently the report was adverse, and Fritz said that his father was very much concerned, was very angry that he was associated with Hoffacker.

Q. Was the name Frankenberg mentioned at this conversation at the dinner? A. I don't recall whether it was or not. Frankenberg—I had met him in Montreal, and his name ran through the thread of the story. I gained the impression that Dr. Frankenberg at that time was acting in behalf of his father and had assisted Mr. Fritz von Opel's father on many occasions and in many ways.

Q. Now, at the conclusion of these negotiations in Oberhausen, where did you go? A. I went to London and then to the north of Ireland, where a cousin lives.

Q. Now, at this conversation with Mr. von Opel in Essen, I believe you said that he testified that he 1920 had the use of the funds under a usufruct contract; is that correct? A. Well, I will have to reword it. He stated to me that the funds had been entrusted to him for investment and handling.

Q. By whom? A. By his father, under what he called a usufruct contract.

Q. Had you ever heard of a usufruct contract before? A. No, and I subsequently asked the lawyers to look it up; and the definition of it was so vague that none of us knew definitely what a usufruct contract was; but I gained, from what Mr. von Opel's conversation with me was, that his own compensation was derived from the profits of the handling of these funds.

Q. Now, you say you went to Ireland? A. Yes.

Q. Did you eventually return to the United States? A. Yes. Then I met Hoffacker and Koch in London and we proceeded to Southampton and sailed for the United States.

Q. Do you remember how you returned to the United States? A. You mean the name of the vessel?

Q. You came by boat? A. Oh, yes. We sailed from Southampton on The Cunard Line.

1921 Q. Is there any circumstance which enables you to fix approximately when you returned to the United States? A. Yes.

Q. What was that? A. Either the first or second day at sea, a ship paper carried the account of the burning of the Hindenburg, a dirigible, at Lakewood. Hoffacker was very much exercised. It took us back to Oberhausen, where he wanted the three of us to buy tickets on the Hindenburg and go back on it, and I remember Mr. von Opel's counseling me to keep my feet on the ground and take a boat.

Q. Now, after your return to the United States were there any negotiations or discussions concerning a consolidation of the companies you were interested in? A. Yes, there was.

Q. And with whom were those negotiations conducted? A. On return to the United States—In that year, as I recall it, business was pretty good, and Walter Bayer, of the firm of Bayer and Clauson, who were auditors—they were auditors for Uebersee and they were auditors for the described other undertakings in which Mr. von Opel was operating—Bayer came to Shreveport on his usual—I forget—quarterly or semi-annual audit, and he stated he thought—he always referred to them as the Germans—would prefer that the operating companies, Oil. 1922 Refineries and Oil Production, to be consolidated with three properties in which Grogan and Crittenden had the ownership, a small refinery with its pipeline in Arp, Texas, a larger pipeline in the east Texas field, and a refinery in Shreveport, and he requested that we give consideration to it; and, in general, an agreement was reached in which Grogan and Crittenden were to determine earning capacity, asset value, and that the same factors would be developed with Oil Production and Oil Refineries, to the end that an agreement would be reached having all the properties that were consolidated into one operating company, in which Grogan and Crittenden would have a financial interest, in addition to the management contracts.

Q. What form of a financial interest? A. Stock ownership.

Q. And what was the name of this enterprise in which Grogan and Crittenden had the ownership? A. There was a small refinery at Arp, Texas, known as the Trio Refining Corporation, the Centera Pipelines, and the De Soto Crude Oil Purchasing Corporation, and Rhodesia Oil Refining Corporation.

Q. And the proposal was to consolidate these corporations which you have just named with Oil Refineries and Oil Production? A. Yes, one corporate interest.

Q. Now, you said that you agreed with Mr. Bayer 1923 to evaluate your interest and he would evaluate the other interest? Was anything done in that connection? A. Yes, it was done.

Q. And what happened? A. Bayer notified us—notified me, or he notified Grogan and me, that the Germans would like to have us come to Switzerland, complete the transaction, and we went.

Q. You went to Switzerland? A. Yes.

Q. When did you go to Switzerland? A. July or August of 1937.

Q. And where did you go in Switzerland? A. The Baur-au-lac Hotel.

Q. Where is that located? A. At Zurich, Switzerland.

Q. Who went on this trip to Switzerland? A. Mr. and Mrs. Bayer, Mr. Charlton Lyons, Mrs. Crittenden, and myself.

Q. And whom did you meet when you went to Zurich? A. I met Fritz von Opel and Dr. Hans Frankenberg.

Q. And how long did you stay in Zurich? A. Oh, I would guess the better part of three weeks.

Q. And what took place while you were there? A. There were discussions held in the offices of Frankenberg and Gaeng. Usually there was present Fritz von 1924 Opel, Walter Bayer, Hans Frankenberg, and myself.

Q. Did these conferences take place every day? A. Yes, in general they did, except for periods in which Frankenberg was out of town.

Q. And where did these conferences take place? A. In Frankenberg's office.

Q. Do you remember where that was? A. Yes; on—it is Peterstrasse Street or Peterstrasse Square, I remember.

Q. What was the subject of these conferences with the parties you mentioned? A. Well, the conferences started out with a review of the financial statements, earning power, asset value, of each of the business entities involved. Bayer—I, representing Grogan and Crittenden, and Bayer as auditor, representing Oil Refineries and Oil Production, and also Bayer in a most general way representing each group—he and I having worked over these figures during the transatlantic trip and had arrived at some indices or factors by which we might conduct negotiations or subsequent division of ownership.

Dr. Frankenberg did most of the questioning. Many of the questions were referred to Mr. von Opel.

So the negotiations were carried on until we reached an agreement, near the end of the visit, on respective ownerships, and a general formula as to how we would 1925 carry on the consolidation of the ownerships of the property into one corporation.

Q. And was this consolidating corporation to operate with the same capital? A. No. 1, representing Grogan and Crittenden, asked that considerable additional working capital be put into the venture.

A very large part of the working capital of the refining and the pipeline properties had been furnished to the use of gross sales funds derived from a sales contract which Grogan Oil Company had with these companies. It was more or less of a quick turnover of funds and a credit relationship; and this was all explained to Dr. Frankenberg.

He recognized that we were operating under the influence, perhaps, of a large amount of money that did not exist. We knew we were, and we wanted more funds put in the company; and at that juncture in the proceedings, Dr. Frankenberg said that he would like to see the Grogan Oil Company's sales contracts extinguished and work out some different agreement. The company had its own sales department.

Now, further along the financial aspect of those discussions was the principle of whether the company should expand or retract. I recited to the group what I thought were many opportunities still to buy crude oil producing properties, which is the one thing I counseled.
1926 We had considerable valuable crude oil property in the ground that the company owned in the East Texas Field. There was a promise of an early and marked increase in crude oil posted prices, and there was certainly the thought of a great many members of the industry that the day was not far off where the posted price of crude would be doubled.

Now, as a result of those discussions, I took the position that—there was one part of the discussion in which there was consideration of selling the crude oil properties and taking the profits, which I stated would be very large, and that the company would then be a refining pipeline company, without any crude oil reserves, insufficient funds, and I thought that it would not survive.

The net result of the meeting was an agreement as to how we would share the ownership in a consolidated corporation, an indication of new funds to be put in, and instructions to me to go back to the United States and survey the market towards investing additional funds in crude oil producing companies.

Q. An indication of new funds from whom? A. To be put up by the Germans.

Q. Who said that they would put up funds? A. Well, Dr. Frankenberg and Mr. von Opel under the general provisions of the agreement—"In consideration of consolidating, we will." Nothing in writing; verbal.

1927 Q. Were all these conferences in Zurich held in Frankenberg's office? A. Well, as I recall, all but one, and there was some technical matter regarding the accounting practices, crude oil reserve, depletion reserves, building labor and expense, and such items that he was not familiar with, and he did not feel very well, and we went to the Dolder Hotel, and Bayer explained it to me.

Q. Was Mr. von Opel present at the Dolder Hotel? A. I don't think so. I don't remember.

Q. What circumstances enable you to be certain that the conferences were held in the office of Mr. Frankenberg? A. Put that question again.

Q. I will withdraw the question.

How is it you happen to remember this office of Dr. Frankenberg so well? A. Well, unlike American—many,

I suppose, American offices—in a city as important as Zurich in Switzerland, on Peterstrasse either Square or Street, a building with flowers on the window sills—you went in. There was a little push button elevator that looked like a comic opera landaulet, all in pink satin brocatle; went upstairs; went to offices there which were great high doors and a little peephole like this. You pushed the button and a girl looked through the hole, and you 1928 went in; and the offices were quite ornate.

He had some very valuable paintings there on the wall and behind the door.

The first impression of an American coming out of Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, to an office of that type—I suppose that is what registers in my mind.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr Frankenberg about those paintings? A. Yes. I kind of chided him on having—they were Degas originals, and Dancing Girls, Montemart—well known—and I sort of chided him on having them concealed behind the door.

Q. And did you have any other conversation with Frankenberg at this time? A. Yes, I did. I asked him very frankly what his relation was to Fritz von Opel and the business; and his reply was very simple and direct.

He said that he represented Fritz von Opel's father on many occasions in many places for many years and was assisting his father.

Q. Now, at the conclusion of these conferences in Zurich, did you have any conversation with Fritz von Opel? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what that conversation was? A. Well, he indicated satisfaction with the idea that 1929 Dr. Frankenberg was willing to consider spending more money in crude oil producing properties.

He told me that Dr. Frankenberg had assisted his father out of great trouble, and related to me the Nazi nonsense—that was the first time I knew about it—where his father had been fined a sum, as I recall it, something like $400,000, and we had contributed part of the funds and Dr. Frankenberg—

Mr. Ingoldsby: I did not hear the last part.

The Witness: I say, Dr. Frankenberg had been instrumental in supplying the remainder.

By Mr. Baum:

Q. After these conferences in Zurich terminated, where did you go? A. We went to Frankfurt and took a boat on the Rhine to Cologne, stayed there a little while, and did some sightseeing; then took the train from Cologne to Amsterdam and Rotterdam—that is, Mrs. Crittenden, Mrs. Lyons, and myself—and went to London, and the Bayers left us in Paris.

Q. Did you then return to the United States? A. Then we returned to the United States; Mr. and Mrs. Bayer by separate transportation than we did.

Q. In the same year, 1937, did you have occasion to meet Mr. Frankenberg again? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you meet him and approximately 1930 when? A. Well, I met him in the fall of 1937 at the Plaza Hotel in New York City.

Q. Was anyone else present when you met him? A. At that meeting, no.

Mr. Gallagher: May I interrupt just a moment? Mr. Baum, I think you are confused on your dates. The meeting was in 1938.

Mr. Baum: I think the witness will testify what his recollection is.

Mr. Gallagher: I believe he has testified in 1938. You said, "in the same year did you have occasion to see Dr. Frankenberg?" And then you say in 1937.

The Witness: No; I testified in the year 1937

Mr. Gallagher: I am sorry.

The Witness: My testimony has been confined to two trips, one to Germany and one to Switzerland, in the year 1937.

By Mr. Baum:

Q. You stated you met Mr. Frankenberg in the Plaza Hotel in New York? A. Yes.

Q. How did you know Frankenberg was in New York? A. Well, again, I received notice from Bayer that Dr. Frankenberg and Fritz von Opel would be in New York, and I went up there.

1931 Q. And you met Frankenberg? A. And I met Dr. Frankenberg, yes.

Q. Do you remember where you met him? A. Yes. It was in the afternoon and we had tea or a cocktail in the Palm Room. He did not like music; so we went out there and sat in the Palm Room.

Q What conversation did you have with Dr. Frankenberg on that occasion? A. He told me he was greatly distressed with the changing conditions in Europe, that he had to consider his responsibility to investors who he represented who had their funds in different countries, and some of them in the United States, and he felt he ought to stay as liquid as possible, and that he was going to review the whole situation, in view of the Zurich meeting, and would go back to Europe and then return, and he particularly at that meeting told me that he wanted to divorce Hoffacker from our business undertakings.

Q. Was the name Ulrich mentioned in this conversation? A. Yes. Then he told me he had an old friend who he thought very highly of named August Ulrich, and that he was going to ask Mr. Ulrich to represent him and ask for cooperation with him.

Q. By the way, where was this Palm Court you mentioned located, or Palm Room? Was it in the hotel? A.

Yes; on the ground floor of the hotel.

1932 Q. Of the Plaza Hotel? A. Plaza Hotel.

Q. Now, did you see Frankenberg again on that same visit to New York? A. Yes.

Q. When did you see him? A. Well, I think the same evening he and Fritz von Opel invited Mrs. Crittenden and myself for dinner, and we had dinner at the Plaza.

Q. Was there any business discussion at this dinner? A. No; purely social.

Q. After this New York meeting what did you do? A. Returned to Shreveport.

Q. Was anything done about the consolidation of the companies? A. Yes. The consolidation of the companies went ahead promptly upon the return of all of us to New York, I would have said quite early—it was started quite early in September of '37.

Q. When would you say that the consolidation was accomplished? A. Well, late '37 or early '38. There was a lot of detail to it.

Q. And under what name were these enterprises 1933 consolidated? A. Hurricane Petroleum.

Q. Now, directing your attention to the year 1938, did you meet Frankenberg in 1938? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you meet him? A. In Shreveport.

Q. What discussions did you have with Frankenberg in Shreveport? A. Well, he and Mr. von Opel were there together, and we reviewed—made a forecast of operations, and Dr. Frankenberg was utterly candid in stating that he wanted to get in a more liquid position, and he asked that we sell sufficient properties in order that the bond money of funds owed by Uebersee could be redeemed; and Mr. von Opel stated that that was his point of view, and he regretted that the situation changed.

Q. Were all the assets to be sold? A. No.

Q. Will you tell us what the proposal was? A. No; a fair enough proposal was put. Sell sufficient of the salable assets to redeem the bonds, the remainder of the proceeds of the sale to remain in the company for two purposes, to pay obligations and to provide working capital.

Q. Were actions taken as a result of this discussion? A. Yes.

1934 Q. And what happened? A. Some months later the crude oil producing properties in the East Texas Fields were sold, the bonds redeemed, part of the funds distributed to pay debt and part for working capital.

Q. The payments for redemption of the bonds were made to whom? A. Well, I don't recall the name of the bank, but it was made to a bank or a trustee.

Q. What was the total amount of the proceeds of this sale of property, approximately? A. I think the gross of the sale was about $1,450,000. There might have been $300,000 worth of outstanding bonds. This is memory—16 years ago.

Q. By the way, shortly before you mentioned the name of Ulrich. What office did he hold in this corporation? A. He took—Hoffacker's resignations were accepted, and Ulrich was an officer in Hoffacker's capacity and without salary.

Q. Did he succeed Hoffacker as president? A. As I remember it, he did.

Q Now, did you remain associated with Hurricane Petroleum Corporation? A. No, not for very long. Mr. Ulrich and I did not get along at all, and his public utter-1935 ances and his behavior in Baton Rouge and in Shreveport destroyed every vestige of credit we had, and I took him to task on the subject, and he asked for my resignation, and I told him I would give it; and I cabled Fritz von Opel at Kampen Sylt between the time that Ulrich asked for my resignation and the time I gave it and told him that Ulrich's utterances were such that the local banks refused any further financial support, and got an answer that he was powerless to assist.

I then tendered my resignation.

Q. When did you tender that resignation? A. Well, in the middle of '38.

Q. Middle of '38? A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever have any further business dealings with Fritz von Opel after your resignation? A. No.

Q. Did you ever have further business dealings with Mr. Frankenberg after your resignation? A. Business dealings?

Q. That is right. A. No.

Q. Did you ever see either of them again? A. Yes. I called on Dr. Frankenberg in his office on Broad Street, purely a social call, based on meeting Isadore Kresel in a camp in Maine.

1936 Q. When was this? A. I guess '40.

Q. 1940? A. Yes.

Q. Now, directing your attention again to the year 1938, did you ever have any discussions with Fritz von Opel concerning hydraulic pumps? A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what those discussions were? A. As I recall it, at the date of the last meeting in Shreveport with Dr. Frankenberg and Mr. von Opel, he related to me that the German government had requested his father or himself to consider the construction of two types of manufacturing plants, one a plant to manufacture light structural buildings and the other to manufacture radiators, and there was involved in each hydraulic pressing equipment; and I gave him, as I recall it, the name of some American manufacturers of hydraulic systems.

Q. Did you also have a discussion with him about flash welding? A. Yes, and gave him the name of a group in New York who had perfected the flash welding process of manufacturing paper-thin copper radiators.

Q Were you told what these radiators were for? A. As I recall it, it was part of a German national 1937 scheme, maybe a Strength Through Joy movement. They were going to manufacture low-priced automobiles. They were going to produce low-cost housing. Each of these ventures would have been dovetailed into that national move.

Q. The radiators were for the housing? A. I guess so.

Q. Now, did you have any discussions in the year 1938 with Mr. Fritz von Opel concerning drilling equipment? A. Yes; the same visit.

Q. The same visit? A. He told me that he had an interest in aluminum ore bearing properties in Hungary. Labor was very cheap. The problem was to get more ore out, and he would like to inspect American building equipment.

I made arrangements with one of the local companies to show him a star drilling machine and a core drilling machine and, as I recall it, furnished the names of corporations with New York addresses which could give him details as to cost, and so forth.

Q. Did you have any further conversations with him as to this aluminum property in Hungary? A. Oh, yes; both him and Dr. Frankenberg. There was a general discussion—going back to Europe, and I was going to take a walking tour with the Doctor, and Fritz was going to drive me to Hungary.

1938 Q. To Hungary? A. Yes.

Q. For what purpose? A. To show these ore mines. He told me they shipped quite a lot of ore to Germany, they did not get money for it and his father did not like it very much.

Q. Did you have any discussion in the year 1938 with Mr. Fritz von Opel about income taxes? A. Yes. He suggested to me that there would be a very substantial income tax payable by Grogan and myself.

He suggested that we might take meager profits in the company, take title to funds in Switzerland, avoid payment of the tax.

Nothing was ever done beyond commenting on it that I did not think he appreciated how far reaching the Government would be in looking for those taxes.

Mr. Baum: You may inquire.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Read me the last question and answer.

(The last question and answer were read by the reporter.)

Cross Examination

By Mr. Ingoldsby:

Q. Mr. Crittenden, I want to ask you about the first occasion when you met Mr. von Opel. Will you state the date as nearly as you can recall it? A. Let's see. I would say in the spring or summer of 1933.

1939 Q. Spring or summer of 1933, and I believe that you stated you met him either in Shreveport, Louisiana, or in New York City; is that correct? A. No; in Scarsdale.

Q. Scarsdale. Let me refresh your recollection. Didn't you meet him in Shreveport, Louisiana? A. Yes, many times.

Q. I mean the first time. A. I made the statement that I can't remember whether I met him in Hoffacker's house in Scarsdale first or in Shreveport first. I don't recollect.

Q. Do you remember that he was driving a yellow Mercedes car when you first met him? A. I remember he had such a car in Shreveport. It broke down.

Q. Because it broke down? A. Well, it broke down and there was a great local furor in getting that car under way again.

Q. A very flashy looking car, wasn't it? A. Yes, and Fritz looked funny to that public. He had a beret and funny looking clothes. It all looked funny to the Southerner in Shreveport.

Q. And that was in 1933, wasn't it? A. As I remember it, it was.

1940 Q. Wasn't it the occasion when you first met Mr. von Opel? A. I don't recall whether I met him in Scarsdale first or in Shreveport first.

Q. Where did he go from Shreveport when he left? Do you know? A. Now you have refreshed my memory. I am going to change the date. I think it was quite late in '33 that he was in Shreveport.

Q. In fact, it was in the winter, wasn't it? A. Because he and Hoffacker started off and they got stranded in the hills of Alabama some place. That created another furor. There were blankets around their heads. They skidded. We got telephone calls.

Q. When was that? A. Very late in '33 or early in '34, but suffice it to say that it was cold enough to create ice on the road.

Q. Did you ever see that car again? A. I never saw it at any time.

Q. I see. A. I heard about it, but I never saw it.

Q. You are presently employed with a firm named Westcott and Mapes; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. A civil engineering firm? A. Yes, consulting 1941 engineers.

Q. Where are their offices? A. Their office is at 109 Church Street, New Haven, Connecticut.

Q. When you first became acquainted with Mr. Hoffacker you were engaged in business for yourself; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. Did you close this business when you went with the von Opel oil properties? A. No.

Q. That business remained open? A. Yes, for several years, until this consolidation of all of the properties into the Hurricane Corporation. Then all of the interest owned by Crittenden Engineering was purchased and the company liquidated and, I think, extinguished. I am not sure of the latter. I know it ceased to operate under the name of Crittenden Engineering.

Q. In what year? A. I would have said in '37.

Q. What finally became of the Hurricane properties? A. I don't know; went to bankruptcy.

Q. They did go into bankruptcy, didn't they? A. I understand. I wasn't there.

Q. At that time was the Grogan Oil Company 1942 merged with Hurricane? A. Never.

Q. That was not? A. Never, to my knowledge.

Q. Did the Grogan Oil Company go into bankruptcy, too? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Regarding your first meeting with Hoffacket, with relation to Mr. von Opel, I believe it was your testimony on direct examination that Hoffacker told you that he was an adviser, an agent, of Fritz von Opel; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q And it is your further testimony that he never deviated from that statement; is that correct? A. Never.

Q. The first employment you had concerning Fritz von Opel or Crittenden was to conduct this survey of oil properties in the Southwest; is that correct? A. Now, your question again?

Mr. Ingoldsby: Read it.

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

The Witness: No.

By Mr. Ingoldsby:

Q. Was it? A. No.

Q. What was the first development? A. It was between Theodore Hoffacker, agent, and Crittenden 1943 Engineering.

Q. Yes. I was asking you the purpose of the first employment of the Crittenden Engineering firm. A. Was to make a survey of potential investments in the oil business.

Q. When did you first meet Mr. Bayer? A. I met—

Q. Just your best recollection. A. Well, as I recall it,

I did not meet Bayer until operations of Oil Refineries, Incorporated had been established and the first audit made. I would think maybe that is '33 or '34.

Q. I believe that you said that Bayer usually referred to the owners or the boss, or whatever it may be, as the Germans; is that correct? A. Usually the Germans.

Q. Was that customarily the term applied? A. Yes.

Q. And did you use that term also? A. Yes.

Q. And that term never designated any particular Germans, did it? A. Hoffacker and von Opel.

Q. That was what was generally understood—

1944 Hoffacker and von Opel? A. Yes.

Q. Is that what you generally understood by the term "Germans"? A. It was loosely used, yes. In the daily conduct of business, it was the Germans.

Q. What was your understanding of that term? A. Beg your pardon?

Q. What was your understanding of that term? Was it Hoffacker and Fritz von Opel? A. Well, my more specific understanding of that term was that Fritz von Opel had had entrusted to him by his father a considerable sum of money, was handling those funds through a usufruct contract, and that Theodore Hoffacker was agent for Fritz von Opel, and that Fritz von Opel did not breathe, move, or talk without his permission and his advice.

Q. Now, how did you get all that impression? A. Well, Hoffacker's utterances were so preposterous that we had them looked up. This was no idle talk. He made him out an incompetent play boy and that he would have gone to the wall—

Q. That was in 1937? A. No; '33, '34, '35, '36, and '37, the whole time.

Q. And that was the general tenor; is that correct? A. Always.

Q. Finally, Fritz von Opel and Hoffacker had a 1945 break, didn't they? A. I don't know.

Q. Don't you know about that? A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about any difficulties between Hoffacker and von Opel? A. Yes. I know one instance in which Hoffacker told me that he was what I was pleased to term going to blackmail Fritz, and he told me his whole plan in New York, and he wanted me to join in it, and I said I would have nothing to do with it.

He tried to persuade me to join him in it, and I went down to the steamship he was sailing on, and he took me downstairs to the cabin, and he told me all about it; and I told him no, I would have nothing to do with it; and I went back and reported to Walter Bayer the name of the ship and the cabin number that Hoffacker had sailed on and the purpose of the trip.

That is the first and last and altogether that I know—

Q. Well, then, you did know about difficulty between Hoffacker and Fritz von Opel, didn't you? A. Well, after he had related to me a blackmailing expedition, I took action, sure.

Q. You stated that the impression you gained, you gained as a result of your knowledge of the usu-1946 fruct contract; is that correct? A. The usufruct contract?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. Will you explain what you understand the usufruct contract to be? A. In this case—I will confine it to this case—

Q. All right. A. Fritz's father—

Q. Let me start at the beginning.

Mr. Burling: Let the witness finish, please. If Your Honor please, counsel interrupted the witness.

The Court: All right. Let him complete his answer. Then ask him another question.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Well, I would like to start at the beginning by asking him what he understands by usufruct before we start talking about usufruct contracts.

Mr. Burling: May I respectfully request that the witness be permitted to finish his previous statement which he started and which he interrupted.

The Court: Proceed.

By Mr. Ingoldsby:

A. My understanding—my personal understanding;
1947 Q. Yes. A. Oh, the obvious thing. The use of the fruit of the proceeds. I don't think it means anything. Based on what Fritz told me, it was quite clear.

Q. All right. What was that? A. That a considerable sum of money derived from the sale of the Opel Motor Works and in one of the banks in New York had been entrusted to him by h father to be invested and to be handled; that his agreement with his father was specified under what he described to me as a usufruct contract; that his living expenses and traveling expenses and sporting expenses, and so forth, were derived from the earnings and the proceeds of the use of these funds; and that Theodore Hoffacker was his agent, subsequently much to the concern of his father—my understanding.

Q. That was your understanding? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From what Fritz told you? A. From what Fritz told me and from what Hoffacker represented to us.

Q. Did you ever see the gift agreement? A. No, sir, I never saw any agreement. Listen, let me cut it all short and quick. I recite to you my memory of conversations.

Q. I appreciate that this is many years ago. I am not trying to trip you on any details. I am simply ask-1948 ing if you saw any agreement. A. No. That was described to me as the usufruct contract.

Q. At the time that you had that discussion did you ever hear of 20 percent and 80 percent—those figures? A. No, sir, no percentages.

Q. You did not? A. No, sir.

Q. No percentages? A. No percentages. All I understood with respect to partition, that Fritz derived his income from the proceeds, profits of the handling of this fund.

Q. I want to ask you a question about the conferences which you have described in Zurich, Switzerland, regarding the oil company mergers. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you state again, please, when it was you went to Switzerland? A. Well, July or August of 1937.

Q. And did I understand you to state that you spent about three weeks in Switzerland on this occasion? A. I think so.

Q. And were you in conference during that entire period of time? A. No; no. We were in conference nearly 1949 all of the time that Dr. Frankenberg was there, and there were periods that he was absent, and during one of those periods it was long enough to take an automobile tour through Switzerland, which was recommended by Mr. von Opel, and we took it, went through parts of Switzerland and into Italy.

Q. What is your best recollection at the present time as to the length of time that you actually spent in Switzerland? A. Actually spent in Switzerland. I think the better part of three weeks.

Q. And how many conferences would you say you had in that period of time with Fritz von Opel? A. About ten, twelve.

Q. You think maybe ten conferences? A. Yes.

Q. And was Frankenberg present at each of those conferences? A. Yes.

Q. Frankenberg was present? A. Put it this way. Fritz von Opel was present in all but one, which was held in the Dolder Hotel on a very technical matter concerning accounting.

Q. All of the rest of the conferences were held in the offices of the board room of the Adler Bank, were they not?

A. Oh, now, I don't know about that. All I knew I 1950 was, I was in Frankenberg's and Gaeng's office on Peterstrasse. I don't know anything about those offices of the bank.

Q. You mean Frankenberg? A. Frankenberg.

Q. Was not Frankenberg's office in the bank? A. I don't know. I really don't know. I was directed where to go, given an address, and went there. It was in the offices of Frankenberg and Gaeng.

Q. Now, with reference to the time that you spent there, I am going to ask if this will refresh your recollection. I am going to ask you to assume that the following dates and places that I read to you come from the notes of Bayer and Crittenden.

On July 29, 1937, you arrived in Cherbourg. On July 30 you arrived in Paris and left for Switzerland on the same day. On July 31 you arrived in Zurich. August 1 was a Sunday, so nothing was done, and on the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th there was a business conference on each one of those days, and August 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th were spent in an auto trip through Switzerland, and that on August 10 you returned to Zurich, and on August 11th and 11th you left Zurich. A. It sounds reasonable.

Q. Would that sound about right to you? A. Yes.

Q. So the only time that was actually spent trans-
1951 acting any business was August 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th. Would that be about correct? A. Well, I would have thought, by the nature of things, that we probably concluded our business the last day or two days that we were there.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Your Honor, I have a subject that I am going to go into at some length. Does Your Honor plan on recessing for luncheon?

The Court: Can't you use the remaining time?

Mr. Ingoldsby: Yes, I can.

By Mr. Ingoldsby:

Q. I want to ask you about your trip to Germany in the summer of 1937. Will you tell us, please, when it was that you left the United States? A. You mean the exact date?

Q. No; approximate date; the month. A. Well, wait a minute. Can you recall the date of the Coronation of the King of England?

Q. I most assuredly cannot. A. Well, I am in a bad fix. We sailed on the QUEEN MARY on a date that we could get a passage. It was very crowded on account of the Coronation. I would have said April or May, but I can't remember—wait a minute. We spent two weeks, three weeks, another week—that's four weeks— and wanted to get home—well, let's guess at April.

1958 Q. Now, where did you first go in Europe? A. Cherbourg and Paris.

Q. Did you meet Fritz von Opel there? A. No, sir.

Q. When did you first meet von Opel? A. The day following, in Berlin.

Q. And how long a time did you spend in Berlin on that occasion? A. As I recall, the better part of a week.

Q. And what was the purpose of spending the week in Berlin? A. Well, there was time consumed in arranging the conference date with the directors, the officials of this chemical corporation.

Q. Where were the conferences to be? A. Wherever Mr. von Opel could arrange that they would be, and they were held—the first conference, the director group, was held in Berlin.

Q. And where did you go from Berlin? A. We went to Essen.

Q. And did you confer in Essen on the same topic on which you conferred in Berlin? A. I have already testified that the conferences with the chemical group were held in their manufacturing plant offices at Oberhausen. We stayed in Essen because there was a hotel there.

1953 Q. And Oberhausen is near Essen, isn't it? A. Yes; not far away.

Q. What was it you were trying to accomplish by these conferences? A. We wished to develop the American rights—or, rather, we wished to consummate a contract to develop the American rights for manufacturing gasoline and other petroleum products synthetically under the patents and process rights of the so-called Fischer-Tropp system.

Q. And that was a patented process to do what? A. Synthesize gas to liquid hydrocarbon.

The Court: I suppose this is a good place to stop. 2 o'clock.

(At 12:30 p. m. a recess was taken until 2 p. m.)

(The trial was resumed at 2 p. m., upon the expiration of the recess.)

Thereupon, BUTLER PARNELL CRITTENDEN resumed the stand and, having been previously duly sworn, testified further as follows:

By Mr. Ingoldsby:

Q. Mr. Crittenden, we were talking about your trip to Germany in 1937. What was the result of that trip from the standpoint of whether or not you ever acquired the process you went there to investigate? A. We did not acquire it.

Q. Was that your final judgment in the matter? A. No.

We were notified by Mr. von Opel that the Ruhr Chemie had a contract or other arrangements, or prior contractual arrangement, with an American concern.

Q. You mentioned this morning that the crude oil producing properties which were first owned by Oil Production, Incorporated, and later by Hurricane, were sold for about $1,400,000; is that correct? A. That is my remembrance.

Q. Did you approve of this sale, or did you feel that it should be kept and new capital added? A. I very 1955 strenuously took the position that if the company was going to continue, they should not sell those properties.

Q. You felt that the investment in those properties was a very good investment; is that correct? A. It had proven itself, and its potentialities, in my opinion, were very great.

Q. Returning, again, for a moment to your meeting in Zurich in 1937, did you mention some properties, in connection with that visit, which you and Grogan owned at the time of the Zurich meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Will you give me the names of those? A. Trio at Arp, Texas, and a small pipeline in conjunction with it; and DeSoto Crude Oil Purchasing Corporation, a pipeline system.

Q. What was that last one? A. DeSoto Crude Oil Purchasing Corporation.

Q. What was the value of those properties at the time of your meeting in 1937? A. Well, I don't recall now.

Q. Just give us your best estimate. A. A couple of hundred thousand dollars. Now, I take that as a rank, ancient memory.

Q. Now, who owned that? You and Grogan to-1956 together? A. Yes.

Q. Are you able to give us an estimate of what those properties would be worth today? A. Three or four times their value based on increased costs, reproductive costs, earning value, and so forth.

Q. Would that also be based upon the potential which some of those properties had at the time and which have been established by virtue of the passage of time? A. What do you mean?

Q. I am referring to the output of the oil-producing properties. A. I have not included any oil-producing crude oil properties in this estimate. You asked for the properties owned by Grogan and Crittenden.

Q. That is right. A. None of them were crude oil producing properties.

Q. Did you own any crude oil producing properties? A. No.

Q. Now, with reference to the properties which you mentioned just before, that is, Trio and DeSoto— A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing) did those properties go into the merger which ultimated ended as Hurricane or which ultimately became Hurricane? A. As I remember it, they did.

1957 Q. What did you receive in exchange for those properties? A. Our management contract and, roughly, about a 22 to 25 per cent interest—stock interest—in the company.

Q. A 25 per cent interest in the newly formed Hurricane; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Did Hurricane operate successfully for a time? A. Yes.

Q. After Mr. Ulrich was put in charge of the Hurricane Corporation, did the company then get into difficulties? A. Immediately.

Q. What year was that? A. 1938.

Q. Can you give us the approximate month? A. Oh, let us say in the middle of the year, Mr. Ingoldsby.

Q. About the middle of 1938. Do you feel that the reason that the company got into difficulty in the middle of 1938 was a lack of capital? A. I do.

Q. You do feel that was it? A. That was one reason, and it was—the principal reason was Mr. Ulrich's 1958 behavior and utterances. The banks we did business with came to us and said, "We can't go with you any longer."

Plans that we had, that were quite near fruition, which was principally a pipeline to pipe gasoline from seven or eight refiners in the East Texas fields and two or three refineries in Shreveport to the Mississippi River, which was our only way out at that time in marketing our goods in competition with refineries farther north. We needed to reduce our costs of transportation, and he just flatly, any time the subject came up with those jointly—conjointly—interested in the matter—he will have a good deal to do with it.

Q. So you feel that the failure of Hurricane was partially due to Ulrich's personality? A. No, not his personality.

Q. Well, his actions? A. What he said; what he did.

Q. Do you feel that the situation might have been different with regard to Hurricane had you continued in the management of the Hurricane company? A. Personally?

Q Personally. A. No change. The harm had been done. They had sold the producing properties. There were 1959 not the operating funds to continue the company.

Q. My question is, if you had been in charge of the company, and if Mr. Ulrich had not been put in charge, do you feel that the result would have been different? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you feel that the company probably would not have gone through difficulty? A. I feel this: that I probably could have completed negotiations for capital to acquire the pipeline and to do other things without the obstruction of Mr. Ulrich.

Q. Now— A. Now, let me explain the extent to which this was done and the earnestness which was displayed. Approximately ten small companies, subscribed, oh, $20,000 to $40,000 to make a survey of markets reachable by pipeline and water in the Mississippi Valley, our natural waterway. The report was very favorable and, in addition to that, the venture was considered very favorable by two or three of the large companies who at that time were convinced that there was a war coming along and would have liked to have seen the whole thing consolidated into a picture of normal flow of goods at the lowest rates.

Q. I see. A. Now, that survey was completed, and the several members involved were ready to go ahead, 1960 and we did, with a company as reliable as White-Weld Company.

Now, Mr. Ulrich's stampeding around—he did not know what he was talking about—or he did—introduced a situation in which nobody would touch anything.

Q. I see. Generally speaking, the whole Ulrich situation was unsatisfactory from the standpoint of the operation of Hurricane; is that putting it succinctly? A. No, I don't believe it was. I think that the operation of the company with Ulrich as an officer—that its chances were gone. I think his behavior, at least prior to becoming an officer, sealed the story.

Q. Now, with reference to similar types of oil enterprises during the immediate pre-war period and the war period, practically all of those enterprises operated profitably, didn't they? A. Yes, all that I—now, wait a minute. Put your question again. That is very broad.

Q. I say that, generally speaking, the immediate pre-war period and the war period was a period of great prosperity for the oil industry, wasn't it? A. Tremendous.

Q. Wouldn't it be a fair statement to say that if this property had continued in operation the way you anticipated, it is reasonable to assume that this property also would have become a very successful operation?
1961 A. Yes, and far beyond any estimate that I would give you, in view of the fact of the value of crude oil reserves in the ground and the posted price of crude oil—the crude oil reserves in the ground together with the posted price of crude which ensued.

Q. I see. So— A. Each fact far in excess of any prediction or estimate I made to Dr. Frankenberg or Mr. von Opel.

Q. Are you in a position today to make an estimate of what those properties would have been worth today? A. No, I am not.

Q. Would it be a fair statement to say they would be worth several times what they were then worth? A. In my opinion, yes. You are talking about the properties in Hurricane before Hurricane divested itself of crude oil reserves?

Q. Yes, sir. A. That is right.

Q. Now, instead of that happening, Hurricane got into great financial difficulty and went bankrupt, didn't it? A. Yes.

Q. As a result of that bankruptcy, you personally lost, together with the others, didn't you? A. Everything. I turned in everything that I had.

Q. You lost everything that you had? A. In the 1962 company. Everything. I turned in my stock and took Grogan's note for $40,000. He was indebted to the company. They owed me 18, 19, or 20.

Q. So, all told, how much do you feel you actually lost in Hurricane? A. You mean if they had yielded?

Q. First of all, I wanted to ask you just the way—taking things as they happened, how much did you lose? A. I lost, I guess, $300,000—$500,000.

Q. You feel, do you, that had things been different, and had the property been properly managed, it had a great potential; isn't that correct? A. No.

Q. You do not feel that? A. No. I have only one feeling. If the crude oil properties had not been sold, and the additional capital had been put in, everybody would have made an extremely large amount of money.

Q. So the potential that was lost was in fact much greater— A. When they sold the producing properties, a tangible asset on which you could raise money at a bank for working capital to carry on your business.

Q. Are you through? A. Yes.

1963 Q. I did not mean to interrupt you. Go ahead if you have not finished your answer. A. I only make one more comment. The language used to Mr. Ulrich, which he did not understand, was always this: with this amount of money, we can buy this number of barrels of crude. And I took exception to it. The language used was they might buy that number of barrels a day of current production. They could not replace the asset value, the East Texas crude producing properties, that were in the ground and not producing. They could not have been replaced at that time. As a demonstration, they were sold, as I recall it, for $1,450,000.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Baum: No questions, Your Honor.

Mr. Burling: We will call Miss Magdalena Schoch.

Thereupon, MAGDALENA SCHOCH was called as a witness and, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Miss Schoch, where were you born? A. I was born and raised in Germany.

By the Court:

1964 Q. How do you spell your name? A. S-c-h-o-c-h. My first name is M. Magdalena.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Of what country are you presently a citizen? A. I am a citizen of the United States.

Q. Did you acquire citizenship by naturalization? A. Yes, by naturalization in 1943.

Q. Prior to that time you were a citizen of Germany? A. Yes.

Q. Are you a member of any bar? A. I am a member of the Bar of this Court.

Q. When were you admitted to the bar? A. I was admitted to the bar in 1947.

Q. Going back to Germany, will you state briefly what education you had in Germany? A. After elementary school and high school, I took a four-year law course in the law faculties of the Universities of Wurzburg and Munich, and I received the degree of doctor of laws.

Q. So you are entitled to be called Dr. Schoch if you so wish; is that correct? A. Well, if you like; I prefer to be called Miss Schoch.

Q. But are you entitled to be called "Doctor"? A. Yes.

1965 Q. After you received your doctor's degree, what did you do next? A. I became research assistant to Professor Mendelssohn-Bartholdy in the law faculty of the University of Hamburg, Germany.

Q. In addition to being research assistant to Professor Bartholdy, did you occupy any other position with the faculty at the University of Hamburg? A. I was appointed lecturer in the university; and in 1932, after having filled the usual requirements, I became a member of the law faculty with the title of Privatdozent.

Q. Did you hear Professor Kaufmann testify in this Court? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you hear him testify that he had become appointed a Privatdozent in the Swiss University? A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear him testify that that was a rank between an assistant and an associate professor in this country? A. Yes; that is what I would say.

Q. You agree with that? A. Yes.

Q. That is the academic rank— A. It is the 1966 German equivalent of the Swiss.

Q. Is that the academic rank which you held at the faculty at the University of Hamburg? A. Yes.

Q. Did you organize anything under Professor Mendelssohn-Bartholdy? A. I organized an institute for comparative and international law, together with Professor Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, and we also organized cabinet studies in that particular field.

Q. Going back to the time when you were made a member of the faculty at the University of Hamburg, will you state, if you have any personal knowledge, whether any other woman in the history of Germany had ever been made a professor of law in a German university before you had? A. As far as I know, I was the first one to attain that status in a law faculty.

Q. Up until the time you left Germany, do you know of any other woman was ever made such? A. No.

Q. Will you state whether you taught any particular field of law; and if so, what? A. I taught conflict of laws, comparative law, also some fields of German law, such as a course which gave a general introduction in the 1967 civil law of Germany, and a course in bankruptcy; at one time also a course on jurisprudence.

Q. You did not become a member of the bar in Germany, did you? A. No, I did not.

Q. When did you come to the United States the first time, and under what circumstances? A. I first came to the United States in the fall of 1934 under a research fellowship of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Q. At the time you accepted the research fellowship of the Rockefeller Foundation, did you intend to emigrate from Germany, or did you intend merely to come here on a trip and then return to Germany to live? A. I came here on a visitor's visa. I intended to return to Germany. As a matter of fact, this was one of the conditions of the Rockefeller grant.

Q. Specifically, did you return to Germany at the termination of the grant? A. Yes.

Q. Before you left Germany, did you make or file any paper, or did you cause to be filed any paper, with the German police authorities? A. I don't remember whether I personally filed it or whether my mother, with whom I lived at the time, filed it; but I know that—I remem-1968 ber that a so-called abmeldung was filed with the police authorities in Germany, because I was leaving for one year.

Q. Will you state what an abmeldung was, who was required to file it, and under what circumstances?

Mr. Boland: I think we should wait until Miss Schoch is qualified to testify on German law. There are a few questions that I wish to ask her.

Mr. Burling: Certainly. I took it up in the middle of her qualifications because it came in that she personally filed one. I withdraw the question.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. What did you do while you were in the United States under the Rockefeller fellowship in 1934? A. I visited various law schools in this country with the particular purpose of studying methods of teaching conflict of laws and a more general purpose of studying the American system of conflict of laws.

Q. How long did the fellowship last? A. One year.

Q. After that was over, what did you do? A. I returned to Germany and resumed my duties at the University of Hamburg.

Q. Did there come a time when you again left German?

A. I left Germany in the fall of 1937 when an im-1969 migration visa and came to this country.

Q. Without going into details, will you state briefly why you left Germany in 1937? A. I left Germany because I was opposed to the Nazi regime and was not willing to compromise with the regime.

Q. When you arrived in the United States—or before that, where did you go when you left Germany? A. I came directly to the United States.

Q. Where did you go in the United States? A. I first went to stay in Buffalo, New York, and I spent one year studying and doing research work of my own until the fall of 1938.

Q. Then where did you go? A. Then I went to the Harvard Law School, where I had obtained a position as research associate.

Q. While you were research associate at the Harvard Law School did you work with any particular professor? A. I worked mostly with Professor Irwin Griswold, who is the present dean of the Harvard Law School. I taught in his seminar—on various seminars—on conflict of laws and comparative law.

Q. That is, you and the present dean of the law school jointly carried on a seminar in conflict of laws; is that right? A. That is correct.

1970 Q. How long did you remain at Harvard? A. I remained at Harvard for five years.

Q. Was there any other woman on the faculty of the Harvard Law School, by the way, when you were there? A. No, there wasn't. Frankly speaking, I wasn't on the faculty; I was associated with the faculty.

Q. Does Harvard have a library of foreign law materials? A. Oh, yes; Harvard Law School has a very extensive library on foreign law.

Q. After you left Harvard, what did you do next? A. I was appointed to a position in the Office of Economic Warfare in Washington, which later was reorganized into the Foreign Economic Administration. I first was a consultant on German law in the Reoccupation Division of the Office of Economic Warfare.

Q. At the end of your employment by the FEA, what was your position? A. I was a section chief in the property division of the FEA; and during the last month I was acting division chief.

Q. You were acting division chief of what division? A. Of the property division of the German branch of FEA.

Q. Did your duties in that connection involve any 1971 matters involving German law? A. Yes; my work was mainly concerned with German law.

Q. Following your departure from the FEA, where did you go next? A. I left FEA in December, 1945, and went for a brief employment with the Practicing Law Institute in New York.

Q. And after that? A. After that I came to the Department of Justice at Washington as a foreign expert in the Claims Division.

Q. What did you do after that? A. At present I am an attorney in the Office of Alien Property.

Q. Your duties were transferred from the Claims Division to the Office of Alien Property; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. You are presently an attorney in the litigation branch of the Office of Alien Property? A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever published any books or articles on legal subjects? A. Yes, I have.

Q. In what languages? A. In the German language in Germany, and in the English language in this country.

1972 Q. Have you ever testified as an expert witness, as an expert on German law, before? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Will you state in what courts? A. In the state court of California—in two state courts in California—in the Federal Court at Miami and in Federal Court in Boston—Federal District Court in Boston.

Q. Now, will you go back to the question of the abmeldung—

Mr. Boland: I have a few questions I should like to ask this woman on qualifications.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. You stated you are a member of the Bar of this Court, Miss Schoch? A. Yes.

Q. And that you are not a member of the bar of any other court; is that right? A. That is right.

Q. You are not admitted to practice in Germany? A. No.

Q. Not admitted to practice at all in Germany? A. No.

1973 Q. In those cases in which you have testified as an expert, what was the nature of your testimony?

A. The testimony was concerning, in the California courts, the question of the German inheritance law and German foreign exchange control law.

In Miami my testimony was on foreign exchange—German foreign exchange control legislation.

In Boston I testified on certain aspects of German patent law.

Q. Your qualifications seem to indicate that you spend most of your time in conflicts of law—international conflicts of law. A. Conflict of laws and comparative law, I would say.

Mr. Boland: I should like to call upon the Government to give the nature of this woman's testimony in respect of expert testimony.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, it is a matter which I think will take perhaps three hours of testimony.

Mr. Boland: Just briefly the nature in which you are expecting her to testify and the subjects to be covered.

Mr. Burling: In relation to the German law of usufruct, in relation to the German law on foreign exchange; also in relation to how the German courts would construe the instrument which is Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, which plaintiff's law expert, Professor Kronstein, has testified to at such length. There are various other topics; that is the 1974 most significant.

Mr. Boland: I think, Your Honor, we shall have to object to her qualifications on the ground that she is not qualified to practice law in Germany.

The Court: I do not think that would be necessary.

Mr. Boland: I think it would be an important element.

The court: Nonadmission to practice might be taken by a lawyer here in this country to mean that one might know more law than all of us.

Mr. Boland: That may well be.

The Court: She evidently has had a pretty good background of study and experience in German law. I think certainly on foreign exchange she is an expert. She has qualified on that.

By The Court:

Q. What has been your experience in regard to the study of these usufruct provisions? What has been your experience along that line? A. Well, my own study and my own teaching experience.

Q. You had that up in connection with comparative law studies? A. Oh, yes, yes.

Q. In other words, you made these comparative law studies, and you studied conflict of laws in connection with that? A. Yes, Your Honor.

1975 The Court: I think she has made out a prima facie case as an expert.

Mr. Boland: I will keep that in mind.

The Court: It may be later on that you can argue she does not know as much as others. We will see about that. But I think she has made out a prima facie case as an expert. I will permit her to testify. You may call my attention to any specific subjects on which you think she is not qualified.

Mr. Boland: I will, Your Honor.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Now, Miss Schoch, will you go back to the question of the abmeldung which you filed in 1934, or which you think—I correct myself—either you filed or you think your mother filed with the police? Will you state what an abmeldung was and who was required to file it and under what circumstances, as a matter of German law? A. The abmeldung was a part of the police registration system, and the abmeldung, or the report out, or the checking out, had to be filed by anybody who left his abode inside Germany for more than a brief temporary absence. For instance, when I went to study in the University of Munich, I had to report out to the police at Wurzburg, where I was living at the time; and 1976 when I left the University of Munich to return to Wurzburg, I had again to file this ameldung; and the same was true when I left for the United States.

Q. In other words, an abmeldung was a document which you had to file when you left for any considerable period, whether or not you intended to return to the place which you were leaving; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. And it was not confined solely to persons intending to leave forever? A. Oh, no.

Q. Now, are you familiar with the regulations, orders, and statutes relating to foreign exchange control which were promulgated by the German Government? A. Yes, I am.

Q. Addressing your attention to a period before the summer of 1931 and not going back beyond the 1924 inflation, what controls were there on the possession of foreign exchange or foreign securities by German residents? A. There were no such controls.

Q. That is to say, a man residing in Germany could own American securities or American dollars in an American bank without any requirement for control? A. Yes.

Q. When was the first control imposed on such 1977 possession of foreign exchange or foreign securities?
A. On the 15th of July, 1931.

Q. Did the imposition of those controls follow any particular governmental problem or governmental event? A. The followed upon the bank holiday which had been declared on the 13th of July, due to the financial collapse of Germany.

Q. Did any particular bank collapse at this time? A. Yes; one of the leading banks of Germany.

Q. By the way, on July 15, 1931, do you recall who was President of Germany? A. Hindenburg.

Q. Who was Chancellor? A. Bruening was Chancellor.

Q. That was not a part of the Nazi regime, was it? A. No.

Q. What was the Constitution of Germany at this time? Can you name it? A. The Weimar Constitution.

Q. Was there any article of the Weimar Constitution which gave the Chancellor or the Reichspresident power to impose to emergency decrees? A. Article 48 of the Weimar Constitution enabled the President to issue emergency decrees permitting the ordinary legislative courses.

1978 Q. What was the general nature of the decree of July 15, 1931? A. Well, the first decree issued by the President was a decree enabling the government of the Reich to issue legislation—orders—regulating foreign currency.

Q. In other words, on July 15, 1931, President Hindenburg exercised his powers under Article 48 of the Weimar Constitution to authorize the Government to issue emergency decrees on this subject; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Will you state, if you know, what the definition of the term "foreign exchange" was for the purposes of the German foreign exchange control regulation? A. Foreign exchange was defined, I think, for the first time in the July 15 decree as foreign currency, including checks and bills of exchange, claims payable in foreign currency, foreign securities, precious metals, particularly gold. I think that was the definition in July, 1931, if I remember correctly.

(A document was marked as Defendant's Exhibit 113 for identification.)

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I show you Defendant's Exhibit 113-A and ask you if you recognize this as a photostat of the Reichsgesetzblatt. A. Yes.

1979 Q. For October 2nd—including an order issued October 2, 1931? A. Yes. This is the joint order issued by the Reich Minister of Finance and the Reich Minister of Economic Affairs, containing rules and regulations, number 6 implementing the decree of the Reichspresident concerning foreign exchange controls.

The decree referred to is a decree of August 1, 1931, which formed the basis for subsequent rules and regulations.

Q. I ask you specifically to state what the definition of foreign exchange was as provided in this order. A. I find in Section 1 the following definition: Foreign currency; claims payable in foreign currency; foreign securities acquired after July 12, 1931, and German securities payable in a foreign currency which are not admitted in a German exchange; gold. That is all.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, we are able to locate only the English copy of Defendant's Exhibit 31. It is the Reichsgesetzblatt containing the decree of August 1, 1931.

Do you agree that we may proceed with it? I do not believe there is any doubt about the authenticity of the document. Professor Kronstein identified it in English and in German; but the German seems to be missing at the moment. I ask Your Honor's permission to proceed 1980 with this.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. No, I offer in evidence Defendant's Exhibit 113-A, and I ask you to examine Defendant's Exhibit 31 and state if that is a translation of the order of August 1, 1931. A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the terms of that presidential order? A. Yes, I am.

Q. Now following the orders of August 1, 1931, and October 2— A. This is October 2.

Q. (Continuing) and the order of October 2, 1931, to whom were the regulations regarding possession of foreign exchange applicable as a matter of German law? A. This legislation and these rules were applicable to German residents.

Q. Will you state what was meant by "a German resident," if you know? A. A German resident was a person who had his home, his place of living, inside Germany; or a corporation which had its place of management in Germany.

Q. What relevancy, if any, did citizenship have 1981 to those regulations? A. None whatsoever.

Q. Was a person who was a German national, but who was physically living outside of Germany, subjected to the regulations? A. No; he was not a resident in the meaning of those regulations.

Mr. Boland: By "a national," do you mean a citizen?
Mr. Burling: A citizen.
Mr. Boland: Yes; of course.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Is there a phase in German law governing a person who was subject to the foreign exchange regulations? A. The foreign exchange laws distinguished between inlander and auslander, and the expression generally used was devisen auslander and devisen inlander.

Q. Will you state the definition of each of those terms? A. A devisen auslander was the person residing outside of Germany and not subject to the foreign exchange control laws. A devisen inlander was a person residing in Germany and subject to this legislation.

Q. On and after October 2, 1931, will you state what the obligation of a devisen inlander was with respect to foreign exchange or foreign securities which he might 1982 happen to hold or own? A. Beginning on October 2, 1931, a German resident was under an obligation to tender to the Reichsbank any foreign exchange that he had or acquired within three days after acquiring such foreign exchange. He had to tender it to the Reichsbank for conversion into reichsmarks.

Q. Will you take the hypothesis that a German resident, a devisen inlander, had, let us say, a thousand shares of General Motors stock situated in a bank in the United States. His obligation would be what? A. His obligation would be to report and tender these foreign securities to the Reichsbank.

Q. Assume that the Reichsbank then acquired the securities from him. Was the law that the Reichsbank was to pay in dollars or in marks? A. The Reichsbank paid the equivalent in reichsmarks.

Q. That is to say, if a devisen inlander complied with the law and tendered a thousand shares of General Motors stock, the Reichsbank would be required to offer him the price of the stock calculated in marks and deposit to his account or otherwise pay him marks; is that correct? A. Yes.

By The Court:

Q. What was that date? A. October 2, 1931.

Mr. Burling: I am not sure whether I have 1983 already offered Defendant's Exhibit 31. I now do, Your Honor. That is the order of October 2, 1931.

(Defendant's Exhibit 31 was offered in evidence.)

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Was there any order promulgated which defined the obligation of the Reichsbank; that is to say, what it was to do when the securities were tendered? A. I think the obligation of the Reichsbank was first defined in the executive order of July 18, 1931.

Q. I now show you Defendant's Exhibit 114-A and ask you if that is the executive order to which you have reference. A. Yes, that is the executive order of the Reichspresident to prevent flight of capital and tax evasion, of July 18, 1931.

Q. Will you state what the criterion was which the Reichsbank was directed to observe in determining whether or not to acquire foreign securities against marks? A. A person subject to the duty to tender could apply to the Reichsbank for permission to keep such foreign assets on the ground that those foreign assets or this foreign exchange was required for purposes which were justifiable from the point of view of the German economy, and the Reichsbank was authorized to make that determination and grant such permission.

1984 Q. In other words, if the Reichsbank found, on the basis of the showing of the devisen inlander, that it would be useful to the German economy to permit him to hold his foreign securities, then the Reichsbank could do so? A. Yes.

Q. But if that showing was not made, then the Reichsbank was directed to acquire securities against mark payment; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. I ask you to assume this hypothesis: Suppose that A, a devisen inlander, had a thousand shares of General Motors stock held by a New York Bank. Then suppose that the devisen inlander went to the Reichsbank and said, "I wish to hold these shares, because I think the mark may become inflated or otherwise valueless, and I would prefer to have my securities abroad." Would that have been a showing sufficient to satisfy the executive order of July 18? A. No, definitely not.

Q. In other words, a showing by a German resident that he was afraid that the German economy might collapse and, therefore, wanted his capital abroad would not be enough? A. No, because the purpose of this decree was precisely to prevent the flight of capital abroad and 1985 to obtain for the Reich the benefit of all German-owned foreign exchange and foreign assets.

Q. A little more specifically, it is correct, is it not, that a dollar account in a New York bank would be regarded as foreign exchange for the purpose of those regulations? A. Yes.

It is also correct, is it not, that shares of stock in American corporations would be regarded as foreign exchange for the purpose of those regulations? A. Yes.

Q. That is true of shares of a Swiss holding company, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. Is it not also correct that a German citizen or national— I take it the words are interchangeable—who did not reside in Germany had no obligation whatever to tender foreign exchange to the Reichsbank? A. That is correct.

Q. Now, let us suppose that on October 2, 1931, a person who was resident in Germany decided that he wanted to keep or take his assets outside of Germany because he was afraid that the German economy might collapse. Could he do so under the terms of the regulations without tendering the assets to the Reichsbank? A. He could not 1986 transfer his German holdings into foreign exchange and thus transfer them outside of Germany, with the exception of a very small exempt amount.

Q. What was that exemption? Do you remember? A. I think at first the exemption was 20,000 reichsmarks. By October 31 it was lowered to 200 reichsmarks.

Q. In any event, it was nothing like 15,000,000 reichsmarks, was it? A. No.

Q. Will you explain why if someone who was a German resident had foreign exchange he could not move outside of Germany and thereby become a devisen auslander and thereby avoid the regulations? A. He could move outside of Germany if he decided that he wasn't going back to Germany and that he was willing to leave his German assets behind, which might be confiscated by the Reich as a fine for his failure to report these foreign assets and tender his foreign exchange.

Q. But, as a matter of German law, you could not leave Germany and become a devisen auslander if once you were a devisen inlander; is that correct? That is to say, a man who on October 2, 1931, was a resident of Germany could not avoid the effect of the regulations by departing from Germany; is that correct? A. No.
1987 Q. Will you explain that, please? A. The obligation to tender his foreign exchange to the Reichsbank was immediately; and if he was still in Germany at the time that this decree entered into effect, he was under that obligation, and failure to comply would have made him liable to penalties?

Q. So if we assume that a man on October 2, 1931, who was residing in Germany had the equivalent of 15,000,000 marks in New York and perhaps another 20,000,000 inside Germany, he could not move out to save the 15,000,000 without sacrificing the 20,000,000; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. I wish to direct your attention to another problem of the German law. Are you familiar with the German Civil Code? A. Yes, I think I am.

Q. Have you ever studied it? A. Yes, I have.

Q. In fact for many years; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with Section 117 of the Code? A. Yes. That is a section which deals with sham transactions.

Q. What is the German title of Section 117? A. 1988 Section 117 speaks of scheingeschaeft.

Q. Do you have any difficulty of any sort in translating that word? A. No. I translate as "sham transaction."

Q. What does the German Civil Code provide with respect to sham transactions? A. It provides, if I may give a rough translation, that where a declaration of intention which is to be made towards another person is, with the consent of that person or in agreement with that person, a sham, it is void.

Q. I want to ask you a hypothetical question. Suppose that in 1931 I had been of legal age in Germany. Suppose my father had said to me, "I am going to purport to give you $3,700,000. But it is to be understood by both of us that it is not a real gift but merely a device of getting around the foreign exchange regulations. You invest the money and take 20 per cent of the income as a fee, but understand that the money is really mine."

Then suppose that a formal deed of gift had been prepared. I will ask you: Would title have passed to the money? A. If I agreed with you that what was being done was not intended, then title would not have passed. The purported transaction would be null and void.

Q. That is true even if there was a formal written 1989 agreement executed by the parties; is that correct?
A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear Professor Kronstein testify concerning Section 117 of the German Civil Code? A. I did.

Q. Did you hear him testify that the German courts would be extremely loathe to find that an agreement which was reduced to a formal writing was in fact a sham transaction? A. I don't agree with him on that.

Q. I mean did you hear him state that? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Now I will ask you: Did you agree with Professor Kronstein on that point? A. I did not agree with him on that point.

Mr. Boland: Is this an answer coming from the reading of cases or from actual experience? It seems to me it might involve a mixture of reading of cases and of experience.

The Court: She has familiarized herself with interpretations; but you can bring out any weaknesses you may find.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Can you answer my question? A. What was the last question?

1990 Mr. Burling: Would you read the last question, Mr. Reporter, please?

The Reporter (reading): "Now I will ask you: Did you agree with Professor Kronstein on that point?"

The Witness: I said that I did not agree with him on that point.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you explain why you do not agree with him and what your own view is, please? A. I do not agree with him for the reason that there are a large amount of cases in which the courts do find that, as a matter of fact, the parties did not intend the purported transaction, which as a rule is incorporated in a written document, and declare that it was null and void.

Q. Do you have the citations of any cases in the German courts in which transactions embodied in written instruments have been declared sham under Section 117 of the Code? A. Well, there is one form of sham transaction which was not uncommon where the transaction was incorporated in a notarized instrument. Those were cases of contracts for the sale of real property, where the parties in order to save taxes—stamp taxes and other taxes—stated the price at a lower amount than the actual amount agreed upon. Those contracts were notarized docu-1991 ments, solemn documents, and yet there is quite a line of cases in which the German courts held such contracts void because one essential, namely, the price, was not stated correctly.

Q. Do you have any citations available to you, either with you or in your possession? A. I have some citations, if I may look them up, on this particular type of transaction.

Also a decision of the Supreme Court published in the Leipziger Zeitschrift for 1924, page 546, where the court mentions a consistent line of decisions established by this court—that is, a consistent line of decisions which held such contracts null and void. This is only one type of transactions which the courts held void under 117.

There is a great number of other instances. I cannot claim that I have read all the decisions because I think there are far too many. I think I have with me a compilation on sham transactions—a compilation and discussion of cases of sham transactions—published by an attorney and notary in Berlin in 1931. The author is Albert Baer. This little compilation contains a great many illustrations of sham transactions.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, this is a book
1992 that comes from the Library of Congress. I cannot make it a permanent part of the exhibits in this case. I ask leave to have it marked for identification. I will hand it to counsel.

The Court: Very well.

(The book referred to was marked as Defendant's Exhibit 115 for identification.)

By the Court:

Q. I think maybe I interpreted Dr. Kronstein's testimony a little different from the way you did. Maybe you can help me a little on it. I rather understood or gathered from his testimony that the German courts would require a clear and convincing testimony when a solemn document appeared, such as we sometimes require over here in this country before we will require specific performance, and the like. We have to have clear, convincing testimony. That does not mean you cannot prove sham, as I understand, but they would want rather clear testimony. Did you find the rule contrary to that, or am I mistaken about that? A. Well, surely, it is a question of evidence; but the evidence that the courts take into consideration is an examination of all the surrounding circumstances.

Q. Surely; they do in any court. But what I understood him to say, now, was, like we have over here, 1993 that certain types of cases, as you probably know from your study of comparative law, are in common law governed by rule of practice or rule of law—that even when he does investigate, the evidence has to be clear and convincing. A. No, there is no such technical rule of evidence in the German law.

Q. What I was wondering was if you found anything like that in any of the cases on it.

Mr. Burling: I don't believe the positions of the parties are very far apart; it is a matter of degree rather than principle.

The Court: I know, but there is in this country a provision with regard to certain types of cases that the evidence has to reach that height. The appellate courts sometimes reverse them if they do not reach that height. I do not know whether that is true in this case or not. You have a solemn document, and you have the person appear before a notary or some court official. I don't know whether the courts regard that as having any particular weight which requires a certain type of clear testimony to overcome it, or whether it is just the ordinary case. That is what I am trying to find out. I understood her to say she had not found any such expression in the German authorities.

1994 The Witness: There isn't any such special technical rule in Germany.

The Court: That is what I am talking about.

Mr. Burling: Thank you, Your Honor. You have clarified a point which I myself missed.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Miss Schoch, I refer you to Defendant's Exhibit 115 as being a book relating to the cases on sham transactions for the purposes of Section 117 of the German Civil Code. A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: I hand it to counsel.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Are you familiar with the process which a German court would employ in determining whether a particular agreement was or was not a sham transaction? What evidence or what considerations would the court weigh? A. The Court would take into account all the circumstances surrounding the transaction—that is, the relationship of the parties, the circumstances, time and place when the purported transaction was gone through, the subsequent conduct of the parties.

Q. Specifically, let us suppose the hypothesis that a German court were considering whether or not a particular gift—that is, a transfer between father and son—was intended as a bona fide gift by the parties, or whether 1995 it was intended merely as a dodge by which the son, being a devisen auslander, could hold foreign securities for his father, who was a devisen inlander, and thereby avoid the necessity of turning over the securities to the Reichsbank for conversion into marks. Would the court first consider the relationship between the parties—whether it was cordial or uncordial? A. It would certainly consider that.

Q. Would it consider evidence concerning the motives of the father for transferring the property to the son rather than tendering the property to the Reichsbank? A. Yes.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I do not mean to bring this up continuously; however, it seems to me, from what I have read on this subject, that foreign law is a matter of fact, and this witness cannot testify as to what the court cases say or what the German Code says. If she has cases to back this up, I have no objection.

The Court: That might be true unless she has practiced in the courts.

Mr. Boland: Without having had any practice, for her to state what the court is going to consider is highly speculative.

The Court: I should be surprised if they would not consider that, however.

1996 Mr. Boland: I doubt if she can testify.

The Court: I have some doubt about that.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please—

The Court: I am willing to hear you on it. If she had not had experience in the courts and had not had decisions on the subject, it might be speculative for her to say what they would receive.

Mr. Burling: A very considerable part of my argument on this point would relate to the great latitude which Your Honor gave Professor Kronstein, who testified as to how he would interpret particular documents.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, he was qualified as having had many, many years of experience.

The Court: I understood that he actually practiced in the courts. If she says she has heard the courts rule and has had actual experience in the courts, that is different. I do not know that German textbooks on evidence would say whether you take into account the relationship of parties, or things like that. I doubt that.

Mr. Burling: May I inquire to see whether she is qualified?

The Court: If there is any textbook on it that is based on her experience in court, that might be different.

1997 Mr. Burling: I submit, as a basis for the questions I am about to ask, that this a question fundamentally of jurisprudence; that is, how does a German court go about determining a particular question? And if she is experienced in jurisprudence and if she has worked on jurisprudence—

The Court: You asked her to take into account the relation of father and son. I doubt if you would find that in any book. I doubt if you would find that ruled on by a court one in a hundred times, so I am a little bit inclined to think that, as a technical expert, you are getting a little out of the domain of what we are considering. I would very much doubt if a court would do it. I cannot think of any court in the world that would take that into account.

Mr. Burling: I won't press the point. However, it seems to me Your Honor will have to do in this case what I wanted to bring out from this witness a German court can do.

The Court: I think certain types of testimony in relation to a sham will be admitted in every court in the world, unless the contrary is shown. I certainly think that must be the law, unless the contrary is shown. Now, if you have any rules of law to the contrary, that is different.

Mr. Burling: I won't take up Your Honor's time. I will proceed.

The Court: Do you agree with me on that, Mr. Boland, that the ordinary matters to be considered in con-1998 nection with an alleged sham transaction would be considered by every court, that any abnormal situation to attempt to show sham would go in in any court, unless there is a rule to the contrary?

Mr. Boland: I think so, to find out whether there was an agreement other than the agreement which was formalized.

The Court: And motives.

Mr. Boland: And motives.

The Court: And motives of foreign exchange, father and so on bad feeling, whether he shot at him the week before, or something like that. They are obvious in every case we have, unless you have some peculiar country that we do not know anything about.

The reason I am sustaining the objection is not that I think the testimony is mistaken, but I think it is obvious and it is not a matter for expert testimony. If you want to argue that that is not so and that there is some law to the contrary, then I think I ought to consider whether I ought to consider it or not. I do not think Dr. Konstein testified on that.

Mr. Boland: No.

The Court: If we are going to have any contest on that point—

Mr. Boland: We can handle it in rebuttal.

The Court: If you are going to call him on that, I think I will have to consider whether I will let her testify in surrebuttal. That is not in the case now, however.

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Have you examined Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, Miss Schoch (handing a document to the witness)? A. Yes, I have.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, this is the gift agreement itself.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Have I requested you to go over it with great care? A. Yes, you have.

Q. And have you done so? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Now, can you tell, from examining the face of the instrument itself, whether or not the document is a sham or is a bona fide gift agreement? A. On the face of the document, you cannot tell either.

Q. And you would not expect, would you, to have the words "sham transaction" written at the head of a transaction which was in fact a sham? A. No; I would not expect any words in such an agreement to indicate the counter intention of the parties.

Q. Now, I ask you to assume that on October 5, 1931, Wilhelm von Opel said to his son, Fritz von Opel, that Wilhelm would make a gift of the 600

Opel shares which are referred to in this document at a later date, but that there was not time enough to prepare a gift agreement because it was necessary for Fritz von Opel to leave Germany the next day for America and to negotiate with General Motors, and that when Fritz von Opel returned to Germany thereafter a gift agreement would then be drawn up and predated to the date October 5, and I ask you to assume further that Fritz von Opel did then proceed to America and, under a power of attorney, did sell the shares to General Motors and then did return to Germany, and in November, 1931, this instrument was drawn up and dated October 5, 1931.

Now, on that assumption, and examining the document, would or would not title to anything pass from Wilhelm to Fritz von Opel upon the execution of the instrument? A. May I just ask you, I am to assume that the instrument was executed in November after the Opel shares had been sold?

Q. After the Opel shares had been sold to General Motors and General Motors had paid some dollars, some shares of General Motors stock, and was obligated to make an additional payment in dollars. A. On that assumption, the gift would be a gift of foreign exchange and foreign securities. Such a gift would have required a li-2001 cense from the German Government. In the absence of such license, the gift would have been void.

Q. So that if we assume also that no license to make a gift of foreign exchange was obtained, then the transaction would be totally void; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Pursuant to what section of what executive order, if you know? A. I think it was section 12 of—I would like to look it up—of the August 1st decree—yes; section 12 of the decree of August 1st, 1931, a provision which was repeated in subsequent consolidating laws.

Q. So that if you assume that Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, which is the purported gift agreement of October 5, 1931, was not signed until November, 1931, and if you assume also that no license was obtained by Wilhelm von Opel to make a gift of foreign exchange to his son, then the transaction would be void whether or not it was sham or whether it was intended as a bona fide gift? A. Yes.

Q. Assume that there was no license. Then, under any hypothesis, as soon as the instrument was signed in November it was void; is that correct? A. Yes.

The Court: I am a little confused on this October 2002 5 date, as between that and October 17.

By the Court:

Q. Would it still be void if executed on the 5th? A. Provided that the object of the gift was foreign exchange or foreign securities. That was Mr. Burling's assumption.

Q. I would like you to make this assumption now. Assume that this is a perfectly bona fide transaction on October 5. A. Yes.

Q. Would that be valid? A. It would be valid, because the object of the gift was German securities, and German securities were not subject at that time to foreign exchange regulations. Mr. Burling made the assumption that they had been changed into foreign securities or foreign currency.

The Court: I understand that.

Mr. Burling: The relevance of my line of inquiry, if Your Honor please, is that the testimony has been that on October 17 the 600 Opel shares were converted—

The Court: I understand that. I had not gotten clearly in my mind that up until October 17 these were German securities.

By the Court:

Q. Being German securities, their location did not 2003 make any difference? He could still transfer them?

A. He could still transfer them. It was much later—

Q. They were in Reichsmarks, anyway? A. Yes.

The Court: All right.

The Witness: It was only in 1938 that the transfer of German securities to a foreign residence was subject to this section.

The Court: That clears up what I had in mind. You go ahead.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Now, whether or not the gift agreement was signed in October or November, if it was a sham it did not operate to pass title; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. And assuming, on the contrary, that it was not signed until November, then it would not operate to pass title, either, under the assumptions that I have given you? A. Yes.

Q. Because in November the object of the gift had been converted into foreign exchange? A. Yes.

Q. Now, for the rest of your testimony, Miss Schoch, I ask you to assume that the gift was not a sham but was intended by the parties as a bona fide gift. Now, first assume also that it was executed on October 5 and, leaving a reservation which I will come to in a moment, is it correct that you would believe, by examining the document, that if it was in fact executed on that date and was intended as a bona fide gift agreement, it would act to pass title from Wilhelm and Marta von Opel to Fritz von Opel of 600 shares of Opel stock? A. Yes, I would come to that conclusion, with a reservation.

Q. Now, will you explain what the reservation is? A. The reservation is the following. The agreement provides that the usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife. This, it seems to me, points to an intention of the parties to establish a usufruct in the shares in and by this agreement.

Q. That is, immediately? Is that right? A. Yes. From the wording of the agreement, that is the way I interpret it.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, again I have got to bring up this problem. Are you interpreting this on the basis of cases in Germany or are you interpreting this on the basis of your experience, Miss Schoch?

Mr. Burling: Just a moment. If there is an objection, it should be addressed to His Honor. You are not 2005 examining her.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I address the objection to you.

The Court: As I understand it, if she has had experience with this and studied the law with relation to usufruct and compared it with the law of other nations, which means, evidently, that she has given it a very careful study, her interpretation of it would be permissible, I should think.

Mr. Boland: Well, I did not gather, from her qualifications specifically, that in her studies of comparative and international law she specifically took usufruct.

The Court: I asked her that.

The Witness: That was part of my studies. I did not specialize in the subject of usufruct.

Mr. Boland: I did not gather that that was her main effort.

Mr. Burling: I did not hear Mr. Kronstein say that he was a specialist in usufruct problems, nor is there a lawyer alive who is.

The Court: I think you may develop on cross-examination as to the weight of it, but I think I will permit her to answer.

Mr. Burling: I do not mean to argue after your Honor's ruling. My particular purpose in offering this is in direct rebuttal to Professor Kronstein's construction. He testified at some length as to his hypothesis of how he would read this.

2006 The Court: I understood that.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you proceed, Miss Schoch? A. As I said, the language of the document is in present terms, and my first reaction, seeing nothing but the document—

Q. I am asking you to assume nothing beyond what I have already given you. A. —that the parties intended to establish a usufruct in the shares then and there.

Now, of course, as has been pointed out, there is no provision of reassignment of possession, so that in the absence of this technical requirement of German law, no usufruct was established by this instrument.

The question then arises—and that is the reservation I wanted to make—whether the usufruct did not constitute such an essential part of the gift that, due to the failure of the usufruct, the entire gift would fail.

Q. Will you explain why the entire gift might fail if the usufruct failed? Will you state what section of the German Code you have reference to? A. Under section 139 of the German Civil Code, a transaction is void if an essential part of the transaction is void and if, without that essential part, the entire transaction could not have been made.

2007 It reads:

"Where a part of a legal transaction is void, the entire transaction is void unless it can be assumed that it would have been made without the void part."

Q. So that if you add to the assumptions I have previously given you the assumption that Wilhelm von Opel insisted upon the usufruct provisions, then, as a matter of German law, if the usufruct failed, the entire gift would fail and title would remain in Wilhelm von Opel; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. And that is the result you come to if you had no assistance other than the four corners of the instrument itself plus the assumptions I have already stated? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you have used the word "usufruct." In German the word used in the instrument is "niessbrauch," is it not? A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any difficulty in translating the word "niessbrauch" into English? A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you examined any dictionaries or lexicons of German and English dictionaries? A. Well, I have examined the standard German-English and English-German dictionaries, and they translate "niessbrauch" by "usufruct," and vice versa.

2008 Q. That is, the dictionaries indicate that the proper translation of the word "niessbrauch" is the word "usufruct"; is that correct? A. Yes. One or two of them also add the word "use."

Q. Now, did you hear Professor Kronstein refer to an article in the Columbia Law Review by a Professor Nussbaum? A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. Have you examined that article at my request? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Does that article contain a translation of the German word "niessbrauch"? A. No, it does not.

Q. Does it use the word "usufruct"? A. Yes, and in passing, I would say.

Q. Does it refer to the German concept of usufruct? A. No, it does not.

Q. I see. Now, are there any standard English language translations of the German Civil Code? A. There are two translations of the German Civil Code; one by Loewy and another by a man named Wang.

Q. Now, how do these two standard translations deal with the word "niessbrauch"? A. They use the term "usufruct."

Q. Now, you heard Dr. Kronstein testify, did you not, concerning the origins of the German law? A. Yes.

2009 Q. And do you not agree with him that there are many elements of the German law which are derived from Germanic law and not the Roman law? A. Speaking about the present day of the German Civil Code and the other German Code, yes.

Q. I address your attention specifically to the problem of the use of usufruct. Can you state where that concept came from in the present German law? Where is it derived from? A. In my opinion, the concept of usufruct in the present German law is derived from and based upon the Roman concept of usufruct.

Q. Do you think this is a matter which is open to doubt or is it a matter that you have a very clear and fixed opinion on?

Mr. Boland: I object, Your Honor. I do not see what Roman law has to do with the problem before the Court.

Mr. Burling: I am not going on more than a few more questions.

The Court: Very well.

Mr. Burling: I want to bring out that the present correct definition of the term "niessbrauch" is contained in the Justinian Code, if Your Honor please, to cast light on what the correct interpretation of the concept is. I 2010 can do it in just a moment, if Your Honor will bear with me.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you answer the question, please? Do you recall the question?

The Court: The question was whether there is any doubt about it. I do not have that before me. That may be objectionable.

Mr. Burling: I will withdraw the question.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Did you hear Dr. Kronstein refer to his teacher, Martin Wolff? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Who is Wolff? A. Martin Wolff was a professor in the law faculty of Berlin. He was one of the leading authorities in Germany, and he was the author of a textbook of high standing on the German law.

Q. Would it be correct to say that Wolff occupied a position as a textbook writer in German law comparable to that of Wigmore or Williston in American law? A. Yes, I would say so.

Q. Have you examined his textbook with respect to what he says about the concept of usufruct? A. Yes, I have, and I find that--

Q. Have you brought with you this volume? A.
2011 I have the volume with me, and I find that Martin Wolff explains that niessbrauch—

Q. Will you examine, I think it is page 343, and state whether I am correctly translating into English?

"Niessbrauch is a right in rem to use a piece of property in every respect, without, however, having the right to transfer, dispose, or destroy the substance"?

A. Yes. That is a translation of his first paragraph under the heading of "Usufruct."

Q. Now, will you look further and state whether I am correctly translating as follows:

"The modern law of niessbrauch is essentially formed after the pattern of the Roman and civil law. The concept of niessbrauch is entirely Roman. The definition given above corresponds to that of Paulus,"

And then there is a phrase in Latin which we will furnish the reporter:

"Usufructus est ius alienibus rebus utendi fruendi salva rerum substantia"?

A. Yes.

Q. To whom is the Latin attributed by Martin Wolff? A. To the Roman Jurist Paul, or Paulus, and the reference is to the digests which form part of the Justinian Code.

Q. Are you able to translate the Latin which I 2012 just read? A. Well, yes.

Q. Will you do so? A. It says, "Usufruct is the right to use and enjoy property owned by another, without, however, impairing its substance."

Q. Now, do you agree with Wolff that in German law a usufruct or niessbrauch is always a right in rem? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any such thing, as a matter of technical German law, as an in personam niessbrauch? A. No.

Q. Now, would you state whether it is your opinion that any trained German lawyer knows that a usufruct is a right in rem? A. That is my opinion.

Q. Would you state whether, in your opinion, a trained, experienced German lawyer using the word 'usufruct" would intend to refer to a right in rem?

Mr. Boland: Before she answers that, same objection.

The Court: Well, I think that is getting a little too far. I will sustain the objection.

Mr. Burling: I will withdraw the question.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Would it be possible to have an in personam right or claim to enable someone else to create a usufruct in 2013 the future? A. Oh, yes, that is entirely possible.

Q. Is a right properly called a usufruct? A. No. Such a right is a claim for the creation of a usufruct.

Q. Now, you have taught comparative law, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. I want to ask you a question on comparative law. Would the analogy between a right in the future to require someone to create a usufruct and a usufruct be equivalent to the right in the future to contract a marriage and a present marriage? A. Well, yes. The one is a marriage and the other is—

Q. A future contract to marry? A. Yes. That is a parallel, except, of course, when it comes to specific performance.

Q. Well, with the exception of that, there is as much difference between an agreement and a marriage as there is between the right to call upon someone in the future to create a usufruct and a usufruct itself; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I want to ask you another question on comparative law. Are you familiar with the fact that in our law here the courts employ what are called canons of construction? A. Yes.

2014 Q. Are there any canons or rules of construction which are employed in German courts? A. Yes.

Q. Now, with respect to the specific question of the construction of a written instrument, can you state whether you are familiar with the kinds of construction employed in German courts? A. Yes, I think I am.

Q. Are they approximately similar to or are they very different from the rules of construction which an American court would employ? A. I would say that they are not basically different.

By the Court:

Q. Not what? A. Not basically different.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Is there any rule of construction which as a matter of law a German court would employ in construing a written instrument with respect to what the words of the instrument are? A. Well, I think my friend Kronstein has explained in his testimony that a court would first use the so-called objective test—that is, it would look to what the parties say and it would look to the natural, accepted, customary meaning of words, and it would look to the 2015 technical meaning of technical expressions.

Q. Now, will you look at Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 once more and state whether the parties say they intend to create a usufruct to be enjoyed by Wilhelm and Marta von Opel or whether they intend to create a claim under which at some point in the future Wilhelm and Marta von Opel might require Fritz von Opel to set up a usufruct? A. The parties say that the usufruct is not assigned, but that it remains with the Opel parents. That to me expresses an intention to establish a usufruct right then and there.

Q. As a matter of German law, are the words relating to usufruct ambiguous or unambiguous? A. The words of this instrument?

Q. Yes. A. I think they are unambiguous.

Q. Again assume that there is no circumstances or showing that this is a sham transaction. Assume it is bona fide. Is there any word or words in the instrument itself which would require or justify a German court in going beyond the words contained in the instrument and looking elsewhere for assistance in construing it? A. I did not quite understand your question, sir.

Q Again assuming for the moment that this gift agreement is bona fide, that the parties intended to make 2016 a gift on October 5, 1931, is there any word or words employed in the instrument itself which create any ambiguity or doubt sufficient to justify a German court in going outside of the instrument in order to construe it? A. I don't think so.

Q. Are you aware of any different rule in the German court than the rule which this Court would apply in determining whether to look beyond the four corners of a written instrument in construing it? A. No. I think the Court here would apply the same criterion.

Q. And will you state what the plain and unambiguous language of the instrument is with relation to the usufruct? A. In my opinion, the plain expression of the instrument is that a usufruct is to remain with the Opel parents.

Q. And that is a right in rem? A. That would be a right in rem.

Q. And yet there is no redelivery? A. No. Therefore, the right in rem has not come into being in this instrument.

Q. If I told you as a hypothesis that the instrument was prepared in about a half an hour, under conditions of great haste and in a hectic atmosphere, would you assume from the instrument that a usufruct was intended or would you assume that some other result was intended?

2017 A. I would assume that a usufruct was intended, but that due to haste, the provision concerning the reassignment of possession was omitted.

Q. In other words, you would assume, on the assumptions that I have given you, that a technical lawyer's error had been committed; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And under section 139 of the Civil Code, the result of such an error would be the failure of the entire gift; is that correct? A. Yes, assuming that the usufruct forms an essential element of the gift.

By the Court:

Q. How should it have read? A. Well, the provision that was omitted would have been to the effect that Fritz von Opel reassigns to his parents the claim against the bank in New York for the delivery of the Opel shares.

Q. You had to say that notwithstanding that you say that you reserve the usufruct? A. If you want to create a usufruct then and there, you have to have a delivery of possession.

Q. Of course, this is a chose in action, not very tangible. The right to convey is the interest in the corporation, is it not? What you convey by an instrument, when 2018 you convey an interest in the corporation, is just the interest in the corporation? The stock is simply evidence of it; isn't that right? A. Well—

Q. What I am trying to get at is, if you can convey it by the same instrument by which you convey a usufruct, do you have to have delivery there? A. Yes.

Q. You have to have delivery, in so many words, back? A. Yes, under the strict rules of German law.

The Court: I do not think that is American law. It may be German law. At least, I ruled the other way in a case I had.

We will adjourn now.

(At 3:35 p.m. an adjournment was taken until Wednesday, January 5, 1949, at 10 a.m.)

2021 PROCEEDINGS

Thereupon—MAGDALENA SCHOCH resumed the stand and, having been previously duly sworn, testified further as follows:

By the Court:

Q. Let me get a little matter cleared up in my mind. When you speak of a delivery of stock and the necessity for delivery in order to complete this usufruct, you have in mind, I take it, the statement in the instrument itself of an assignment? Is that what you have in mind? That was the point I was really talking about when we adjourned last night. Do you have inclusion of the wording of assignment rather than actual delivery of the certificates themselves? Is that what you had in mind? A. Well, is a case where the stock is in the hands of a third person—for instance, deposited with a bank—actual delivery can be replaced by the assignment of the claim which the owner has against the bank.

Q. In other words, if you say, "By this assignment I hereby assign all my right, title, and interest in and to that share of stock," that would suffice for the bringing into creation of a usufruct? A. You would have to say that,

"I deliver possession to you by assigning to you my 2022 claim against the bank."

Q. If you say you deliver possession in that language, then you do not actually have to hand over the certificate of stock itself? A. That is correct.

Q. That is what I was trying to get clear. All right.

What you would say was missing in this instrument was —in this so-called gift agreement, what you would say was missing, in so far as that reservation of title was concerned —what was missing was the wording that "I hereby assign or deliver—and/or deliver—possession of the certificates"? That is what was missing? A. What was missing were the words which delivered possession to the usufructuary.

Q. That is what I say. All there was was a reservation of an interest, but not words of delivery which constituted delivery or possession? A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: I should, first, merely for the record, like to have marked—and I offer it in evidence—Defendant's Exhibit 31-A, which is the German of the decree of August 1, 1931. We identified it in English yesterday, if Your Honor please. I offer it in evidence.

(Defendant's Exhibit 31-A was received in evi-2023 dence.)

Direct Examination (resumed)

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Miss Schoch, you are suffering from a cold and have a hoarse voice? A. Yes; I have a cold and I ask the Court's indulgence.

Q. Now, did I correctly understand you to say yesterday at the close of your testimony that on the assumption that Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 is a bona fide instrument, that was intended to accomplish what it says on its face, and that it was in fact signed on October 5, 1931, and on the further assumption that it was hastily drawn up in a hectic atmosphere on that date, if you were merely to examine the instrument itself, you would conclude that what the parties intended to do was to make a gift reserving then and there a usufruct to Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, and that a technical lawyer's defect existed; and that on the further assumption that Wilhelm von Opel insisted upon the usufruct, then the entire gift failed for failure of an essential element of the gift pursuant to Section 139 of the Civil Code? A. Yes, that would be my conclusion.

Q. Did you hear Professor Kronstein testify to the general effect that under German law it is difficult or 2024 impossible to make a gift reserving then and there a usufruct, and that the most that can be done is to make a gift subject merely to a charge? A. That is what I understood from his testimony.

Q. Now, have you, since you heard him testify a month ago, looked at any cases decided by the Supreme Court of Germany on that point? A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you found a case that bears on that point? A. I have found one case just decided by the Supreme Court in 1935, in which this is exactly what happened: that is, a gift of personal property was made by parents to their child with a usufruct in the property reserved to the parents.

Q. You refer, do you not; to the case decided on September 10, 1935, which is cited in 148 R. G. Z. 321-323? A. Yes, that is the case, in Volume 148 of the official collection.

Q. In that case, is it not true that parents made a gift of home furnishings to their daughter, who was a minor child? A. Yes.

Q. And that they by the instrument reserved to themselves a usufruct in the furnishings; is that correct? A. Yes.

2025 Q. Is it not also correct that thereafter creditors of the parents attached those furnishings? A. Yes.

Q. Am I right in thinking that the daughter then asserted that she had legal title to the property and that the attachment was void? A. Yes.

Q. Am I right also in thinking that two lower courts held that the daughter could not create a usufruct for the parents at the same time that the parents gave her the legal title? A. Yes, that is correct. The lower courts held that, first, a full transfer of title had to occur; then the daughter had to create a usufruct for the parents.

Q. And that was not what they had in fact done, on the facts of that case, was it? A. What they had in fact done was that they had executed one instrument in which the gift was made at the same time that the usufruct was reserved. No delivery of possession was necessary, because the parents already had possession. Therefore, everything could be done by this one agreement and in this one instrument.

Q. Miss Schoch, I am now just asking what the facts of the case are; I am not asking for the legal con-2026 clusion yet.

The facts are that they made an instrument in which they purported to give to the daughter and to reserve the usufruct? A. Yes.

Q. The fact is that two different lower courts of Germany held that you could not do that; that the usufruct failed; and that since the usufruct was an essential element of the transaction, the entire gift failed, and therefore the daughter had no title and no standing as against the creditors; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, two different lower courts of Germany applied the law as you understood Dr. Kronstein to state it; is that correct? A. Yes; I think that is what he said.

Q. What did the Supreme Court of Germany do when this case came up to it, with particular respect to the principle of law enunciated by Dr. Kronstein? A. The Supreme Court overruled the decisions of the lower courts and said that in cases of gifts of personal property with a reserved usufruct, the gift and the usufruct came into existence at the same time.

Q. The action of the court was to reverse the lower courts, which had applied Dr. Kronstein's principle; 2027 is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Do you have the text of the opinion with you? A. I have a photostatic copy with me.

Q. I wish you would look at page 223 and tell me whether I am correctly translating from the German:

"Where personal property is involved and, as is the case here, the transfer of ownership and the creation of the usufruct are not only externally incorporated in one agreement, but where in addition both are inseparably connected in substance"—and then I will skip— A. Yes.

Q. So far the translation is correct? A. Yes.

Q. "The agreement between the minor and her parents concerning the creation of the usufruct had, therefore, a dual significance: on the one hand, as regards the creation of the usufruct; and on the other hand, as regards the transfer of title. Consequently, the two agreements embodied in one instrument had a dual result: acquisition of title by the daughter and acquisition of the usufruct by the parents."

Then, skipping some:

"Accordingly, there is no possibility of separating 2028 the two legally relevant events. It cannot be said that the daughter only granted usufruct to her parents subsequently. Rather it must be said that she acquired only property which was burdened with a usufruct."

Is that what the Supreme Court of Germany said? A. Yes.

Q. Before I go on to a different topic, it is clear, is it not, that it would have been possible for the parents Opel to have given the 600 Opel shares to Fritz von Opel burdened by a usufruct which came into existence simultaneously and instantaneously? A. Yes; in my opinion, that would have been possible.

Q. That is what the Supreme Court of Germany held in the case we have just discussed? A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: May I have Plaintiff's Exhibits 7, 8 and 9, please?

(The deputy clerk handed papers to Mr. Burling.)

By Mr. Burling:

Q. At this point, Miss Schoch, I wish to vary the assumptions I have been asking about. I wish you to consider again, for the moment, that the transaction which is related in Plaintiff's Exhibit 5—the gift agreement— is 2029 not a sham but is a bona fide gift and that it was executed on October 5, 1931. But I ask you to assume also that on October 2, 1931, the purported donee, Fritz von Opel—that is, purported donee of the legal title, not the usufructuary interest—had gone to consult one of the most eminent lawyers in Germany, a Dr. Hachenburg, and had discussed the problem with him, and that Hachenburg had prepared a document, which I will show you in a moment, and that that document was used for the basis for the preparation of Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, the purported gift agreement.

I will ask you if you would then come to the same conclusion to which you would come on my prior hypothesis. I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 7 and ask you to assume that this is a letter which Hachenburg wrote to Wilhelm von Opel. I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 8 and ask you to assume that this is a draft of the gift agreement prepared by Hachenburg.

I show you—I am sorry; I think I said plaintiff's. These are Plaintiff's Exhibits 7 and 8.

Now, I will show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 9 and ask you to assume that this is a memorandum entitled, "Fundamental Considerations," which Hachenburg prepared on October 2 and which Fritz von Opel took back to Wiesbaden with him on October 2, and which he discussed with his father and with the lawyer who drew up the final 2030 form of the gift agreement.

Now, my question is, would the additional assumptions which I have given you lead you to any different conclusion as to the intent of the parties and as to the legal effect of what was done? A. Assuming that the agreement that was made on October 5 was based on these drafts and considerations—

Q. That is correct; that is the assumption I now give you. A. Yes; in the light of these, what we may call, Hachenburg papers, I come to a different conclusion from the one reached merely on the basis of looking at the Exhibit 5.

Q. In other words, if we assume that the gift agreement was drawn up on the basis of the Hachenburg papers and that another lawyer was asked to draw up a final form merely as a device for saving legal fees which Hachenburg might charge, then you come to a different conclusion from the one you testified about yesterday; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Will you explain that, please? A. I see from the Hachenburg draft and the explanatory writings that what Dr. Hachenburg had in mind was an immediate gift of the stock from father to son and the creation of a usufruct for the father or for the parents in the near 2031. future.

Q. What is it, from the Hachenburg papers, that shows you that that was what was intended by Hachenburg? A. The intention of Hachenburg, as it appears from these papers, was that the stock—the Opel stock, which was the purpose of the gift, was to be placed into a holding company.

Q. Where do you see that, please? A. In Section 2 of the gift agreement.

Q. That is Section 2 of what we now assume to be Hachenburg's draft of the gift agreement, which is in turn Plaintiff's Exhibit 8? A. Yes.

Q. What does the Hachenburg draft of the gift agreement provide with respect to a holding company? A. It provides that Mr. Fritz von Opel is entitled to—upon demand of the donors obliged to assign the shares to a holding company which he owns. In this case the parents would have the usufruct in 75 per cent of the shares which the holding company will be required to issue in exchange for the Opel shares.

Q. What would the legal significance be of the assignment to the parents Opel of the shares of the holding company? A. Well, the draft provides that the shares 2032 shall be deposited in the name of the father.

Q. Perhaps I should rephrase my question. I withdraw my prior question and ask this one:

What would the legal significance be of the deposit of the holding company's shares issued in exchange for the Opel shares in the names of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel?

A. In my opinion, that would constitute the establishment of the usufruct, assuming that the bank—that it is understood that the bank holds the shares for Wilhelm von Opel as usufructuary.

Q. In other words, if Wilhelm and Marta von Opel agree that the shares of the holding company which holds the Opel shares are to be deposited in their name in a bank, then, if Fritz von Opel had done that, that deposit would constitute the delivery of possession sufficiently to create a usufruct then and there; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything in any of the three Hachenburg papers which I have shown you—namely, the letter to Wilhelm von Opel, the draft agreement, and the memorandum entitled, "Fundamental Considerations"—which in any way shows that what Hachenburg was intending to do was to create not a usufruct but merely a claim which the parents would have against Fritz von Opel, either for income or for the creation of a usufruct at some vague 2033 time in the indefinite future? A. I cannot see anything in these papers which would support that view. In my opinion, Dr. Hachenburg made an elaborate provision for a usufruct to be created in the near future through this holding company.

Q. Will you state whether or not the language of the Hachenburg draft agreement is consistent or inconsistent with your view that what Hachenburg intended to do was to have a gift to Fritz von Opel, followed in the near future by a creation of a usufruct brought about through a holding company device? A. Well, the provision that follows the passage—that shortly follows the passage—I have just read, in which it is said that Geheimrat von Opel, and in case he should predecease his wife, then his widow may vote the deposited holding shares by virtue of the usufruct.

Q. If Geheimrat von Opel or his widow were to have merely an in personam claim to have Fritz create a usufruct in the future, they would not have any right to vote the shares at all, would they? A. Not unless they held the shares.

Q. But if they did hold the shares under the agreement, they would have a usufruct; isn't that so? A. Yes.

Q. Do you observe the words in the Hachenburg 2034 draft to the effect that Geheimrat von Opel may vote deposited holding shares by virtue of the usufruct whenever the vote involved the declaration of the net profits and/or a resolution in respect thereto, including resolutions of the distribution of reserves and funds? A Yes.

Q. Going back to Dr. Kronstein's testimony a month ago, did you hear him tell me, on my cross examination of him, that there were different views in Germany—to be exact, three—as to the right of a usufructuary to vote shares: the most extreme being that he had no such right; the middle one being that he had a right to vote in so far as income was involved; and the most extreme on the other side being that he had the sole right to vote the shares? A. Yes, I heard that.

Q. Will you state what, in your opinion, Hachenburg was intending to do by the words of the draft which I just read to you? A. I think that Dr. Hachenburg was well aware of this conflict of opinions, and he wanted to make it perfectly clear that the rights of the usufruct in regard to voting should be—that is, he adopted what you call the middle view.

Q. In other words, Hachenburg was aware that 2035 there was doubt in German law on this point and sought to avoid any problem by solving it in the gift agreement itself; is that right? A. I think so.

Q. That is a problem which arises in connection with an in rem right, namely, usufruct, isn't it? A. Yes. He says expressly they shall vote by virtue of the usufruct.

Q. That is totally inconsistent, is it not, with the thought that it was intended that the Opels establish merely a claim for income or claim to have usufruct created in the future in order to secure a claim to income? A. Yes; that is, in my opinion, inconsistent.

Q. So, having seen the Hachenburg draft, is it not correct that you revise your first opinion, which was that the parties intended immediately to create the usufruct, and that the whole gift, therefore, may have failed because of failure to provide the technical language necessary to create usufruct then and there; and that you, having seen the Hachenburg draft, would now say that it was the intent of the parties to pass title immediately to Fritz von Opel; it being the intent of the parties also that soon thereafter Fritz von Opel would place the proceeds of the gift in a holding company and create a usufruct to his parents by depositing shares of the holding company 2036 in their name? A. Yes.

Q. I will now ask you assume something further. Let us assume that the intent of the parties was as you described and that a bona fide gift was intended and executed on October 5, and that thereafter Fritz von Opel acquired the shares of a Swiss holding company called Uebersee Finanz-Korporation. Let us suppose he placed the proceeds of the gift into Uebersee and that he deposited the shares of Uebersee in a bank safe deposit box and took the key and gave the key to his father's agent, it being understood by the father, the agent—and I will give the agent the hypothetical name of Hans Frankenberg—and it was understood by the father, by Frankenberg, and by Fritz that Frankenberg was to hold the key as agent for his father.

On that hypothesis would valid delivery of possession of the res have been made to Wilhelm von Opel? A. Yes.

Q. Would such delivery bring a usufruct into being? A. Such delivery would bring into existence the usufruct.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, may I ask a question? This is under German law?

Mr. Burling: I was coming to that.

2037 By Mr. Burling:

Q. As a matter of German law, would it make any difference whether the safe deposit box was Box 1917 in the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt in Zurich or was in a safe deposit box in a bank located within the Reich? A. Yes, it might make a difference.

Q. Will you state what it is? A. It might make a difference because the German court might look to the Swiss law concerning a usufruct, because the situs of the securities was in Switzerland.

Q. You heard Professor Kaufmann testify as an expert in Swiss law that, as a matter of Swiss law, you could bring a usufruct into existence by delivering the key to the box in which the securities were? A. Yes.

Q. I am not asking you to testify as an expert on Swiss law; but assuming that Professor Kaufmann is correct as to the Swiss law, then, as a matter of German law, would it make any difference whether the securities were in Box 1917 in Zurich or were in a box physically located in Germany? A. No, that would make no difference.

Q So even if the box which I ask you to assume was in Zurich, on the hypothesis I have given you, a usufruct would come into existence at the moment that the 2038 key was delivered to this hypothetical person named Frankenberg; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you hear Professor Kronstein testify concerning what I believe he referred to as three possible ways of construing Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 in the light of the Hachenburg papers—or three hypotheses? A. Yes, I remember.

Q Do you recall that he stated as his first hypothesis that they at first never intended to create an in rem right at all, but that they intended nothing beyond a mere claim which the father and mother could at their option exercise to receive 80 per cent of the income upon demand? A. Yes; that, if I remember correctly, was his first hypothesis.

Q. Now, is it your opinion that that is a possible construction of the papers?

Mr. Boland: Just a moment. I think, Your Honor, that this subject is confusing enough without misstating Dr. Kronstein. I remember this point very, very clearly.

Mr. Burling: I am endeavoring to do this in good faith. If counsel will state what the first hypothesis is—

Mr. Boland: The first hypothesis is that Dr. Kron-
2039 stein testified that using the gift agreement alone, having nothing else in front of you but Exhibit 5; there were three possible constructions or interpretations. Then, when he went to the Hachenburg draft, that eliminated some of those possible constructions. But the three potentials were on the gift agreement alone, Exhibit 5.

I think it would be very confusing—

Mr. Burling: I am genuinely confused, if Your Honor please. I thought all the hypotheses related to all four papers—that is, the actual gift, the draft gift, the letter, and memorandum.

If counsel will now state which hypothesis his expert asserts is the correct one, on the basis of all of the four papers, we can perhaps proceed more rapidly.

Mr. Boland: As I recall the interpretation of Dr. Kronstein, on the basis of the Hachenburg draft was his possibility 3, which was an in personam claim againt the donee, with the right to establish and to secure an in personam right through establishment of a usufruct.

Mr. Burling: May I ask, if Your Honor please, is that the position which counsel finally takes?

Mr. Boland: Is that question directed to the entire presentation of the case? Our case is based upon the facts and the clear intent, as has been testified to by the father, the son, and the lawyer who was present.

2040 The Court: I think the best way we can do this is to have you ask the questions, Mr. Burling, which you think would meet those problems—questions of law.

Mr. Burling: I was about to ask this witness if she agreed with what I thought and with what she thought Dr. Kronstein testified to.

The Court: I think the form of that might get us sometimes into trouble. You have different hypotheses from his.

Mr. Burling: I will put the hypotheses as my own.

The Court: That will relieve you a little bit.

Mr. Boland: Yes.

The Court: I get the point. Of course, you could include his name in there; and if Mr. Boland says he did not do that, he may include his name when he asks the other way. It does not make any difference. I understand that each one of you might have a little different view of what the doctor said.

Mr. Boland: I did not rise as a matter of objection but merely as a matter of assistance on the assumption that probably Mr. Burling had misinterpreted.

Mr. Burling: I quite agree with Mr. Boland. This is a different subject.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I withdraw the question I previously put and 2041 ask you this:

Will you examine Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, the gift agreement? On the assumption merely that this is a bona fide document and not a sham, and that it was executed on October 5, in your opinion is it possible to come to a conclusion, as a matter of German legal construction, that this document was intended to create not a usufruct but merely a claim which the parents Opel might exercise upon demand in the future for income? A. No. I think this construction would be inconsistent with the plain, unambiguous text of the agreement itself.

Q. In other words, if I ask you whether the hypothesis of that construction is right—is possible—your answer is, "No, it is impossible"; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I will take the second hypothesis.

Mr. Burling: I withdraw my remark.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Am I right in thinking that the reason why the hypothesis I gave you is impossible is that the agreement, in terms, in its plain language, refers to usufruct, which is an in rem right, and that the German court would not construe an instrument purporting to create an in rem right as being intended to create merely an in personam claim? A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. Now, I will vary the hypothesis. Will you now assume that you are given not only the gift agreement itself but also the Hachenburg papers? Am I right in thinking it is also clear that in the light of the Hachenburg papers it would be impossible for the German court to come to the conclusion that what was intended was merely a claim and not the creation of an in rem usufructuary right? A. That is my opinion.

Q. It is your opinion, is it not, that Dr. Hachenburg knew the difference between a claim and a usufruct? A. I think so. I think if he provided for a usufruct, he meant a right in rem.

Q. You agree, I take it, with Dr. Kronstein, that Hachenburg was one of the most distinguished and learned lawyers in Germany, do you not? A. Oh, yes, indeed.

Q. So the first hypothesis I gave you you reject either on the basis of the instrument itself—that is, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 itself—or on the basis of that instrument plus the Hachenburg papers? A. Yes.

Q. Either way, you reject the hypothesis? A. Yes.

2043 Q. Now, I want to give you a second hypothesis. Is it either possible or likely that a German court would construe the document Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 as effecting an agreement of the parties not to create a usufruct in the near future, but as embodying merely a right which the parents were to have—an in personam claim—so that if at some remote future time they felt like it, they could demand that Fritz von Opel create a usufruct? A. I think I could not put that construction on the gift agreement itself because, again, of the clear language which says the usufruct remains or shall remain with the Opels.

Q. Let us vary the hypothesis slightly. Suppose I also give you the Hachenburg papers. Then what is your opinion as to the hypothesis that I just put? A. Well, the Hachenburg papers spell out the usufruct idea and elaborate the manner in which the usufruct is to be set up. Therefore, I cannot conclude that a mere claim for some—that establishing a usufruct at some future—vague future—time was intended by Dr. Hachenburg.

Q. In other words, the second hypothesis is also unlikely, either on the basis of the instrument itself or on the basis of the instrument coupled with the Hachenburg 2044 papers? A. Yes.

Q. Let us take a third hypothesis, and that is that what the parties intended was to create instantly a claim which the parents could exercise, if they felt like it, for money coupled with a right which they might or might not in some vague future time also exercise to create a usufruct in order to secure their claim for income. First, do you understand the hypothesis? A. Yes. It is a somewhat complicated hypothesis, but I think I understand it.

Q. I now give you only the instrument itself—that is, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5. A. Excuse me; I do not have it here. Just to make sure.

(Mr. Burling handed a paper to the witness.)

Thank you.

Q. Do you think it likely that the German court would put that construction on Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, merely reading the face of the instrument? A. I don't think so.

Q. Will you explain why you don't think so? A. Because, as I said just a minute ago, it is a somewhat complicated construction, and it would have to be spelled out somehow in the instrument itself. In other words, you cannot read into an instrument an intention of 2045 the party which is not found in some expression—either a complete or incomplete expression—in the document.

Q. In the document itself, do you see any expression of the hypothesis I just put to you? A. No, I don't.

Q. Will you also look at the Hachenburg papers and state whether on the basis of the Hachenburg papers and the instrument itself you think it likely or unlikely that the German court would adopt that hypothesis? A. I think it is highly unlikely, for the same reason that I have given just now.

Q. Do you see anything in the Hachenburg papers which indicates that it was the intent of the parties to obtain a right, an in personam claim for income, coupled with the right that they could at some point in the future, if they felt like it, create a usufruct in order to secure that claim?

A. No, I cannot read that interpretation from the Hachenburg papers.

Q. Do you see anything in the papers—in the Hachenburg papers—where Hachenburg said anything about such an intent? A. No.

Q. Are the Hachenburg papers consistent or inconsistent with that hypothesis? A. I think they are in-2046 consistent.

Mr. Burling: Now, if Your Honor please, I wish to read a sentence from Dr. Kronstein's testimony, as a basis for examining this witness. I am reading from page 410 of the record.

"If you take my first possibility in regards to the first paragraph on page 2, you have to interpret the section 5 this way:

"First, that the Opel parents can make a claim against the son; but without making a demand, no obligation on the side of the son can exist."

The Witness: I take it that section 5 refers to the gift agreement?

Mr. Burling: Yes. Dr. Kronstein was testifying about the purported gift agreement of October 5.

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Now, do you have an opinion concerning Dr. Kronstein's testimony that I just read to you? A. Yes, I have. I do not agree with Dr. Kronstein's interpretation.

Q. Will you explain why you do not? A. Because I think the theory that a mere in personam claim for income was intended is contradictory to the wording and the tenor 2047 of this paragraph. I cannot find any indication of a right in personam for income alone.

Q. Now, I am going to read another portion of Dr. Kronstein's testimony, from page 442 of the record.

"Question: Is there anything in this letter, Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 7, which would shed light on the intent of the parties?"

Will you look at Plaintiff's Exhibit 7, please? A. Yes, I have it here.

Q. "Answer: Yes.

"Question: Would you point out the particular verbiage of the letter and read it aloud, please?

"Answer: One point is to be found in the last part.

"Question: The last paragraph?

"Answer: Of the letter.

"Question: Of the letter?

"Answer: Yes.

"It says: 'But the same would apply if the contract were to provide not for a true usufruct, but instead for a purely personal claim to the payment of a corresponding share of the profits. This right also would be part of your property. It is to be evaluated in the same manner as the usufruct itself.'"

Will you examine that portion of the letter to 2048 which Dr. Kronstein referred? A. I have.

Q. Will you state whether you agree with Dr. Kronstein that this indicates that the parties intended a claim for income as opposed to the creation of a usufruct in the near future? A. In my opinion, this indicates just the opposite.

Q. Will you explain why? A. In the preceding paragraph, Dr. Hachenburg explains that the usufruct will have to be included in the property tax return. Then he goes on to explain that this usufruct is not especially expensive from the point of no taxation, because even if a usufruct will not establish but a purely personal claim, this right would also have to be reported as property under the property tax. In other words, he speaks in the subjunctive mood.

Q. Just a moment. I should like you to look at the German.

Mr. Burling: May I have 7-A, please?

(The clerk handed a paper to Mr. Burling.)

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you state whether in German grammar there is a usage comparable to the English use of the subjunctive for conditions contrary to fact? A. Yes, the usage is just the same.

2049 Q. In other words, what Dr. Hachenburg is saying, then, is that if this were something else, you would still have to pay the tax? A. Yes. It is the same thing as saying, "If I had a million dollars, I would have to pay a high income tax."

Q. And the use of the subjunctive would indicate that either you do not have a million dollars or that this was not a personal claim; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I am coming to another topic, Miss Schoch, and I ask you again to assume various things. I ask you to assume that a valid gift was made on October 5—that is, that there was not a sham; that it was executed on October 5; and that thereafter Fritz von Opel placed the proceeds of the gift into Uebersee, placed the shares of Uebersee in a box in a bank in Zurich, and by agreement between himself, a hypothetical man named Frankenberg, and Wilhelm von Opel delivered the key to Frankenberg as agent for Wilhelm, thus creating a valid usufruct.

Assume that all this happened on or after October 5, 1931; and assume further that Wilhelm and Marta von Opel never received a licens; but waived or abandoned their usufructuary interest in those securities of a Swiss corporation.

Would it have been possible at any time after 2050 October 5, 1931 for them to have waived or abandoned such interest? A. Under German law, they required a license to waive such interest. In the absence of a license, such a waiver would have been void.

Q. Therefore, even if they purported to do so, the usufructuary interest would remain in them; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. What section or what provision of German law required a license to engage in this waiver? A. A provision in the foreign exchange decree, which said that any transfer or other act of disposition concerning foreign securities requires a license.

Q. What provision is that? A. I can refer you to the decree of August 1, 1931 and its subsequent decrees and laws which are incorporated.

Q. In other words, it began with paragraph 4 of the decree of August 1, 1931, and was then restated in subsequent decrees? A. I think it was section 4.

Q. Is it not true that at no time after August 1 could you dispose of foreign securities, if you were a devisen inlander, without a license? A. That is correct.

Q. Is there any provision of German law which says that a purported disposal in violation of law is 2051 void? A. Yes.

Q. What section is that, please? A. First of all, there is a provision in the German Civil Code which provides that a legal act which violates a statutory prohibition is void.

Then, there is a special provision in the foreign exchange control decree of August 1, 1931, and in subsequent legislation, which expressly says that a transaction which requires a license—no; it says that any transaction made contrary to the provisions of this law is void.

Q. You have no doubt, do you, that a waiver or abandonment of usufructuary in foreign securities was within the purview of the foreign exchange control legislation? A. Yes.

Q. You do not have any doubt? Is that what you mean? A. Well, it is my opinion that a waiver of usufruct is an act of disposition within the meaning of the foreign exchange control law.

Q. Thank you. Now, who—that is to say, what agency or what official of the Government—was entrusted with the duty or supervision of issuing licenses for disposition of foreign securities? A. The granting and handling 2052 of licenses was in the jurisdiction of the so-called foreign exchange offices, which formed part of the regional tax collector's office.

Q. That is to say, in the first instance, throughout the country there were foreign exchange control offices? A. Yes.

Q. What agency of the German Government had the obligation of supervising them? A. These agencies were first placed under the jurisdiction of the Reichs Ministry of Economic Affairs in 1931. Later a special central agency was established under the name of Reich Office of Foreign Exchange Control. And again, I think in 1938, the supervision was placed back into a department of the Reichs Ministry of Economics.

Q. Will you state whether at any time the Reichsbank had authority to issue licenses to engage in foreign exchange—in the disposition of foreign exchange? A. The Reichsbank had a very limited jurisdiction to grant such licenses—that is, only in connection with licenses applied for under one of the so-called standstill agreements—that is, agreements which were entered into between groups of foreign creditors and German debtors.

Q. More specifically, at any time from October 5, 1931, until June, 1942, did the Reichsbank have authority to license the waiver of usufructuary interest in Swiss 2053 securities held by—usufructuary interest being held by German residents? A. No. The Reichsbank did not have such jurisdiction.

Q. Coming to the agency which did have jurisdiction, will you state whether or not it was required by German law that such licenses be in writing? A. Yes, that is expressly provided for.

Q. That is, that licenses must be in writing? A. Licenses must be in writing.

Q. It is your testimony, is it not, that if there was no license obtained in writing from the agency having jurisdiction—namely, the Foreign Exchange Control offices—then any purported waiver of usufruct after October 5, 1931—I am referring to usufruct in Swiss securities—would be totally void and of no effect; is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Now, let us vary the assumption and assume merely that what Wilhelm and Marton von Opel acquired as the result of the gift agreement of October, 1931, was a claim for income coupled with a claim to have Fritz von Opel at some indefinite point in the future create a usufruct in order to secure that claim. Do you understand the 2054 hypothesis? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, we are now dealing with an in personam claim for income and for the creation of a usufruct.

Let us assume, further, that the res given on October 5, 1931, was put into a Swiss holding company and that the claim attaches to the Swiss holding company. Do you follow me? A. Yes.

Q. Was it possible, as a matter of German law, in your opinion, to waive, abandon, or give away such an in personam claim to Swiss securities without a license under the Foreign Exchange Control regulations? A. Well, I would like to distinguish between the in personam claim for income—

Q. Will you testify, first, about that? A. Now, as regards that, it is clear that the waiver of such a right for income would require a license, because this claim would be a claim payable in foreign currency; and claims payable in foreign currency under the Foreign Exchange

Control law could not be transferred or otherwise disposed of except with a license.

Q. And again, the license would be issued in writing by the Foreign Exchange Control office, would it not? A. Yes.

Q. No other agency of the German Government
2055 would have jurisdiction to grant a license? A. That is correct.

Q. And an oral license would not be valid, would it? A. No.

Q. And a purported abandonment or waiver of the claim by the claimant would be void under German law, would it not? A. Yes.

2056 Q. So that if all we are talking about is a claim for income, it is perfectly clear, is it not, that if a license was not obtained, then whether or not the parties purported to abandon it, the claim continued to exist? A. That is correct.

Q. That would be true—that is, the claim would continue to exist—until the year 1942; isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, let us come to the question of whether the parties could waive—abandon—a claim to have a usufruct created in the future. Will you discuss that, please. A. Well, that would leave some doubt. This is a rather unusual kind of claim—

Q. Have you, at my request, looked for cases dealing with the application of the foreign exchange control laws to purported abandonments or waivers of claims to create usufructs in the future? A. Yes.

Q. And what success have you had? A. I have not been able to find any precedents which would be applicable to this particular kind of claim.

Q. In other words, this situation would be so rare that there is no case dealing with it in the German reports; is that right? A. That is correct.

2057 Q. Now, are you able to apply any techniques of German law so as to tell us what a German court probably would have done had such a situation arisen? A. I would say this: Even if the term "claims payable in a foreign currency" is primarily intended to cover claims in money, yet the term had to be applied and was applied in a broader sense. For instance, it was applied to cover claims for damages where the damage was not yet liquidated, or it was held to cover claims from which eventually money claims would arise.

Considering further the purpose of the foreign exchange control regulations, to make available to the German economy all possible sources of foreign exchange and foreign currency, I would conclude that the German court would be inclined to consider such a claim for the establishment of a usufruct, which eventually would result in foreign currency which would flow into Germany—that a court would consider this to come under the concept of a claim payable in a foreign currency, particularly since the foreign exchange regulations and the requirement of a license do apply to a transfer or act of disposition concerning foreign shares, foreign securities, and do apply clearly to a claim for money accruing from these foreign securities.

So this particular situation might appear as a loophole for parties who have a claim for the establishment 2058 of a usufruct, and by not exercising the right to have the usufruct established, they would deprive the German Government of this accrual of foreign exchange.

Q. So that your conclusion is, although you can find no case precisely in point, that, as a matter of construction of the foreign exchange laws, a German court would in fact hold that a waiver of a right to have a usufruct created in the future was void unless it was licensed; is that correct? A. I would say that that would be highly probably in the later thirties, when the German foreign exchange situation became tighter and tighter. I think there is a strong probability that the court would have decided that way.

May I add something to what I just said?

Q. Please do. A. I would also, in reaching this conclusion—I would also consider a provision in the rules and regulations implementing the foreign exchange control law of 1935.

In these rules and regulations it is provided that, with regard to the duties of tendering foreign exchange, foreign securities, and claims payable in foreign currency, it is provided that where the party, which is under a duty to tender, tenders to the Reichsbank a claim payable in foreign currency which is not yet due, then this party is under a duty to bring such claim to maturity as soon as possible.

So that again points in the direction of my con-2059 clusion that parties were expected to do all they could to make this foreign exchange available to Germany.

Q. Now, let me ask you this. Would a director of the Reichsbank have any legal capacity in the year 1937 or 1938 to declare that a right to have a usufruct created could be waived without a license? A. In my opinion, such a declaration was not within the jurisdiction of the Reichsbank.

Q. And supposing now that a director were to say, "We do not regard a waiver of a right to have a usufruct created as coming within the foreign exchange control regulations." Would such a statement made by a director of the Reichsbank have any legal effect whatsoever? A. I don't think so.

Q. And supposing he were to say instead, "I do not want to discuss legal problems with you. What I am interested in is getting foreign exchange returned to the Reich," would that statement have any legal bearing on whether or not an unlicensed waiver of a right to have a usufruct created was void? A. Clearly, such a statement would have no legal effect.

Q. It would be, as a matter of German law, totally irrelevant, would it not? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I would like 2060 to recapitulate. I think I can do it briefly. Then I will be through.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Is it not your testimony, Miss Schoch, that on the assumption that father and son agree that no gift at all is to be made, but that a purported gift was to be made, under which the son would take the father's money out of Germany, out of a locked German safe, such an agreement did not pass title at all to the son? A. That is correct.

Q. And if nothing further were done until June, 1942, title would remain in the father? A. Yes.

Q. I ask you to assume nothing more than that Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 was executed in November 1931 and that in October, 1931, the Opel shares, which are the subject of the purported agreement, had been sold to General Motors against a claim for dollars and General Motors stock. Then is it not correct that the purported gift was void, as title would remain in the father? A. That is my conclusion.

Q. And, again, title would remain in the father until 1942, assuming nothing further happened? A. Yes.

Q. And assuming now that there was no sham, 2061 but instead a bona fide gift made on October 5, 1931, and assuming that the gift was prepared on the basis of the Hachenburg papers that you have before you and assuming one further thing, that the proceeds of the gift were placed in a holding company in Zurich and that the shares of the holding company were put in a box and the key to the box given to our hypothetical friend, Frankenberg, you would think that after that delivery to Frankenberg a usufruct arose in the father and mother, would you not? A. Yes.

Q. And under that usufruct, they would have the right, to co-possession of the res? A. Yes.

Q. And a right to a voice in the management of the res? A. Yes.

Q. And a right to an income less an in personam income to Fritz of 20 percent? A. That is right.

Q. They would have an in rem right in the property as a matter of German law? A. Yes.

Q. And unless a license was obtained in writing from the Reich foreign exchange office or subsidiary, it would have been impossible for Wilhelm and Marta von Opel to have waived that usufructuary right up to and including the year 1942; isn't that right? A. Yes.

2062 Q. So that that peculiar interest in the property, on the assumption I have given you, would be in Wilhelm and Marta von Opel in 1942, wouldn't it? A. It would.

Q. Even assuming that the key to the box was not given to Frankenberg as Wilhelm's agent, you would still assume that Wilhelm and Marta von Opel had an in personam right to require Fritz von Opel to create this usufructuary right, wouldn't you? A. Yes.

Q. And it is your best opinion, is it not, that at no time after October 5, 1931, could they have waived this in personam right validly without a written license from the Reich foreign exchange office? A. Yes.

Q. And if they did not obtain a license from the Reich foreign exchange office, then the in personam claim would, on the assumption that nothing further happened, remain in them up until 1942? A. Yes.

Q. So that even on the assumptions which I have now given you, in 1942 Wilhelm and Marta von Opel could require, as a matter of law—as a matter of German 2063 law—Fritz von Opel to create a usufructuary right in Wilhelm and Marta? A. Yes, I think so.

Mr. Burling: You may inquire.

Cross Examination

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Will you describe, Miss Schoch, briefly, the meaning of scheinvertrag under German law? A. A scheinvertrag is a purported transaction entered into by two parties which are agreed that the intention that is expressed in their agreement is not their true intention.

Q. And this necessitates, does it not, an intentional false appearance? A. It necessitates—

Q. It is an agreement that what has been agreed to in writing, for example, is not true? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I have some hypothetical cases here, Miss Schoch. If you will just bear with me, we will go through them.

Suppose that A has real property and that A wants to save property taxes. Let us assume that A is very rich and therefore in a high tax bracket and A decides to transfer the property to B, either as a gift or for a nominal consideration, and his sole purpose under this hypothetical case is to save taxes. Is this a schein-2064 vertrag? A. If there is a true intention that a gift shall be made—

Q. Let us assume that this is all that we have before us. This is all that we have. Do you want me to repeat the facts? A. Yes, please.

Q. A has real property and he wants to save property taxes. He is very rich and in a high tax bracket. So, therefore, he transfers this property to B, either as a gift or for cheap or nominal consideration. His sole purpose is to save taxes. The question is, is that a scheinvertrag? A. On these facts alone, no.

Q. Let us take hypothetical No. 2. A is in financial difficulties. He has a very valuable diamond and he wants to protect it against creditors, so he transfers this diamond for a cheap consideration or as a gift to his cousin. Is this a scheinvertrag? A. No.

Mr. Burling: Your Honor, I object unless the facts are stated. The testimony is, and it has been brought out, I think, very clearly that a scheinvertrag is a sham transaction. I think we are agreed—

Mr. Boland: Well, we are not necessarily agreed on sham transaction. We are agreed on what schein-2065 vertrag means, I think, according to Miss Schoch. We will accept her definition.

Mr. Burling: The witness testified that the correct translation of that term was sham transaction just yesterday. Counsel is putting a case which leaves out the essential fact, which is, what is the intention of the parties? It either is or not intended to make a gift or it is or is not intended to be a sham. I think counsel should not put hypothetical questions which contain very adroitly phrased ambiguities.

Mr. Boland: The adroit ambiguities are not intentional, Your Honor. I might state here that it seems to me that in this case we have had no evidence whatsoever of any intent for a sham transaction. It is purely hypothetical and speculative.

These are merely an analysis of questions under German law to find out just how far Miss Schoch goes, on a limited number of facts such as we have got in this case. We have no intent here shown that the parties intended to sham.

Mr. Burling: I am not trying to ask Miss Schoch to decide whether what happened in Wiesbaden is a sham.

I wanted to bring out that, in the German law, if the parties intended to sham, then it is void, and I wish counsel would tell the witness what the facts are he is interrogating about and what is the intent of the party.

Mr. Boland: I gave the intent. The intent in the 2066 last hypothetical was solely for the purpose of protecting the diamond against creditors. That is the only intent in the case.

Mr. Burling: That is a description of motive, but Your Honor must hear bankruptcy cases, by the score, where there are transfers where the intent is to defraud the creditors. You also must hear cases where Your Honor finds that the intent was not to defraud the creditors.

The Court: I think if she says there is any element there that makes it impossible for her to tell, she can answer it that way. I think I had better give him considerable latitude on what it would amount to.

Mr. Burling: As long as it is clear.

The Court: If the witness cannot answer the question—

Mr. Burling: As long as the witness is not being misled, I make no objection.

The Court: She can say if she does not know.

Mr. Boland: If the witness will state that under German law, under such a set of facts, she cannot come to any conclusion, I will accept that and go on.

The Court: I think you ought to feel at liberty to do that. If you think you are missing some essential facts, you may do so.

The Witness: Well, I think the one essential fact that has to be present in each hypothetical case is the 2067 intent of the parties.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Let me ask you this question. Is it your opinion that under German law, on such a set of facts, a court could not come to a decision one way or the other? A. I think the court—if the court had no other facts—

Q. That was my assumption, that the court had no other facts but the facts that I gave you. I realize that Mr. Burling made the objection for you, and not you. A. Well, I think that is a rather remote hypothesis, because in cases like this there are far more numerous facts before the court.

Q. It is your opinion that on the basis of this hypothetical there are not enough facts for the court to determine whether this is or is not a scheinvertrag; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. That is your testimony? A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

The Court: That may depend a little bit on who is bringing the suit, whether it is a creditor or whoever it is? Wouldn't that make a difference? The burden of proof would make a difference?

Mr. Boland: Well, I asked the general question.

2068 The Court: I do not know the German law, but I would be surprised if it would not.

By the Court:

Q. Does the burden of proof have some significance in German law? A. Surely. In German law the person that alleges that a transaction is a sham transaction has to have enough proof, and that party will bring before the court all facts which might enable the court to decide as to intention.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Let us see whether there are enough facts in my third hypothetical, Miss Schoch.

Let us assume that there are rumors that the legislature—we are in Germany—will enact a statute which gives the Government a right to take all estates if there is no close relative of the deceased alive. More or less, you understand what the American theory of escheat is? A. Yes, indeed.

Q. This is not as limited as our theory of escheat. It was intended to broaden and take in more property.

Let us assume that there is a rumor to this effect in Germany. Now, A's closest relative is a fifth cousin, so A gives his fifth cousin this property and says, "I understand that they are going to enact some legislation which might take my property upon my death and just 2069 give it to the state, so I want to give it to you now," and he does give it to this fifth cousin, and it consists of six million marks shares as a gift, and the only fact as to the intent is that but for the fact of this proposed pending legislation, this gift would never have been made. Is that a scheinvertrag? A. Again, all I can say is that if the court is convinced that the party intended a gift, then the motive for the gift will not change that conclusion.

The Court: Are not we all in agreement—are not both sides in agreement—

Mr. Boland: Frankly, I do not know whether we are or not.

The Court: If they—Mr. von Opel and his wife—made an absolutely bona fide gift to the son to avoid foreign exchange, or whatever reason it was, it was a bona fide gift and he divested himself of all interest in his wife and all interest in it, I think we will all agree that that is not a scheinvertrag.

Mr. Boland: If we are all agreed, I will not continue—

Mr. Burling: I shall argue that the totality of the evidence is that it is not so.

The Court: I understand that. If your argument is going to be that, by that act and by virtue of subsequent acts that you say occurred, he did not intend absolutely to pass the title, that he intended to reserve that to 2070 himself, and he went through this formality in order to beat, so to speak, the foreign exchange, that is what a sham is, in my judgment, and I certainly would think that it would be that in Germany. If I give my property absolutely away, with perfectly good faith, and I can accomplish beating taxes, that is not a sham in any law.

Mr. Boland: That is the point, Your Honor.

The Court: I would not think it would be.

Mr. Boland: I gathered from Mr. Burling's statements all along that he is going to argue that insofar as this was an attempt to more or less go beyond the devisen laws and get beyond the foreign exchange, and that because of that it must have been a sham transaction.

Mr. Burling: That is a matter of evidence.

Mr. Boland: That is his No. 1 contention.

The Court: You do undertake the burden, do you not, Mr. Burling, of saying that that is an item—this idea of foreign exchange—together with other items of evidence, tending to indicate that Mr. and Mrs. von Opel did not divest themselves of the title by that transaction, but intended to retain title?

Mr. Burling: Your Honor exactly apprehends my position as a possibility, but I would like to think a little more of where the burden is. The burden starts with my friend.

The Court: I am not talking about the burden, 2071 but we are getting into a whole lot of questions over sham where there is no disagreement. If we have a document fair on its face and absolutely intended by the parties to divest them of all interest, whether it be to defeat the foreign exchange, defeat creditors, or defeat taxes, or anything else, that is absolutely fair on its face but absolutely made with the intention of both of the parties to divest themselves of all interest, there is no sham to that.

Mr. Burling: That is correct, Your Honor.

The Court: On the other hand, as I understand your contention, you say that they wanted to avoid some possible laws with regard to foreign exchange.

That situation, taken into account with other circumstances which you claim you have established, by virtue of setting up an agency in respect to the holding of some of the stock, and by virtue of the use of usufructuary provisions, and by virtue of control by Frankenberg, and so forth, and a lot of other contentions you make, tends to indicate that that was not a bona fide or intentional divesting of interests, but there was an interest retained and therefore that this transaction was a sham; it was not really a divesting. That is what he is arguing, as I understand it.

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor; that is exactly my argument.

2072 The Court: If we are all agreed on that—and I think we are—these hypotheses do not help us very much.

I know what you are talking about. If the divesting itself and everything else is absolutely in the open, as you contend it is, the fact that it is trying to defeat foreign exchange would not make it a sham.

Mr. Boland: The ultimate point I want to bring out, Your Honor, is that the one way to avoid problems of foreign exchange was to pass title, and that was the only way to do it.

Mr. Burling: I do not agree with that.

Mr. Boland: At least, if I can't bring it out through these witnesses, these are all actual German cases, and we have the decisions on these cases.

The Court: You mean on what a sham is?

Mr. Boland: What a sham is, and I want to take her through a series of cases. Of course, she has not had practice in Germany; she might not be able to answer.

But Dr. Kronstein has indicated, and Mr. Gros has indicated, and Dr. Flatow has indicated that the one important thing was to pass title if you wanted to take advantage of the loophole.

Mr. Burling: If you wanted to do it legally, but if you wanted to commit a crime in Germany, as Dr. Kronstein agrees, you could purport to pass title.

The Court: We are still not having any trouble. We still go right back to the proposition that you 2073 passed title or intended to pass it. What is a sham?

You go through one deal and have in mind or an agreement on the side of another deal. That is what a sham is. In truth and in fact, it is the side deal, whereas this on the face of it is a sham. That must be the law. If it is any different anywhere else, I have got to have sham redefined to me. But I think we are all agreed on that.

Mr. Boland: Yes, we are.

Mr. Burling: We certainly are.

The Court: I think we are all agreed on that. I do not have any quarrel with the cases that you have mentioned. Until we get to a point of disagreement, I do think we are probably wasting time. If we are not agreed on it, I will give you all the latitude in the world.

I think what you want to bring out is if the German authorities hold over and over again, as they do, I think, in this country, and probably everywhere in the world, that it was not a sham if you passed title and had intended to pass title and you do not have something on the side saying, "I retain something" or "I get something" "we do not mean it."

Mr. Boland: With the additional consideration that if you are trying to take advantage of a loophole in the law, it does not indicate you are trying to commit a sham.

Mr. Burling: That is a matter of evidence.

2074 The Court: Whether it happened or not is a question of evidence. I think he has a right to show that.

Mr. Burling: I do not think we are in any disagreement, Your Honor. My point is that the motive is, of course, one factor which goes to the question of whether or not it is a sham. I gave my little boy, let us say, a tricycle at Christmastime. The fact that it was Christmas and that I have a little boy and it is customary to give toys to children on Christmas Day would be evidence that it is not a sham.

The Court: I said it two or three times. I meant to say —I think I did—that your argument is that this fact that he wanted to defeat a possible law with regard to foreign exchange is evidence that he did not divest himself of title?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: I agree with that, but I do not think that that alone, as I understand your point, necessarily defeats the bona fides of the gift. I mean that fact alone.

Mr. Burling: I agree with that; it is the totality of the facts.

The Court: Aren't we in agreement on that, then?

Mr. Boland: I am not sure I understand.

The Court: In other words, he agrees that if he wanted to defeat foreign exchange, if we believe that this is an absolutely bona fide transaction, no reservation of title, nothing on the side other than is what is on that 2075 face, I have done this to circumvent foreign exchange, and it is a loophole, that in and of itself does not render this an ineffective gift. I think he agrees to that.

Mr. Boland: Yes.

The Court: However, his position is that he has a right to take that factor into consideration as a motive, so to speak, for having the side agreement and arguing to me that that is the reason they had a side agreement, and these other facts show this side agreement; but I do not think that affects the definition of either one of you on sham.

I do not want to hold you down, but I think we are, all of us, in agreement.

Mr. Boland: I think we are if Mr. Burling would agree that under German law if you wanted to take advantage of a loophole in the law, the thing to do is to pass title. That is the point.

Mr. Burling: I do not agree to that. Another thing to do is what I say was done here. It did not work out very well, as it turned out.

The Court: I think the reason he does not agree to it is that he says he has other items of evidence, and he wants to argue that along with it. I think that is the reason. I think he said that if that was all he had, he would agree.

Mr. Burling: If we had no other scintilla of evidence other than this motive point, I think I would agree 2076 that if we had the burden we would not win.

The Court: I am not talking about winning now; I am talking about what is a sham. I am not talking about winning. The winning end of it involves the burden of proof, but what constitutes a sham does not. That is what he is talking about.

Mr. Burling: Yes.

The Court: Well, now, does that go far enough for you?

Mr. Boland: I think it will, Your Honor. I think I will drop it.

The Court: I do not want to restrain you in that regard. I do not think there is the slightest bit of doubt about it. We have some of the most reputable lawyers in the country and some of the finest concerns going through loopholes to defeat taxes, and they are upheld over and over again. There is no sham. I mean, there is nothing dishonest about it. But if you find that there is a retention of title there, and you bring into those proceedings some reservation, some side agreement, or some idea that this purported assignment or this prima facie evidence of assignment did not mean what it said, then that is a sham, and that is a fraud and a wrong.

The same way, as he said, in bankruptcy. If you have a perfectly bona fide transaction in bankruptcy and you do not have any arbitrary time involved in it, and you have a question as to whether it is bona fide or not, the 2077 mere fact that he goes into the transaction might not be material beyond a certain date.

That is certainly my view of the law, and unless somebody shows me the German law is to the contrary, I am going to follow that, because I cannot conceive of a sham being anything else.

Mr. Boland: I agree, Your Honor.

The Witness: I may say that that is exactly what the German law is.

The Court: I think we all agree with that. The doctor agrees with it. So I think we are all right.

I will tell you one thing that I am a little bit interested in. I do not know how you can develop it, and I do not know that you have touched on it. I am trying to know just exactly how to frame it in my own words.

This October 5, 1931, transaction or transfer, let us say, was to avoid the regulation or some regulation either in effect or coming into effect with regard to foreign exchange. Now, I would like to know from these two lawyers —both of you gentlemen—would the form of this usufructuary provision make any difference with regard to those regulations? In other words, would the fact that it was a right in rem have one effect on the regulations and the fact that it is one in personam, such as the doctor says it is, have any effect on it?
2078 I do not know whether you covered it or not. I did not quite bite down on it if you did.

Mr. Burling: It is a question of degree. Miss Schoch is able to testify she feels certain that, if it is a right in rem, then it could not have been waived, assuming it was waived.

The Court: I am not speaking about the waiver; I am speaking about the intent at the time.

In other words, there is considerable argument here in this case with regard to the fact as to whether the October 5, 1931, agreement created an interest in rem or in personam or one which might call into being a right in rem in the future. Isn't that right? That is one phase.

It is also said that Dr. Hachenburg plainly provided for an in rem transaction in his notes.

Now, plaintiff's expert on the law, as I say, comes around to the point where Mr. Stansfield drew it, and he changed it around, the effect of which was to create something in the future, which might or might not come into being.

Now, what I had in mind is, with those two situations—No. 1, Hachenburg, which gave the right in rem; No. 2, Stansfield, which might or might not—she said it did—would the fact of the doctor's interpretation of that, that it gave only a future right, have any effect or bearing or any significance with regard to the foreign exchange 2079 situation? Do you see what I mean?

Mr. Burling: I believe, Your Honor, that it is clear that in either way it would be income arising in foreign exchange, which would have to be tendered.

The relevance—and I think the reason so much time has been spent on it—of whether it is a right in rem or a right in personam is twofold. The first is that we wish to get the greatest possible right in von Opel, that is, a right in rem.

The Court: You dealt with that very proposition on the question of license, but not on the idea of whether it had any bearing on the foreign exchange.

Mr. Burling: That is the second of the twofold significance, if Your Honor please. The second relates solely to waiver.

The Court: To waiver?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor, but it is only then that it is important.

It is asserted now that whatever right was retained under the usufructuary provision was abandoned, and we contend—in fact, all the German lawyers have agreed—that if it was a right in rem, it could not have been abandoned without a license, and therefore it was not abandoned, and therefore it continued. If, however—

The Court: I know your point.

2080 Mr. Burling: If, however, it was merely a right in personam—of course, our first point is that there was no such waiver, as a matter of fact; but assuming that we do not prevail on that; then there is a difference in the degree to which our expert is certain that the waiver required a license.

She is certain that if it was a right in rem, it required a license; but can only say that her best opinion is that if it was a right in personam, it required a license.

The Court: I do not think you quite get in mind—.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor—

The Court: I know what you are talking about.

Mr. Boland: I thought that the question that you asked was what effect did the foreign currency regulations have on the gift of October 5.

The Court: That is right. Here is what I am getting at. Suppose I wanted to make up my mind as between the doctor, who says that the right in rem was not created by the Stansfield draft, and the testimony of the present witness that one was; that the intention of the parties was that. She said that the intention of the parties plainly indicated that it was, the language indicates that it was, and so forth, and the doctor takes the contrary view.

Now, I know there are any number of other contentions, but suppose I have to make up my mind as between 2081 those two. What I would like to know is, Would one method accomplished, namely, the in personam sit-nation or the future situation, effectuate this transfer, whereas the other one might not, insofar as the foreign exchange is concerned?

Mr. Burling: I think the question is entirely irrelevant until we get to the waiver point. Prior to that time I perceive no significance in the distinction.

The Court: In other words, it does not make any difference to you, prior to the waiver, whether this court would find that it was a right in rem or a right in personam?

Mr. Burling: An in rem right, I suppose, is a more intimate or higher degree of right and therefore places the enemy a little more clearly in possession of the property; but it is only when we get to that point—that is, when we get to the war between Germany and the United States—that the waiver comes in, first in point of time, but then the right also.

The Court: If you think it is entirely immaterial as between these two rights as of October 5, then I do not care to have any distinction made.

Mr. Burling: I think it will become material.

The Court: When you take into account the waiver.

Mr. Burling: When you get to the waiver point. Our contention is you could not waive either one without a license.

2082 The Court: Yes; I understand that.

Mr. Burling: If it is an in rem right, Your Honor has no problem in German law.

The Court: Wouldn't it be helpful for me to know what these people might have accomplished? One, if they created a right in rem; two, if they created only this expectancy or this in personam situation, bearing in mind their purpose?

In other words, it might become important, when we come to consider the waiver provisions, for me to know we all agree that this is in rem or in personam or in expectancy.

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Now, in determining that, we have one draft by Hachenburg, which your witness says plainly indicated an in rem. She also says the other one does, too; but the doctor takes a different view.

I suppose one of you could argue to me, Well, now, if this was purely an expectancy, then there would not be any chance whatever of a claim of violation of the foreign exchange; that that would not fall under the ban, whereas a right in rem would. Therefore, it was this expectancy and that only. Then, if you could persuade me that that had some real significance, you would come to your point of waiver later on.

Mr. Burling: I think Your Honor is asking me to make an argument—

2083 The Court: No, not an argument; I just wanted to ask you if you wanted to get any testimony on that. You can think it over. It is not absolutely essential. The thought occurred to me.

Do you know what I am talking about?

Mr. Boland: Yes, Your Honor; I think so.

The Court: I think you two gentlemen are making a rather major argument not only as to the waiver, because that will relate back to whether you have a right in rem or a right in personam or in expectancy—

Mr. Burling: If I may say so, I do not believe there is any testimony about expectancy.

The Court: When I say in expectancy, I probably used a loose term. I mean the right to bring into being a rem upon demand. That is what I mean. I was using a short word. That is what I meant.

Mr. Burling: Of course, our final contention in this line—our first contention being that it is a sham—is that if it is not a sham, the action did not instantaneously bring forth the right in rem, but that the right in rem arose when Frankenberg received the key to the box in Zurich.

The Court: I know that is your view, but I thought you also took the view—and I thought that was one of the cases you cited to me this morning—that, by the very language of this instrument, having had a dual purpose, 2084 that right in rem. I thought that was your German case this morning.

Mr. Burling: That was offered to rebut Dr. Kronstein's testimony that it would have been impossible for them to do it. One of our arguments—I regret the complexity it has—

The Court: I do not think it is so terribly complex. I think I follow your arguments. I think probably you do not get the picture I had in mind, and I do not know whether it is material or not. I have an entirely open mind on it.

Let me state to you what I have in mind. You certainly argued, and I certainly thought, whether it was by way of rebutting what the doctor said or not, as a result of the testimony, that you were going to argue that, under this decision of the German Supreme Court, which reversed the two lower courts, this instrument right on its face indicated a right in rem. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. Burling: I did not mean to go that far.

The Court: Didn't you? Well, I misunderstood you.

Mr. Boland: I did, too.

The Court: I thought the testimony was that, inasmuch as this created the right in Fritz von Opel, and, by the same token, reserved the usufruct, that would be treated as a dual transaction, which would completely make out a 2085 right in rem, without all of this rigmarole of so-called delivery, which would be true if you did it by separate instruments at separate times.

That is the way I understood that. I may be mistaken.

Mr. Burling: Quite candidly, Your Honor, I would read that case the same way. I am unable to make the argument because Miss Schoch tells me that that is not what it said.

The Court: Maybe I had better get cleared up on that right now.

Mr. Boland: I think you had better. I got that same impression.

The Court: I certainly got that impression. I thought it was a very strong point in your favor if it decided that. Maybe I had better get that clear.

By the Court:

Q. Do you understand me? A. Yes, I do, Your Honor.

Q. Tell me where I am wrong on what you said. A. Under a gift agreement, which is Exhibit 5, the usufruct did not come into being because the reassignment of this delivery was not put in, was omitted.

Q. Yes. I understood that. That is where I got that conclusion of yesterday. A. That is the conclusion which I came to at the beginning. I may have confused you by analyzing the decision of this morning.

2086 The decision of this morning I think was submitted merely to show that a statement which I think Dr. Kronstein made, to the effect that a gift with a reserve usufruct cannot have been made in such way that you make the gift and at the same time the usufruct comes into being—provided of course, that all the requirements of the law are met—but that such a gift can only be defined as a gift with a charge; under German law, which means, first, the gift has to be made and full title transferred, and then there is an obligation on the part of the donee to perform certain obligations which the donor imposed upon him, and the donor, after the gift has been made, made demand that the obligation of the donee be fulfilled. In other words, you have the gift as the main purpose of the transaction.

Q. But that demand has to be made or the assignment has to be made before it comes into being? A. Yes.

The Court: I have that down. I misunderstood you.

Mr. Gallagher: Since we are trying to clear up this problem, Dr. Kronstein would like to clear it up.

The Court: I will let you do it when he comes back on the stand. I think I have it now. I am glad I brought it up, because I had a different impression.

By the Court:

Q. You still have to have what you describe as a 2087 delivery, which might be by assignment or by actual turnover? You still have to have that, and you did not have it in this case? A. That is right, at the time these requirements were made.

The Court: That has helped me. I am glad I have that straight, because I did not understand it that way.

Mr. Burling: May I state why I offered the case?

The Court: Yes. I think I have why you offered it, but you may state it again.

Mr. Burling: I offered it to rebut what I thought was the testimony that you could not do it. One hypothesis is what Miss Schoch testified she would think from just seeing the instrument itself—that the lawyers intended to do this but made a highly technical error, and by that error they caused the whole thing to fail. I offered the case, which says you can under some circumstances do it, to show that they might have reasonably tried to do it.

The Court: I follow you all the way around, then. Your idea is that you agree that this instrument on its face, without any subsequent act whatever, would not create a right in rem as of that time, but that there came a time later on—

Mr. Burling: It either failed totally—

The Court: It either failed totally, because one 2088 of the material provisions failed, or it did not create a right in rem at that time, but that later on, when he delivered to Frankenberg, his agent, it did come into effect as a right in rem?

Mr. Burling: And that on its face it discloses an intention to disclose either an instant right in rem or an intention that one be created in the near future, rather than leaving the right in the remote future.

The Court: I understand.

In view of that position, that would make my inquiry material. I agree with that. I am very glad that that is straightened out, because I had an entirely different impression. In fact, I had a note of it, because I wanted to ask the doctor about it. I thought you found a case overruling those lower courts, which made it appear that you could create the in rem by this very instrument itself. Now I see that that is not so.

Mr. Burling: You could have.

The Court: You could have done it, but, through some technical point here, they did not, because they did not use the language in advance. I have that straight. I am glad I have it straight, because I was wrong on it.

Mr. Boland: May I thank Your Honor, because I got the same impression.

The Court: As I told you, I will have to stop in 2089 ten minutes. Have you something brief you can ask her about now?

Mr. Boland: I have several things.

The Court: Brief, I mean. I have to stop in ten minutes. You go ahead.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Miss Schoch, yesterday you testified, on pages 1985 to 1987 that a devisen auslander in October of 1931 having property located in Germany and property located outside of Germany could not have become a devisen auslander without losing his property in Germany. If that is not true, I would like to be corrected.

Mr. Burling: I think the reporter missed a German word. I remember my question very vividly. It was a devisen inlander in October.

Mr. Boland: Pardon me. I am sure that is right.

Mr. Burling: Thank you.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. And I think that the facts were closely related to those of Wilhelm von Opel and Fritz von Opel, Wilhelm being the devisen inlander and Fritz being the devisen auslander, and the amounts of money, I think, in evaluating the property were closely related to the value within Germany and the value of the shares that were in New York.

Now, did I gather from your testimony that Wil-2090 helm von Opel under such circumstances could not have left Germany in October of 1931 without having lost all of his property in Germany? A. I think that is not what I said. He could have left Germany, and upon leaving Germany he would have become an auslander for the purposes of foreign exchange control, but he would not have been able, before leaving Germany, to transfer the bulk of his German property abroad. He would have, under a license, been enabled to transfer some of it.

Q. You testified to a limited amount, I think you mentioned. A. Well, there was a limited amount which he could freely take out of Germany on the passport.

Q. I got a general impression from your testimony yesterday, and I think Mr. Burling's adroitness was used in creating an impression, that Wilhelm von Opel could not have left Germany in October of 1931 without losing all of his property within Germany and leaving thereby the inference that he was giving it to Fritz as an alternative.

Now, I want to ask you whether, under the circumstances which I have given you, Wilhelm von Opel could not have left Germany without losing his property in Germany and without losing his property in New York. A. Naturally, he could not lose his property in New York.

2091 Q. That is right. That is taken for granted. He has got that one way or the other. A. That is outside the reach of the German Government.

Q. Let us take the German property. What would have happened in 1931 to Wilhelm von Opel if he wanted to become a devisen auslander? Could he, first, become a devisen auslander? A. He could.

Q. He could? A. He could.

Q. What were the steps necessary to become one? A. He would have to hand in an inventory of his German property. He would have had to obtain clearance from the tax authorities. He would have to submit evidence that he intended to acquire a foreign residence and various other—

The Court: Mr. Boland, I did not get the impression that you got.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I reread the record last night.

The Court: Let me state to you the impression I got, and it may save you some time. I understood her to say that if he had disposed of a huge part of his estate to an auslander in violation of the exchange rules and left that country, they would penalize him by grabbing what he had then.

Mr. Boland: I think the record will show quite clearly—

2092 By the Court:

Q. Isn't that right? A. I think the assumption was that he had not foreign properties which were subject to the duty to tender to the Reichsbank.

Q. That is right. He had violated the decree, or something. A. No. The German securities located in New York were not subject at that time to such duties.

Q. I understand that. He could give them away? A. He could give them away.

Q. But if there came a time when it became his duty to report them and he did not report them and then left the country, then they would penalize him by taking what he had left there? A. Yes. That was my understanding that that was what I testified to.

Mr. Boland: May I recheck this, your Honor? My impression was otherwise.

The Court: Go ahead and ask your questions. I thought I could save you that trouble, because that was not the impression I had. Go ahead and ask you whatever you want on that.

By Mr. Boland;

Q. Well, my main point is that in October of 1931
2093 Wilhelm von Opel could have left Germany and become a devisen auslander? A. That is right.

Q. No. 1? Couldn't he? A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: Will you state whether this is before or after the sale?

Mr. Boland: This is on October 5, 1931.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. That he could have left? A. Yes.

Q. And that his property in Germany could not have been confiscated or subjected to anything other than normal taxes? A. Yes.

Mr. Boland: That is the only point I have, Your Honor, without going into an elaborate discussion of our other points.

The Court: Very well. We will adjourn until tomorrow morning.

(At 12:55 p. m. an adjournment was taken until Thursday, January 6, 1949, at 10 a. m.)

2097 PROCEEDINGS

Thereupon MAGDALENA SCHOCH resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Cross Examination (resumed)

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Miss Schoch, I show you Defendant's Exhibit 115, which was identified and introduced, I believe, yesterday. Do you consider that an authority on German law (handing a document to the witness)? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Do you consider it a high authority? A. I would not say a high authority, but I would consider it a correct compilation and analysis of cases dealing with sham transactions.

Q. What dignity would you give it by way of comparison in American law? A. Well, that is hard to tell. I would consider it a useful compilation, with a brief statement as to what the courts decided in these cases that are compiled in the book.

Q. Yesterday, in discussing usufruct, the question arose about joint possession. Now it is clear in your mind, 2098 is it not, that joint possession is necessary in order to establish a usufruct as a right in rem? A. Under German law, yes.

Q. And that the usufruct remains in being, so to speak, only as long as the joint possession is present, is that right? A. Yes.

Q. No question about that under German law? A. No.

Q. Now, Miss Schoch, yesterday you testified, at page 2023 of the record and 2024, as follows, in answer to Mr. Burling's question:

"Question: Did you hear Professor Kronstein testify to the general effect that under German law it is difficult or impossible to make a gift reserving then and there a usufruct, and that the most that can be done is to make a gift subject merely to a charge?

"Answer: That is what I understood from his testimony"?

Do you recall that? A. Yes.

Q. And having testified in respect of a Supreme Court decision which you had with you, the following question was asked, on page 2028:

"Question: Before I go on to a different topic, it 2099 is clear, is it not, that it would have been possible for the parents Opel to have given the 600 Opel shares to Fritz von Opel burdened by a usufruct which came into existence simultaneously and instantaneously?"

Your answer:

"Yes; in my opinion, that would have been possible.

"Question: That is what the Supreme Court of Germany held in the case we have just discussed?"

Your answer is, "Yes."

Then, on page 2086 you testified as follows:

"The decision of this morning I think was submitted merely to show that a statement which I think Dr. Kronstein made, to the effect that a gift with a reserve usufruct cannot have been made in such way that you make the gift and at the same time the usufruct comes into being."

Do you recall that? A. Yes.

Q. And the entire purpose, as I understand your testimony, was to bring the Supreme Court decision to the attention of the Court for the purpose of discrediting Dr. Kronstein?

Mr. Burling: If your Honor please, I submit the purpose of the testimony is a matter which is determined 2100 by counsel and not the witness.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Let me ask you the question: What was the purpose of bringing in the decision?

Mr. Burling: That is a matter within my brain, and not the witness'.

The Court: That is probably true. I guess maybe I can draw that inference, or else he could argue it.

Mr. Burling: I may have been inarticulate, Your Honor, but I did my best to state what the purpose was yesterday, and I am the only person who knows why I asked the question which I did ask.

The Court: You may ask her what her point was in bringing that case out.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. What was your point in discussing the case or bringing out the case? A. My point was to answer Mr. Burling's question.

Q. Now, had you read the record concerning Dr. Kronstein's testimony before coming in to testify? A. Yes, I had read part of the record.

Q. Did you read page 408? A. I do not know what is on that page. Would you mind showing it to me?

Q. Let me read it to you. On page 408 I asked 2101 the following question:

"Doctor, you have practiced in Germany for quite some time; would you explain to the Court what language could be inserted in this gift agreement"—referring to Plaintiff's Exhibit 5—"in order to establish an immediate right in rem.

"Answer: All that would have to be done is to add one part, in which you say:

"'I, Fritz von Opel, herewith reassign—or assign—my claim against the depository of shares in New York to the Opel parents, with the understanding that it shall be a joint claim of the Opel parents and myself.'"

Then on page 409, continuing:

"And by this act Fritz von Opel would have to take out the shares under the name of the three; it would have been provided that he had to take these shares and put them in New York into a bank under the name of Fritz von Opel, Wilhelm von Opel, and Marta von Opel; or he could give it to the bank to keep it there, with instructions to keep it under the name of the three, and pay out exactly as it provided here. That is all that is necessary.

"Question: So that if the parties had intended the 2102 establishment of the immediate right in rem, it would have been a very simple thing, under German law?

"Answer: Very simple.

"Question: And it could have been done under this instrument itself?

"Answer: It could have been done, if the assignment was not made just as an outright assignment, but with the idea that it is reassigned to all three, it was already clearly an established right in rem."

Had you read that portion of Dr. Kronstein's testimony? A. I remember that portion, yes.

Q. Are you still of the opinion that Dr. Kronstein testified that you cannot establish a right in rem in a single instrument such as our gift agreement? A. The part of the record in which he said that a gift with a usufruct reserve can only be a gift subject to a charge appears contradictory to this statement.

Q. You do agree that he made that statement? Do you deny that that is correct? A. I agree that he made the statement, certainly.

Q. And you do agree that he testified not on an abstract situation, but in respect of this gift agreement, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5; that he testified that an immediate 2103 right in rem could have been established with this gift agreement; is that right? A. He did, yes.

Q. And does the Supreme Court decision of Germany bolster that position? Does it sustain his position? A. Yes, it does.

Q. Therefore the case is brought in support of Dr. Kronstein, where it serves no purpose, is that right? A. I think it serves another purpose, too.

Mr. Burling: I again object to counsel's arguing with the witness. I will be glad to argue with counsel, and I say that Dr. Kronstein testified two different ways; but my purpose in asking an expert witness to testify is a matter which is certainly not appropriate for inquiry of the witness.

The Court: Well, both sides resorted to the practice of directing attention to Dr. Kronstein's testimony by name. I think the way to do it is to bring out what the law is. Whether it contradicts him or not, I will decide. I think it is cleared up.

Mr. Boland: That is the last question I have of that nature, Your Honor. I think it is.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Now, Miss Schoch, it is your testimony that the mere use of the word "niessbrauch" in an instrument re-2104 quires an interpretation of an immediate right in rem, under the German Civil Code? A. That is not my testimony.

Q. It is not? A. No.

Q. Would you explain what significance the word "niessbrauch" has in an instrument? A. The word "niessbrauch" has a technical significance. The word "niessbrauch" if used by a lawyer certainly requires the interpretation in the sense of an in rem right, unless there is strong indication to the contrary.

Q. Do you distinguish in your own mind, in using "in rem right," between an in rem right which may come into being in the future or one that comes into being immediately? Is there a distinction between the two things? A. No. An in rem right is a right which is either created now or which may be created in the future, depending on your agreement.

Q. Depending on the agreement, and in referring to Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 and in viewing the word "niessbrauch" in that instrument, it is your interpretation that the intent of the parties was that an immediate right in rem be established; is that true? A. That is my interpretation from looking at this document alone.

Q. Now, if in fact an immediate right in rem, or, let us say, the institution of the usufruct, had not been created on October 5, assuming the contract dated and made on that date—that if the right in rem did not in fact become established on that date—it is your testimony that the contract is void; is that right? A. The contract is void if the right in rem formed an essential part of the gift and if the gift had not been made without the immediate creation of the right in rem.

Q. Now, directing your attention to page 1 of the gift agreement, you heard Dr. Kronstein testify that on the first page there were in effect two contracts; one was an obligatorischer vertrag and the other a dinglicher vertrag; one in effect the obligation created between the parties and the other the act of transfer; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And you do agree that, under German law, under the concept of German law, there are in effect two contracts on the first page? A. Well, I do not quite agree in this way of looking at the thing, but I agree with his conclusion that on page 1, if you look at nothing but on page 1, there was a valid gift.

2106 Q. Is it your testimony that there are not in effect two contracts? A. No; in my opinion, there is just one contract. My opinion is it is a present gift.

Q. Let us put it this way. The words "that I desire to give to you" and the words of acceptance would create what is known in German law as an obligatorischer vertrag; is that right? A. That is right, yes.

Q. And the so-called dinglicher vertrag were the words of actual conveyance, the act of transferring, with intent to pass title? You say that is not a dinglicher vertrag? A. Yes, it is, but, in my opinion—

Q. Does the word "vertrag" mean contract in German? A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: If your Honor please, we are construing one page of a three-page contract.

Mr. Boland: I am going through it page by page, Mr. Burling; and, if you will just bear with me, I will cover it.

Mr. Burling: If I may just say this, it does seem to me a waste of the Court's time to construe what you would read from page 1 when there are in fact three pages.

The Court: Of course, that is your argument. His 2107 is the other. I will give him a chance to bring it out.

Mr. Boland: I think it is important if there is a disagreement between what we testified to.

The Court: Go ahead. I will hear you gentlemen on it at a later time.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Now, directing your attention to page 2, the first paragraph on page 2, that relates to the usufruct; right? A. Yes.

Q. Now, that, under German law, would be realizing that the contract is signed by both parties; would be an obligatorischer vertrag; is that right? A. If it was intended as such.

Q. Yes. So that the only thing that is missing is another dinglicher vertrag, a reconveyance into joint-possession; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And it is your testimony that of these four possible contracts, three of which have been set out in the gift agreement, that the dinglicher on the usufruct, not having been made, invalidates the whole thing; everything is void? Is that right? A. I said it could invalidate—2108 Q. Oh, it could? A. —provided that the Court found that the gift would not have been made without the immediate establishment of the usufruct by delivery of possession; that that would be a question of fact for the Court to decide.

Q. And you say that if the intent of the donor was that he would not have made the gift—but for the establishment of an immediate right in rem, that he would not have made the gift—then under such circumstances it would be void? A. Yes.

Q. But, anything less than that, it would not be void? Is that your testimony? A. If as a matter of fact—

Q. Suppose he considered it important—

Mr. Burling: May the witness finish? She started to say, "If as a matter of fact," and I would like to hear the answer.

Mr. Boland: I will bring that out.

Mr. Burling: I would like to hear the answer.

The Court: Let her answer as far as she went and then let her finish.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Go ahead. A. If as a matter of fact the Court found that what the donor intended and all he wanted was 2109 a promise to establish a usufruct in the future, then the non-delivery of possession—that is the establishment of the right in rem immediately, presently—would not render the gift void.

Q. Does the German Civil Code specifically set forth the cases in which contracts are void? A. Yes, it does, and it has a specific provision concerning nullity of an entire transaction which is composed of several transactions if one of the composing transactions is void.

Q. What is the section? 117? That is sham, is it not? A. 139.

Q. 139? A. 139 of the Civil Code.

Q. In preparing your testimony did you make a study of any cases giving a practical application to this rule? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And it is your opinion that the gift contract in and of itself is clear and unambiguous that what the parties intended was an immediate right in rem? That is right, isn't it? A. Reading just the—

Q. Just the gift agreement, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5. A. Yes.

2110 Q. Now, I have a series of hypothetical cases which I would like to ask you. They are designed to find out whether or not in the case of an essential element which is lacking but intended the contracts are valid or void, and if the hypothetical is not clear to you, please ask questions.

Assume that A makes a contract with B, a contract of sale of real property, and assume that the contract of sale is notarized, and I take it under German law that binds the obligatorischer vertrag— A. That is right.

Q. —assume that for some unknown reason the act of conveyance is omitted, but the parties intend an immediate act of conveyance. Is this contract void under German law? A. I am not quite clear on the facts. The parties make a valid contract of sale?

Q. Well, I am asking you whether the contract is valid A. I mean, in valid form, notarized form?

Q. Notarized form. A. Notarized form.

Q. With the intent that the act of conveyance take effect immediately, and for some unknown reason the act of conveyance is omitted. Is the contract void?

2111 A. Not necessarily.

Q. Not necessarily? A. Because, again, this is a question of fact whether one is an essential element of the other or whether you have two transactions which are separate and independent of each other.

Q. Well, the intent was that they be combined into one, and you will agree that if I am to buy property from you and that if you give me a deed and the deed has not been registered with the Register of Wills, without which the act of conveyance does not take effect, that I consider transfer of title pretty important when I buy your real estate? You will agree to that?

Mr. Burling: I object to this line of questioning on the ground that the witness is testifying it is a matter of fact to the German court. The German law, I believe the testimony is—and I do not believe my friend will contest this—is that if there are two elements and each element is an essential element of the transaction, then the failure of one will cause the failure of the whole thing. If it is not an essential element, it won't.

The Court: I think you may go into cross examination of her, but I do not know why you go into real estate.

2112 Mr. Boland: This series of hypothetical cases will build up gradually to our case, Your Honor.

The Court: I know, but I do not know whether I should permit questions about real estate over objection of counsel. A rule on real estate might be quite different.

Mr. Burling: My point is that what counsel is in effect asking it what decisions of fact German courts have come to on the basis of a lot of evidence which we do not have here.

The Court: I will permit her to make that point, if that is the only objection. She can say she is not able to tell what the German law is until the Court has the facts. She can answer. The only point I had in mind is that I do not know if real estate helps us much.

Mr. Boland: The theory, of course, is that the act of conveyance is the establishment of a right in rem.

The Court: I know that, but you are talking about personal property here.

Mr. Boland: I have cases on personal property.

The Court: That is the one I think we should have.

Mr. Burling: My point is that what is being asked is what German courts have decided the facts were on the basis of evidence. It is like a negligence case—

The Court: That again is for the witness to say. She might very well say that on the facts that are 2113 assumed here, the answer is so and so. If she says otherwise, it will depend on what the German courts find on the facts, that answers the question.

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Instead of real estate, let us go to a matter of personal property. Let us assume that A agrees to lend a sum of money, 50,000 marks, to B, which loan is to be secured by a mortgage or secured by stock. The word, as I understand it, is "hypothek."

You will have to bear with me on the pronunciation of these German words, Your Honor. It is difficult for an Irishman to get them across.

Let us assume that A agrees to lend 50,000 marks and that B agrees to secure the loan with the collateral of stock. Now, assume that A actually gives him 50,000 marks and that for some unknown reason the mortgage has not been established. Is that contract void under German law? We will assume, I believe, the additional element that it is very important for A— A. The loan has actually been made?

Q. The agreement is, "I agree to lend you 50,000 marks, but at the same time I would like to have a mortgage in respect to shares of stock," and we will assume that the mortgage securing the loan is very important for me. However, I give you the 50,000 marks and for some unknown reason on the present state of facts, the mortgage has not been established. Under German law, is that contract void? 2114

Mr. Burling: It depends on what the agreement is. Does counsel mean that there is an obligation to repay the 50,000 marks or what? I do not understand.

Mr. Boland: I think the witness, if she does not understand the question, can say so.

The Court: I have some difficulty, Mr. Boland. I will give you the same protection Mr. Burling had in questioning the Doctor.

As I understand it, questions put to an expert, in order to be apropos, must be founded upon some evidence in the record, unless you are trying to test her qualifications. What we are interested in is not mortgages, not real estate, or delivery of them. As I understand it, these experts are just as you and I if testifying across the way on questions about tax laws. We have studied it for a long time. It might be that if we go over there we might be asked questions on real estate. The Supreme Court has decided any number of cases. I do not know whether that would be the way to do it.

Mr. Boland: Under the German Code this word "hypothek," which is the counterpart of the word "mortgage," is defined as a limited right in rem. It is an institution known in German law in the same fashion as is a niessbrauch. That is defined as a limited right in rem; and the use of the word "hypothek", under German law, in hypotheticals such as I have given, would 2115 have the same effect and be bound by provisions of Section 139 about essential elements wanting voiding the contract; and the purpose of this line of questioning is that if she agrees that in such instances the contracts are not void, I would like to then ask her how she distinguishes using hypothek, which is a technical institution in German law, in one sense and niessbrauch, which is a counterpart of a limited right in rem, in a different sense.

Mr. Burling: My objection is that there is an ambiguity in counsel's question. I do not understand whether he means that there is an obligation once he, in his hypothetical case, has paid the 50,000 dollars, on the part of the borrower to return it or, on the contrary, what other contract or obligation he is talking about. I think he is asking an ambiguous question.

The Court: I think the witness, if she has any difficulty with any of the assumptions, should be at liberty to say so.

Mr. Boland: That is one of the questions I asked.

The Court: I do not know whether I have quite 2116 gotten your point or not. I would like to follow you, because I would like it to be intelligible to me as you go along.

Now, you say there is a term used in this—What is the section? 139?

Mr. Boland: The section on hypothek is 1113 of the German Civil Code.

The Court: What does that word "hypothek" mean?

Mr. Boland: I can't define it myself.

The Court: What does it mean?

The Witness: Well, it is the equivalent of a mortgage. It gives a right in rem in the property—that is, the right to satisfy—

The Court: A mortgage. Is this section that you are referring to one that is used by the witness in connection with this case in any wise?

Mr. Boland: The witness has not used it in her direct case, no, Your Honor.

The Court: What I am trying to get at is the significance of the delivery in the case of a mortgage in comparison to the significance of the delivery in the case of a usufruct.

Mr. Boland: The whole purport or import of her testimony, as I gather it, is that niessbrauch is defined as a limited right in rem under the German Civil Code.
2117 Consequently, if the word is used by parties to any kind of a contract, what they mean was exactly what is defined in the German Civil Code.

The Court: I did not quite get that point of hers. I thought she said that if, from a reading of the instrument, the niessbrauch provisions obviously were conditioned upon the efficiency of the instrument, then the whole thing fell. I would think that would be our law. If, from the reading of the entire instrument, you have a provision which is defectively stated, whereas it is absolutely obvious to the reader of the instrument that that was an essential provision, then over here the whole thing falls, if that is what she is saying.

Then she says, if, on the other hand, you would read this instrument and that might be created in the future, then it would not fall. I think that is what she said.

Now, if there is any difference in the German and ours—I think that is our law, is it not?

Mr. Boland: I think that our law is that if you have got a gift agreement—and I am sure that this is the only way in which the German law can be interpreted—that if the sine qua non of the gift is an immediate right in rem, it is established immediately; and if it is not established immediately, the donor would not have intended the gift.
2118 I think it is clear. We will agree on that. We stipulate that.

Mr. Burling: All parties are agreed on that. I agree with Your Honor on the statement of the German law and our law.

The Court: I think he agrees to that.

Mr. Boland: Yes.

Mr. Burling: I do not think there is any controversy on that.

The Court: I do not think there is any controversy on that.

Mr. Boland: I have been trying to get out of her this. These are designed to show how far from that you can get before you find that the contract is not void. Now, — the testimony of the father, Wilhelm—

The Court: It has to amount to an essential element without which the instrument would not hold. She has studied comparative law. Ask Dr. Kronstein, if he comes back, if it differs from our law in any regard in that respect. I think the law is pretty plain here.

If I make a gift that is obviously, from the reading of the words, conditioned upon a certain provision, and due to some technicality or some other act of delivery, it is ineffective, it is no good. We all agree to that. I think you said you agreed to that.

2119 On the other hand, if it says it is to be created in the future, then it is not invalid.

In the third place, if it does not depend upon the creation of this niessbrauch, then it has no effect; it is immaterial. I think we are all agreed on it. I am not sure.

Mr. Boland: Well, these cases, as I understand under German law, and I would like to bring this out through this witness, indicate that if the parties indicated an immediate right in rem, such as this hypothek, and for different reasons which are set up in hypotheticals—first, an unknown reason; secondly, they protect us; and, third, there was a kind of an understanding that they could take care of it later—but in the first case they intended it—and let us assume that it did not happen and the reason is not known, under German law, as I understand it, the donor or lender can come in and sue for specific performance to have the thing established; but the fact that it was not in fact established does not void the whole contract.

The Court: I think that might be an appropriate line of questioning if you apply it to this type of case.

Mr. Burling: My point is that the question of whether an element is or is not an essential element to the whole transaction is one of fact and not one of law, and 2120 hence an inappropriate question to inquire about of an expert.

The Court: You might ask her if she regards it as an element or not. You may be right. She may differ with you. She may differ with me. I think he has a right to go into that. I think you have a right to develop that line—in other words, whether in a case of this sort, under certain circumstances, where the intent is perfectly clear, you could obtain specific performance and thereby not have it void.

Mr. Boland: That is the purpose of this.

The Court: Ask her the general questions and ask her what cases she had seen on it. That will help us both and help me to understand it.

By the Court:

Q. Let me ask you this. Do you understand what he is talking about? A. Yes, I do.

Q. He says assume your instrument indicates on its face that a niessbrauch plainly and obviously, as you say this indicates, was intended, but, through some technicality, delivery did not come to pass, and those words, which could very readily have been put in, had not been put in. Would it be possible for a German court, rather than declare the whole thing illegal, to bring about 2121 that delivery by specific performance; in other words, by the father's making a demand on him, like the Doctor said he could do? A. That is perfectly possible, because the German court, having before it all the evidence, the surrounding circumstances, the intent of the parties, and so on, can come to the conclusion that the immediate establishment of this right in rem was not such an essential element of the contract that its failure voids the contract; in other words, that the intent of the parties can be interpreted as directed toward a future establishment of that right; and that therefore the transaction can be upheld. That is possible. And, again, I think it comes back to the question of fact of essentiality.

The Court: That gives me the lead I wanted. Go ahead, now.

Mr. Boland: All right.

The Witness: I was testifying only on the basis of what I had before me and not trying to put myself in the place of a Judge.

By the Court:

Q. I think Mr. Boland's point is, if I do not misapprehend it, that he says if you read this through carefully—you say, on one hypothesis, at least, this would be void because you thought it was an essential element 2122 or an essential provision which had not been brought into effect; the lack of delivery— A. I was asked to assume that it was an essential element.

Q. You were asked to assume that? A. Yes.

Q. You did not undertake to say that in this particular case it was? A. No; I did not try to decide the case. I was asked to assume that this was an essential element.

Mr. Burling: If I may remind you, the assumption is something which Wilhelm von Opel testified to. I asked her to assume that Wilhelm von Opel insisted upon the terms.

The Court: I understand that.

Mr. Boland: That is exactly what these questions are designed to bring out. Mr. Burling made the assumption that this was an essential element. I did not say sine qua non, or but for, or without which.

Mr. Burling: I made the assumption in the terms of the testimony of Wilhelm von Opel and Fritz von Opel, that the father insisted upon this over the protest of the son.

The Court: I think, Mr. Boland, I will give you all the latitude you want, every particle you want, so 2123 long as you hold it to an analogous situation to this. The only trouble I am having is that when you get off into mortgages and into real estate transactions, mortgages with regard to personality, I do not get very much benefit from it: I have not quite seen how it ties into this. I know your principle, I think.

You say you wanted to develop that in a case like this, where you assume these facts, there might be specific performance which would make it valid, or there might be a demand later on that would make it valid. That is what the Doctor testified to. You can go just as far as you like on that line.

Mr. Boland: It is section 139 which they are applying to this gift agreement, which is not applied to niessbrauch. It applies to everything—mortgages and anything—any contract at all.

The Court: That is what I was trying to ask you a moment ago.

Mr. Boland: Section 139 applies to all contracts.

The Court: You gave me another section. What does 139 say?

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Go ahead, Miss Schoch. A. 139 is the general provision in the German Civil Code which says that if an essential part of the transaction is void, the entire 2124 transaction is void if it had not been made even in the absence of the essential part. That is the general provision.

The Court: You are trying to bring up some specific cases decided by the German courts on Section 139, Mr. Boland?

Mr. Boland: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: I will let you do that. If she finds any element missing that she thinks is necessary, she can tell. That is all right. I have the connection now. I did not know what you were talking about. It is 139 you are talking about?

Mr. Boland: Yes, Your Honor. We have got to find out what 139 means, how it has been interpreted, in order to apply it to our gift here.

The Court: All right.

The Witness: My difficulty, Your Honor, is that the question of essentiality and of intent of the parties is a question of fact which was decided in each case on the evidence before the court.

The Court: As he gives you the hypothetical cases, if you have any element of fact missing, you can just say that you cannot give a conclusion without it. I think that is the way you can answer. Go ahead.

By Mr. Boland:

2125 Q. Let us go back to our assumption on mortgage. A agrees to lend you $50,000. I agree to lend you $50,000. I don't know very much about you; I just met you recently. In return for this sum, I require you to establish a hypothek in respect to some securities to back up the loan. Now, because of our mere acquaintance, it is very important that this hypothek be established, and, in fact, I give you the 50,000 marks without having established the hypothek. Let us assume that the reason why it was not established is unknown.

Can you, under German law, make a determination as to whether or not the contract is void? A. No, I cannot make that determination.

Q. You cannot? A. No.

Q. What additional facts would you need? A. I would want all the additional evidence showing whether the establishment—immediate establishment—of the mortgage was an essential element, whether that was the intent of the parties—

Q. You are not helping me very much, Miss Schoch. What I want to know is—basically, what I am driving at is—how far short of this sine qua non, without which absolute intent this thing would not be done, it would be void on the part of the donor, the lender or the 2126 seller in real estate, for example? I agree that if the man's intent is that "I just will not give this money, under no set of circumstances," must an immediate right in rem be established. I agree with you. I think it is clear under American law that it would be void, or at least voidable, on the part of the donor; but what I am trying to find out is how short of that can the intent be on essentiality and still have the contract valid? Do you see what I am driving at?

Now, we can stay here all day on hypothetical cases, but if you can give me how far the German law goes in showing essentiality, in setting up the facts for essentiality, which will void the contract, and draw a line between those cases in which it would be void and the cases in which it would not be void—

The Witness: I think that depends entirely on the facts of each case.

Mr. Boland: I think, Your Honor—

By the Court:

Q. Let me ask you this leading question. Isn't the law, he wants to know, in Germany as it is here, that the court must find, in order to make that absolutely essential, that the contract would not have been made but for that provision? A. Yes; that is what Mr. Boland himself stated.

2127 The Court: Isn't that what you want?

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Well, is it clear in your mind that unless there is an absolute intent on behalf of the donor—an absolute intent that he will not enter into this transaction but for the thing, just no question about it—under those circumstances only is the contract void for want of an essential element? It is the primary thing involved in the transaction—but for, and the absolute sine qua non. A. Well, it is an essential element in the transaction. One element is the gift and the other element—

By the Court:

Q. Is it the primary or a primary? A. It is a primary; it is not the primary.

Mr. Boland: That is what causes the trouble here, Your Honor. When you ask her to set up the case, she gives "the primary." Then when you ask her what the law is, she says "a primary."

The Witness: No. You are talking about a gift, Mr. Boland, and, of course, one element of a gift is the gift. That is the intent, the giving, and the question is whether the establishment of an in rem right or any other element of this gift in addition to this gift is so essential—

By the Court:

2128 Q. Is the German law any different at all in that regard than the law of America? A. I don't think so, Your Honor. There are cases which have upheld such transactions despite the failure of one element, because the court did not consider it so essential that its failure wrecked the entire transaction. There are other cases in which the courts have held that the failure of such an element did.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I think we can bring this down. I will just skip these hypotheticals and get down to the case and get down to the facts in the case here and see if we can bring some light on this.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Directing your attention again, Miss Schoch, to the gift agreement, on the basis of the gift agreement alone, it is your position that the parties clearly intended the establishment of an immediate right in rem? That is right? There is no question about that or no misunderstanding about that? A. No. That is right.

Q. Now, from that do you deduct that the parties intended to establish an immediate right in rem? A. Yes.

Q. Without more? A. Without more, as far as 2129 I can determine from this.

Q. Now, let us assume that the parties did not intend to establish an immediate right in rem, but they intended to establish something other than an immediate right in rem, going to the problem specifically a little later on, but let us assume that in fact they did not intend to establish an immediate right in rem, and assume that you have the gift contract and you have the further assumption that they did not in fact intend. Would a German court hold that contract void? A. No, I don't think so.

Q. It would look to the intent of the parties? A. It would look to the intent of the parties.

Q. Now, let me read from page 78 of the record. The donor, in his deposition, was asked the following question:

"'Question: I ask that the witness take a look at the fifth paragraph of Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 5'—that is the niessbrauch provision, I believe—

A. That is the usufruct clause.

Q. (Continuing) —"'The gift agreement makes reference to niessbrauch, doesn't it?

"'Answer: Yes.

"'Question: What did you intend by the pro-2130 vision concerning the niessbrauch?

"'Answer: I intended to accomplish that my son takes care of me if I should suffer financial breakdown and have no money any more.'"

This is an English translation.

(Continuing) "'Question: Did you ever intend to ask your son for any money while you had enough to support yourself?

"'Answer: I never intended that.

"'Question: Did you ever intend to ask him to do any more than provide for you and your wife's support when you had no money?

"'Answer: No.'"

Now, let us assume that you have the gift agreement together with that intent, the intent of the donor—

Mr. Burling: You are now assuming that the witness, Wilhelm von Opel, whose testimony on direct examination you have just read, is truthful; is that correct?

Mr. Boland: Of course, Mr. Burling; of course.

Mr. Burling: That is open to doubt. I just wanted to make the assumption clear.

Mr. Boland: I did not think there was any doubt.

Mr. Burling: There is grave doubt on it.

The Court: I think that is always an assumption.
2131 Mr. Boland: We will just assume that.

Mr. Burling: I won't make the point again. It is understood, Your Honor, that when my friend refers to the testimony of either Wilhelm or Fritz von Opel, he adds the assumption that they testified truthfully?

The Court: The witness has to assume that these are the facts and the truth.

Mr. Boland: I am giving her the assumption that this was the intent of the parties, and we are assuming that Miss Schoch is giving a true account of the German law.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. You have the assumption? Would you like me to re-read it? A. No.

Q. Those are the only two things you have got, Miss Schoch. A. Yes.

Q. With that in mind, would you say the intent was to establish an immediate right in rem? A. No, I would not say that.

Q. How would you interpret the contract under such circumstances? A. I would further say that this intent of the donor is in no way spelled out in this usufruct 2132 clause in the agreement.

Q. And, under German law, what effect would that have? A. Well, then, I would say the donor cannot testify to an intent which is no way spelled out in the agreement. In other words, you can look to the intent of the parties only to the extent that it is somehow expressed in your agreement, in the document.

Q. Now, let me ask you this further question right here and now: If the language as used in the gift agreement is unclear and ambiguous, you can certainly look to the intent of the parties as to what it means? A. Yes.

Q. And if the language is ambiguous, the fact that it is not spelled out in the gift agreement—the actual intent —would not preclude the court from taking the actual intent into consideration, would it? A. That is right.

Q. But your testimony is that because the language of the gift agreement is so clear and unambiguous as to what the parties intended, inasmuch as the actual intention being something other than that, and not having been spelled out, that the court would disregard the intent; is that it?

A. Yes; that is my testimony.

2133 Q. Thank you. A. In other words, that the intent of the parties was directed toward a usufruct. That is a right in rem.

Q. Now, let us assume that these additional facts are before the court, reading from the testimony of Wilhelm von Opel at page 111 of the record:

"'Question: Whose idea was it to include a provision for a niessbrauch in Plaintiff's Exhibit 5?

"'Answer: Unfortunately, it was my idea to insert the niessbrauch but it was interpreted differently than it was intended. This was intended to be a security so that he'"—referring to his son Fritz—"'should support me if I lost everything.

"'Question: When you executed Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 you wanted the niessbrauch provision in it did you not?

"'Answer: Yes.

"'Question: At the time the agreement was executed you thought it was important to have a niessbrauch, did you not?

"'Answer: I considered it important as a safeguard for me in my old age.

"'Question: Would you have made the gift to your son if there had been no niessbrauch provision in the 2134 agreement?

"'Answer: I would not have signed the agreement if there has not been a protection for me in it.'"

Let me read that again.

"'Question: Would you have made the gift to your son if there had been no niessbrauch provision in the agreement?

"'Answer: I would not have signed the agreement if there has not been a protection for me it it.

"'Question: Now you testified that the niessbrauch was included in the agreement so that your son could support you in the event you lost everything, did you not?

"'Answer: Yes.

"'Question: Where in Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 does it say that you were to have a niessbrauch so that your son should support you if you lost everything?

"'Answer: That is not stated here.'"

Now, assume that that is what the court has, the gift agreement and all of the testimony of Wilhelm von Opel. Does that help you in interpreting the contract? A. First of all, I would have to find out whether the agreement was drawn by a lawyer.

Q. Let us assume that it was. A. Assuming that 2135 it was drawn by a lawyer, as I said before, a lawyer using the term "usufruct"—

Q. Must mean a right in rem? A. Must mean a right in rem. A lay person might use the term "usufruct" for something else that would be a misnomer, but I cannot imagine a lawyer using that term for anything but a right in rem.

Q. And as a result of which, with these three things—the gift agreement, the assumption that a lawyer drafted the agreement, and the actual intent of the party, the donor—your conclusion was what? A. I have not stated my conclusion yet.

Q. I am sorry. A. With no other facts, I might come to the conclusion that what was intended was the creation of a usufruct in the future.

Q. In the future. Would it be possible that what the party had in mind was an in personam claim against the son? A. That seems out of the question to me.

Q That is out of the question because a lawyer drew the instrument? A. Yes.

Q. Taking what the father said he intended, that is a possibility, isn't it—that what he wanted was a claim against the son for income in his old age? A. That 2136 is possible. He did not think in legal terms.

Q. I think that is clear. A. Yes.

Q. Therefore, what the father intended, just on his intent alone, it might well have been that what he was interested in was just some legal claim against the son in the event he was in distress in old age, without any money? That is possible, isn't it? A. Well, sure, it might have been possible.

Q. Just take his intent as he stated it, without more, and then relate it to the gift agreement as such and without the assumption that a lawyer drew it. It might well be the interpretation—

Mr. Burling: Is counsel now withdrawing the assumption?

Mr. Boland: Yes, I am. I will make it quite clear.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. We will drop the assumption that a lawyer drafted this agreement. In other words, Miss Schoch, what I want to do is to relate the intent of the father—

Mr. Burling: I object to this line of questioning on the grounds that the plaintiffs have produced two witnesses, one, Fritz von Opel, who said that he went to see 2137 the most eminent lawyer in Germany, who prepared a draft, and Fritz then testified that he talked over the draft which his father, and that the draft was the basis of the agreement, and then they produced Stansfield, or Stansfield appeared, and he testified that he was a German lawyer and he had drafted it—

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I am coming to these things. I wish Mr. Burling would let me handle the case in my own way.

Mr. Burling: Counsel's questions are contrary to the facts.

The Court: I will let counsel state his own hypothesis.

Mr. Burling: This question is contrary to his own hypothesis. Their witness testified that Hachenburg prepared the draft as a result of a conversation with Fritz von Opel, and as a result of the draft, Wronker-Flatow, or Stansfield wrote it.

The Court: I won't take time to check the whole record now. You can argue later that it is not applicable. What he wants to know is if Mr. von Opel in effect misconstrued the technique of this language and had the intent, as he testified, to—

Mr Boland: What effect it has under German law.

The Court: What effect would that have?

2138 The Witness: The mere use of the term "usufruct" by a layman who is not familiar with the law does not necessarily mean that what he intended was to create a right in rem. It might well be that he meant just income as a right in personam and used the wrong term.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. So that with these two things in mind, it might be, under German law, that the courts would interpret the contract as an in personam claim against the son; is that right? A. On the assumption that this was made without the assistance of lawyers, yes.

Q. So that the immediate right in rem comes into play only on the basis that a lawyer drafted the instrument? That is the significance you give to that one assumption that a lawyer drafted the instrument; is that right? A.

I attach significance to that assumption in interpreting the term "usufruct," yes.

Q. In interpreting the term "usufruct" in this gift agreement? A. Yes.

Q. The fact that a lawyer drafted the agreement? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I would like to add one more element, and 2139 I now quote from the cross examination of Fritz von Opel at page 825 of the record. In stating his discussion with Dr. Hachenburg and what was actually discussed with the Doctor, between Fritz and the Doctor, during the course of this proceeding on cross examination, he stated as follows:

"And I also repeated what in effect my father wanted, not in legal language, and, for example, my father, the words my father told me, he said: In Paris you find the doorman in front of your door which ten or fifteen years before is a rich price, and now, all of a sudden, these princes are waiters or taxi drivers, or doormen, and my father wasn't sure what was going to happen in Germany, and so he told me if the day should arrive where he had to flee Germany, and where I might arrive in a foreign country, maybe with nothing in my hand but a paper bag, I then want some legal hold on income, and you at the time might be dead, and I might have to fight it out with your family, and so even if you are alive I want some legal strings, and if I have to appear as a begger and ask you for money, I want some legal strings so that I can legally obtain what is due to me, and these words I explained to Dr. Hachenburg, and he put them into legal language, and the result 2140 is this gift agreement."

Now, let us take the testimony of the father, the donor, and the testimony of the donee and put the two things together and take the gift agreement. Does that shed any light by way of interpretation? A. No, it does not shed any additional light.

Q. We are just where we were before? A. Yes.

Q. Now, let us take the testimony of Dr. Stansfield, at page 118 of the record, on questioning of Mr. Burling—

Mr. Burling: What page?

Mr. Boland: 1188.

Mr. Burling: You said 188.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Mr. Burling's question is:

"I wish you would give us an idea of what he said to you," Mr. Burling referring to what the father, Wilhelm von Opel, had said to Wronker-Flatow.

"Answer: He said he wanted to protect this part of his family, his son, to have something for him that would take care of Fritz, who had been removed from his position in industry and so on.

"Question: That is not in response to my question.

"Answer: You will be good enough—you are ask-2141 ing me—

"Question: I want to know the substance of what Wilhelm said to you about a usufruct.

"Answer: And in that connection, as I just now said, although he was taking care of Fritz, he at the same time wanted to protect himself in case Communists or Nazis should take over, or in case of all kinds of contingencies that nobody could definitely specify at that moment. So he wanted to have a possibility of going to Fritz and saying, 'Now, I want a usufruct, and here'—and didn't have to beg for it.

"Question: So you put a usufruct into the terms of the agreement, is that correct?

"Answer: That is correct.

"Question: You used the following language, did you not:

"'The usufruct in the shares is no assigned to Fritz von Opel, it remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereafter called the parents Opel, until the survivor of them * * *'.

"When you drafted those words, what did you think their legal significance was?

"Answer: This would give Mr. von Opel and Mrs. von Opel the right any time to ask Fritz von Opel to create a property right."

2142 Now we have what the lawyer who drafted the instrument said. Does that shed any light? A. He says that he cast the intentions and wishes of the parties into a legal form which would give the parents a property right, which is a right in rem in the corpus of the gift.

Q. Is it your testimony, Miss Schoch, that on the basis of those three statements the donor, the donee, and the person—the lawyer—who drafted the instrument, plus the gift agreement, itself, a German court would hold this entire contract void because, in fact, a right in rem was not established immediately? A. It might.

Q. It might? A. It might, yes.

Q. Have you any authority for that? A. Just the authority of section 139 of the Civil Code.

Q. What is that a definition of? A niessbrauch? A. No; that is the definition of a void transaction when one of its elements is void.

Q. Have you ever heard of the theory of conversion? A. Yes.

Q. Would that have a bearing on this? A. It has a bearing on this insofar as it is consistent with the intent.

2143 Q. I think it might be well for you to explain to the Court what the concept of the theory is. A. The theory is that if consistently with the intent of the parties and the agreement that has been made, you can interpret the agreement in such a way that it is valid, you may do so.

Q. My question now is, would that have any effect under such a set of circumstances as I have given you: the testimony of the donor, the donee as to what the father intended, and the lawyer who drafted the instrument as to what he intended, plus the gift agreement? A. Well, I think these facts or those assumptions might lead the Court to hold that the gift was void—was valid, even though the right in rem was not immediately created, but that either what was intended or what the parties would be assumed to have intended was a future creation of a usufruct.

Q. Would you venture an interpretation, under such a set of circumstances, as to whether it might be an in personam claim; and under the three possible interpretations that Dr. Kronstein gave, would you say that under such circumstances it might be that the Court would apply one of those three interpretations? A. I would say this: I would say that the Court might interpret this as an obligation to establish a right in rem. I cannot see 2144 that the Court could interpret it as a mere right in personam—that is, a mere monetary claim.

Q. That is because the lawer drafted it—

The Court: She thinks the weight of the evidence is that way, I suppose.

By the Court:

Q. Isn't that what you mean? A. I think the fact that a lawyer drafted it was one of the elements.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. I think you already testified that assuming a lawyer had not drafted it and that Wilhelm von Opel had used this term not knowing it was a word of art— A. Then it might be a right in personam.

Mr. Burling: I move to strike that. Wilhelm von Opel has personally testified, through depositions, that he based his work on the work of the most eminent lawyer in Germany.

Mr. Boland: We are coming to him very shortly, Mr. Burling, if you will bear with me.

The Court: I understand that is your contention. It is quite hard to tell exactly what state of facts a German court would arrive at without seeing the witnesses or hearing cross examination. That is the difficulty. I think he said quite plainly that this obviously—that if it did become obvious to the German court that this language right 2145 here was language which was mistakenly used by the lawyer, and that after having a full and complete explanation made by both of these parties that they had mistakenly put that in there, and that Mr. Wilhelm von Opel had completely misunderstood the meaning of that, then it would have a very material bearing on the question whether a right in rem was created or was not.

On the other hand, I think that perhaps she thinks the German lawyers would not have made such a mistake.

By the Court:

Q. Am I correct about that? A. I am not quite sure whether I understood the last statement you made.

Q. I think you are holding to the view that those German lawyers would not have made such a terrible mistake—isn't that what you mean—having put in their understanding? A. Yes; I think a German lawyer using the term "usufruct" and providing for a usufruct knows what he is talking about.

Q. I know he knows what he is talking about. But if those people told what Mr. Boland has assumed they told him, they would not have written that down? A. If they told him this, he would have told them the way in which to give them protection or to do what you want 2146 to do.

The Court: We are saying the same thing. That is the difficulty I have. I think you have gotten it correctly. I think the assumption that Mr. Wilhelm von Opel had definitely and unequivocally in his mind that he simply wanted to create the right he said he did when he gave his facts, and these lawyers translated that and put it into words that had a different significance—

Mr. Boland: The lawyer testified in this case.

The Court: I know. (Continuing) I think that is bad. But she has testified that that is unquestionably so, and that a German court would hold that that would be a right in rem.

The Witness: Yes, but—

By the Court:

Q. I know your "but" side. But the other side is that if these brilliant lawyers had been told what he wanted, they would not have drawn such a silly thing in there; and therefore Mr. Wilhelm von Opel did not tell them that. A. I am not trying to assume he did not tell them that, but I assume they told him and explained to him that the way to do it was by way of usufruct, and therefore they adopted the usufruct device.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Boland:

2147 Q. Now, yesterday Miss Schoch, Mr. Burling asked you the following questions, at page 2045:

"Question: Do you see anything in the Hachenburg papers which indicates that it was the intent of the parties to obtain a right, an in personam claim for income, coupled with the right that they could at same point in the future, if they felt like it, create a usufruct in order to secure that claim?"

Your answer: "No, I cannot read that interpretation from the Hachenburg papers."

"Question: Do you see anything in the papers—in the Hachenburg papers—where Hachenburg said anything about such an intent?"

"Answer: No."

"Question: Are the Hachenburg papers consistent or inconsistent with that hypothesis?"

"Answer: I think they are inconsistent."

You testified further, at page 2085, as follows:

"Under a gift agreement, which is Exhibit 5, the usufruct did not come into being because the reassignment of this delivery was not put in, was omitted."

Do you remember that testimony? A. Yes.

Q. Let me clarify that. The quotation at page 2085 was not in connection with the Hachenburg papers. A. 2148 Oh, I see. I did not quite see the context.

Mr. Boland: I will show the context shortly. May I have Plaintiff's Exhibit 8, Mr. Yates?

(The deputy clerk handed a paper to Mr. Boland.)

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Now, I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 8, which has been referred to as the Hachenburg draft, Miss Schoch. A. Yes.

Q. I think we all recognize that Dr. Hachenburg was an outstanding and leading lawyer in Germany; is that not true? A. He certainly was.

Q. We have all agreed to that. Now, if the parties,

Miss Schoch, had actually signed this draft—if the parties had actually signed this draft—would there have been a valid gift under German law? A. Yes.

Q. Do you find any words on reconveyance into joint possession in this draft? A. No.

Q. How do you explain that? Why is it valid? A. The gift is valid because the title to the shares was validly assigned from the donor to the donee.

Q. As in Exhibit 5? A. Yes; and there is nothing that I can see in this draft which, if the draft were signed 2149 by the parties, would make it invalid.

Q. In other words, it is your interpretation of the Hachenburg draft that Dr. Hachenburg did not intend to create an immediate right in rem; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Why do you come to that conclusion? Will you point out the language? A. Section 2: "Donors reserve to themselves for life the usufruct in three quarters, i.e., in par value, reichmarks 4,500,000 of the donated shares. The balance of reichmarks 1,500,000 is exempt from the usufruct. Donors' usufruct expires at the death of the last parent."

Q. From that language, you would state that it is clear that Hachenburg did not intend an immediate right in rem; is that right? A. It is clear to me, because I am convinced that Dr. Hachenburg, if he had intended immediate creation of a right in rem, would have put in the words of reassignment.

Q. Miss Schoch, would you direct your attention to the first paragraph on the second page of Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 and read that aloud, please? A. "The usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel; it remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereafter called the parents Opel, until the death of the survivor of them.

However, 20 percent of all dividends and interest
2150 received will accrue to Fritz von Opel."

Q. What you just read from was Plaintiff's Exhibit 5; isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. Would you explain to me how you can say that if the Hachenburg draft, on the basis of—

Well, let me ask you this: Would you say that the language you have quoted from the Hachenburg draft in Plaintiff's gift agreement, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, was similar in nature? A. Similar, yes.

Q. What is the distinction between the language in Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 and Plaintiff's Exhibit 8, the Hachenburg draft, which leads you to the conclusion that if Hachenburg's draft had been signed, even though there were no words of reassignment, it would have been valid, and Wronker-Flatow's draft, that was signed, is void because it intends an immediate right in rem which was not in fact created? Take your time and speak slowly, so that we can understand it. A. The different conclusion to which I come is not based on this specific paragraph but is based on the entire Hachenburg draft. It is based on the fact that the Hachenburg draft spells out a device for bringing the usufruct, which he has in mind, into being by way of the holding company.

Q. So you testified, did you not, to my question, 2151 when I asked you the question, that you could not point out language in the Hachenburg draft which shows that if this agreement had been signed, it would have been valid without words of reconveyance, as distinguished from Plaintiff's Exhibit 5? You read a paragraph which is quite similar and practically identical to the language in Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, did you not?

Mr. Burling: The witness also testified that the holding company provisions are in—

Mr. Boland: She just added that. I think we can go back and have checked in the record exactly what the question was.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. The question was, Would you point out to me the language by which you state that Hachenburg did not intend an immediate right in rem?

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, the witness then said it was because of the holding company provision which is in Plaintiff's Exhibit 8.

Mr. Boland: I agree, Your Honor, that the witness just added that; but I would like to know if she did not answer my question by pointing specifically to this reservation language.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, the record is the best evidence of that. My recollection of what took place 30 seconds ago is that a particular paragraph was shown, and she was asked, "Is this similar to what is in the—"

The Court: I heard her say that.

2152 By the Court:

Q. You go ahead and give your interpretation of that. What is the language that makes the difference? A. Well, there are certain differences. For instance, Exhibit 5, the fifth of October agreement, speaks of the usufruct, meaning the usufruct in the entire corpus of the gift; whereas the Hachenburg draft provides for usufruct in 75 percent of the stock only. That is, he gives the parents usufruct in 75 percent, not the entire.

The agreement of October 5 gives Fritz von Opel 25 percent of all dividends and interest received, which to me looks rather like an in personam right of Fritz von Opel against his parents. That is what the October 5 agreement—

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Looks like an in personam right? A. A right of Fritz von Opel against his parents for 20 percent; whereas the Hachenburg draft clearly would establish usufruct in 75 percent.

Q. Of course, it is clear from the first page that it could not be an in personam right on behalf of Fritz von Opel against his parents, I take it; is that right? A. No, not at all.

Q. In other words— A. If they reserve the entire 2153 usufruct to themselves and give him only a claim for 20 percent of the income, which they are prepared to do, then—

Q. I see. Have you finished explaining why if Dr. Hachenburg's draft had been signed there would have been a valid agreement? A. Well, I think I have explained it.

Q. Even though words of reassignment are not there? A. Yes, because the Hachenburg draft, other than the October 5, agreement, makes it clear that the usufruct is to be created in the near future through the holding corporation device, and the Hachenburg draft spells out the manner in which the usufruct is to be created.

Q. If you will take Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 and Plaintiff's Exhibit 8, Miss Schoch, and read the two of them and compare the two of them, do you think it would be reasonable to assume that the lawyer who drafted the final gift agreement, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, on the assumption that he had before him Plaintiff's Exhibit 8 at the time he drafted it—that he in effect was using the language of Dr. Hachenburg, which appears in the first paragraph under section 2, I believe?

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I think we could save a great deal of time. The defendant's contention primarily is just exactly, I think, what Mr. Boland is now asking. We contend that the gift agreement which was 2154 actually signed is merely a provision of the Hachenburg draft. We get into this point of total conveyance at the outset ab initio, only if it is contended that the Hachenburg draft was disregarded and some other document substituted by Wronker-Flatow. If my friend will concede, as he now appears to be saying, that the Hachenburg draft is the basis—

Mr. Boland: Not necessarily. We will concede that Wronker-Flatow had the Hachenburg draft before him at the time he drafted the instrument. We will also concede that in the course of preparing this, and prior to that time, there was a memorandum of fundamental considerations which basically set out the ideas, which was also before Wronker-Flatow, perhaps in advance of the date on which he drafted the instrument.

I do not think there is much trouble there. You will see my point in a minute, Mr. Burling.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Is it reasonable to conclude that the language in the first paragraph of section 2 came from—pardon me; the language of the first paragraph of page 2 of Plaintiff's Exhibit 5 came from the first paragraph of section 2 of Plaintiff's Exhibit 8? A. Yes.

Q. Is it usual, Miss Schoch, under German law, to use the term, "the usufruct is reserved"? If you were writing a usufruct provision, would you use the word "re-2154 reserved"? A. That term is quite often used in Germany.

Q. You do not think that lends any uniqueness to it? A. No, not at all. A gift with usufruct reserved is quite usual.

Q. Let us assume the following fact: Assume that the father and son came back—came to Wronker-Flatow—for the purpose of entering into a final gift agreement on October 5, 1931; that having received the draft, Plaintiff's Exhibit 8, from Dr. Hachenburg, there was discussion about it; and that Wronker-Flatow, being the attorney at that time, stated, "The important thing is speed. The important thing is speed. Let us get this accomplished"; they then finish discussing the holding company; the father is not sure about the holding company; and there is some discussion; but, at any rate, Wronker-Flatow says, "Let us forget the holding company. You can work out an arrangement along that line later on. The important thing is to make a gift."

On that assumption the parties took Hachenburg's draft and deleted the provisions concerning the holding company.

The German court, having the intent of the parties before it, such as I have given you—the statement of the lawyer who drafted the instrument and the Hachenburg papers before it, plus this gift agreement—in your opinion, would the German court hold that gift agreement void?

A. No. I think I have testified to that effect yester-2156 day.

Q. You think they would hold it valid? A. Yes.

Q. Assuming they would hold it valid, how would the instrument be interpreted under these sets of conditions I have given you: the testimony of the father, the testimony of the son, the testimony of the lawyer who drafted the instrument, and the stipulation that the Hachenburg papers were drafted in connection with the gift agreement and actually present before Wronker-Flatow when he drafted this instrument? How would you interpret the first paragraph on page 2 of Plaintiff's Exhibit 5? A. The first paragraph?

Q. On page 2 of Plaintiff's Exhibit 5. A. On page 2?

Q. Of Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, I think, which is usufruct.

A. Oh, yes; usufruct.

I think I explained in my testimony yesterday, in the light of the Hachenburg agreement, I would interpret this usufruct clause as a provision for a usufruct to be established.

Q. In the future? A. In the future.

Q. Is it true that under such circumstances actually the legal effect of such interpretation would be an in personam claim of the father and mother against 2157 the son to establish a usufruct in the future? A. That is right.

Q. And that if the intent of the parties was given any weight, it would be interpreted as to be created at a time when the family was in distress or distressed financial circumstances? A. No.

Q. No! Not necessarily? A. No, because that intent is in no way spelled out either in the Hachenburg draft or in the instrument itself.

Q. Would the fact that the father was independently wealthy—and let us assume, taking his capital alone and disregarding his income, that it would take over 250 years to spend the capital at the rate he lived, without touching the income, would that fact be given any weight in the German court in interpreting this contract as to its validity or voidness?

Mr. Burling: You are also assuming that the property being given was exchangeable into foreign exchange, so that it would be somewhere other than in Germany?

Mr. Boland: I am talking about his German property.

The Court: He is trying to get at the fact that the father needed money for any particular use.

Mr. Boland: The fact that he did not need any money.

The Court: The fact that he did not need any 2158 money for any particular use.

The Witness: I do not think so, because why would they make that provision? Why did the father want this usufruct?

By Mr. Boland:

Q. That is the very question I have in my mind, Miss Schoch. Here is a man who is independently and on his own very, very wealthy. As far as he can see, unless someone comes in and takes over all his property and assets in Germany, he is never going to have to call upon his son for any money.

Therefore, it seems to me a question might well be raised in the German court as to what is the meaning of 80 percent? Would the father really want 80 percent of the income from the time of the gift agreement of October 5, 1931?

Mr. Burling: I feel, if Your Honor please, that if we are going to have assumed facts in a particular case, then the witness should also be asked to assume the remaining facts, which were testified to by Fritz von Opel, Wilhelm von Opel, and Wronker-Flatow, that the father was constantly obsessed with the idea that Russian Princes had become taxi drivers in Paris and that he might have to flee Germany.

The Court: You can ask her about that hypothesis on redirect.

Mr. Boland: I do not think she has the point.

The Court: I think she has.

2159 The Witness: Maybe I have not; I am not sure.

By the Court:

Q. He wants to know, assuming all those facts you have been assuming—the two papers drawn by the two different lawyers and all the circumstances that have been related by him in his question, and the testimony of the father and son, and so forth—he wants to find out, if that matter came into court, would the financial status of the father have any bearing on the interpretation? A. I do not think so; it would have no bearing on the interpretation of a right in rem which is to be created by a holding company.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. You do not think, then, that under German law the fact that the donor was independently wealthy would have any bearing in interpreting whether or not the intent, as stated in this gift agreement, was for an immediate right in rem or for a future right in rem? Don't you think that that would be given some consideration? A. All depending on the remainder of the facts and on the entirety.

Q. We have already come to the conclusion—without that, we come to the conclusion—that what the intent was was to create a usufruct in the future—at some time in the future. A. Well, I think I said a little more 2160 than that. I think the intent, in the light of the Hachenburg draft, was to create a usufruct in the near future.

Q. And therefore the contract was not void? A. No, it was not void. I am not talking about invalidity; I am now talking about the intent of the parties and the purpose of this usufruct clause; and the fact that Dr. Hachenburg elaborated the holding corporation device for the realization of the usufruct seems to me to point to more than a mere something that was to happen in the remote future, when the father might become destitute.

I just cannot see the transaction in the light of those drafts otherwise than as a very definite plan for the near future. The transfer of the Opel shares that were in New York, the holding corporation, and the various provisions spelled out by Dr. Hachenburg—in the light of those I think the fact that the father at present was a rich man did not make much difference in Germany.

Q. I want to see how far you go in this. Taking the gift agreement alone, Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, Hachenburg's papers, Plaintiff's Exhibits 8 and 9, I believe—on those two things alone, on the basis of the Hachenburg papers, so called, and Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, is it your testimony that the Court would interpret the gift agreement as a right to call upon the donee in the future to establish a 2161 right in rem? Is that your interpretation, without more? A. Yes.

Q. It is. A. Yes.

Q. Then, under German law—that is, even without intent of the parties being present, but on the basis of this —you would conclude that the parties intended to create a right in rem in the future?

Mr. Burling: May I ask counsel to state when the future is? 12 o'clock is in the future—12 o'clock today. So is the millenium in the future.

Mr. Boland: That is exactly what I am getting to. You just bear with me. I am sure I see this picture as well as you.

The Court: You can ask her on redirect.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. On the basis of the Hachenburg papers and the gift agreement, you think it is clear, under German law, that the contract would not be held void? A. Yes. I think I have said that a number of times.

Q. Question No. 2: The parties intended to create a right in rem in the future, without defining the future. Let us say 5 minutes in advance, 10 minutes, or 15. But at least it would not be held void due to the fact it was not created immediately.

2162 Now, isn't it somewhat significant, and wouldn't it be given weight, that the father was independently wealthy and needed no money; that it would take him 250 years to spend what he had now at the present rate of his spending money—and he was 65 or 70 years old, although probably a little younger than that at the time of the gift, but he was in his upper years. Wouldn't that be given weight as to how far in the future? A. Well—

Q. I realize we are dealing with a difficult thing. It is a question of degree. A. It is a question of speculation.

Q. But we are not talking about 5 minutes. A. I would like to point out this: Having before me the Hachenburg papers, and seeing that Dr. Hachenburg has spelled this thing out, Dr. Hachenburg, of course, realized that the parents did not want the income immediately, which they would have to tender to the German Reichsbank, and which would become reichsmarks, on which they had planned anyway. That is, I think, why Dr. Hachenburg put in the provision that the father was to have the right to vote on this 75 percent of the stock in which he held usufruct, and that he had the right to vote not only on dividends but also on the use to be made of these reserve funds of the holding corporation, so that all the father had to do was to vote that no dividends were to be 2163 distributed, and the net profit of the corporation was placed into a reserve fund, as provided by the Hachenburg draft. In this fund the net profits of the corporation would accumulate for the father, so that in the future, when he had to leave Germany or became destitute, he could draw those funds.

Q. Well, I just have a few more questions, Miss Schoch. Is it usual, under German law, or unusual, or is it unknown, to use the word niessbrauch in respect of securities as a mere right in personam? A. I don't think there is any definite use. I mean the ordinary use of usufruct is to denote a right in rem. It may be possible that nonexperts or lay persons might talk about usufruct meaning a right in personam.

Q. But a lawyer you would not expect to talk of usufruct? A. In the case of a lawyer, I definitely would not.

Q. In preparing your testimony, Miss Schoch, did you consult commentaries on the B. G. B.? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you consult the so-called Staudinger? A. Yes, I think I did.

Q. Do you recognize Staudinger as a reliable report on German practice? A. It is one of the leading commentaries on the Civil Code, yes.

2164 Q. Would you translate, please, section 8 on page 832? I direct your attention to that section. Have you read that before? A. Section 8 on page—I don't know what edition that is. That is the ninth edition of the Staudinger.

Q. It just has a figure 8. A. Yes; this note on 8, page 832, is as follows. This is just an offhand translation.

Q. Yes. A. "The main substitute forms for a usufruct in practical life are the following: A."—

Q. Is there a reference there to Nussbaum? A. There is a reference to Nussbaum.

Q. Do you know what Nussbaum that is? A. Yes, I think I know. Without looking it up, I assume that it is a book by Nussbaum published in 1919, in which he discusses the practical importance of usufruct as an institution in German law.

Q. Is he the same Nussbaum who was at Columbia? A. Yes.

Q. Would you go on, then? A. "If somebody desires to procure to another the enjoyment of the capital, whether it is rested in securities or in mortgage, for life or for some other period of time, frequently the form of the usufruct does not suit him, because it grants to the 2165 usufructary far reaching rights with respect to the capital itself."

Then he refers to section 1077 to 1079 of the Civil Code. Do you want me to read on?

Q. Yes, please, just a little more. A. "The grantor will then prefer to choose the less burdensome form of a mere obligatory agreement—that is, of an agreement for a mere right in personam. Such a mere right in personam may be meant under given circumstances where the parties use the term 'niessbrauch'—where the parties themselves have used the term 'niessbrauch.'".

Again, there is reference to the book by Nussbaum.

Q. Would you not state, as a result of that quotation from Staudinger, that the use of the word "niessbrauch" does not necessarily mean a right in rem? A. I conclude, what I have already said, that the term as used by a nonlawyer might mean in personam.

Q. You think that that book supports what you have already said? A. Yes; but as used by a lawyer like Dr. [illegible]burg, it certainly would indicate a right in rem.

Q. Is Staudinger a report that is used by lay people or attorneys? A. It is a legal commentary, but he does not say who the parties were in the cases or hypotheses.

2166 Q. So would you say that that statement merely bolsters your position that lay people using the word "niessbrauch" might not mean right in rem? A. Well, I could possibly think of a very inexperienced or poor lawyer; but Dr. Hachenburg, in the year 1931, I think, could only mean a right in rem.

Q. Miss Schoch, let us assume that the parties did, in fact, intend to create an immediate right in rem and that, in fact, an immediate right in rem was not established. A. You mean with regard to the usufruct?

Q. Yes. I am referring to Plaintiff's Exhibit 5. Assume, further, that but for the establishment of the immediate right in rem, the donors would not have given the gift. I think that is a glaring example of what was then section 139, as I understood you; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Would you like me to read this? A. Immediate right in rem is an essential of the gift.

Q. I do not like using "is an essential." A. I mean is the essential. Well, one essential is a gift.

Q. It is a "but for." It seems to me there are many things that can be an essential, but not a "but for the gift."

The Court: You had better ask the question and see if she can answer you that way.

2167 By Mr. Boland:

Q. Assume that the parties did anything to create an immediate right in rem but, in fact, the immediate right in rem was not created. I am assuming a very strong point. But assume further that but for the establishment of the immediate right in rem, the donors would not have given the gift. A. Yes.

Q. I think that is clearly within section 139, according to your testimony, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. Then, assume that approximately 4 years thereafter all of the parties, realizing that the right in rem had not in fact been established, not only ratify the gift to the son but decided that they did not want anything further to do with the niessbrauch. Would that have any significance under German law? A. Well, we have shown that due to the failure of the usufruct, the gift failed at the time. You want me to assume that?

Q. Well, I want you to draw your own conclusions. I am just stating that. A. For the purpose of discussion, I am now assuming—

Q. I think under your testimony you would have to state the contract would be void; that the usufruct failed.

The assumption of fact is that the right in rem was 2168 not created; it was just not created as a fact. A. All right. If I have no other facts, I would say, assuming it was essential to the gift, and that the gift failed, no title passed at the time from father to son.

Naturally, any time the parties realize the nullity of the transaction they have made, they can, as it is sometimes called, ratify the transaction. A more precise term would be that they can make a new contract; they can make a new gift. That, without anything further, could have been done in this case.

Q. Is that known as confirmation or ratification in German law? A. It is sometimes called ratification, but what is meant is the conclusion of an entirely new agreement, the making of a new gift.

Q. Now, let us assume this: First, that the gift of October 5, 1931, was actually void because the word "usufruct" was used and no right in rem was established.

Now let us assume that in 1935 Fritz von Opel, the son, made an attempt to establish a right in rem, but that the Opel parents did not accept this usufruct.

Would that have any significance under German law? A. Well, first of all, you state he made an attempt to establish a usufruct, and your theory would be that by the establishment of the usufruct in 1935 the gift 2169 would become a valid gift?

Q. I do not have a theory; I am just asking a question. A. I have difficulty in my assumptions.

Q. Yes. In 1931, October 5, let us assume the parties intended an immediate right in rem and that it was a sine qua non of the gift. Under section 139 of the Code it would be void, because they did not establish it? A. Yes.

Q. Let us assume that in 1934 or 1935 the donee under the gift, having received possession actually and kept possession for 3 or 4 years, actually attempted to establish a usufruct in favor of the parents. A. Yes.

Q. And that the parents did not accept the usufruct. Where would we be by way of legal situation under German law? What effect would that have? A. First of all, of course, disregarding the foreign exchange control factors for a moment, I would say this: First of all, it has to be clear that at the time the son tries to establish usufruct, the parents want to make this gift or to ratify the gift which you ask me to assume was void. If the parents do not want the usufruct—

Q. Let me make one thing clear. I did not ask you to assume that it was void. A. I thought you did.

2170 Q. No. If I did, I am sorry. A. I am sorry.

Q. It would come within the purview of section 139. That is what I said. I did not ask you to assume it was void.

Mr. Burling: Counsel said you would have to conclude it was void under your previous testimony.

Mr. Boland: That she would have to conclude it was void; not I. I am just asking about a set of facts when the case comes before a German court.

By the Court:

Q. That has to be your answer. You assume that would be void under 139? A. Yes. I am talking about the assumption it is void.

Q. Whether it is his assumption or yours, that is what you are assuming? A. Yes; in my answer, I am assuming it is void.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. All right. A. And you want me to assume that the son attempts to establish usufruct; that the parents do not want it—

Mr. Boland (interposing): To the property which he has held since 1931.

A. I see. And that the parents do not want—say they do not want—the usufruct?

Q. Yes. A. Well, the parents are assuming that 2171 they have made a gift to the son?

Q. Yes. A. That they have not been aware that this gift is void or might be void?

Q. That is right. A. They believe they made a gift in 1931?

Q. Yes. A. The son attempts to perform his obligation under the agreement by establishing usufruct, and the parents then declare that they do not want a usufruct?

Q. That is right. A. That would amount to the making of a gift from the parents to the son at the time the parents declared that they did not want a usufruct.

Q. Tell me this, Miss Schoch. I show you what I believe is section 184 of the German Civil Code. Would you just give us the general import of that section? A. Well, it says that subsequent ratification has retroactive effect, retroactive to the time when the transaction was made, unless other provision has been made—unless something else has been provided for.

Q. Would you say that section 184 has any bearing on the set of circumstances you gave us hypothetically? A. I don't think so.

2172 Q. You don't think it would have retroactive validity? A. I don't think so, because I don't think that what I am talking about is the subsequent consent or subsequent ratification.

Q. Let us assume, now, a set of circumstances where, in fact, the parents knew that the gift agreement with the right in rem had not, in fact, been established, and they knew they had intended the right in rem, but at a later time, but it not having been established, they indicated that that was all right with them. That would be ratification retroactively, wouldn't it? A. No, I don't believe it would.

By the Court:

Q. Is there a difference in Germany law between what is void and voidable? A. Yes; and where you have a void transaction, you can ratify only in such a way.

Q. Can you ever ratify a void one? A. No; you can make a new transaction.

Q. When does it become void? A. It is void ab initio.

Q. Yes, I know. Is that because it has some effect in violation of some law of the realm, or because the parties have made a mistake, or what? A. Well, we are assuming

2173 here that because of the failure of an essential element—

Q. I would think that under American law that would make it voidable—I think. A. Under German law it makes it void ab initio.

Q. Absolutely? A. Absolutely.

Q. There is a difference between German law and American law in that regard, is there? I am giving my impression.

If I draw a contract right now which becomes defective because of some little detail, it does not put the stamp of absolute invalidity on it and make it completely void. It could be voided, of course, and then that would be what we call a voidable transaction. Then we may ratify that later. A. Yes, but where you have a void transaction—

Q. It is void when it is against public morals or against some law or against some exchange. Then it is absolutely void. You can't rewrite it; you have to make a new contract? A. Yes.

Q. Sometimes we say "void" when we mean "voidable." I was wondering in this case here in regard to foreign exchange. But just assume on this October 5, 1931, agreement this failure to put in those words which could readily have been put in occurred. Would that make it absolutely void, so that it could not be ratified; or would it make it void ab initio? A. Yes, it would.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. And the donor would not have an opportunity to consider it as a voidable contract? A. He would have to make a new gift.

Q. He would have to make a new gift under that set of circumstances? A. Yes.

Mr. Boland: That is all.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Mr. Boland asked you, in regard to what he was just questioning you about, to disregard foreign exchange regulations. I now ask you to assume that the father and son in 1931 intended to make a gift from the father to the son, with the usufruct back to the father, and that because of a lawyer's mistake the instrument is defective, the father insisting on the usufruct, and therefore under section 139 of the Code the gift was void, as you have just told his Honor.

Now, will you state whether it would have been possible in 1935 for the father validly to have ratified the gift without a license from the Reich Foreign Exchange Con-2175 trol, assuming it is a gift which has by now become a gift of foreign securities—to be exact, Swiss securities? A. A gift of foreign securities or any assignment of foreign securities required a license under German foreign exchange control.

By the Court:

Q. It would not make any difference whether it was a ratification or a new contract? A. No.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Supposing, however, that the father and son do not know this in 1935, or are misadvised by counsel, and they go through with a purported ratification; and again, more specifically, the son tells the father that he is trying to set up a usufruct, and the father says, "I reject the usufruct. I do not want anything to do with it."

Now, would the purported ratification in 1935, which was without a license, be valid or void? A. It would be void under German law.

Q. Coming to another topic: I ask you to assume that in 1931 I am a very rich German. I have an estate of perhaps thirty-five or forty million marks, including property which I can sell to General Motors for fifteen million marks. Supposing that in all good faith I give my son the property, which he can sell to General Motors for fifteen 2176 million marks. Supposing that thereafter an economic catastrophe happens to me, and I become pen-niless. Do I have any legal right under German law against my son, either that he should support me or that I can recover back the gift? A. Under German law the children are under a legal obligation to support their parents.

Q. Is that support at subsistence level or at a level equal to what is referred to in German law as the social status of the parents? A. This support—of course, within the limits of the ability of the children—has to be at the accustomed standard of living of the parents—that is, in accordance with their economic and social status.

Q. So under my hypothesis, if I have given my son 15 million marks, and if I live reasonably simply, I can require him to support me in the way I have been living; is that right? A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Is there also any provision with respect to a donee? In other words, suppose, instead of giving it to my son, I give you 15 million marks, and I become penniless. Do I have any rights against you? A. There is a provision in German law concerning gifts that a donor who becomes destitute may revoke a gift he has made.

2177 Q. So, going back to Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, on the assumption I shall give you, that all that Wilhelm and Marta von Opel intended was to reserve a claim for income against the possibility that they might become penniless, they would not have had to put any provisions whatever in the instrument in order to secure that legal right? A. Yes, they were secured by these two rules of the German law.

Q. In other words, on the assumption which has been stated in this courtroom, that all Wilhelm and Marta von Opel wanted was protection, all of the words relating to usufruct are totally useless; is that correct? A. Well, unless they wanted some additional protection; I don't know. But they certainly have the protection of those—

Q. Well, I am asking you now to assume, Miss Schoch, the contrary; that if they became penniless, they could then look to Fritz von Opel for support in their old age? A. That is right.

Q. On that assumption, all those words that have been argued about for so long are totally meaningless or totally useless? A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: That is all.

2178 Recross Examination

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Assuming, on the other hand, Miss Schoch, that the parent Opel was not aware of the legal right of the son to provide for him in the event of destitution, and assuming that it was his very purpose to take care of himself in his old age, or if he found himself without any more money, then, on that assumption, might the German court conclude that there was no purpose of the usufruct and, therefore, no problem involved, and that Fritz von Opel got an absolute, clear title, with no charge on the usufruct? A. Well, you are assuming that he or his son did not talk to a lawyer; and if you go to a lawyer in Germany and tell him, "I want some protection for my old age; I don't want to be penniless," any lawyer would have told you, "Well, your son"—

Q. Well, assume—

Mr. Burling: May the witness finish?

The Court: Let her finish.

By the Court:

Q. Had you finished? A. No, I had not finished the sentence. I said any lawyer would have pointed out that (a) he could revoke the gift; and (b) his son would be under a legal obligation to support him.

2179 Mr. Burling: I would like to hear the witness.

Mr. Boland: I know you would. There are many instances when we would like to hear our own.

By the Court:

Q. I do not know whether you are an expert on the conflict of laws proposition or not, but would this make any difference—this obligation to support a family—in the German law would it make any difference as to where the son would be or where the donee would be as to whether or not that could be enforced? A. Well, I think that that might make a difference.

Q. In other words, usufruct might be of some assistance if he is in a foreign nation, whereas it would be entirely unnecessary if he was in Germany? A. It would be entirely unnecessary if he was in Germany.

Q. And it might be necessary if he was in a foreign country? A. I think any country; at least on the European continent, provides for the duty of children to support their parents, so I do not see much difference what law you apply.

Mr. Boland: That was my next question, Your Honor, about property being in a foreign country. I will just let her answer go. That is all.

2180 The Court: Have you a witness whose testimony will be short, Mr. Burling?

Mr. Burling: If your Honor please, we do not intend to call any further witness, unless the Swiss witness who is here testifies about the books, in which case we may call a European accountant.

The Court: Is the Swiss witness here?

Mr. Gallagher: He is, Your Honor; he is right here in the courtroom.

The Court: Will he be a witness who will take a long time?

Mr. Gallagher: I imagine he probably will take long.

The Court: You could not get through with him in 5 minutes?

Mr. Gallagher: No, indeed.

The Court: Then, I will recess until 2 o'clock.

(At 12:25 p.m. a recess was taken until 2 p.m. of the same day.)

(The proceedings were resumed at 2 p.m., at the expiration of the recess.)

Mr. Burling: May I briefly address the Court? I may have made a mistake. Just before the luncheon recess I said we had no more witnesses. I meant we had no live witnesses. We do have one deposition we wish to read: However, I would suppose, subject to my friend's convenience, that we would finish this afternoon. I have every expectation of it.

Mr. Gallagher: I believe we can do that with Mr. Burling. We will only be too glad to cooperate. I have a request to make of the Court. We have two brief rebuttal witnesses who have arrived from New York and whom I did not expect to call until tomorrow morning, but they requested that I address the Court and ask that they be permitted to go on now, because they have to leave at 5 o'clock. One is on the Board of Education in New York and the other is an auditor.

The Court: That is all right.

Mr. Burling: May I inquire the names of the witnesses?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes; Mr. Clauson and Mr. Bayer.

Thereupon—

2182 ANDREW G. CLAUSON, JR., was called as a witness and, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Will you state your full name, please? A. Andrew G. Clauson, Jr.

Q. Where do you reside? A. I reside in Staten Island, New York.

Q. Where were you born, Mr. Clauson? A. Staten Island, New York.

Q. Will you state where you were educated? A. I was educated in the elementary and secondary schools in New York. I am a graduate of Packard Commercial School, and I attended New York University and have a professional degree of Certified Public Accountant from the University of the State of New York.

Q. Did you serve in the First World War? A. I did.

Q. Were you an officer? A. Well, I enlisted as a second class seaman. I was relieved of active duty in 1919 as an ensign in the pay corps.

Q. During the present war did you hold any position? A. I was a member of a local draft board in Staten 2183 Island.

Q. Do you have any children? A. I have two.

Q. Did they serve in the service of the armed forces during the war? A. They did; both in the Navy.

Q. Both boys? A. No; boy and a girl.

Mr. Burling: To speed things up, I will admit this gentleman's moral qualifications.

Mr. Gallagher: Thank you, Mr. Burling. I just wanted to bring a little of his background out.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Now, have you held any public offices during your lifetime, Mr. Clauson? A. Yes.

Q. Do you presently hold a public office? A. I do.

Q. Will you state what that is? A. I am president of the Board of Education of New York City.

Q. Would you state when you were first appointed to the board? A. I was appointed January 1, 1945, by Mayor LaGuardia. I was reappointed April 1, 1947, by 2184 Mayor William O'Dwyer.

Q. When were you first elected president of the board? A. In May, 1946, re-elected in May of 1947, and elected for my third term in May of '48.

Q. Now, directing your attention to your accounting experience, when did you commence the work of accounting? In what year? A. Well, I went with Haskins and Sells I think in the winter of 1919, right after leaving the armed services.

Q. And how long did you stay with Haskins and Sells? A. I stayed with them until May of 1924.

Q. Then with whom were you associated? A. Then I became comptroller of a banking corporation in New York City and stayed there until the end of 1927. The year 1928 I was comptroller of the United Wallpaper Factories. On January 1, 1929, Mr. Bayer and I formed the firm of Bayer and Clauson, and we are still partners in it.

Q. Do you know Mr. Fritz von Opel? A. I do.

Q. When did you first meet Mr. Fritz von Opel? A. I believe it was in the fall, possibly October or November, of 1931.

2185 Q. During the succeeding years has your firm represented Mr. von Opel or the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation or any interests which that corporation has? A. Our firm has been accountants and auditors for the American owned and controlled company of Mr. von Opel since that time and up until 1942, I believe it was.

Q. I might ask, do you have any honorary degrees, Mr. Clauson? A. I have an honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Q. Now, in connection with your representation of these companies in which Uebersee or Mr. von Opel has an interest, can you state whether or not there was any breakdown between you and Mr. Bayer or your men with respect to which companies you worked on? A. Yes. Mr. Bayer and I had general control of our practice—always have—we still have—but for the division of work, I looked after the Spur Distributing Company at Nashville and the Harvard Brewing Company in Lowell, Massachusetts, and Mr. Bayer usually looked after the companies down in Shreveport, Louisiana, plus the fact that Mr. Bayer usually looked after the tax work.

Q. Have you served as a member of the board of directors for Spur Distributing? A. I did for a few years.

Q. Were you on the budget committee for the 2186 Harvard Brewery? A. I was.

Q. Do you know a Mr. Theodore Hoffacker, or did you know him? A. I do—I did know him.

Q. Do you know a Dr. Hans Frankenberg? A. Yes, I do.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Clauson, did Mr. Hoffacker ever tell you that he represented Wilhelm von Opel? A. He never did.

Q. Did Dr. Frankenberg ever tell you that Wilhelm von Opel owned Uebersee and these other companies indirectly? A. No.

Q. Did Dr. Frankenberg ever tell you that he was Wilhelm von Opel's agent? A. No.

Q. Did Fritz von Opel ever tell you that these properties on which you were working were the properties of his father? A. No.

Q. Will you state to the Court who you have always believed was the owner of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation and the shares of Spur, Harvard, and the other corporations on which you did auditing work? A.

2187 I have always believed that they belonged to Mr. Fritz von Opel and/or Uebersee Finanz-Korporation.

Q. If any of those people whom I have mentioned or if anybody else had mentioned to you the fact that Wilhelm von Opel owned these properties or that Dr. Hans Frankenberg was Wilhelm von Opel's agent, do you believe you would have remembered that? A. Definitely.

Q. And so it is your impression, if I understand it, that Fritz von Opel and/or Uebersee always owned the properties in question? A. That is correct.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all.

Cross Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You are an accountant, are you not, sir? A. I am.

Q. Yet you never laid eyes on any book of account of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation; is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. Will you state when and exactly what was said to you and by whom as to the ownership of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation? A. Well, that is a little hard to answer just that way, isn't it?

2188 Q. Yes, it is. A. My first connection, I suppose, was in the fall of '31, when Theodore Hoffacker, for whom we had done some work, introduced me to Mr. von Opel.

Q. And what was said to you by Mr. Hoffacker or von Opel in 1931 as to who owned the shares of Uebersee Finanz? A. At that time—I don't believe anything was said about Uebersee. At that time it was a question—

Q. Let us come to the year 1932, then. A. Well—

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment, Mr. Burling. I think the witness should be permitted to answer. Now, you were granted that concession.

Do you have anything further to state in response to that question?

The Court: Do you have anything to say in answer to that other question?

The Witness: No.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. We come to the year 1932. State just exactly what was said to you, in so far as you remember, by whom, and where it took place, about who owned the shares of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation in the year 1932. A. The information came to me from Mr. Hoffacker that 2189 Mr. Fritz von Opel had acquired controlling interest in the Spur Distributing Company and that he, Hoffacker, would like us to go to Nashville and make an audit of the books of the Spur Distributing Company.

Q. Hoffacker told you Fritz von Opel owned the shares; is that right? A. Said that Fritz von Opel had acquired the controlling stock of the Spur Distributing Company.

Q. As an accountant, sir, you will admit that I might acquire the controlling stock of the Statler Hotel Company for a client? A. That is right.

Q. And yet not own it myself, will you not? A. That is true.

Q. Was anything told you about who owned the beneficial interest, the real interest, in Uebersee? A. Fritz von Opel.

Q. Who said that? A. Mr. Hoffacker.

Q. When? A. Well, it might have been any time from October thirty-one on.

Q. Will you fix the year, please? A. Pardon me?

Q. Will you fix the year? A. It is hard for me 2190 to fix the year, because I first met Mr. von Opel, or, at least, we were called into the situation, in the fall of 1931, at which time Hoffacker undoubtedly said that Mr. Fritz von Opel had acquired interest in various companies, including Spur Distributing Company.

Q. And you understood, of course, that he had the beneficial interest in it himself? A. Naturally, that is correct.

Q. And he said that again in 1933 and 1934 and up to June 5, 1935, didn't he? A. He said it right along; I don't know why June 5, 1935.

Q. I will come to that. A. All right.

Q. Now, are you aware that Fritz von Opel made an affidavit and swore on his oath that he had nothing but the bare legal title to the shares of Uebersee— A. No, I do not.

Q. May I finish my question? A. Yes, indeed. Sorry.

Q. Are you aware that Fritz von Opel—By the way, he is the man sitting at this table? A With the paper in front of him, that is correct.

2191 Q. Are you aware that he swore on his oath that he did not have the beneficial interest, but that the beneficial interest was in Wilhelm von Opel and that he swore that oath on June 7, 1935? A. I don't know that.

Q. Are you aware that that affidavit was filed in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York? A. I am not aware of it.

Q. Are you aware that the record containing that affidavit went to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit and that the case was argued by John W. Davis? A. I am not aware of it.

Q. You have no knowledge of that? A. Not of that affidavit, no, sir.

Q. You are aware that a lawsuit was brought, are you not, by Uebersee to obtain permission to export $1,250,000 in gold? A. That is true. I knew that there was a suit pertaining to gold, but as to the details, I know nothing about it.

Q. I am not speaking of details, sir. Didn't you know that the contention was that the gold—

Mr. Gallagher: Just a minute. I submit that is 2192 a detail.

Mr. Burling: I submit that the main basis of the suit is not a detail.

The Court: If he knows about it, it is proper cross examination.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Did you not know that the interest of Uebersee—that is, here and there—Uebersee—that the basis of the gold was beneficially not owned by Fritz von Opel but was owned by Wilhelm von Opel, his father? A. I did not know it.

Q. Although you were the accountant for the firm, you had no knowledge— A. We weren't the—

Q. Let me finish. A. I am sorry.

Q. Although you were the accountant for the firm or for the company, you did not know what the basis of their gold case claim was; is that correct?

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moinent, Your Honor.

The Witness: Accountants to what company?

Mr. Gallagher: He did not act for Uebersee.

Mr. Burling: I agree.

The Witness: We were not the accountants, Your Honor, of Uebersee.

2193 By Mr. Burling:

Q. I apologize. You were the accountant for, so far as you know, all of the American investments of Uebersee, were not? A. Well, as far as I know, yes.

Q. Were you also the personal accountant in America for Fritz von Opel? A. Only to the extent that we helped prepare tax returns for him in America.

Q. And do you or do you not—

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment, Mr. Burling. Mr. Boland has brought to my attention something that I think should be clarified. I believe, on the statements that you are now making to the witness, that the witness should be advised that during the years preceding June 7, 1935, Mr. von Opel always claimed to be the owner, and that it was at that time that he claimed that a usufruct was set up.

Mr. Burling: That is purely a matter of argument as to what is in the record, if Your Honor please.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you state now whether in June, 1935, you had any familiarity with the fact that Fritz von Opel or Wilhelm von Opel, through Uebersee, was endeavoring to export from the United States one million and a 2194 quarter dollars in gold? A. How much more clearly can I state it than to say that I knew that there was a suit pending re gold? We had nothing to do with it. We are not lawyers. Therefore, we really had nothing to do with it. I don't know what affidavits were filed and what was not filed.

Q. And the basis of that suit was never discussed with you? A. No, it was not.

Q. And you have no idea, have you, at all whether in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York the position was taken that the beneficial owner of the gold was Wilhelm and that Fritz had bare legal title? A. I haven't the slightest idea of that.

Q. And you have no idea of what John W. Davis told the Second Circuit? A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. And that did not interest you at the time? A. No.

Mr. Burling: That is all.

By the Court:

Q. Did you have occasion at any time to bring up the question of ownership of the shares of stock or was that just information that came to you casually? A. 2195 No; it was usually information that came to us casually.

Q. There was no particular event when you asked him questions about it or no point was made as to who was the owner? I mean for accounting purposes. A. No. I just, from the very beginning—it was our feeling that Fritz von Opel and/or Uebersee owned the stock, and I don't suppose beyond that we thought too much about it, frankly.

The Court: Thank you.

The Witness: Thank you.

Mr. Gallagher: Thank you, Mr. Clauson.

Thereupon—

WALTER VAN DYKE BAYER was called as a witness and, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Will you state your full name, please? A. My name is Walter Van Dyke Bayer.

Q. And where do you reside, Mr. Bayer? A. I reside at Garden City, New York.

Q. Will you state where you were born? A. I was born in Brooklyn, New York.

2196 Q. And where were you educated? A. I went to a public school in Brooklyn, P.S. 44, Erasmus Hall High School in Brooklyn. I then went to Amherst College in Amherst, Massachusetts.

Q. What degree did you get? A. Graduated in 1919 with a degree of B.A. After college, while working, I went to school at nights at New York University, in a graduate school of business administration, and received a degree in 1924 of M.B.A.

Q. Are you now a Certified Public Accountant? A. I am a Certified Public Accountant since 1926.

Q. Have you ever served on any committees of the New York State Accounting Association? A. In the past —I am a member of the New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants, American Institute of Accountants; and in the past I have served on some technical committees of the New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants, the Federal Taxation Committee, and their Committee on Contingent Liabilities and Commitments.

Q. Now, when did you commence accounting? A. Well, after I graduated from college I was employed by four or five private companies as bookkeeper and accountant. In August of 1922 I went with Haskins and Sells on their staff as a public accountant.

2197 Q. And how long did you remain with Haskins and Sells? A. I was with Haskins and Sells until the end of December, 1927.

Q. And thereafter what? A. Then I went with the J. Henry Schroder Banking Corporation as auditor, and I was with them from the latter part of December, 1927, to the end of 1928.

Q. And when did you become associated with Mr. Clauson? A. Well, I had known Mr. Clauson from about 1922, when I joined Haskins and Sells. He was also with Haskins and Sells, and I met him at that time and knew him from then on, and he was probably instrumental in my taking the position with the J. Henry Schroder Banking Corporation.

Q. Had you formed an association with him in 1929? A. January 1st, 1929, we started a co-partnership as Certified Public Accountants.

Q. You have been together since that time? A. Our firm has continued in existence since that date.

Q. Do you know Mr. Fritz von Opel? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Do you recollect when you first met Mr. Fritz 2198 von Opel? A. It was the latter part of October, 1931.

Q. And to make this a little briefer, you heard Mr. Clauson's testimony? A. Well, I wasn't listening carefully to all of it.

Q. Will you state, then, the nature of the work you did for Mr. Fritz von Opel or the Uebersee Korporation? A. Well, in October of 1931 we were introduced to Mr. von Opel by Mr. Hoffacker, and arrangements were made and contracts were executed whereby, in connection with the sale of shares of General Motors stock, we were to act to countersign instructions in connection with the sale or purchase and delivery of those shares through the City Bank-Farmers Trust Company.

Q. And down through the years did you do auditing work for various companies in which he and/or Uebersee owned shares? A. I might just mention, in that connection, that we were instructed by Mr. von Opel that we were to prepare his 1931 tax returns—our firm.

Q. And you did that also? A. And we subsequently prepared his 1931 tax return, which was filed in June of 1942—

Q. 1932? A. 1932; pardon me.

2199 Q. Thereafter did your firm audit the books, et cetera, of the various companies in which Uebersee and/or Mr. von Opel owned shares? A. As I recollect, Mr. von Opel, out of the proceeds of this General Motors stock—the contract with Hoffacker on the sale of it was cancelled early in 1932. Mr. von Opel made certain purchases of securities. In June of 1942—

Q. 1932— A. Of 1932—it is a long ways back—those securities owned by Mr. von Opel were transferred to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, and from then on Uebersee Finanz-Korporation was the owner.

Q. And thereafter did you then audit the books and records of Spur, Harvard— A. And during this period from '32 on Uebersee Finanz-Korporation acquired an investment in Spur Distributing Company, Harvard Brewing Company, and some companies down in Shreveport known as Oil Production, Inc., and Oil Refineries, Inc., and we were the auditors—our firm were the auditors of those companies.

Q. Now, before I ask you specifically about the companies with respect to which you audited the books, I will ask you this question: In the course of the many years that you worked for Uebersee and in the course of 2200 those years during which you have known Mr. von Opel, have you ever heard him state that these Uebersee shares or the shares in the various corporations on which you were working were owned by his father, Wilhelm von Opel? A. No, never.

Q. Do you know Dr. Hans Frankenberg? A. I have met him. I know him nowhere near as well as I do Mr. von Opel.

Q. Have you ever heard him make a statement that Wilhelm von Opel owned the Uebersee shares or the shares of Harvard or any of these other corporations? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Theodore Hoffacker? A. I knew him in days of old.

Q. Did you ever hear him state that Wilhelm von Opel owned these shares of Uebersee or the shares in these various corporations which we are referring to? A. No, I never did.

Q. Did you ever hear him say that he was the agent of Wilhelm von Opel? A. No, I never did.

Q. Do you know a man by the name of Mr. B. F. Crittenden? A. I think it is B. P. Crittenden.

Q. B. P. Crittenden. I am sorry. Mr. Bayer, Mr. Crittenden has been a witness in this case for the defense, and on several occasions—specifically, to start off with, page 1921 of the record and page 1923 of the record—Mr. Crittenden, in talking about your reference to von Opel and Frankenberg, used this type language. In speaking about Bayer, he says, on page 1921:

"He"—meaning, you—"always referred to them as the Germans."

Now, I will ask you if you ever referred to these people as the Germans? A. I am quite positive that I never used any such term. It is quite contrary to my manner of talking and my mode of speaking.

Q. Now, Mr. Bayer, I want to read from page 1922 of the record, and I might give you a little background without reading it all. Mr. Crittenden had stated that in 1937 they wanted to form a consolidation of interests, and he named a number of companies that were to be consolidated. This is 1937. A. Who wanted to form a consolidation?

Q. Crittenden said that he and Uebersee wanted to form a consolidation, and in naming the companies in 1937 that were to be consolidated, he named the Trio Refining Corporation, the Centera Pipelines, the De Soto Crude Oil, the Rhodesia Oil Refining Corporation, and they were all to be combined with Oil Refineries and Oil Production into a company known as Hurricane. A. Yes.

Q. Now, I will ask you, When was Hurricane formed? A. Hurricane Petroleum Corporation; I believe, was formed around the middle of 1935.

Q. So, it already was in existence two years before 1937? A. That is my recollection. Hurricane Petroleum Corporation became the result of a merger between Oil Production, Inc., and Oil Refineries, Inc., which had previously existed as separate companies.

Q. And did they absorb, prior to 1937, the Trio Refining Corporation and several others? A. I believe that Trio Refining Corporate De Soto Crude Oil Purchasing Corporation, which had been acquired by Grogan and Crittenden, were purchased by Hurricane Petroleum Corporation during 1935, and that subsequent to that, within maybe eight or nine months, possibly, or less, Trio Refining Corporation was dissolved and became part of Hurricane Petroleum Corporation, and De Soto, which was 100 per cent owned by Hurricane, remained as a subsidiary company, and that took place in 1935.

2203 Q. 1935? A. Or earlier.

Q. So when you are talking in 1937 about any merger, you were merely talking about Rhodesia and Petroleum joining in— A. We would be talking about Hurricane Petroleum Company and Rhodesia.

Q. All right. I want to read from the bottom of page 1922 and page 1923, leading up to one sentence on which I will then ask you a question. The question to Mr. Crittenden was:

"Now, you said that you agreed with Mr. Bayer to evaluate your interest and he would evaluate the other interest? Was anything done in that connection?

"Answer: Yes, it was done.

"Question: And what happened?

Now, you can exclude the representation about the words "the Germans" in your answer, because you have already answered that you never used that expression.

Here was the answer Mr. Crittenden gave, and I now want you to state whether that is correct. He stated:

"Bayer notified us—notified me, or he notified Grogan and me, that the Germans would like to have us come to Switzerland, complete the transaction, and we went."

2204 I ask you, Is that statement correct? A. I don't think it is fully correct, no.

Q. Will you state your understanding? A. My recollection is that Rhodesia, which had been formed by Grogan and Crittenden, was in existence from 1935 on, and we were requested by Grogan and Crittenden to make an audit of Rhodesia as of May 31, 1937, and apparently there was some thought on their part that it would be desirable to have Rhodesia become connected in the Hurricane picture; and I think that there may have been some discussions with me on that subject, in connection with the audit; and the latter part of June, 1937, just recently referring to my diary, Grogan, Crittenden, and McGowan, who was the lawyer for the Shreveport properties, came to New York and we had some discussions about Rhodesia; and it is possible that at their request I sent a cable, or there was sent a cable, abroad to von Opel whether he would be interested in such a consolidation.

Q. So on the question of which was first, the cart or the horse, it was Mr. Crittenden in this instance and Mr. Grogan who were anxious to put forth to Mr. von Opel this question of consolidation, rather than, as Mr. Crittenden said, "Bayer notified us that the Germans would 2205 like us to come to Switzerland and complete the transaction"; is that correct? A. That would be my recollection. In other words, I think it is quite possible that, as a result of their request, that I did pass on some information to them as an intermediary.

Q. But the initial start of it came from this side? A. There may have been discussions prior between Mr. Crittenden and Mr. von Opel, because there was a complication on the Rhodesia Company. In other words, I think that there was an exception taken to the fact that they, while acting as managers of the Shreveport properties, had gone into sort of a competitive business.

Mr. Hoffacker had acquired 300 shares of Rhodesia stock, and there was a lot of exception taken to that situation.

So that there was a clarification of interests and issues that was involved and may have continued for a period prior to this audit that we eventually made in May, 1937, and the eventual discussions, but I think it was, as far as I recollect—Grogan and Crittenden were more interested in having the properties merged than Mr. von Opel was.

Q. Now, as a result I know you went to Europe. 2206 I am going to ask you at this moment, Who paid the expenses of your trip? Did Uebersee or Mr. Fritz von Opel pay those expenses? A. I kept a fairly careful record of my expenses. My wife was accompanying me on the trip. Since Mrs. Crittenden was going along and her expenses were paid for by myself and my wife, and certain expenses that were considered personal travel expenses were paid by us—

Mr. Burling: May I ask for an elucidation of whom "her expenses" refers to?

Mr. Gallagher: Mrs. Bayer.

The Witness: My wife's.

Mr. Burling: Your wife's. Thank you, sir.

The Witness: My wife, who accompanied me on that trip. The remainder of the expenses, plus a charge for my time while abroad, after discussion with Mr. Crittenden, were charged one-half to Hurricane Petroleum Corporation and one-half to Rhodesia Oil and Refining Company, and were paid for by those companies.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Now, Mr. Crittenden stated, at page 1923 of the record, in response to the question, How long did he stay in Zurich?

"I guess the better part of three weeks."

2207 Now, do you have any records or notes which would reflect how long you were in Zurich? A. Yes. I have made a little check back on that from the expense records that I kept. We arrived in Cherbourg on the morning of Thursday, July 29. Friday morning, July 30, we took a train from Paris to Zurich and arrived in Zurich late that afternoon or early evening.

We stayed there at Zurich that Friday night—

Q. I might ask you, during this traveling that you were relating were you with Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden? A. There was a party of five that were enroute together during the time we arrived in Cherbourg until the time that we eventually arrived in London.

Q. Was Mr. Crittenden a part of that party? A. Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden, Mr. and Mrs. Bayer, and a Mrs. Lyons.

Q. All right. Go ahead. You are arriving in Zurich. A. We arrived, as I said, in Zurich late in the afternoon or early evening of July 30, on Friday.

We stayed in Zurich on Saturday, July 31, to Friday morning early, August 6th. So that there were a Saturday, a Sunday, and four week days, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday.

2208 Friday morning, August 6, the five of us, with a chauffeur, started on an automobile trip through Switzerland and the northern part of Italy, and we stopped off at St. Moritz. This trip—the itinerary of that particular trip, I believe, was suggested by Mr. von Opel as an interesting trip to take.

We stopped at St. Moritz, Locarno—

Q. You do not need all that; just generally.

Mr. Burling: Is he coming back to Zurich?

The Court: I did not think he needed all the details.

The Witness: We arrived back in Zurich late Tuesday afternoon or early evening of Tuesday, August 10. In other words, we were away approximately five days. We then stayed in Zurich the following day, Wednesday, August 11, and part of Thursday, August 12, and after lunch we took a train from Zurich with the ultimate destination to be The Hague in Holland.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. But you were in Zurich altogether, then a total of about six and a half days; is that correct? A. Well, it would be seven and a half days, including Saturday and Sunday.

Q. Now, while you were in Zurich did you participate in conferences with Fritz von Opel, Mr. Crittenden, 2209 and Dr. Frankenberg? A. I participated in discussions and conferences and negotiations in connection with this proposed merging of interests.

Q. Where did these conferences take place, if you recollect? A. Well, the conferences, as I recollect, all took place in a conference room of the Adler Bank.

Q. I might ask you at this time this. Mr. Crittenden stated, on page 1924 of the record:

"Dr. Frankenberg did most of the questioning."

Now, was this discussion run in a manner in which Frankenberg was, as Crittenden said, doing most of the questioning, or would you describe the atmosphere? A. Well, I would say it was not a questioning type of discussion. It was a question of arriving at a possible meeting of the minds. There were undoubtedly questions asked back and forth, and possibly Dr. Frankenberg may have asked more questions of Mr. von Opel, since he was not as familiar with the Shreveport properties.

Q. By the way, did he speak very good English at that time? A. Yes. He was definitely understandable, without any difficulty.

2210 Q. Now, Mr. Crittenden stated again, reading from the record at page 1928:

"Question:"—And this was to Mr. Crittenden by Mr. Burling—"And did you have any other conversation with Frankenberg at this time?

"Answer: Yes, I did. I asked him very frankly what his relation was to Fritz von Opel and the business; and his reply was very simple and direct.

"He said that he represented Fritz von Opel's father on many occasions in many places for many years and was assisting his father."

Now, I will ask you, Did you hear Dr. Frankenberg make any such statement? A. No, I did not.

Q. Now, after you left Zurich—

Mr. Burling: Just a moment. I object to the question that has just been asked on the ground that the record makes no showing that Crittenden said he said this in the presence of this witness. The testimony is that he had a discussion with Frankenberg about Frankenberg's Degas paintings, and then he said this. There is no showing that this witness was present.

Mr. Gallagher: I asked this witness if he was at the conferences.

2211 The Court: I will let him answer. Whether it throws any light on it, you can argue. I do not remember him saying that Mr. Bayer was present.

Mr. Gallagher: He stated it earlier:

"Usually there was present Fritz von Opel, Walter Bayer, Hans Frankenberg, and myself."

The Court: On the occasion of this discussion?

Mr. Gallagher: I will ask Mr. Bayer that to clarify that.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Were you present at all the conferences that were held during these few times in Zurich in the bank, and to the best of your recollection? A. To the best of my recollection, I was present at all conferences that related—

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I do not know how this witness could testify that Frankenberg could not and did not have a conversation when he was not there.

Mr. Gallagher: He could have gone down to the men's room and they could have had it. I admit that. But I want to point out that he was at all the conferences and did not hear it.

By the Court:

Q. Were you present at any time when a question was asked by Mr. Crittenden of Mr. Frankenberg as to 2212 who the owner of the property was? I mean what the relation of Mr. Frankenberg was to the enterprise. A. I have no recollection of it, no.

Q. Do you have any definite recollection of any discussion while you were over there with regard to the ownership and control of these corporations? A. I don't recollect that that was ever brought into the discussion, that there was any feature of that that was involved in any discussion.

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Now, after you left Zurich—to help expedite this, I will lead him just a little bit—you went to Mainz, Germany, and took a boat down the river? A. After we left Zurich on the train, we stopped the first night at Mainz, Germany.

Q. Did Mr. Crittenden suggest or did Mr. von Opel suggest to you gentlemen or Dr. Frankenberg that you see Wilhelm von Opel while you were in Germany? A. No.

Q. Would you believe it true if I were to tell you that Wiesbaden, where Wilhelm von Opel resides, was about 15 minutes from the town of Mainz, which you referred to as the place you stopped at the first night? A.

2213 Well, I would have no reason to believe or disbelieve.

Q. But there was no discussion of going and seeing Wilhelm von Opel?

Mr. Burling: That is, you mean 15 minutes by air?

The Court: Well, that is not testimony. He does not know anything about it.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Now, you were traveling in intimate contact with Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden all during your trip in Europe; is that correct? A. Yes, and until we arrived in London.

Q. On any occasion or at any time there during your close association in Europe or any time subsequently in the States did Crittenden ever tell you that Fritz von Opel was not the real owner of these companies; that it was Wilhelm von Opel; and that Frankenberg was Wilhelm's agent? A. Did Mr. Crittenden ever say that to me?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. Never in all this travel around Europe? He never mentioned it once to you? A. No, sir.

Q. You have previously stated that no one ever made that statement to you; is that correct? A. That is 2214 correct.

Q. I might ask you this, Mr. Bayer. If you had been advised by anybody at any time that Wilhelm von Opel really owned these properties and that it was not Fritz, would you have remembered that statement? A. I am quite sure that I would, because in connection with the preparation of the tax returns for Uebersee and von Opel—I don't think we would have prepared the returns if we felt that there was a question of ownership.

Q. All right. Thank you.

By the Court:

Q. The ownership would not have any relation to the corporation's return, would it? A. No, I don't—well, it would have, possibly, in some of these years that personal holding company taxes were involved, these years 1936 through 1941, where the income was taxed to Mr. von Opel on a consent dividend basis.

Q. His personal returns would have some relation. Did you handle his returns through that period? A. We handled his returns through all of the period from 1931 on. It is possible that in some of these years there was not any taxable income, and I would not be sure whether—

The Court: All right. I do not want to get off 2215 on that.

The Witness: But I think returns were filed for all of the years for Mr. von Opel.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Did you ever see Wilhelm von Opel, by the way? A. No.

Q. Did you ever get any orders or directions or letters from him? A. We never had any correspondence with him at all.

Q. Never sent him any financial statements at all? A. No; never knew of him or had any correspondence with him.

Q. Now, turning to page 1957, Mr. Burling was talking to Mr. Crittenden about a Mr. Ulrich. Did you know a man by the name of Mr. Ulrich? A. Yes, I knew him, and I would see him once in a great while.

Q. Was he associated for a time with the Hurricane Oil Company? A. He was connected with the Shreveport companies, Hurricane, and so on.

Q. By the way, Hurricane finally went bankrupt, didn't it? A. Went bankrupt, I believe, in June of 1940.

Q. Mr. Crittenden, in testifying, stated, at page 2216 1957:

"Question: After Mr. Ulrich was put in charge of the Hurricane Corporation, did the company then get into difficulties?

"Answer: Immediately.

"Question: What year was that?

"Answer: 1938.

"Question: Can you give us the approximate month?

"Answer: Oh, let us say in the middle of the year, Mr. Ingoldsby.

"Question: About the middle of 1938. Do you feel that the reason that the company got into difficulty in the middle of 1938 was a lack of capital?

"Answer: I do.

"Question: You do feel that was it?

"Answer: That was one reason, and it was—the principal reason was Mr. Ulrich's behavior and utterances."

Now, as a result of your duties with the Hurricane Oil Company, can you state the reason why the Hurricane Oil Company did get into difficulty? A. My opinion was that they had greatly over-expanded for their working capital and that when economic conditions went 2217 against them that they were not able to weather the storm.

Q. When did this overexpansion become evident?

The Court: I think we are getting too remote. If I am going to have to decide that issue, I am going to have a problem.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Just one further question. There was some further testimony in this case, Mr. Bayer, about a meeting in Montreal in 1936, at which Dr. Frankenberg and Mr. von Opel, Houghland, and Crittenden all appeared. There was some testimony you were at that same meeting. Is that correct? A. I was up in Montreal for about three days plus a Sunday in June of 1936, that is correct.

Q. Now, there was some testimony from Mr. Crittenden to the effect that the impression that was given at that meeting was that Wilhelm von Opel owned this property and that Hoffacker and all were Wilhelm's agent. Was that your impression from that meeting? A. No, I never got that impression from any meeting.

Mr. Gallagher: All right. That is all.

Cross Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I have just a few questions. You see Fritz von 2218 Opel here, do you not (indicating)? A. Yes.

Q. And you know Hans Frankenberg also? A. That is correct.

Q. And I think you testified that you knew the two men equally well? A. No, I did not. I said I knew Mr. von Opel much better than Dr. Frankenberg.

Q. I did not mean to put words in your mouth; I misunderstood you.

You filed the tax returns both for Fritz von Opel personally and for Uebersee Finanz-Korporation up until and including the year 1942; is that right? A. Well, my firm did, and I probably supervised most of the—

Q. I do not mean you physically did the typing. You were in charge of the filing of the returns; is that correct? A. That is correct.

Q. Will you state when the personal holding company tax returns for the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation were filed for the years 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940, and 1941? A. When were they filed?

Q. Yes, please. A. Personal holding company taxes?

Q. Yes, please. A. They were filed in, I think, 2219 in June of 1942—June or July of 1942.

Q. And the failure or omission—I do not mean that there was anything wrong about it—, A. Yes.

Q. The non-filing of the personal holding company taxes for the years 1936 to 1941, inclusive, until 1942, was on the basis of a statement made to you either by Fritz von Opel or by Dr. Frankenberg that Uebersee had ceased to be a personal holding company; is that correct? A. That is correct. That statement, I believe, was made in Montreal in June of 1936.

Q. Now, can you recall in what words either Frankenberg or von Opel said to you that Uebersee was no longer a personal holding company? A. Well, as I recollect, I was informed that Mr. von Opel had sold his shares of stock to the extent, anyway, that he did not own 50 per cent of the stock and that his interest had been converted —in Uebersee—had been converted into a substantial indebtedness of some character by Uebersee to Fritz von Opel.

Q. Now, Mr. Bayer, I want to ask you this question. It is a little bit technical. I ask you to listen to me carefully.

2220 Were you told that Fritz von Opel had gone through the following transaction: that he, through a Liechtensteinean legal entity, had contracted with a Swiss bank whereby a Swiss bank would nominally place the shares of Uebersee with eleven of its clients under a contract that the shares were to be returned to Mr. von Opel through this Liechtensteinean entity at the same price that had first been paid, and that, in addition, there was also a contract that the nominal purchasers were to give proxies so that the shares could be voted as Mr. von Opel directed, and also that, irrespective of the true earnings of Uebersee, these nominal holders were to receive 6 per cent as a fee?

Mr. Gallagher: If Your Honor please—

Mr. Burling: I just want to know if he was told this.

Mr. Gallagher: It seems to me we are getting very far afield. This is a rebuttal witness. There has been nothing asked him on direct about these shares.

The Court: The only way that it would be admissible would be in connection with that conversation you asked him about in Montreal. Is that the same conversation he is talking about?

Mr. Gallagher: All I asked him about in Montreal was the impression given—

Mr. Burling: One of the assertions is—2221 Mr. Gallagher: This is not our case in chief, though, Mr. Burling.

The Court: Let me get it clear so I can rule on it. What did you ask him?

Mr. Gallagher: All I asked him about Montreal was the impression given. I said there had been some statements through Mr. Crittenden that the general impression was that Wilhelm von Opel really owned all this property and that Frankenberg was the agent.

I said, "Was that your impression?"

He said, "No; I never had any such impression."

That was all that was asked about the Montreal meeting.

Mr. Burling: This cuts two ways. If the answer is yes, that goes to impeach the credibility of the witness. He participated in the scheme to defraud the United States, which is admissible on his credibility. I do not think the answer would be yes. I do not believe this witness knew that.

If the answer is no, I just do not want to insult the witness, but either way the answer would be admissible, because the other way the auditor was deceived as to the true ownership, which would go to the part of the testimony which Mr. Gallagher brought out.

Mr. Gallagher: I merely brought out the testi-2222 mony as to the ownership of von Opel.

Mr. Burling: If this witness was lied to in Montreal as to the state of the ownership of Uebersee, it is highly material as to what impression he got.

The Court: That is the only ground that I think it may be admissible on. Let us find out if he heard that.

Mr. Burling: Do you recall my question or shall I restate it?

A. I might just simplify it by saying that I was not given any details as to what had happened.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You were just told that a sale to Swiss stockholders had taken place and that it was Frankenberg's opinion that the company was no longer a personal holding company; is that right?

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment, now. He has not stated anything about its being Frankenberg's opinion.

Mr. Burling: I will come to that. I am asking him, if Your Honor please—

Mr. Gallagher: Ask him whose opinion it was.

Mr. Burling: I just did, if Your Honor please. The question was, Weren't you just told by Frankenberg—

The Court: We have a very unusual situation here. We generally do not ask witnesses what impression they 2223 have. When you ask him about impressions, I guess that gives him a little latitude.

Mr. Gallagher: This is a rebuttal witness to correct an impression that Mr. Burling got from the witness.

The Court: Impression testimony is not really evidence. I have permitted testimony from both sides on that. I have not stopped you. Having testified to an impression, I will give him a little latitude on that. Let us ask him one or two questions on that.

Mr. Burling: Yes, sir.

The Witness: Well, I don't know that it was Frankenberg that was the one that told me. You started off—we had a lot of intermediate discussion there. I think that the information came from possibly both Mr. von Opel and Dr. Frankenberg.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Do you recognize the handwriting which appears at the bottom of page 3 of Defendant's Exhibit 83 (handing a document to the witness)? A. Yes.

Q. Whose is it? A. That is my signature.

Q. Now, will you examine the third paragraph of the first page of this document, and I call your attention to the following words:

2224 "Since we were informed by you"—this is a letter addressed to Frankenberg in June—"that Uebersee is no longer a personal holding company, we will eliminate that tax from our consideration."

A. That is correct.

Q. Does that refresh your recollection— A. That refreshes my memory that we did receive a letter from Dr. Frankenberg, but that was subsequent to Montreal.

Q. I don't care whether it was in Montreal or where it was. Were you informed by Dr. Frankenberg that Uebersee was no longer a personal holding company? A. We were informed by Dr. Frankenberg, but when we were informed that way we were not informed—that was merely a statement from him. There was nothing about stock ownership in that letter, or indebtedness.

Q. Do you now remember whether Frankenberg told you that Uebersee was not a holding company—a personal holding company? A. In writing, yes.

Q. Will you state whether that was the basis of your omission to file personal holding company taxes? A. That would be correct.

Q. Now, were you told by Frankenberg of the nature of the purported transfer to Swiss nationals that I 2225 have previously described? A. That I could not recall whether it would have been from Dr. Frankenberg or Fritz von Opel.

Q. Were you ever told of the situation which I have just described? A. All the details?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. You had no idea until this minute, did you, that the transfer was a transfer with warrants back to the owner, with an agreement to pay a fixed fee, with an agreement that the purported stockholders would vote the stock as they were directed, and that the shares were held—

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment, Your Honor. There has been no evidence put into the record about a purported transaction. The testimony has been quite to the contrary.

The Court: I will permit the testimony.

Did you hear that?

The Witness: Of course, when these tax returns were filed for these years involved, I then knew that there was an element of options involved, but that is about all. I did not know any of the details such as are being explained now—voting, and so forth.

By Mr. Burling:

2226 Q. You were the auditor, were you, of Oil Production and Oil Refineries, Inc., in the year 1937, or was it Hurricane? A. Hurricane Petroleum Corporation.

Q. Now, in your capacity as auditor, do you know who paid Crittenden's passage to Europe in the summer of 1937? A. Well, I would not recall for sure. I would imagine that it was paid partly by Hurricane and partly by Rhodesia, the same as my own, but I could not say definitely.

Q. Can you recall the hotel that the party of five that you described stayed at in Zurich? A. Yes; we stayed at the Baur-au-lac.

Q. B-a-u-e-r? A. B-a-u-r -a-u- l-a-c, Baur-au-lac.

Q. And Fritz von Opel was staying there too, wasn't he? A. I don't think he was. I think he was staying at the Dolder.

Q. Wasn't that Frankenberg that was staying at the Dolder? A. Frankenberg, as I recall, had a permanent room at the Dolder.

Q. At the Dolder? A. Yes, and I think Mr. von 2227 Opel also stayed there.

Q. And you and Crittenden on at least one occasion went to see Frankenberg at the Dolder, did you not? A. That I don't really recall.

Q. Now, will you state again what was said to you in October, 1931, either by Hoffacker or by Fritz von Opel relating to certain funds? A. Well, I think in October, 1931, the only discussion was about some transactions in General Motors stock that Hoffacker could buy and sell and trade in.

Q. When did you commence auditing the accounts of either Fritz von Opel or Uebersee—that is, for what period? A. We never audited any accounts of Uebersee.

Q. When did you keep books—whatever the technical term is? A. We did not keep books for Uebersee. We prepared tax returns based upon available information.

Q. When did you first engage in any accounting transaction for Fritz von Opel or any other person associated with him that you know of? A. Oh, I would say the latter part of October, 1931.

Q. And you knew at that time, did you not, that his funds were in a Custodian account at the City Bank-2228 Farmers Trust Company? A. I don't recollect that there was a custodian account there.

Q. Will you examine Plaintiff's Exhibit 70 and state whether you ever saw it before (handing a document to the witness)? A. These are the papers of the City Bank-Farmers Trust?

Q. This has been admitted by the plaintiffs in this action as a photostatic copy of a document obtained from the files of the City Bank-Farmers Trust Company. State whether you ever saw it before. A. I don't recall ever having seen it.

Q. But, in any event, as of October, 1931, you maintained accounting records, did you not, indicating that Fritz von Opel had certain dollar accounts and certain security accounts in a custodian account? A. We had some work sheets, as I recall.

Q. And they showed that Fritz von Opel had an extended account; isn't that true? A. Oh, I would think so.

Q. Now, whom were you told Fritz von Opel was custodian for? A. My recollection is that it was the City Bank custodian account for him.

2229 Q. Weren't you told that Fritz von Opel was custodian for anyone? A. Not that I recollect.

Q. Didn't you know that he was acting at that time as attorney in fact for any person?

Mr. Boland: I object to that question. Just a minute.

The Court: If he knows it. He testified—

Mr. Boland: May I have the question read again? Maybe I misinterpret it.

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

The Court: I will permit that.

Mr. Boland: Yes. I misunderstood the question.

The Witness: Not that I recall.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You were never told that shares of Adam Opel, A.G., had been sold to General Motors, and that the letter of sale was signed Wilhelm von Opel by Fritz von Opel, attorney, or attorney in fact? A. I don't have any recollection of it.

Q. About how many times would you say you went to the office of Adler and Company in Zurich in the summer of 1937? A. Well, my recollection would be that during the dates of Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and 2230 Thursday that we had conferences and discussions during the part of a morning and that after lunch, for part of or most of the afternoon, and whether we did it on Saturday when we first arrived, I really don't know.

Q. And then you went on this trip you described? A. That is right.

Q. And after your return to Zurich you had additional conferences, did you not? A. No. When we left on the trip, an agreement, a meeting of minds, had been reached, and that was dated as of the date of August 5, before we went way on that trip.

Q. There was a writing drawn up? Is that your testimony? A. There was an agreement that was drawn up and eventually signed, I believe.

Mr. Burling: May I ask if counsel asserts that we have received this or seen it?

Mr. Gallagher: I do not believe I have seen it. Have you got it?

The Witness: I have it here. It was in our files that you have seen.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. May I see it, please? A. Yes (handing a document to Mr. Burling).

2231 Mr. Burling: Your Honor will recall that both Frankenberg and Fritz von Opel testified that there was no business conversation in Zurich at all.

Mr. Gallagher: I do not believe the record reflects that at all, Your Honor.

The Court: Well, I will hear that later.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Do you recognize Mr. Myron Baum in this courtroom? A. Yes, I recognize him from what I have seen of him.

Q. You told him you were showing him all of your files relating to Uebersee? A. No; I don't think that that was so—

Q. I know it wasn't so. I am asking you if you did not tell him so.

Mr. Gallagher: Just a minute. Let the witness answer the question more fully, Mr. Burling.

Have you anything more to say?

The Witness: I was going to say that Mr. Baum looked through our file that was marked von Opel, but that he did not look through our file marked Uebersee. He did not ask for it.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You know that Mr. Baum has been working on the Uebersee case as a Government lawyer for years, do 2232 you not? Didn't he tell you that? A. He spoke about the fact that he had been in Europe the summer before.

Q. Didn't he tell you that he had spent years of his life working on the Uebersee case? A. I don't know that he used those exact words.

Q. But, in words or substance, did he not make it clear to you that he was at that time the Government lawyer in charge of the Uebersee case? A. Well, I really did not understand that he was necessarily the Government lawyer in charge of it.

Q. All right. Didn't he tell you he was a Government lawyer working on the Uebersee case? A. That is correct.

Q. And didn't he tell you that he had come to your office to ask you to show him the files relevant to the Uebersee case? A. No, he didn't tell me that.

Q. He did not tell you that? A. No, sir. He came in, as I understood—he was primarily interested in the 1931 tax case and the General Motors transaction folder. Uebersee tax folders through 1933-1936 were shown him.

Q. But you did not show him a document reflecting a business conference which you, Crittenden, and 2233 Fritz von Opel and Frankenberg had in Zurich in 1937? A. The question of Zurich in 1937 was not raised in the course of my conversation with Mr. Baum.

Q. And you did not think he was interested in that kind of document?

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment, Mr. Burling. There is no obligation on anybody to show anything.

Mr. Burling: There is an obligation not to mislead Government agents.

The Court: Gentlemen, I think you will probably have to object to the question.

Mr. Gallagher: I do object, Your Honor.

The Court: What is pending now?

Mr. Gallagher: I will have to get the question read back myself.

The Court: He is trying to develop that this witness is biased, and I suppose if he withheld anything, if he can

Mr. Gallagher: We are stating that it would not be im- show it, all right. If he cannot, all right.

proper. We are not stating he did do it. The witness stated Mr. Baum had not asked for anything else.

The Court: The question of the bias of the witness may be at stake, and if he knew the man wanted something and he deliberately withheld it, that might be a circumstance showing bias. On the other hand, if he thought he 2234 was inquiring about something else and he did not turn it over, of course, that would show he was not biased. I will give him a certain amount of latitude on it.

Mr. Gallagher: If the Court please, I would like the Court to ask Mr. Bayer to read from his memorandum. He showed me a longhand memorandum of everything Mr. Baum asked him for.

The Court: You can bring that out if there is any damage done.

2235 By Mr. Burling:

Q. Isn't it the fact, Mr. Bayer, that you were given by Baum, or that you were furnished prior to Mr. Baum's visit, a consent which Mr. Connor, who is Mr. Gallagher's partner, and Mr. von Opel signed, authorizing Mr. Baum, as a government attorney, to look for any and all relevant documents? A. The name of Mr. Baum was not mentioned in any instructions that we received authorizing the Department of Justice or any identifiable representative of the Department.

Q. Did Mr. Baum identify himself as a representative of the Department? A. Well, prior to Mr. Baum's visit, a representative had visited our office.

Q. But you also were satisfied by the production of credentials that Mr. Baum was a representative of the Attorney General of the United States, weren't you? A. That is right.

Q. You had in your file at that time, and were aware of, a document signed by Mr. Connor and Mr. von Opel, authorizing you to show the Attorney General's representative any document that was relevant; is that right? A. That is correct.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I actually personally dictated that letter. I want it clearly understood and shown on this record that—2236 Mr. Burling: I object to any statement of the fact—

Mr. Boland: I think it should be cleared up, Your Honor —very much so.

The Court: I am afraid I am going to have to rule in accordance with the procedure, now. We are beginning to get technical, now. You can ask him the question or take the stand yourself later on, if that is material. I do not think this is a matter of any terrific note.

Mr. Gallagher: This does not mean a thing.

The Court: It might not be. I do not think the procedure is difficult at all. Mr. Burling is trying to bring out that this gentleman probably withheld something because of his attachment to Mr. von Opel and that, therefore, he is a biased witness.

Mr. Burling: That is exactly right, Your Honor.

The Court: On the other hand, he is trying to maintain that he went through a very understandable procedure.

I will give you plenty of chance, if anything is brought out against him, for you to bring it up on redirect.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I have only one more question on this topic.

Is it not the fact, Mr. Bayer, that Mr. Baum asked you to show him the files relating to the Uebersee or von Opel matter? A. He didn't ask to see all files, no.

2237 Q. What did he say? "Just show me a few files or the files you happen to have"? Or what? A. He said that he was interested in the 1931 tax case in the General Motors transaction, as I understand it.

Q. You understood him to limit himself to that? A. Our working papers on this, which I got out for him and showed him.

He then asked whether he could see our copy of the contract in connection with the General Motors transactions. I got out the file of von Opel and showed him that. He looked at it.

Then, after some discussion, he asked would it be all right if he went through the rest of the file; and he went through the rest of the file marked "von Opel." The file marked "Uebersee" was not asked for. There was no discussion in 1937.

This particular document or paper was in the Uebersee file which Mr. Keefer, of the F. B. I., had already gone through seven or eight months before.

Q. Perhaps you did show it to Mr. Keefer, but you did not understand that Mr. Baum wanted to look at all the files you had on the subject? A. No, sir.

Mr. Burling: That is all I have on that topic. I think I would like a moment to read it.

2238 By Mr. Burling:

Q. When did you leave Zurich to make this trip through Switzerland and northern Italy? A. When did we leave Zurich?

Q. Yes, please. A. Friday morning—no; Thursday afternoon, August 12—Which trip is this, now?

Q. The trip through Switzerland and northern Italy. A. Oh, the automobile trip?

Q. To Italy. A. Friday morning, August 6.

Q. Do you not recall that after you came back from the automobile trip you had further business discussions at the office of Adler and Company? A. There were some further conversations and talks, yes.

Q. Well, you personally went there with Crittenden and Fritz von Opel and met Frankenberger there? A. To the best of my recollection, there was a get-together when we got back, yes.

Q. When did you get back? A. We got back late in the afternoon or early evening of Tuesday, August 10.

Q. When did you have the get-together you just spoke of? A. Wednesday, August 11.

Q. On August 12 you were there again, weren't 2239 you? A. No, we were over in Italy on August—

Q. No; I am talking about the Adler Bank. A. I don't know that we went back the following Thursday morning, but—

Q. Didn't you fix the date of the last meeting in accordance with the date of the memorandum which you had just prepared? A. That is as I recall.

The Court: My recollection of Crittenden is that he started off with two weeks, then he said three weeks, and then on cross-examination he was asked if it may have been five or six days, and he said that sounded about right.

Mr. Burling: I ask that this document be marked in evidence. I will agree to substitute a photostat and return this to the witness if he so desires.

Mr. Gallagher: No objection.

(The document referred to was marked as Defendant's Exhibit 116 and received in evidence.)

Mr. Burling: That is all.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. In October, 1931, Mr. Bayer, you were never told by Mr. von Opel that his father, at the suggestion of a German lawyer, had given him a power of attorney and told him to bring it to America with him, and if when he got 2240 here he found out that there might be some delay about using his gift agreement for whatever purpose he wished, he could then have a power of attorney, and, as a result, he could then act as an attorney in fact?

Mr. Burling: I move to strike that question. It is clearly leading and beyond the scope of cross-examination.

Mr Gallagher: That is completely within the scope of cross-examination.

The Court: I do not remember what he talked about on that. The only thing I remember his talking about was this custodian thing.

Mr. Gallagher: He said he did not know that Mr. von Opel signed as an attorney in fact. I am just bringing out that he did not even know he had a power of attorney.

The Court: Ask him what he did.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Did you know whether or not Mr. von Opel had a power of attorney from his father? A. I did not know.

Q. Did Mr. Marin, in the office of Mr. Kresel, work in collaboration with your office in the preparation of tax returns—specifically, these tax returns in 1942 that we have talked about? A. Yes; or vice versa: we may have collaborated with him.

2241 Q. I see. In connection with that consent settlement, were any fraud penalties, or penalties of any nature, assessed in that matter by the Treasury Department? A. I think there were some delinquent-payment penalties, but that was all.

Q. No fraud penalties? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Were all deductions allowed, to the best of your recollection? A. Well, that is—there were deductions allowed.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all, Mr. Bayer.

The Court: I think I will take a 5-minute recess now.

(At this time a short recess was taken. The following then occurred):

Mr. Gallagher: We will call Dr. Meier.

(The testimony of the witness Dr. Eugen Meier was given through Mr. Joseph Laufer, who was first duly sworn to interpret the testimony).

Thereupon, Dr. Eugen Meier was called as a witness and, being first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Will you state your name, please? A. (In 2242 English) Eugen Meier.

Q. Will you state where you reside? A. (Through the interpreter) Liestal, Switzerland.

Q. Where were you born? A. Staefa, Canton Zurich, Switzerland.

Q. Are you a Swiss citizen now? A. Yes.

Q. Will you state where you were educated? A. I attended the primary schools in Staefa and St. Gallen; the Gymnasium in Zurich; and I studied in Zurich and Geneva.

Q. Are you an attorney? A. Yes, an attorney.

Q. For how many years have you been practicing law? A. Forty-two years.

Q. Are you a member of a law firm in Switzerland? A. Yes, I am a member of a law firm the name of which is Veit, Giesen, Meier, Veit, and Matter.

Q. Are you a Doctor of Laws? A. Yes, I am a Doctor of Laws.

Q. Have you held any official positions in Switzerland? A. I was for several years a member and chairman of the Tax Appeal Commission of Liestal; a member of the Community Council of Liestal—that is, the small community council. Furthermore, I was a member of the Cantonal Parliament of the Canton of Basle-2243 Landschaft, and I still am at this time a member of the Board of Legal Examiners of the Canton of Basle.

Q. Have you served in the Swiss Army? A. Yes.

Q. What ranks have you held in that army? A. I am a colonel now, but I am not in active service because I am beyond the legal age.

Q. Did you serve in the Swiss Army in World War I? A. In the first World War I was a captain and in charge of a mountain artillery company.

Q. Did you serve in the Swiss Army in 1939 and 1940? A. I was active during 1939 and 1940 for several months with the chief of staff of the army, until April, 1940.

Q. What position do you occupy with the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation? A. I am a member of the council —administrative council—and president of the Korporation since 1932.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I should like now to identify these books of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, which the defendant has previously stipulated were books of the Korporation. I believe, from this witness' statement to me, that if he is shown them, he will be able to identify them; but he says he cannot state that unless he sees them one by one.

2244 Mr. Burling: I have no idea whether the witness can or cannot. Perhaps if I may be permitted to ask him two or three questions, I may have no objection at all. It is my belief he did not keep the books and never saw them.

Mr. Gallagher: That is correct. He did not keep them. But I know his testimony will be that for several years, at least, they were kept in his office, where Mr. Gaeng worked on them, and that he is familiar with Gaeng's handwriting, and that being shown them individually he will be able to state whether or not they are Uebersee's books.

Mr. Burling: On counsel's statement, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. Gallagher: I know that statement is correct; but if you wish to ask him, I have no objection to your asking him.

Mr. Burling: If you state that that is what his testimony is, I have no objection.

Mr. Gallagher: Fine. Now, I should like to have, specifically, Plaintiff's Exhibits 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, and 154. Those are the only ones I want to see.

(The exhibits referred to were handed to Mr. Gallagher).

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibits 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, and 154, and I ask you whether or not these are the current books of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation covering the years noted therein, which are, roughly, from 1937, on some, up through 1948. A. This is the 2245 main ledger of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation.

Mr. Gallagher: He has identified Plaintiff's Exhibit 149.

The Witness: From 1937 on to date.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 150. A. This is the Journal of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation beginning with, generally, January 1, 1940, to date.

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 151. A. This is the account book containing accounts current from, generally, January 1, 1940, to date.

Q. I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 152.

The Court: Is this gentleman your last witness?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, Your Honor, our last witness in our case in chief.

The Witness: This is the book containing the inventories beginning January 1, 1937, to January 1, 1948. No subsequent inventories were taken.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Did you ever see these books, which you have identified as Plaintiff's Exhibits 149, 150, 151, and 152, in Switzerland? A. Yes; I have had these books temporarily in my office in Liestal, and Mr. Gaeng, the third member of the administrative council, came from 2246 time to time to Liestal and brought the books up to date.

The Court: Pardon me. Do you intend to call any other witnesses, Mr. Gallagher?

Mr. Gallagher: We should like to recall Mr. von Opel for some questions.

Mr. Burling: I intend to call this witness as a hostile witness under Rule 43(b), to impeach him on one or two points.

The Court: Well, it will take some time?

Mr. Burling: I will take an hour with this witness, Your Honor.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Is there anything further you have to say? A. It then became too complicated to keep the books in my office, because Mr. Gaeng had to come from time to my office, and Mr. Gaeng then, in the meantime, had been elected to the administrative council—to the administrative board—and took the books with him, and they were kept at his office subsequently.

I would like to ask the question: There are two more books that were shown to me. Whether I am to identify those as well.

Q. Yes. A. This is not a book of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G.

2247 Mr. Gallagher: This is not. Plaintiff's Exhibit 153 is not. This is of Fritz von Opel; I can see that.

The Witness: I have never seen this book before, and apparently it is not a book of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G.

Mr. Gallagher: That was Plaintiff's Exhibit 154.

The Court: Well, I think I will adjourn now until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(At 4:05 p. m. an adjournment was taken until Friday, January 7, 1949, at 10 a. m.)

2250 PROCEEDINGS

Thereupon, DR. EUGEN MEIER resumed the stand and being previously duly sworn, testified as follows:

(The testimony of the witness Dr. Eugen Meier was given through Mr. Joseph Laufer, previously duly sworn to interpret the testimony.)

Direct Examination (resumed)

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Dr. Meier, is a Swiss corporation under a duty to keep books and records? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What books must a corporation in Switzerland keep pursuant to Swiss law? A. The statute does not explicitly provide what kind of books must be kept, but it does provide that such books must be kept as will clearly indicate the financial condition of the corporation.

Q. Well, would you state what are the usual bookkeeping methods employed by Swiss corporations? A. It is the custom to have a ledger, a book containing a list of assets or containing balance sheets; furthermore, a book containing accounts current which disclose the liabilities and 2251 assets of the corporation; and, furthermore, a ledger in which daily entries are being made. This does not mean, however, that the entries are being made daily, but they are entered in daily sequence.

Q. I will now have you look at Plaintiff's Exhibit 144 and ask you to state what that book is, if you know. A. This is, according to its inscription and its contents, a ledger of the corporation kept from 1929 to January 1, 1936, by Mr. Gaeng.

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 145 and ask you what that book is. A. This book, Plaintiff's Exhibit 145, is the journal of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation which was kept from January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1936.

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 146 and ask you to state what that is, please. A. This book, Plaintiff's Exhibit 146, is the book containing balance sheets of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation from 1929 to 1936. The entries therein are made partly by Mr. Gaeng and partly by an assistant of Mr. Gaeng, whose handwriting also appears in other records and, as far as I know, was the daughter of Mr. Gaeng. She had commercial training.

Q. I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 147 and ask you to state what that is, please. A. This book, Plaintiff's 2252 Exhibit 147, is the journal of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation which was kept from January 1, 1937, to December 31, 1939, throughout by Mr. Gaeng.

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 148 and ask you what that is. A. Plaintiff's Exhibit 148 is the book containing accounts current of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation from January 1, 1937, to December 31, 1939.

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 153 and ask you to state what that is. A. Yesterday I was of the opinion that this book is not a book of account of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation; but subsequently I have ascertained that the entries therein also pertain to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation. It does represent a book containing accounts current. However, in contrast to the other books it contains only a partial set of accounts current. It is a subsidiary or auxiliary book containing entries of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation from November 16, 1939, to December 31, 1945.

Q. Dr. Gaeng, do you know as a fact that these books are books and records of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation?

Mr. Burling: Is this question asked by way of telepathy? This witness is not Mr. Gaeng.

2253 Mr. Gallagher: I am sorry. Dr. Meier.

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Were these books ever kept in your office? A. They were kept temporarily in my office.

Mr. Gallagher: I now offer these exhibits, Your Honor: Plaintiff's Exhibits 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, and 153.

Mr. Burling: No objection.

The Court: That dispenses with the necessity of the stipulation?

Mr. Gallagher: I believe so, Your Honor.

The Court: Without objection, Mr. Burling's request to withdraw the stipulation will be granted.

Mr. Gallagher: All right.

(Plaintiff's Exhibits 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 152, and 153 were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. I now show you Plaintiff's Exhibits 141, 142, and 143 and ask you to state what those folders are. A. These folders contain bookkeeping vouchers for the respective years; that is, folder 141 contains bookkeeping vouchers for the year 1940; folder 142 contains those for the year 1941; and folder 143 contains those for the year 2254 1942.

Q. Were those folders kept in the regular course of business? A. These folders were kept in the ordinary course of business by Mr. Gaeng, who inserted the bookkeeping vouchers in the folders and made the appropriate entries on the records.

Mr. Gallagher: I now offer Plaintiff's Exhibits 141, 142, and 143, they being the back-up folders to the books which have been previously introduced.

Mr. Burling: No objection.

(Plaintiff's Exhibits 141, 142, and 143 were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. I show you Plaintiff's Exhibits 174, 175, and 176 and ask you to state what those are.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, this embarrasses me somewhat. I understand these are folders which we were not shown, although there was a court order requiring that the books—

Mr. Gallagher: Let me interrupt, if I can help you, Mr. Burling.

The court order required all books up to 1942. They came, and certain specific books came to 1942. Among the books that came up to 1942 are four of these ex-2255 hibits 149 to 153, which are our main books which run down through the year 1942.

Mr. Burling: And, those are after 1942. I have no objection.

Mr. Gallagher: That is right. They are bookkeeping entries for entries put in the books after 1942, which had never been previously requested by the Government.

Mr. Burling: I apologize to the Court. I understand.

Mr. Gallagher: These were just brought by Dr. Meier, with him, pursuant to our request.

The Court: All right.

The Witness: These exhibits, 174, 175, and 176, are folders of bookkeeping vouchers along the same lines as those to which I have referred previously, to wit, Exhibit 174 contains bookkeeping vouchers for the years 1946, 1947, and 1948; Exhibit 175 contains those for the years 1944 and 1945; and 176 contains bookkeeping vouchers for the year 1943.

I wish to say that I cannot state whether there are additional vouchers contained therein. I did not make a complete check but merely sampled the vouchers to establish that the inscription on the folders corresponds to what is contained in them.

Mr. Gallagher: I now offer Plaintiff's Exhibits
2256 174, 175, and 176.

(Plaintiff's Exhibits 174, 175 and 176 were received in evidence.)

The Witness: I would like to add that if I am requested to make a detail check, I would require another day to go over all these vouchers separately.

Mr. Gallagher: I do not believe that will be necessary.

Mr. Burling: I would like the record to show that we have never seen these. We have no knowledge either way.

Mr Gallagher: All right.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Are all financial transactions of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation shown in the hauptbuch, the inventurenbuch, the journal, and the konto korrentbuch? A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: I object to the question unless it is first shown that this man kept the books. I think the testimony is that he did not.

The Court: What is the question?

Mr. Gallagher: The question merely was, Are all financial transactions of Uebersee shown in the four books, the hauptbuch, the inventurenbuch, the journal, and the konto korrentbuch?

2257 The Court: I doubt if he would know that.

Mr. Gallagher: If the books were kept in his office under his supervision, as they were for a period of time—

The Court: I do not understand that he worked on the books.

Mr. Gallagher: He did not work on them.

The Court: I do not know that he would be qualified to know if all the transactions are in them.

Mr. Gallagher: I see.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. To the best of your knowledge, do the exhibits previously referred to contain therein all financial transactions of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation?

Mr. Burling: I object to that also unless it is shown that he had some knowledge.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Burling: All that he has done is to recognize the covers of these books.

Mr. Gallagher: I will withdraw that and ask this:

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. If the books which have just been offered in evidence, and which contain therein the hauptbuch, the journal, the konto korrentbuch, and the inventurenbuch, are properly kept under Swiss law, would they then contain all financial transactions of the Uebersee Korporation?

2258 Mr. Burling: I object to that. It is hypothetical.

The Court: I think that would not help us any.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all right, Your Honor.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Dr. Meier, who were the officers and directors of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation from the year 1941 until the present time? A. May I point out that we cannot speak of directors. In Switzerland a director is the man who manages a corporation under the supervision of the administrative board. That is, he is the man who actually handled the business from day to day. However, in the administrative board—I understood the question to refer to the years 1941 and following?

Q That is right. A. During the entire period I was a member and president of the administrative board. Also during the entire period Dr. Frankenberg was a member of the administrative board. However, Dr. Frankenberg, since May, 1940, has been in the United States and was no longer in Switzerland. The third member of the administrative board was Dr. Henggeler, an attorney at law from Zurich. So far as I recall, he resigned at the end of 1942 or the beginning of 1943.

Since under Swiss law at least two members of 2259 the administrative board must be Swiss citizens, resident in Switzerland, with the resignation of Dr.

Henggeler, I was left; and since Dr. Frankenberg at that time was no longer residing in Switzerland, and since he was at that time an Austrian citizen, and in the meantime I understand he became an American citizen, an additional Swiss member had to be appointed to the administrative board.

In lieu of Dr. Henggeler, Mr. Gaeng was appointed. He is a Swiss citizen and lives in Zurich.

Q Dr. Meier, did the Uebersee Korporation conduct any business operations in Hungary or Germany or in any country with which the United States was at war subsequent to December 6, 1941? A. Would you permit me to give you a little background?

Q. Surely. A. The Uebersee Finanz-Korporation has its major assets here in the United States. In addition, there was the house—building—in St. Moritz where Mr. Fritz von Opel has resided in the past. There was, moreover, a coconut plantation in British East Africa. A further interest of the corporation was the Transdanubia Bauxit, A.G., in Budapest.

The Uebersee Finanz-Korporation in previous years had guaranteed a bank loan to that corporation, in which 2260 it was interested. The Transdanubia Bauxit, A.G., was then requested to repay the loan, so that the securities which the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation had put up as a collateral would be free. The Transdanubia Bauxit, A.G., then repaid this loan as of December 31, 1942. Since that time there were no business relationships with that corporation.

When the upheaval in Hungary took place, the mines corporation was nationalized, and we have put in our claim for the corporation there.

Mr. Burling: May I ask that the date be fixed at which time the mine was nationalized?

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Will you state when the mine was nationalized? A. when the upheaval took place—well, the claims were put in in 1946 or 1947. There were statements made in the Swiss press, according to which claims were required to be filed, and I think that we put in our claim about 1947. I don't recall that precisely.

Q. Did the Transdanubia corporation repay the loan directly to you, or did the bank in Zurich merely release your collateral? A. The repayment was not made to us. We were not creditors. The repayment took place to the bank, and thereupon our collateral was released.

2261 Q. Do I understand you correctly to say that the repayment was made to the Hungarian bank in the first instance, and thereafter the Swiss bank in turn released your collateral? A. Yes, released the collateral.

Q. Now, did the Uebersee Korporation invest any money in other corporations or business enterprises after December 6, 1941? A. No.

Q. Did the Uebersee Korporation give any instructions or orders to any persons, agents, corporations, or other business enterprises with respect to the operation of the mines in Hungary subsequent to December 6, 1941? A. I don't know anything of that, but it cannot be possible, because otherwise I would have had notice of it.

May I add that Dr. Frankenberg was at that time in the United States, and so was Mr. Fritz von Opel, who was so severely restricted in his liberty that he could not possibly make such orders.

Then, there was Dr. Henggeler, subsequently replaced by Mr. Gaeng; and they surely did not give such instructions, because they had no competence to give them. And as far as I myself am concerned, I can positively state that I did not give such instructions.

2262 Mr. Burling: I move to strike that part of the answer which relates to what Henggeler or Gaeng "surely" did.

The Court: I will disregard that.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. How many members of the administrative council are required to act jointly in performing a function of the corporation? A. There must be two signatures.

Q. Do you know who directed all the policies and investments of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation?

Mr. Burling: Will you fix the date, please?

Mr. Gallagher: I will strike that. I will reframe the question.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Do you know who directed all investments and policies of the Uebersee Korporation from the year 1932 down to the present time, with particular reference to the period subsequent to December 6, 1941?

Mr Burling: I object to the question on the ground that it contains two. Counsel is asking about 1932 to date, with particular reference to—

Mr. Gallagher: I will strike it again.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Will you state who from 1932 until the present
2263 time always controlled and directed the investments and policy of the Uebersee Korporation? A. That was Mr. Fritz von Opel. I must add this was until 1940, when Mr. von Opel went to the United States. Subsequently no new investments were made, since there were no means to make them.

Q. When was the last time, Dr. Meier, that you saw Wilhelm von Opel? A. I never saw him. I never saw Mr. Wilhelm von Opel.

Q. When was the last time you received any communications or instructions from him? A. I neither received instructions nor communications from Mr. Wilhelm von Opel.

Q. To your knowledge, did the Uebersee Korporation ever receive any instructions or directions from Wilhelm or Marta von Opel? A. So far as I know, that never took place.

Q. Now, just one last question: On yesterday you stated that you could not identify Plaintiff's Exhibit 154. After the recess, you went over the books again. Will you state now what that book is? A. This exhibit was not in the form in which the other books of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation are, but subsequently, by comparing it with those books, I became convinced that this also is a 2264 record—a book—of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation containing investments and securities.

Mr. Gallagher: I may state, Mr. Burling, that it is merely a page breakdown of some of the stuff in the journals. Everything in the journals is here, and there is nothing else before you. But for ease you will have the Transdanubia account before you, whereas in the ledger you would have to keep going back and forth. Have you any objection?

Mr. Burling: No.

Mr. Gallagher: I now offer it.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit 154 was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Did Wilhelm von Opel or Marta von Opel, or any representative of Wilhelm or Marta von Opel, ever vote in the stockholders' meetings of the corporation? A. No.

The entire share capital was held by him, and he was represented by Frima, a Liechtenstein institution, except for the period when the shares were sold to the Union Bank of Switzerland.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all.

Your Honor, Mr. Laufer just stated to me that he would like to take a rest for a few minutes. His voice is 2265 a little tired from doing all this translating.

The Court: We will take a five-minute recess.

(At 10:50 a.m. a recess was takn until 11:10 a. m.)

Cross Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you state, if you know, Dr. Meier, what the investment of Uebersee in Transdanubia Bauxit was on December 6, 1941? A. I cannot say that without seeing the books.

Q. Now, I will show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 154, which you identified as one of the books of account of Transdanubia, and ask you if you can now, with the assistance of the book, tell the investment of Uebersee in Transdanubia Bauxit as of December, 1941? A. I would have to have also the other books of account, and together with those I should be in a position to state that.

Mr. Burling: Perhaps we could shorten this. I believe counsel will stipulate that as of that date the investment was in excess of 100,000 Swiss francs.

Mr. Gallagher: We stipulate that. Plus accounts receivable.

Mr Burling: I am not sure of that. That is to say, the money which had been paid in for stock plus cash lent to Transdanubia was in excess of 100,000 Swiss francs?

2266 Mr. Gallagher: Yes.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. What action did you take as the chief officer of Uebersee after that date with respect to this investment?

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, if I may interrupt, I cannot see how the question has anything to do with the question that we have before us in the case.

Mr. Burling: One of the issues in the case—

The Court: I have forgotten the question.

Mr. Gallagher: Our contention is that the fact that he had an investment which remained as an investment during the period of the war is absolutely irrelevant when there is no transaction.

Mr. Burling: All I am trying to find out is if there were any transactions.

The Court: He has been asked by you about activities with Hungary since then.

Mr. Burling: Would you read the question, Mr. Reporter, please?

The Reporter: (Reading) "Question: What action did you take as the chief officer of Uebersee after that date with respect to this investment?"

The Witness: I have not taken any action. We 2267 had no means for engaging in transactions. I have not taken any action whatever.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Now, Switzerland between 1941 and 1945 was not at war with Hungary was it? A. No.

Q. It would have been possible for you to have either written or to have gone to Budapest during those years, would it not? A. Hungary was occupied by the Germans, as far as I know, in 1941. There was in April, 1941, an invasion of the Balkans by the Germans, and Hungary was occupied by the Germans, and communications were almost impossible.

Q. Is it not the fact that the Germans were in Hungary in 1941 as allies of Hungary? A. Yes, they marched in as friends.

Q. Switzerland was not at war with Germany at that time, was it? A. No.

Q. Do you not think it was possible to communicate between Zurich and Budapest up until the time that the Russian Army occupied Budapest? A. Yes; cor-2268 respondence was possible.

Q. Did you have any correspondence after December 6, 1941, with any officers or agents of Transdanubia Bauxit? A. Personally, no.

Q. Well, you know, do you not, that someone—some agent of Uebersee Finanz Korporation—did maintain a correspondence with officers of Transdanubia Bauxit?

Mr. Gallagher: When is this occurring?

Mr. Burling: After December 6, 1941.

Will you read the question?

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

A. All I know is that this loan—that is, the credit—the loan agreement was terminated.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Well, you also know, do you not, that officers of Uebersee were in touch throughout the war period with Transdanubia Bauxit's officers in Budapest? A. I do not know that.

Mr. Gallagher: We have no objection to the answer, and I was going to say that we have no objection to the witness' answering the question as such; but I would like the record to reflect that there has been no evidence submitted in this case to corroborate that. It is an hypothesis or assumption.

Mr. Burling: I did not ask that hypothesis; I asked a question of fact of the plaintiff corporation.

2269 The Court: It is answered now.

Mr. Gallagher: All right.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Is it your testimony that after December 6 you paid no attention whatever to an investment of over a hundred thousand Swiss francs? A. Whether I paid any attention to this investment, the investment was embodied in shares and we could not take out these shares. The question of the loan is a different one.

Q. Transdanubia Bauxit was wholly owned by Uebersee; is that right? A. So far as I know, that is so, but I do not know the details, because this was a transaction entered into several years before by Mr. Fritz von Opel, and I could not swear to it.

Q. At any rate, you do not deny that Transdanubia Bauxit was wholly owned by Uebersee at all times after December 6, 1941? A. I believe yes, but there was nothing we could do about it, because nobody would have bought these shares from us. If he would have sold the shares, we would have to sell them to persons within the German territory— that is enemy territory. Thus we kept the shares in the safe and we did not do anything about 2270 them.

Q. Please confine yourself to giving direct answers to my questions.

Mr. Gallagher: And I think, however, Your Honor, so the witness may be well apprised, that he should be advised through Mr. Laufer that he can make an explanation.

Mr. Burling: I deny that. I do not believe that is correct law.

The Court: It depends upon whether he can answer it yes or no. If it is the type of question where he can, why,—

Mr. Barling: The last question was a very simple one, if Your Honor please.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Now, you have been a lawyer for over 40 years, haven't you? A. Forty-two years, yes.

Q. And you regard yourself as a man of high moral probity, do you not? A. Must I give an opinion as a witness or state facts?

Q. Well, I would like to know the fact.

The Court: Well, we will assume that.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. And you understood that Fritz von Opel was interned in the United States in 1942, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Now, is it your testimony that you took no step 2271 to safeguard the interest or to supervise the investment which Uebersee had in Transdanubia during the years 1941, 1942, 1943 and 1944? A. We did supervise it, but we did not sell it.

But you did supervise it? You did carry out your duty of supervising the investment in Transdanubia; is that correct? A. Yes. If we have something in our accounts, we have to keep it there to see to it that it does not get out.

Q. You not only did not sell it; you watched over and supervised the investment; isn't that true?

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I realize what Mr. Burling is driving at in the word "supervised." I think the witness clearly in the past, in response to his questions, indicated clearly what he meant by "supervised," but I think he should clarify it.

The Court: Read the question to him, please.

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

The Witness: It was there and we did not sell. It was there and it stayed there, and we kept it there until the postwar period, and there it is now.

May I ask a question: What should I have done?

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Don't you think that you had a responsibility in your fiduciary capacity of supervising an investment 2272 of over a hundred thousand Swiss francs? A. I would have had a responsibility if I had violated my duty, not under the American law, but under the Swiss law, and I did not violate any duty. If Mr. Fritz von Opel is of a different opinion, he can call me to account for it.

Q. Well, I am not suggesting that Fritz von Opel is trying to sue in any court.

My question is, Since Fritz von Opel was interned in America, you were the only person, were you not, who could supervise his investment of a hundred thousand francs in Transdanubia? A. I do not understand what you mean by "supervision."

Q. Then, I will try to clarify it. Did you not think that you had an obligation, after December 6, 1941, to keep informed as to what the people in Budapest, the officers of Transdanubia, were doing with an investment of over a hundred thousand francs? A. The loan that was given was not made subject to any conditions or requirements. As far as the share capital was concerned, the investment was made, and I did not see any obligation to do anything about that. Transdanubia was an independent corporation.

Moreover, as I stated before, the policies as to investment and business transactions issued from Mr. Fritz 2273 von Opel.

Q. Do you think that Fritz von Opel was giving instructions as to the mining of bauxite when the United States was at war with Hungary and when Fritz von Opel was in a United States internment camp? A. Hardly.

Q. Very well. Now, who was exercising the responsibility of supervising the officers of Transdanubia Bauxit when Fritz von Opel was interned? A. Our company.

Q. Very well. Thank you.

The question is just—

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, we object. We want to hear the explanation.

Mr. Burling: I suggest that if there is an explanation, the appropriate time for it to come out—

Mr. Gallagher: I agree that is one way we can do it, but you have insisted at all times, particularly with Miss Schoch, that she be given an opportunity to explain when she was being cross-examined rather than doing it on redirect, if you will recollect.

Mr. Burling: Certainly, if a witness is asked to explain something, the witness should be allowed to explain without interruption.

The Court: It depends on the question.

(The last question and answer were read by the reporter.)

2274 The Court: Make a note of that and ask him about it on redirect.

Mr. Gallagher: All right, Your Honor.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you describe your position with Uebersee, please? A. I was president of the administrative board.

Q. And you were made president of the administrative board in April or May of 1932, were you not? A. Yes, 1932.

The Court: 1932?

The Interpreter: 1932.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. And at that time will you state where the main office of the Korporation was located? A. At the time when the block of shares was acquired by Mr. Fritz von Opel, the Korporation had its offices at the offices of the Adler and Company.

Q. And that is 16 Peterstrasse; is that right? A. That is the address now. At that time it was Bahnhofstrasse, No. 65. I do not recall the precise number. But Adler and Company has moved from the Bahnhofstrassse address to Peterstrasse.

Q. Do you remember when the move took place? A. No. Possibly we were at the Peterstrasse address 2275 already in 1932, but I cannot state that precisely.

Q. You have been a director of the Alder Bank since 1924, haven't you? A. Not a director, but a president of the Administrative Board, with the exception of one year. I believe one year I was not in that position.

Q. And that was before Fritz von Opel acquired the interest, either directly or for his father, in Uebersee Finanz-Korporation? A. Yes.

Q. Now, is it not a fact that Adler and Company of Zurich has advanced large sums of money to Uebersee Finanz Korporation in connection with this present lawsuit? A. In connection with this lawsuit, I do not know. I do know that there are large advances made by Adler and Company to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, but I do not know that it was in connection with this lawsuit.

Q. At any rate, Uebersee presently owes Adler and Company a large sum of money, does it not? A. Certainly. I cannot state the amount, but the amount is recorded in the books.

Q. Well, without stopping to go into the books in detail, can you approximate the amount of money which Uebersee today owes Adler? A. I would rather 2276 look for that in the books, because I would not like to state a sum which is not correct.

Q. What book would you like to look at? A. That could be checked in the account book entitled "Accounts Current."

Q. Now, while Professor Kaufmann is looking for this book, I will go on. Then we will come back to this.

The assets of Uebersee outside of the United States consist of a cocoanut plantation; is that right? A. Yes; a cocoanut plantation in British East Africa, Tanganyka Territory.

Q. And what is that worth, in a round sum? A. It appears on the record as having a value of about 250,000 francs; somewhat more than that.

Q. Did Fritz von Opel ever tell you that he had told an Alien Enemy hearing board that that plantation was not worth more than 12,000 U. S. dollars? A. I do not know about that.

Mr. Gallagher: Would you translate those dollars into francs, Mr. Burling?

The Court: Well, we can do that later. Let us get along with the testimony.

Mr. Gallagher: It is particularly important. We get talking about two sets of figures, one which is many times the American dollars.

Mr. Burling: I take it that it will not be argued 2277 by counsel that 12,000 dollars is the equivalent of 250,000 francs.

The Court: I think we had better go on with the testimony. I want to get through with it.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You came to the United States by air, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Who paid for your ticket? A. I paid that myself.

Q. Do you have any understanding with anyone that you will be reimbursed for the cost of your trip to the United States? A. No. May I explain why I am paying for the ticket myself?

Q. Yes, I wish you would. A. I lived with Mr. Fritz von Opel through good times, and I want to bear with him through the bad times.

Q. You also want to have the Adler Bank recover its loan to Uebersee, do you not? A. That is not the reason. The sole reason is the moral obligation I feel to assist Mr. Fritz von Opel.

Q. I am not suggesting any lack of morality; I am merely trying to find a financial fact.

You do know, do you not, that Adler and Company will never be repaid its loan unless the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation is successful in the present litigation?
2278 A. That is a deliberation, a consideration, which I never entertained.

Q. Well, will you now think about it and tell us if you do not now understand clearly that Adler and Company's loan to Uebersee will never be repaid unless Uebersee is sucessful in this litigation? A. I cannot judge that right now. As far as I am informed, the loan to Uebersee, as far as Adler and Company was concerned, was secured by collateral, and, as far as I remember, the books of Adler and Company reflect the claim against Uebersee as being one secured by a collateral.

Mr. Burling: May I ask for the book that the witness refers to?

May I ask Dr. Kaufmann to show the witness the books, and then I renew the question.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. What is the present loan from Adler and Company to Uebersee?

(The witness looked at the books in question).

Mr. Burling: I think the record should, however, show, if Your Honor please, that Dr. Kaufmann is pointing out the entries to the witness, who has identified the book.

Mr. Gallagher: If Your Honor please, we will take a recess, if the Court wants to grant it, and let him 2279 do it by himself. We are trying to help speed it up.

The Court: I think perhaps it is a little unusual to have a consultation.

Mr. Gallagher: All right. May we have a recess a moment, Your Honor?

The Court: Why don't we take that up after lunch?

Mr. Kaufmann: I might say there are six accounts between Adler and the Korporation.

Mr. Burling: I want the record to show just what happened.

I will withdraw the question and ask the Court's permission to renew it at the end of the luncheon recess.

The Court: Just tell Dr. Meier to acquaint himself with the books to the extent that he is able to do so during lunch. If he has any knowledge that he can give us without the books, of his own personal knowledge, we will get it.

Mr. Gallagher: I might say at this moment, Your Honor, if it will be of any help to Mr. Burling, if you are talking about the Frankenberg testimony, he said he personally advanced money to Mr. von Opel.

Mr. Burling: Yes. I think there are two separate advancements.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Now, going back to 1932, when you became a member of the Administrative Board the other two members were Dr. Frankenberg and Henggeler? A. Yes, sir.

2280 And Frankenberg remained an officer from 1932 until he left for Haiti in 1940; is that right? A. He is still a member of the Administrative Board.

Q. And he was also a member of the Administrative Board of the Adler Bank during that period; is that correct? A. He still is.

Q. And is it not correct that Henggeler performed the legal services required by Uebersee from 1932 until the present? A. Of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation?

Q. Yes. A. No, that is not correct. We have divided among ourselves the legal services. I have undertaken several of these legal matters for them since the classification of Uebersee as a banking corporation under the banking statute.

Q. And you also undertook legal services for Uebersee in connection with the United States Government in the year 1935; did you not? A. Yes, sir. I was here in the United States.

Q. You know Mr. Bernard Bernstein, do you not? A. Yes. This is the official of the Treasury Department with whom I had once a conference.

Q. And that conference took place, so far as you know, in the building of the Treasury Department, didn't 2281 it? A. Yes, Treasury Department.

Q. Here in Washington? A. (In English) Here in Washington, yes.

Q. And you understand, of course, that the Treasury Department is a branch of the United States Government? A. (Through the interpreter) Certainly, yes.

Q. And you were accompanied by a Dr. Schlatter of the Swiss Legation; is that right? A. Yes. I was introduced to the Treasury by a verbal note of our then Minister Marc Peter, and thereupon I was invited to that conference.

Q. And the purpose of your going to the Treasury Department was to secure a license for Uebersee to remove from the United States $1,250,000 in gold; is that not true? A. Yes.

Q. And the gold was stored with Ladenburg, Thalmann and Company at that time; is that not true? A. I do not think it was Ladenburg, Thalmann and Company. I was at a bank office in New York. I could point it out, but I do not remember the name. I was taken down to the safe and the safe was opened, and I saw the beautiful boxes with gold, but, unfortunately, I could not take them with me.

Mr. Burling: I take it that there is no dispute that it was Ladenburg, Thalmann and Company?

2282 Mr. Gallagher: No. I do not see where it makes any difference whether it was Ladenburg, Thalmann and Company.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Who did you think, at the time you were in Mr. Bernstein's office, was the beneficial owner of that gold? A. I have made a memorandum to the files which I sent to the members of the Administrative Board. I have seen it here. It is part of the files.

Q. I am well aware of that. My question is, When you were in Bernstein's office who did you think was the beneficial owner of the gold? A. I was at that time of the opinion that it was property of the family von Opel. These assets originated from the sale of the Opel Works in Russelsheim. I knew that the Opel Works were not the property of Mr. Fritz von Opel, but of his father and his brothers. I therefore assumed that Fritz von Opel was the agent of this group and that he had some sort of interest in it.

Q. Yes; and that is what you told the United States Treasury Department in 1935, is it not? A. I have stated that along these lines to Mr. Bernstein, but I would like to point out that I did not go there and simply stated that.

Mr. Bernstein asked me who owns the Uebersee, 2283 A. G.

Q. Yes. First you said you did not know, and then Bernstein said, "You must know whether Fritz von Opel was the beneficial owner or not"? Isn't that what happened? A. It was not quite so. First Mr. Bernstein asked me who owns these shares. I stated that these are bearer shares and I cannot see from them who owns them. I only can see who votes them.

Thereupon Mr. Bernstein asked me, "What was your idea about it?" And then I said that it was my idea that they constituted property of the Opel family.

Mr. Burling: May I ask that the clerk hand Your Honor Defendant's Exhibit 66, because I am going to inquire about it now?

The Witness: I would like to add that I was at this time alone in the United States, first in New York and then in Washington. Mr. Fritz von Opel was in the Gulf of Mexico on a fishing expedition.

We then called Mr. Fritz von Opel by radio telegram, and he came as fast as he could.

I checked these dates from the files. I do not want to give the impression that I am indulging in imagination. He was in New York on May 14.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Now, just a moment. You are under an obligation to answer my question directly and say nothing else 2284 at this time. A. But I see the intention to imply into my statements utterances which I do not want to make, and therefore I am interested in giving a full explanation.

Q. You may be interested and you may think you know what I am doing, but I advise you that American law and not Swiss law governs in this court, and I advise you that you are under an obligation to answer my question directly and then stop.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I would like the witness at this time, through the interpreter, to be advised that if he cannot answer the question with a categorical yes or no, he can explain.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor will examine the last question, the witness went on and on and on.

The Court: Yes. I think we will be four or five days at that rate.

I think, Mr. Laufer, you should tell the witness that the attorneys for Uebersee will have a chance to question him on redirect; and, unless he cannot answer the question without a long talk, why, he should make a direct 2285 answer.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I ask you to examine Defendant's Exhibit 66-A and state whether or not that is the file memorandum which you prepared regarding your conference with Mr. Bernstein. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that correctly reflect what took place at the Treasury Department during your conference? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time that you were talking to Mr. Bernstein, you felt a moral obligation to tell him what you thought was the truth, did you not? A. Certainly.

Q. So on the date of your conference with Mr. Bernstein, which was April 29—

Mr. Burling: And, if Your Honor please, at this moment I might say that our translation inexplicably bears the wrong date of April 4. The German is apparently clear. It is April 29. May I be permitted to correct the translation?

Mr. Gallagher: We shall be glad to oblige you, Mr. Burling.

Mr. Burling: Will you please read my question as far as it has gone, Mr. Reporter?

The Reporter: (Reading) "Question: So on the 2286 date of your conference with Mr. Bernstein, which was April 29—"

By Mr. Burling:

Q. (Continuing) 1935, you believed that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation was owned beneficially by a group of the von Opel family, which included Fritz von Opel and also included other members of his family? A. That was my opinion on April 29, 1935.

Q. You testified here this morning that you never saw Wilhelm von Opel in your life, did you not? A. No.

Q. So your opinion as of April 29, 1935, was formed on the basis of what was told you by Fritz von Opel; is that not correct? A. No. What I heard from Mr. Fritz von Opel, I heard on May 14.

Q. On April 29 you made a statement to Mr. Bernstein. On the basis of whose statement to you did you make this statement to Mr. Bernstein? A. I have stated that before: that I had formed this idea on the basis of my knowledge that Mr. Fritz von Opel was not the owner of the Adam Opel, A. G.

Q. Somebody must have told you something in order for you to have had any idea at all? A. No. I can form an idea about something without being told by any 2287 person regarding it. I can form an opinion on that.

Q. Do you hear voices? A. No, I don't hear voices.

Q. Who told you any facts on the basis of which— A. (Interposing) If I am being asked whether I hear voices, I may be given an opportunity of saying how I formed this opinion.

Q. I am trying to find out the name of the person who told you any facts on the basis of which you made that statement to Bernstein. A. Nobody told me anything, but I am not entirely devoid of reason, and I can form my opinions without hearing voices.

Q. In 1932 you knew that Fritz von Opel had purchased the Uebersee shares, did you not? A. Yes, I knew that he purchased Uebersee shares with the money which I imagined to represent the family property of the Opel family—the assets which Uebersee represented.

Q. In other words, prior to April 29, 1935, Fritz von Opel never told you that he himself owned the shares or was the beneficial owner of the property? A. He never made any statements to me with respect to the beneficial ownership in those shares, but he voted those shares 2288 —he held those shares.

Q. I did not ask you anything about who voted shares; I asked you, Is it not true that Fritz von Opel never said, prior to April 29, 1935, that he owned the property? A. No.

Q. Do you mean it is not true, or do you mean, No, he never said that? A. He never stated anything to me about it.

Q. Whatever he did say to you from 1932, when you became the president of the administrative board of the plaintiff corporation, until May, 1935, caused you to come to the conclusion that the beneficial ownership of Uebersee was in the Opel family; is that correct?

Mr. Boland: I object on the basis that this witness has already testified that he gave the information to the Treasury Department on the basis of nothing that came from Fritz von Opel; he formed his conclusion on the basis which he set forth.

The Court: It is not binding on the cross examiner.

Mr. Boland: The question is—

The Court: I know what he is trying to do. I understand what he is trying to get at. It is not binding on him what the witness says. I will permit him to ask that. He might have made it clear, but if there is any doubt about 2289 it, I will let him answer.

The Witness: No, not on the basis of what he told me. In fact, he never talked about the fact who owned shares. We never talked about that.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Well, will you explain, then, how you felt qualified to make a statement as to the ownership of the shares to the United States Treasury in April, 1935? A. Gladly.

Q. Please do. A. Yes. Well, I stated that I came to the United States in 1935. I had the mandate from the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation to assert the claims which it had with respect to this gold.

The Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, being a Swiss corporation, has to cast its balance sheets in terms of Swiss francs. On our balance sheets the gold dollars appeared at the gold rate of exchange. If we were paid off in devalued securities for this gold after its seizure, we suffered a loss of one million and one-quarter francs, having a share capital of five hundred thousand francs. It can be understood that we fought against suffering such a loss.

For this purpose I came here and negotiated with the Treasury Department. I appeared there accompa-2290 nied by Dr. Schlatter. I wrote this memorandum to the files concerning this conference, and I stated therein as follows—

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I wanted to see how far this would go. I submit that this man by his own testimony is a lawyer of 44 years experience. He is also an influential banker. It is inconceivable that he does not know how to answer the question. I would like to ask the reporter to read my question again.

The Court: (To the interpreter) Just ask him to state simply the source of his information as to the ownership of the controlling interest as to which he testified; that is all.

The Witness: I already stated before this is not information supplied to me by a third party, but it is an inference at which I arrived after Mr. Bernstein pressed me in the same fashion as Mr. Burling is doing it now.

Mr. Burling: Well, I feel flattered by that. If Your Honor please, I submit that it is inconceivable that a man of legal training would think that you can form an opinion without having some fact to base it on.

The Court: I think that is a matter to be argued.

Mr. Gallagher: That is what I was going to submit, Your Honor.

2291 The Court: There is one thing that has been going through my mind. What would the significance be of the controlling ownership being in Wilhelm von Opel at that time?

Mr. Burling: That, I believe, Your Honor, would go to show that, in fact, there was no gift; that there was a sham.

The Court: I mean so far as this decision that Mr. Bernstein had to make is concerned. I know your point.

Mr. Burling: That is rather hard to explain, Your Honor, because Uebersee Finanz-Korporation took a very indirect view, which was ultimately rejected by the Second Circuit.

The Court: That is what I have been trying to get at.

Mr. Burling: I think I can state Mr. Davis' argument. It was that if the plaintiff corporation was beneficially owned by a person not in the United States and by a person who did no business in the United States, then they were entitled to the license as a matter of law. They were entitled to export the gold.

But they were afraid that if it could be shown that the beneficial interest was in a person who did, in fact, do business, then Uebersee would not be entitled to ex-2292 port the gold.

So at that time Uebersee took the position that Fritz von Opel had bare legal title and that the beneficial interest was in Wilhelm, who was not doing business here.

The Court: Do you agree that that is so?

Mr. Gallagher: That is basically so.

The Court: That is all. If there was a difference about it, I would have to read the arguments, but I thought it would be helpful.

Mr. Gallagher: They argued three different points:

One, that the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., as owner of the gold is not present within the jurisdiction through an agent or through doing business or otherwise.

Point two: This is not a case for disregard of the corporate entity by reason of dominance of a sole stockholder.

Point three: Independent of any question as to the corporate entity, no 'owner' of the gold here involved is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Those were the three points they endeavored to cover in their memorandum.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Gallagher: They were all rejected, as Your Honor knows.

2293 The Court: What I wanted to know was, What would be the objective of the parties at that time, or would they have any? Would they have any reason to indicate one way or the other? That answers it.

Mr. Burling: All we seek to get out of it—

The Court: I know exactly what you are seeking to get. But I wanted to know what the motive, if any, would be on the part of Fritz von Opel or anybody else at that moment.

Mr. Burling: The ultimate motive would be that they were told by counsel that if they could put a beneficial interest in Wilhelm, they could get the gold out, which would then, in Swiss francs, amount to something like over a million Swiss francs.

By Mr. Burling:

2294 Q. During the luncheon recess, Dr. Meier, have you been able to find out, from inspecting the books of Uebersee, which you identified this morning, what the present debt owing to Adler and Company by Uebersee is? A. There is no indebtedness at this time.

Q. You change your testimony from this morning and now say that Adler and Company is not owed anything by Uebersee? A. I did not say that this morning. I reserved to myself the statement after I had an opportunity to check, and there were periods when the balance was in favor one way or another, and I had an opportunity to check, and there is no obligation owing at this time.

2295 Q. Will you state whether or not Adler and Company has not advanced large sums of money to Uebersee Finanz Corporation and/or Fritz and Margot von Opel since the end of hostilities between the United States and Germany? A. I would like to state with respect to that that Adler and Company is a banking corporation and that, pursuant to Swiss law, banking secrecy prevails, and I am not authorized to disclose to third parties concerning this matter.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, that has been litigated several times, I think, in this Court and in the Southern District of New York. Without exception, it has been held that secrecy is a matter of the law of the forum, not of the law of the place of the witness' residence.

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Burling, we would like the interpreter to advise Dr. Meier that Mr. von Opel gladly lifts that privilege.

The Court: I think that that is undoubtedly the rule: It is the law of the forum.

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. von Opel lifts that privilege.

The Court (To the interpreter): Tell him it is the law of the forum and that Mr. von Opel waives whatever secrets he has in it anyway.

(The interpreter propounded to the witness the statement of the Court.)

2296 The Witness: I don't know.

Mr. Gallagher: If Your Honor please, if we can help Mr. Burling, because we are all mutually trying to expedite this, we recollect the record, and if you want to bring it to the Court's attention, Mr. Frankenberg did personally say he had lent some money.

Mr. Burling: Thank you. I am trying to find out, in addition, if Adler and Company had lent them money. As I understand it, the witness has said he does not know. So we have to go on.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You testified that at the time you talked to Mr. Bernstein in the Treasury, you understood that Fritz von Opel was off on a fishing trip in the Gulf of Mexico? A. Yes.

Q. When did you see Fritz von Opel for the first time after your conference with Bernstein? A. I don't recollect that, but it is my belief that it was May 14.

Q. At any rate, it was before May 28, 1935, was it not? A. Certainly.

Q. What did Fritz von Opel tell you when you saw him concerning the ownership of the Uebersee shares?

A. I informed him about my conference, and I 2297 further advised him that I had expressed my view that he was representing a family property.

Q. My question to you is, what did Fritz von Opel say to you about this subject? A. He advised me that I was in error regarding this matter; that Uebersee was his personal property, but that a usufruct in favor of his father was outstanding.

Q. As a lawyer, what did you understand him to mean when he said that a usufruct in favor of his father was outstanding? A. At the moment, I did not form any fixed idea.

Q. Well, you knew what a usufruct was, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Now, when you learned that the property was held subject to a usufruct in favor of Wilhelm von Opel, did you come back to Mr. Bernstein and say you had made a mistake? A. No; but I made a statement in a sworn affidavit which I made before a notary public in New York. From that time on, I did not handle the gold matter any more; it was up to the American attorneys.

Q. I see. When you made this affidavit, did you tell the truth? A. Whether it was correct or incorrect with respect to the usufruct, I do not know; I only stated 2298 therein what Mr. von Opel told me.

Q. But you did not intentionally make any misstatement in 1935 when you filed an affidavit with the Treasury, did you? A. No, certainly not.

Q. I want to show you a German translation of the affidavit and ask you if you recognize it.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, this is a translation which we have prepared of the affidavit, which appears in Defendant's Exhibit 8, at page 23 of the record in the Second Circuit.

The Witness: It is my statement, but I have not checked yet whether the translation corresponds to what I stated.

Mr. Gallagher (To the interpreter): Why don't you advise him to go along with Mr. Burling, and if there seems to be any contradiction, we will agree that this is correct.

Mr. Burling: I intend to read in English from the official record of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, in which record the affidavit is incorporated; and counsel have agreed that that is a correct copy of the affidavit.

By Mr. Burling:

2299 Q. Now, during the years 1932, 1933, 1934, and 1935, it was your practice, was it not, to take no part in the direct management of the corporation? A. I was a member of the administrative board. It is stated in the translation, "member of the board of directors," which is not quite accurate. But as a member of the administrative board, I did not have a direct hand in the management of its affairs.

Q. Did there ever come a time when you did have a direct hand in the management of the affairs of the corporation? A. That became necessary when Mr. Frankenberg left in the year 1940, and we were left alone without connection with Mr. Fritz von Opel.

Q. In other words, up until 1940, Frankenberg ran the company; isn't that true? A. Administratively speaking, yes. The technical and financial management was in the hands of Fritz von Opel.

Q. Frankenberg was, in the years 1932 through 1935 inclusive, the managing director, wasn't he? A. Managing director is not correct. He was that member of the administrative board that managed the affairs of the company.

Q. You did swear in your affidavit that Frankenberg was the managing director, didn't you? A. That 2300 is evidently the translation. I have had to sign so many documents in which I was referred to as a member of the board of directors.

Q. Do you generally swear to documents in foreign languages without assuring yourself that you understand what you are swearing to? A. No, that is not my practice.

Q. Did you assure yourself in the case of your affidavit of May 28, 1935, that you understood what you were swearing? A. Yes. May I explain how this statement came about?

Q. Surely. A. I was at that time in New York, and I discussed the gold matter with the firm of Davis, Polk, et cetera, and fifty others.

Q. To be exact, it is Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardner & Reed, is it not? A. There was another farther down with whom I also negotiated.

Q. But, at any rate, before you signed the affidavit, you had satisfied yourself, had you not, that you understood what it meant? A. I wish to state how this statement was gotten up.

2301 Q. Very well. A. The attorneys presented questions to me, and we formulated the statements therein, because obviously I cannot write English that way. There were also legal statements, and for several days I worked in the library of the New York Bar Association.

Q. We can shorten this if you will just tell me if you satisfied yourself before you swore to the affidavit that you understood what you were swearing to. A. Certainly; I could swear to it, if it related back to that time, even at this moment.

Mr. Burling: Since counsel has agreed that the record is correct, I should like to read one sentence at this point. I want to ask the witness about it, so I will ask that it be translated.

"Dr. Frankenberg is, and has been since 1932, in effect managing director of said corporation, conducting substantially all of its affairs, subject to the advice and consent of the other two directors."

The Witness: It is in order.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you now state whether that sentence which I have read you from your affidavit is correct or incorrect?

A. It is correct.

2302 Q. And that state of facts continued up until 1940, when Dr. Frankenberg left for Haiti; isn't that true? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not your practice during any year prior to Frankenberg's departure to take a direct hand in the management; isn't that true? A. Not a direct hand in the management itself.

Q. After your talk with Fritz von Opel but before the moment at which you swore to this affidavit, were you not in doubt as to whether Fritz von Opel held all the shares—had held legal title to all the shares—of Uebersee, or whether he had legal title only to some of them and held the others for members of his family?

Mr. Gallagher: I am a little bit at a loss myself to understand that.

Mr. Burling: I am sorry; I will try to clarify the question.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Addressing yourself to the time between the moment of the execution of this affidavit and going back to the time you saw Fritz von Opel after his fishing trip— A. This statement was made after the return of Mr. Fritz von Opel.

2303 Q. But you saw Fritz von Opel after his retur on May 14, 1935, did you not? A. I saw him r peatedly. Once he was here in Washington with me du ing a conference with some high official in the Treasur Department, and I saw him repeatedly in New York.

Q. At any rate, at some time in the month of May, 193 prior to May 28, 1935, it was your understanding tha Fritz von Opel either owned personally shares of Uebersee or held a number of shares for members of his family is that not correct? A. No, that was not my opinion. was of the opinion that Fritz von Opel was the sole owne of these, and I stated here in my affidavit.

Q. Then, will you explain why you used the followin words in your affidavit:

"It has always been my understanding that Mr. Frit von Opel, a German citizen and resident of St. Moritz Switzerland, either owned personally or held for mem bers of his family a substantial number of shares o Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., but I have no per sonal knowledge on the subject."

Mr. Ingoldsby: Your Honor, if I may object at thi point, the witness has testified that prior to May 14, 1935 he had a certain belief regarding the ownership 2304 that on May 14 he met Mr. von Opel, and he wa given a certain explanation. He then says tha based upon that explanation he executed the affidavit o May 28. I do not see what more he can say with regard to ownership.

The Court: He just stated, right this minute, that he thought Fritz von Opel owned the shares of stock. Mr Burling wants to ask why he put that other language in there.

Mr. Burling: That is correct.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Well, I do not want—

The Court: I myself am a little interested to know why he put that in there.

2305 A. There are two different periods of time involved. The first sentence, "It has always been my understanding," until the end of that, refers to the period prior to May 14, 1935. But on May 14, 1935, I heard Mr. Fritz von Opel say that he was the owner of substantially all the stock of said Korporation, subject to the right of usufruct reserved in his father, Wilhelm von Opel. From that time on I no longer believed what was stated in the prior sentence, but what I stated here.

These are two different periods of time involved here.

Q. Isn't it a fact that the reason you used these two sentences, and do not aver on your oath that Fritz von Opel was himself the owner of the shares, is because you knew it was not true and that Fritz von Opel was lying to you when he told you that? A. I do not understand the question. In what respect did Fritz von Opel lie to me? I would like to ask you for an explanation.

Mr. Burling: I do not know, if Your Honor please, whether I am allowed to. I would be glad to, if I may.

The Court: It is rather difficult to get him to answer it that way, I guess.

Mr. Burling: I will try another way. I will withdraw the question—

Mr. Gallagher: Why don't you just ask him if he 2306 believes Fritz von Opel was lying to him?

Mr. Burling: No. I want to know, and I submit it is proper—

The Court: I know what you are trying to do.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you state, if on May 28, 1935, you believed that Fritz von Opel owned the shares, why you did not state that simply as a fact rather than state that "It has always been my understanding that he either owns them personally or holds them for members of his family"? A. I repeat what I said before—that there are two different periods of time involved.

Prior to the time on May 14, 1935, I came to the conclusion—and I want to point out that I did not communicate with ghosts or heard voices. I was of the opinion—I came to the conclusion—that the shares were held by members of his family; but after May 14, 1935, I was advised that Fritz von Opel was the owner.

Q. We understand that that was said to you. What I am trying to find out is why, if you believed what was said to you, you did not just state what the fact is instead of using this form.

The Court: Let me see if I can cut it short for you. Ask him why he believed that Fritz von Opel owned the control of the stock.

2307 The Witness: I had no reason to disbelieve him.

The Court: Then ask him why he used the other language in this affidavit.

The Witness: I have done that in order to explain why I gave a different explanation to the Treasury Department, since on April 29 I advised Mr. Bernstein in the Treasury Department that the Opel shares were family-owned—the Uebersee shares were owned by the Opel family.

Mr. Gallagher: If I might say, Your Honor, I would like to recall to your attention, in case it might have been lost in the days that have gone by, that these affidavits were prepared originally for use in the Treasury Department, not for use in the District Court.

The Court: I just want to try to get Mr. Burling's question over.

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, sir. That is why I wanted to clarify that they were for use in the Treasury Department.

Mr. Burling: Thank you.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Up to and including May 28, 1935, Fritz von Opel never attended a meeting of the Board of Directors of Uebersee; is that right? A. Of the Administrative Board, no, certainly not.

Q. Did he ever, so far as you know? A. No. The question is Administrative Board, a meeting of the 2308 Administrative Board.

Q. Your affidavit speaks of a board of directors. Do you know what you meant by that? A. I stated, at folio 80, that, as far as I knew, Fritz von Opel never attended any of these meetings.

Q. And that continued to be true throughout the years down to date, did it not? A. Yes.

Q. And at least up to the 28th day of May, 1935, the board of directors of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation never entrusted Mr. Fritz von Opel with any part of the management of the Korporation, did it? A. No, not the conduct of business. The business was conducted by the Administrative Board. We alone had the rights to sign.

Q. I am not speaking of legal rights. I am asking you, isn't it true that down until at least May 28, 1935, Uebersee never entrusted any part of its management to Fritz von Opel? A. Fritz von Opel received repeatedly power of attorney to conduct specific transactions.

Q. Now, do you agree or disagree with this statement:

"The board of directors of the Korporation has never entrusted Mr. Fritz von Opel any part of the management of the Korporation"?

And that can be answered yes or no, I submit.
2309 A. No. When I refer to management of the business, I meant management of the business as it is done by a director of the company. The fact was that he did get from time to time powers of attorney to conduct specific transactions.

Q. Aren't you able, Dr. Meier, after 44 years of practice of the law, to state yes or no as to whether a sentence read from your own affidavit is true or false? A. I am of the opinion that what I stated therein is correct.

Q. And is it not true also that up until at least May 28, 1935, the Korporation insisted in maintaining the form and substance of corporate independence with respect to Mr. Fritz von Opel and Mr. Wilhelm von Opel? A. Yes.

Q. That is true.

Now, will you state why your thought it appropriate to swear in an affidavit prepared for the Treasury that the Korporation was independent in respect of Wilhelm von Opel? A. This was done because of the statement on May 14, 1935, when Fritz von Opel advised me that the shares of Uebersee were subject to a usufruct in Mr. Wilhelm von Opel. It is for that reason that we inserted in the statement a declaration to the effect that the Korporation maintained its legal independence not only 2310 with respect to Fritz von Opel, but also to Wilhelm von Opel, who is designated here as usufructuary.

Q. Now, at the time, on May 14, 1935, that Fritz von Opel told you that he had legal title and Wilhelm von Opel had the usufructuary interest, do I correctly understand you to say that you believed him? A. I had no reason to disbelieve him.

Q. So the answer is yes? A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe him this minute as you sit on the witness stand and testify under oath? A. I still believe that he made that statement at that time in good faith.

Q. Do you as you this minute sit on this witness stand and testify under oath think that Fritz von Opel told you a correct fact?

Mr. Ingoldsby: I submit that that is argumentative now. He stated, "I have no reason to disbelieve." He then states that "I believe he made the statement in good faith." The question contains a conclusion of law.

Mr. Burling: The purpose is obvious.

The Court: It may be a mixed conclusion of law and fact.

Mr. Ingoldsby: It is.

Mr. Burling: This is a Swiss lawyer. It is a mixed question of foreign law.

2311 The Court: You may ask him, I suppose.

Mr. Burling: Does your Honor sustain the objection to the form of the question?

The Court: If he understands the question, I will let him answer it.

Mr. Burling: Will you read it, please?

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

The Witness: At that time, yes.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. No. The question is now, this minute. A. I was compelled in the meantime to come to the conclusion that this usufruct was not created.

Q. And who told you that the usufruct was not created? And when? A. Again, these were no ghosts, but I thought about the matter.

Q. Did anybody ever tell you anything after May 28, 1935, on the basis of which you exercised your mind?

Mr. Burling: Just a moment. I can't understand, but it is perfectly clear the answer to the question, "Did anybody tell you anything?" is yes or no. I would request permission, if Your Honor please, to tell the witness through the interpreter that this question can be answered yes or no.

The Court: Just ask him if anybody told him any facts about it and answer it yes or no.

2312 The Witness: No.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. So your testimony is that nobody, from May 28, 1935, on, ever told you any fact concerning the creation or non-creation of the usufruct? A. No.

Q. Now, when you went back to Zurich after you were here in 1935, did you have any talk with Frankenberg about what you had been doing here? A. Certainly.

Q. What was that conversation, please? A. I cannot state that.

Q. But, at any rate, Frankenberg never told you anything about the usufruct? A. I could not state that.

Q. And you did not tell Frankenberg, did you, that you had made an affidavit stating that Fritz von Opel had told you that his father owned the usufructuary interest in the property? A. I cannot say that. I do not know it.

Q. And you have no recollection of Frankenberg's having said anything to you after you told him—in the event that you did—about your affidavit and about the usufruct?

A. In order to answer that question, I would have 2313 to know what I would have told him if I did, in order to be able to say what he told me if he did.

Q. Well, that seems to be a fair point. But, at any rate, you have no recollection now at all of any talk which you ever had with Frankenberg after your return from Washington in 1935 about the usufruct? A. No, not specifically. Of course, I did inform him generally, in part through that memorandum to the files, as to what went on here; but I cannot recall any specific details.

Q. And you do not recall any conversation which you had after May 28, 1935, with Fritz von Opel about the usufruct, do you? A. I do not even recall when I saw Fritz von Opel subsequent to that time.

Q. All right. Now, how is it, if you did not hear voices, that you came to the conclusion that the usufruct had not been created? A. May I talk now without being interrupted?

Q. Provided you answer the question, yes.

Mr. Gallagher: If Your Honor please, I would just like to explain one thing. The difficulty I think the witness has, and of which Mr. Burling is not aware, nor possibly the Court, and that I certainly was not aware of until this noon, is that I found out today that in Switzerland, 2314 when they are testifying in court, or when they appear in court, when the Court asks you something, you never answer yes or no; you have to tell the whole story.

Mr. Burling: I submit this man has been practicing many more years than I have lived. It is inconceivable that he does not know, even if he has not practiced here, how to answer a straight, simple question.

Mr. Gallagher: I want to point out that his explanation might be long. I do not know what it is going to be any more than you do.

The Court: What is the question?

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

The Court: I guess I will have to let him answer it in his own way.

Mr. Burling: I agree, provided he confines himself to the answer.

The Court: The trouble with me is that he can talk a half hour and I would not know whether he is answering or not. I think we will have to go ahead.

Tell him to answer it as briefly as he can, without arguing it.

The Witness: I do not know the legal prerequisites of the German institute of usufruct as to form and defect. I assume that they are similar to those in the Swiss law.

According to Swiss law, a usufruct is created by 2315 transfer of possession. The usufructuary, pursuant to his right of usufruct, votes the shares that are the subject thereof. The usufructuary is entitled to the use of the res.

All these rights were never asserted by Mr. Wilhelm von Opel. The shares of Uebersee were represented in the general stockholders meetings of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G. by Frima Verwaltungsanstalt Vaduz.

These considerations have led me to the conclusion that the usufruct was not established.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. In May, 1935, where were the shares of Uebersee, if you knew? A. They were with the Frima Verwaltungsanstalt Gesellschaft.

Q. It is your belief now that in May, 1935, the certificates physically were in Liechtenstein? A. I think so, because they were represented by Mr. Gaeng as the administrative officer of that company.

Q. Nobody ever told you that they were in Box 1917 at the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt and that Dr. Hans Frankenberg had the key to the box? A. It is possible that there was talk about that, but I could not testify to it as a fact.

Q. Do you know whether or not it is true that Fritz von Opel swore that that was the fact in an affi-2316 davit which he made which was filed together with your own? A. I do not believe that I had knowledge of that.

Q. Coming to a different topic, will you state the period of time again when the books which you identified this morning were kept in your office? A. I can state the beginning precisely. It was shortly after the domicile of the Korporation was removed to Liestal, but I do not know the end, whether it was 1935 or 1936.

Q. What year did it begin? A. It was with the removal of the domicile to Liestal. The books were taken along.

Q. I just want to know the year, please. A. I cannot state it any differently than that it coincided with the removal of the domicile to Liestal. A cable could be addressed to Mr. Gaeng to find out precisely when that was, but I do not know it any other way, but I cannot state when the period ended.

Q. What is your best estimate of when the period ended? A. I do not want to be prosecuted for false testimony, but I believe it was about three or four years.

Q. I want to know the date, as closely as you can fix it, when the books were taken out of your office. A. I cannot say any more than I just stated.

Q. You have not said anything so far, Doctor.

2317 A. According to my estimate—and I do not want to be responsible for that—they were about three or four years in Liestal.

Q. But I do not want to know how long they were in Liestal; I want to know when they were taken out of your office. A. I can't state that.

Q. Was it before 1900?

The Court: We are just wasting time here.

Does he know when they were brought there?

Do you know when they were brought there? Did you say 1935 or 1936?

The Witness: I cannot state it any more definitely. I had to leave Zurich rather precipitately and had no chance to prepare myself, and now I am asked to state under oath details which I simply cannot remember. They lie back ten years or more.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I do not want to waste Your Honor's time. I am trying to lay the foundation that after some period, which I can't ascertain, this witness never saw the books any more and therefore can't identify them.

Mr. Gallagher: If I can help Mr. Burling on that, I will be only too glad. I think if you asked the question,

"When were the books removed from Liestal and 2318 brought back to Zurich?" you will find out. I think it was sometime between 1942 and 1943. That is the statement he made to me. His office is in Liestal.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Will you try to give us your best estimate as to when the books were taken by Gaeng away from your office in Liestal and back to Zurich? A. I cannot state it any more than I said before.

Q. Can you give us any estimate at all of a date? A. I cannot state. I would be glad to state it, but I just can't.

Mr. Burling: Well, I move to strike all the testimony of this witness concerning these books if he is so unfamiliar with them that he can't make any estimate as to when they were taken out of his office.

The Court: That goes to the weight of his testimony.

Mr. Gallagher: He also testified that he saw them at the board meetings, anyhow.

The Court: I will overrule the motion. He testified they were in there some time.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Until you saw the books here in Washington just now, when had you seen them for the last time? A. The last time when I saw them was when we prepared the books for shipment in accordance with what was 2319 demanded to be produced. That is when I saw them for the last time.

Q. And where were they then? A. At Adler and Company. Now, I do not recall whether the books themselves were brought there or only a list of them.

When the order came we held a meeting of the board of directors. Mr. Gaeng, who was an extremely fearful man, did not want to ship them, because he did not want to undertake the responsibility. Mr. Gaeng was outvoted by my vote and that of Mr. Frank[illegible]berg, and he made a statement on the record that he did not want to be held responsible if they were lost while in transit.

Q. So you do not remember whether at the time that the books were demanded in this country you saw them or not, is that correct? A. I think that I saw them, but I would not like to swear to it.

Q. Where and when did you see them for the last time before that? A. The books were exhibited for a limited period of time during the general meetings, and I did see them when I held directors meetings together with Gaeng when we were alone in his office.

Q. Is there an entry in any of the books in your 2320 handwriting? A. No.

Q. Now, going back to Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G., will you state, if you know, how the shares were voted during the years 1941 through 1945, inclusive? A. As far as I know, not at all. As far as I know, we never got an invitation to attend a general stockholders meeting.

Q. You owned 100 percent of the stock, didn't you? A. Yes, to my knowledge.

Q. Well, didn't you take any action with respect to voting that stock for all those years?

Mr. Gallagher: State the years. Will you give them again?

Mr. Burling: 1941 through 1945, inclusive.

The Witness: I stated the matter this morning, I did not do anything. And I also said that I am responsible to Mr. von Opel if he sees it fit to call me to account for it.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Did the fact that you had not voted the shares for 5 years just slip your mind? You did not happen to think of it? A. I do not know what I should have done.

Q. Well, isn't it customary in Swiss banking practice to vote shares at least once a year—that is, the 2321 shareholders to vote? A. For instance, we have not exercised our vote in the United States. I do not know who exercised that right.

Q. Well, I will be glad to advise you. My client does, Doctor, the Attorney General of the United States.

The Court: I am afraid we are going a little too far afield. We are making no progress at all.

Mr. Burling: I have one more topic.

The Court: Yes. I am going to stop in 10 minutes. We have got to get through this case Monday.

Mr. Burling: What I am trying to bring out is the improbability that this Transdanubia just disappeared

The Court: I followed a considerable line of questioning on that this morning. I will give you as much latitude as I can on it, but we are going an awfully long time on it.

Mr. Burling: Very well, Your Honor. I will come to my last topic.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. What is Consortium O? A. As far as I know—I did not concern myself with this case at the period when the Corporation was established, but, as far as I can see, the Consortium O is—but it was a syndicate that was established during the incorporation of Uebersee.

Q. And the O stands for the Opel family, does it not? A. I imagine so.

2322 Q. And you understood that the Consortium O was a syndicate of the Opels, didn't you? A. To be honest about it, I heard about the syndicate Consortium O for the first time when I came here.

Q. And from whom did you hear about it? A. We looked the books over together and one of the gentlemen—I believe it was Professor Kaufman—talked to me about it.

Q. You had never seen the entry relating to Consortium O in Switzerland? A. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Burling: I am sorry. There was one other topic which I forgot, Your Honor.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Going back to 1931 and 1932, did you act as attorney for Fritz von Opel in attaching any bank accounts? See if I can refresh your recollection. Did you bring an attachment proceeding on behalf of Fritz von Opel against an account in the name of Wilhelm von Opel of 3,800,000 Swiss francs? A. I remember that. An attachment was made pursuant to Swiss law.

Q. The question is, did you handle it? A. So far as I remember, it was an account with the Credit Swiss.

2323 Q. And did you handle the attachment proceeding? A. The attachment was made and I believe a start was made to get a transfer of the amount attached, but Fritz von Opel then instructed me to let the matter ride.

Q. So I take it the answer to my question, did you handle it? is, "Yes"? A. Yes.

Q. And did you bring the proceedings in good faith? A. Certainly, I started it in good faith. It was not carried through.

Q. And what did you understand the basis of the claim for the attachment was? A. Evidently, in order to save the account from the seizure by the Hitler regime or by a coming Hitler regime, in order to get the money out from Germany.

Q. The idea, in other words, was to get Wilhelm von Opel's money out of Germany, wasn't it? A. Evidently, yes.

Mr. Burling: May I say to Your Honor, I am not sure whether I have any further questions? May we adjourn without my resting?

The Court: Do you have any redirect?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: How long will it take?

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Burling does not want to 2324 finish with the witness now.

Mr. Burling: You are going to stop in two or three minutes?

The Court: Well, I have a meeting in my room, but I was going to let them come in when they arrive. They may be a few minutes late.

Mr. Burling: If you give me 30 seconds, I think I can—

The Court: All right.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I am going to ask you to examine Defendant's Exhibit 50, which has been conceded to be a copy of a letter from the files of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, addressed to the Swiss Federal Banking Commission. Do you recognize that letter as having been prepared by you (handing a document to the witness)? A. I do not think that I signed this letter, but I do not know.

Q. Now, I want to read to you a sentence from the letter and then ask what explanation you can give to it in your capacity as president of your corporation:

"The entire capital of our company comes from a single group, which also has a controlling interest in the capital stock."

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I do not know how this witness can explain a letter which he says he does 2325 not know whether he signed or who signed it. He does not know whether he saw it.

Mr. Burling: If I produce a letter from the files of the corporate plaintiff, I submit I am entitled to ask the president of the corporation if he had seen it.

Mr. Gallagher: If he wrote it or had seen it.

The Court: If he had any knowledge of it.

Mr. Gallagher: If he knew about the letter, he can say.

The Court: He can say whether he knows anything about it. I won't draw it against him if he does not know anything about it.

Mr. Gallagher: Will you ask the question again?

Mr. Burling: Will you read the question?

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

By Mr. Burling:

Q. It is a letter from Uebersee to the Swiss Federal Banking Commission, dated November 1935.

Mr. Gallagher: I would like the Court to keep in mind that the date on this letter is subsequent to the formation of the Frima trust.

The Court: Yes; I have that. All right, go ahead.

2326 A. This letter was written after the Swiss banking law was put into effect. Prior to that time Switzerland did not have special banking statutes, but the banks were subject to the code of obligations.

Pursuant to this banking statute, banks and financial institutions similar to banks are required to register under the banking law. The Federal Bank Commission, which is a legal institution, requested the Uebersee to file an application for registration under the Swiss banking law.

The Court: That is not what Mr. Burling is trying to get at; he is trying to find out why the witness is talking about a syndicate.

Mr. Burling: A single group.

The Court (To the interpreter): Ask him why he is talking about a single group.

(The statement of the Court was propounded by the interpreter to the witness.)

The Witness: In order to show that there was not a large number of shareholders but a very narrow group.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Who did you think the members of this very narrow group were in November, 1935. A. I don't know what is meant thereby. I did not write this letter, and I did not participate in these proceedings until a later date, and I cannot state what other people thought or understood by that version.

Q. You did not oversee or supervise the registration of your company, as required by the Swiss Banking Commission? A. I was not called into this matter until a later date, and at that time I prepared an appeal to the Swiss Federal Court, and pending that appeal the Swiss Banking Commission nevertheless classified the bank as—classified Uebersee as a bank.

I in my appeal to the Swiss Federal Court gave different reasons than those stated here. I stated that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation did not accept foreign—money from outsiders and was not engaged in administering foreign funds. I won on that—we won on that point.

Q. When were you called into this registration problem? A. After the Banking Commission had given a negative answer to our request—that is, classified us as a banking institution.

Q. In any event, it was before June 2, 1937, was it not? A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Then, will you examine Defendant's Exhibit 117-A?

Mr. Burling: I ask for a concession that the document came from the files—

2328 Mr. Gallagher: Is that introduced yet?

Mr. Burling: No; I am introducing it now.

(Defendant's Exhibit 117-A was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I ask you to examine Exhibit 117-A. Did you see this letter, which is dated June 2, 1937, which is also addressed by Uebersee to the Swiss Federal Banking Commission? A. According to the entire arrangement and the manner in which it is written, this letter, just as the other one, was not written by me.

Q. Didn't you testify that you did come into the problem of the registration with the Swiss Banking Commission shortly after the letter of November, 1935? A. But I cannot state which letter produced the decision of the Banking Commission against which I appealed to the Federal Court. It may have this letter, or it may have been the subsequent letter.

* * * * *

2332 Q. Will you look, please, at Defendant's Exhibit 117-A, which is a letter from Uebersee Finanz-Korporation to the Swiss Federal Banking Commission, dated June 2, 1937.

Do you have any explanation which you can give, in your capacity as president of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, for the words:

"The creditors are recruited from the same circles as our stockholders, and the stockholders belong exclusively to a very small group"?

A. I have not written this letter, and I have seen it for the first time now. It originated during a period when the shares were held by a syndicate of officials of the Swiss bank—of the Union Bank of Switzerland. I do not know whether the writer of this letter referred to 2334 the syndicate in this letter or what he meant when he used these words.

Mr. Burling: May the record show that the word which Mr. Laufer translated as "syndicate" was the word "Consortium" in the German?

The Court: You can ask him that.

The Witness: Translated?

The Court: I guess he does not know.

Mr. Burling: I think Mr. Laufer knows.

The Court: I think we all heard him say "Consortium"; I don't know. Without objection, I will permit that to go into the record.

Mr. Burling: Thank you.

Redirect Examination

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Dr. Meier, in 1932, 1933, and during the years other than the years when these shares of Uebersee were owned by some Swiss, how many stockholders were there in the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation? A. There were four.

Q. Would you name who they were? A. The three members of the Administrative board, to wit, Mr. Frankenberg, Dr. Henggeler, and I myself, and then Mr. Fritz von Opel.

Q. You have just testified, Dr. Meier, that Dr. Henggeler, Dr. Frankenberg, you and Mr. Fritz von Opel owned the shares of stock of Uebersee. Would you 2335 now state whether you considered that a small group? A. Certainly. Is the idea this: that these are too few in number in order to constitute a group?

Q. That is all right. You have answered. A. I would designate even fewer than these as a group.

Q. I see. And are fewer than four considered a group in Switzerland when you are talking of designation of financial interests and ownership? A. Certainly.

Q. Now, Mr. Burling, in the record at page 2323, stated to you as follows:

"Question: And what did you understand the basis of the claim for the attachment was?"

Your answer was: "Evidently, in order to save the account from the seizure by the Hitler regime or by a coming Hitler regime, in order to get the money out from Germany."

Then Mr. Burling asked you:

"The idea, in other words, was to get Wilhelm von Opel's money out of Germany, wasn't it?"

You answered: "Evidently, yes."

Do you have anything further you wish to say with respect to those questions and answers? A. Yes.

Q. Will you please answer? A. This matter dates back some 17 or 18 years. As a matter of fact, I haven't 2336 thought of that matter in the meantime once. When the question was addressed to me, the matter gradually came back to me, without having any documentary evidence at hand. I have meanwhile checked the file again for the matter, and I found that my instructions at the time were to assert a claim which Fritz von Opel held against his father, and the possibility then existed to assert this claim effectively in Switzerland. Under Swiss law, jurisdiction arises when there is property situated in Switzerland, and as a result of the attachment, the claim could be asserted by Mr. Fritz von Opel in Switzerland.

Q. Do you recollect for how long a period of time Mr. Fritz von Opel would have had the use of those Swiss francs if the attachment proceedings had gone on through to a successful conclusion? A. On the basis of the documentary evidence, I refreshed my recollection, and I must state that without the underlying documents, I could not have recalled it. Fritz von Opel would have been able to use this money for a limited period. A period of about two years.

Q. Now, His Honor requested that I ask you a question on redirect, and it was with respect to a question put to you by Mr. Burling and an answer which you gave. The question was:

"Very well. Now, who was exercising the re-2337 sponsibility of supervising the officers of Trans-danubia Bauxit when Fritz von Opel was interned?"

The answer was: "Our company."

At that time you wanted to explain, and there was no opportunity for explanation. Do you wish to explain that statement?

I was reading from page 2273 of the record.

Mr. Burling: I object to Mr. Gallagher's statement. There is nothing in the record indicating that the witness wanted to explain anything.

Mr. Gallagher: If you will look at the line below "The question is just—" at that point you said:

"I suggest that if there is an explanation, the appropriate time for it to come out—" and there was considerable colloquy between us.

His Honor then said I could bring it out on redirect.

Mr. Burling: Page 2273 does not in any way indicate that the witness indicated he wanted to explain anything; it indicates that you wanted an explanation.

Mr. Gallagher: I wanted to hear, because he had started to explain, and you had cut him off.

The Court: Do you know what you want to find out?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes.

The Court: You may ask him a question.

By Mr. Gallagher:

2338 Q. Would you explain what you meant by that answer? A. From a legal point of view, the control over the subsidiary was with our company. As a matter of fact, this control was not exercised, as I have pointed out.

Q. Did you give any orders to the officers of Transdanubia? A. I never gave any order of any kind at any time.

Q. Did the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, to your knowledge, or any officer thereof, subsequent to December 6, 1941, give any orders to the officers of Transdanubia? A. No.

Q. Did you or any of the other officers of Uebersee direct the operation of the mines in Hungary owned by Transdanubia, to your knowledge?

Mr. Burling: I object to his testifying as to what Hengeler may or may not have done.

Mr. Gallagher: I am asking to his knowledge.

The Court: The ext nt of his knowledge is all right.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. To your knowledge, did any officer of Uebersee give any directions subsequent to December 6, 1941, with respect to the problem of operating mines, particularly this Transdanubia mine? A. To my knowledge, no.

2339 Q. Would you explain what you meant by the statement that the Board of Administrators never entrusted Fritz von Opel with any party of the management of the Korporation? A. I wish to state that the general conduct of business—that is, the management of its affairs—was never entrusted to Mr. Fritz von Opel; that, however, from time to time specific powers of attorney were conferred on him for the purpose of transacting specific transactions.

Q. Are you speaking of the inner workings of the board when you say that he was not entrusted with the management? A. Yes, that is what I mean.

Q. You have stated previously that Fritz von Opel controlled all the investments and did all the investing for the Korporation; is that correct? A. At any rate, he acted exclusively in conformity with his directives.

Mr. Gallagher: We have no further questions of Dr. Meier, Your Honor.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, it will be recalled that sometime in the past a suggestion was made in connection with the stipulation on the Liechtenstein citizenship law. We have a copy of the statute itself, together with the translation, which we would like to have identified.

Mr. Burling: Well, I have some recross examination.

Mr. Boland: Oh, I beg your pardon.

2340 Recross Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You say that at all times except when the officers of the Swiss Union Bank held the Uebersee shares, the four stockholders were Frankenberg, Henggeler, Fritz von Opel, and yourself; is that right? A. Yes.

Q. You know that that is entirely inaccurate, do you not? A. A distinction must be made there. I did not know prior to the discussion with Fritz von Opel on May 14, 1935—I was not informed until that time concerning the ownership of the shares.

Q. I am asking you if you do not know now—this very minute—that what you just told Mr. Gallagher was incorrect and untrue. A. I am not aware of that.

Q. Who are the stockholders today? A. As of today, just as I stated here, the four shareholders are Mr. Frankenberg and myself; and in place of Dr. Hengeler, Mr. Gaeng; and Mr. Fritz von Opel.

Q. Don't you know that that is not correct? A. No, I don't know that. I would like to know why it is not correct.

Q. Are you unaware that the owner of 97 shares 2341 of Uebersee is the Verwaltungsanstalt, located in Liechtenstein? A. Yes, that is correct from a legal point of view; but in Switzerland we consider this as economic ownership.

Q. You understand that this is an American court of law, don't you? A. Yes. If Mr. Burling's opinion were correct, I would have won an appeal on matters of taxation which, in fact, I lost. I have taken the position that, legally speaking, Frima and Uebersee Finanz-Korporation are two different personalities, and I was given the decision that, beneficially speaking, Uebersee and Frima are one entity—one unit; but I am grateful for having called my attention to that.

Q. Very good. And you do not have any personal knowledge, do you, as to who the beneficial owner of Frima is? A. I have never considered anybody else to be that except Fritz von Opel—that is, since the time that I was given the information.

Q. In other words, you know that legally Frima owns all but three shares, and the only basis that you have for thinking that Frima is beneficially owned by Fritz von Opel is what he told you on and after May 14, 1935? A. And what I have seen in the company since that time. I refer to my testimony with respect to the usufruct.

Q. Now, you do not think that either you or Frankenberg or Henggeler is a member of the Opel family, 2342 do you? A. I don't have the honor.

Q. Yet you told Bernstein, in the Treasury, that you thought that Uebersee was owned by a small group of members of the Opel family, did you not? A. Yes. As I have testified already at length, I have made that statement at that time not because I was hearing voices, but on the basis of my own inferences.

Q. Now, with respect to the attachment proceedings brought in 1932 against the 3,800,000 Swiss francs in an account in the name of Wilhelm von Opel, after you stopped testifying on Friday you discussed this 2343 matter with counsel, did you not? A. Mr. Fritz von Opel made available to me the correspondence which I had at that time—I do not have it now—and on the basis of this, I had to correct my statement.

Q. What correspondence do you say you examined? A. A letter of Adler and Company addressed to Mr. Wilhelm von Opel, and, further, I believe a letter of Adler and Company addressed to Fritz von Opel.

Q. And did you have any discussion on this topic with anyone other than Fritz von Opel? A. Unfortunately, I could not discuss the matter with the other gentlemen, since I do not understand English sufficiently.

Q. So your testimony is that Fritz von Opel is the only person you spoke to about this? A. I was unable to speak to any of the gentlemen, because I cannot make myself understood.

Q. All right. Now, what conversation did you have with Fritz von Opel on this topic? A. Mr. Fritz von Opel called my attention to the fact that my recollection was obviously not accurate. When he showed me these documents, my recollection was refreshed. In order to initiate arrest—attachment proceedings, there must be a debt owing by the owner of the lease which has been 2344 attached.

If I had gone to the court and told the court that Mr. Wilhelm von Opel wants to get money out of Germany, I would have been unable to obtain an attachment. There had to be a creditor whose claim was being enforced in order to obtain an attachment.

Q. But you understood, in any event, that the purpose of this legal proceeding was to get Wilhelm von Opel's money out of Germany, did you not? A. Not at that time. Now that I remember the matter, after eleven years, that is what I thought. At that time I went before the court and said, "There is a claim of Fritz von Opel against Wilhelm von Opel. Wilhelm von Opel has property in Switzerland, and I would like to have an attachment to be issued."

Q. And it is the fact, is it not, that Fritz von Opel told you, back in 1932, that his purpose was to help his father get his father's money out of Germany? A. No, that was not so. The German Foreign Exchange Control officers had refused to let Wilhelm von Opel pay out this amount to Fritz von Opel. In order to force the German Foreign Exchange Control officers to permit that, the attachment was obtained and in that manner the power of the German Foreign Exchange Control officers was eliminated.

Q. And that was the purpose of your activity, 2345 wasn't it? A. The purpose was that the father was compelled to pay over to the son. That was the purpose.

Q. But the underlying purpose of bringing the action was to help Wilhelm von Opel get money out of Germany and avoid the German foreign exchange controls? A. Wilhelm von Opel had undertaken a liability toward his son, and in order to enable Wilhelm von Opel to discharge that liability and because the German Foreign Exchange Control authorities had refused to permit that, for that purpose the attachment proceedings were initiated.

Mr. Burling: That is all.

Mr. Gallagher: No further questions.

The Court: Let him step down.

Mr. Boland: During the presentation, Your Honor, of my portion of the testimony, there were several exhibits that had not been offered.

At this time I would like to offer 102, 103, 104, and also the A's of those numbers, in addition to 177 and 177-A.

(Plaintiff's Exhibits 102, 102-A, 103, 103-A, 104, 104-A, 177 and 177-A were received in evidence.)

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, at this time we 2346 would like technically to close our case in chief, and I would like to renew three or four motions to strike.

MOTION TO DISMISS COMPLAINT

Mr. Burling: Before those motions are made, I believe it would be proper for me to make a technical motion to dismiss the complaint at the end of the plaintiff's case. I appreciate the motion is merely made technically, because of the fact that our case also is complete, but I think the record should include such motion.

The Court: All right. I will overrule that motion.

Mr. Gallagher: Now, Your Honor will recollect that in the course of the colloquy with Mr. Burling, when we were discussing the Giulini letters, which are the letters from Giulini to Frick, according to the Government's statement, with respect to doing business prior to 1941 and down subsequently through the war years, Your Honor's position was that it might show some continuendo and it might be tied in. Therefore, you permitted it to come in over objection.

Now we would like to renew our objection particularly with respect to those letters which the Government offered in an endeavor to show a doing business of Transdanubia during the years 1942, 1943 and 1944. First of all, they have not been tied in; but, even more important, the 2347 letters are clearly violative of any concept, in our opinion, we submit, of the hearsay rule.

If I might read just a sentence or two from the record, at 1386, when Mr. Burling was undertaking to lay a predicate for the admission of these letters, he said to Mr. von Opel:

"Question: I show you Government's Exhibit 99-A for identification and ask you if you can identify the stamp signature."

He says yes, he can identify the stamp signature, and he says:

"Question: And is it not the fact that the signature on the right-hand side of the two signatures is that of Georg von Krausz?"

von Opel says in answer:

"I guess it is."

Then he asks him about Exhibit 100-A. I won't take time to go through each one of them. They are all on the same point:

"I show you Defendant's Exhibit 100-A for identification, and ask you if it is not the fact that the signature, that the stamped signature is Transdanubia Bauxit Aktiengesellschaft, and that the right-hand of the two signatures is that of Georg von Krausz."

2348 Mr. von Opel says:

"I am not so sure. It is very badly written. It might be. It starts with a 'K'."

He says:

"And is it not the fact that the left-hand signature is that of Somogyi?

"Answer: I couldn't read it. I never saw the signature."

Mr. Burling offers them, and the letters go on into evidence.

Now, they have not brought Mr. Giulini here to testify.

Mr. Burling: Mr. Giulini is dead, as I stated to counsel.

Mr. Gallagher: There is another Giulini living, of the Giulini brothers.

Mr. Burling: The one who did business with Fritz von Opel—

Mr. Gallagher: There has been nobody here to testify what these letters were, that they really were authentic. There is nobody here to testify that it was Georg Krausz' signature. We submit those letters are violative of the hearsay rule.

The Court: What are the exhibits? I had better have them.

2349 Mr. Gallagher: They are exhibits commencing with Exhibit No. 99. These are Defendant's Exhibits 99, Defendant's 100, Defendant's 101, Defendant's 102, Defendant's 103-A, Defendant's 104-A, and Defendant's 103 and 104. Those are the letters which are referred to between pages 1386 and 1393 of the record.

Mr. Burling: I object to any objection now being made on the ground of hearsay. The only objection which my friends offered was the objection that this was not tied in. I think technically there was an objection of res inter alios acta. They certainly never complained about the authenticity. They only saved an objection to their relevance.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor stated at the time, when we were going on in argument, to wait—

The Court: I am afraid, Mr. Burling, I cannot, with propriety, let you make that point, unless he stipulated to it.

Mr. Gallagher: We did not.

The Court: I mean by pretrial or otherwise.

Mr. Gallagher: No, Your Honor.

Mr. Burling: What I am trying to do is to save myself the opportunity to look at the cases and prepare myself and make this argument.

The Court: Well, your authenticity rule is pretty 2350 well established. I will hear you on it.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, we first identified correspondence which Fritz von Opel was a party to, and we identified a contract which he negotiated and which two officers of Transdanubia Bauxit, which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the plaintiff here, entered into with Giulini Brothers.

Fritz von Opel identified the signatures of the Transdanubia officers. Those are the signatures which are on the remainder of the letters. He identified the letterhead of Transdanubia Bauxit on which the documents are written; and I submit where we have produced documents appearing to be documents of a corporation which is wholly owned by the plaintiff, which bear the signature—and on some of them Fritz von Opel definitely identified the signature of officers of Transdanubia—they should be admitted unless there is some counterindication that they are not authentic.

The Court: I do not think you gave me quite all of them. Let me get your numbers correct now. Is it 99?

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor—

The Court: Follow them with me. I want to know what you are talking about. Is it number 99?

Mr. Gallagher: 98, Mr. Ingoldsby says, also. I 2351 thought it started at 99.

It is 99-A.

The Court: I have 99 only. Have you got a 99-A?

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Burling said 99-A at the time. It was admitted in evidence as 99. It is 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, and 104, and the A's of them.

The Court: I do not have any A's.

Mr. Gallagher: They are the German. These are the translations.

The Court: That is important. I cannot tell whether they have the signatures or not.

Mr. Gallagher: The A's are German.

The Court: These are copies. I would have to see all the A's.

Frankly, I will have to get the facts and the testimony on the identification. There is no question about it.

Mr. Burling: The relevance of my saying I understood that they made a much more limited objection is that if the objection is to the authenticity, I can get a handwriting expert who can examine the signatures of the post-1941 documents and compare them to the documents which Fritz von Opel said he knew about and were, in fact, signatures of the officers of Transdanubia.

Mr. Gallagher: I submit, Your Honor, that still 2352 would have nothing to do with the competency of these documents.

The Court: That would supply the question of authenticity, which you question, don't you see. I did not remember your making any point as to the authenticity of them.

Mr. Gallagher: We could not know at the time whether they might bring a surprise witness.

The Court: I personally do not remember their doing it. The only point you made was that they were beyond a time which was mentioned in the pretrial order, as I recall it.

Mr. Gallagher: That is right. That was my basic objection, but, you see, these are all after Mr. Fritz von Opel, if Your Honor will recollect, advised Transdanubia by wire to lease the mines in May of 1941.

The Court: I am not going to spend a lot of time on the authenticity of it. We are not going to finish tonight, anyhow. I have to meet some Judges in a half hour from out of town, or even earlier, whenever they come. So if there is any question of authenticity, you can straighten that out tomorrow, probably.

Now I will hear you on the relevancy.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, as the record is 2353 reflected—

The Court: Let me find out what we are trying to show. As I understand it, Mr. Burling is trying to show that Uebersee had control of this Transdanubia Bauxit Corporation, and that after war was declared between the United States and Germany and Hungary Uebersee did some business of a corporation in Hungary. Is that right? Isn't that your point?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor; that Uebersee was doing business through this wholly-owned subsidiary in Hungary.

The Court: After war was declared.

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Therefore, Uebersee, being the plaintiff, would not be able to claim this.

Mr. Gallagher: We submit to the contrary—that there is not a scintilla of evidence that Uebersee had anything to do with the operations of Transdanubia during the war.

The Court: That is for argument. That is the argument part. I just want to get your position.

Now, then, the point that Mr. Burling is trying to establish is, in particular, that that happened around 1942 and 1943, as these letters indicate.

Mr. Gallagher: We submit, Your Honor, that the fact that a wholly-owned subsidiary, on its own or under 2354 lease arrangement by others, perhaps, as the evidence indicates in this case, were to operate would be completely irrelevant as far as the issues are concerned in this case. Mere stock ownership is not enough; there has to be more shown.

Now, we in our case have shown, through letters from Transdanubia to von Opel in the spring of 1941, and by cables back to Transdanubia, that he completely severed his operation capacity with Transdanubia and threw them to the wolves, in a sense. He put no more money up and told them to go lease them.

The Court: In other words, you say that the fact that this subsidiary of Transdanubia did business or might have done business in Hungary would not affect Uebersee unless there was some tying in of that activity with an officer of Uebersee?

Mr. Gallagher: Exactly, Your Honor.

The Court: And that that has not been done?

Mr. Gallagher: And I say that has not been done; and, further, those letters, while they are written apparently on the letterhead of Transdanubia, which has the same kind of a letterhead, and they are signed by a couple of Hungarians, could be completely lies, as far as we know. That does not, we submit, at all show that Uebersee itself, either under lease or otherwise, operated the mines.
2355 We have no way of knowing that and did not know it.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I wish to take sharp issue with Mr. Gallagher about the lease. We contend the evidence establishes just the opposite; that Fritz von Opel recommended that the mines be leased, but that they were not, because those letters show that Transdanubia continued producing bauxite and sending it to Germany all during the war.

Now, our position is that we show that Fritz von Opel went to Budapest; that he negotiated a contract for the shipment of bauxite from Transdanubia to Germany, which was to continue up until 1942, through 1942. We show that when he left Europe for the last time in April, he wrote to Giulini, a German aluminum manufacturer—

Mr. Gallagher: 1940.

Mr. Burling: Excuse me. I am sorry.

Mr. Gallagher: April, 1940.

Mr. Burling: He left April, 1940. He referred to the contract and said, "I trust our business associations will remain pleasant."

The evidence further shows that at all times during the war there was an investment of over a hundred thousand Swiss francs in Transdanubia by Uebersee.

2356 The record further shows that a bank loan was extended by Uebersee ultimately to Transdanubia and that actions were taken by Uebersee officials in 1942 with respect to the extension of that bank loan.

We have further shown, and Fritz von Opel has testified, that the letters which we are now discussing came from the files of Giulini.

We have shown at least a very strong prima facie case that those documents are in fact genuine. They do go to show that the Transdanubia was doing business, that is, producing bauxite, in Hungary.

Then, I say we get a question of law as to whether that much of a showing on the Government's part, and no showing of a cessation of business relationships between Uebersee and Transdanubia, constitutes doing business for the purposes of the Trading with the Enemy Act.

The Court: In other words, you say that if a corporation owned a subsidiary and that subsidiary does business with an enemy, and even if that should be without knowledge of the principal corporation, which is the plaintiff in this case, that would bar its recovering?

Mr. Burling: I said that would be a position which I might occupy if I had to.

The Court: On the question of that weight, I believe I will let that go to the end; I mean until the whole 2357 case is argued. There is no reason why I should not consider that in connection with the whole case.

Of course, the authenticity is one thing. Let me see if I get your position clearly, Mr. Burling. Of course, I know about the other transactions. He is not asking to strike those out. He is simply asking to strike these exhibits out, these letters—

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: And I understand you to say that these letters show that after the United States came to war with Hungary and Germany this Transdanubia, which was wholly owned by the plaintiff corporation, did business over there, and that that is binding on the plaintiff corporation, or at least you have a right to contend that, regardless of whether the plaintiff corporation knew about it or not?

Mr. Burling: I contend that also Your Honor should find that the plaintiff corporation did know about it, because the plaintiff corporation was active, prior to 1940, in producing bauxite in Hungary, and there is no adequate showing here that they stopped.

To be sure, Dr. Meier has testified that he personally gave no orders, but yet we do not know who voted the stock, and we do know that after war was declared between Hungary and the United States the plaintiff corpo-
2358 ration continued a bank loan, which I contend is doing business, as I contend that corporation A wholly owns subsidiary corporation B—

Mr. Gallagher: To clarify it, you mean a collateral for the loan?

Mr. Burling: No. I contend that the evidence shows that officers of corporation A—that is, Uebersee—took active steps to continue in existence a bank loan for corporation B after the war, and that that constitutes doing business; and then I want to show through these letters, that Transdanubia was doing business in Hungary because it was producing bauxite and shipping that to Germany for refining.

I say that there was a complete absence of showing that there was a severance between Transdanubia and Uebersee; that there is a burden—a major burden—on the plaintiffs to show that, since we have shown that Fritz von Opel very actively was producing bauxite after the European war had started, and that he entered into a contract—that he negotiated a contract—which was to run up through 1942, and that this bank loan was continued through 1942.

In the face of that evidence, I think there is a presumption that the relationship continued; and my friends have done nothing other than take the testimony of Dr.

2359 Meier—whatever weight that might be given—to rebut that presumption.

Transdanubia just disappears into a cloud in this record.

Now, of course, one thing that you can say very definitely is that the evidence establishes clearly that the mine was not leased in response to von Opel's recommendation, because these letters show that, on the contrary, Transdanubia went ahead and produced bauxite all during the war.

I think the letters are relevant and competent to show that Transdanubia was producing bauxite and that Transdanubia was doing business with Uebersee, and therefore Uebersee was doing business in an enemy country, and hence barred under the Trading with the Enemy Act.

Mr. Gallagher: I would merely like to point out a few examples. I do not want to make this our argument. This will all be a portion of our closing argument, Your Honor, but I merely want to point out that, in our opinion, if corporation A wholly owns corporation B, if there is no showing that corporation A gives directions as to the operation of corporation B during a war year, the fact that it is a 100 per cent investment is meaningless.

Mr. Burling makes quite a point of the fact that 2360 subsequent to the beginning of the war with England in 1939, these mines produced ore. Mr. von Opel's attitude is reflected when he says that 2,000 tons of ore came out of that mine, and the reason he dropped out of it was because he lost money. But General Motors, which bought the very plant which started the whole problem, namely, Opel Works, was being operated by Americans in Germany up until the time of Pearl Harbor, when the war was on between Germany and England; and their own deposition which they are going to submit, of Mr. Mooney, will show that he was in Germany running the Opel Works when England was at war with Germany.

Mr. Burling: I submit, before we get to that, which I think is incorrect, we had better read the Mooney deposition. I do not think it is correct.

Mr. Gallagher: I am merely pointing it out at this time because it is relevant to your argument. As far as the loan is concerned, I merely want to reclarify that at the moment—

The Court: The loan is not the point. That is for later argument. The only thing I am concerned about is whether these letters would have any pertinency or establish any claim of plaintiff corporation's having done business with an enemy.

Mr. Gallagher: We submit that, even without the 2361 cables from von Opel to Transdanubia, telling them, "No more money; go lease the mines," without a showing that Uebersee or one of its officers operated the Transdanubia mines, the fact that we own 100 per cent—the shares—is meaningless, because it is certainly apparent that the Hungarian Government would certainly take it over and mine the ore during the war, whether you had your own employees in or not.

The Court: I think I can dispose of this at the proper time.

Do you want leave to prove that the handwriting on these documents is the same as those on admitted documents?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor. I want that unless my friend will concede it.

The Court: I asked him if he wanted the opportunity to compare the handwritings on these exhibits with those that are already in evidence properly identified as authentic documents of Transdanubia.

Mr. Gallagher: If he feels it is going to show anything, I suggest that he do it; but, as far as we are concerned, we still feel that they do not carry any burden.

The Court: I will give him an opportunity to do it. I am not going to hold the case up for it. You can do that overnight. He has a deposition to read tomorrow.

2362 I am very much inclined to rule on this whole matter as part of the disposition of the case. As you gentlemen know, we are not in a position, in these evidence propositions, to take the time during the trial to rule on the inadmissibility, unless they are plainly inadmissible. Now, then, in my judgment they are not plainly inadmissible. I have some trouble with the point. I will be frank with you. I do not know how much the action of a wholly owned subsidiary would be binding on another corporation, unless you specifically do it; but I will give you a chance to argue that at the conclusion of the case. It comes within the part of the Trading with the Enemy Act that relates to— What is that language?

Mr. Gallagher: Doing business.

The Court: Doing business with an enemy.

Mr. Gallagher: It is Section 2.

The Court: I think I will dispose of it that way.

I will permit Mr. Burling tomorrow, if he wants to, to properly authenticate them. I think under the law he has a right to tie in the signatures with admitted signatures that have already been produced in evidence of these parties. If he wants to do that, I will give him a chance to do that tomorrow morning; and then, unless I change my mind overnight, which I do not think I will, I will 2363 leave the matter of the handling of it for final argument. I frankly do not know the answer. I will let you submit that at the complete disposition.

You could make that as one of your proposed findings of fact and conclusions of law, and Mr. Burling can ask me to find—you can dispose of it that way—as a matter of fact that Mr. von Opel in 1940 gave certain instructions, and that beginning in 1941, after the war, there was nothing given to stop them, but, on the contrary, that there were certain loans made, and so forth, and that Transdanubia, under these letters, carried on operations.

You can make that as a finding of fact, and then, on that, you conclude as a matter of law that that was doing business with an enemy within the meaning of the Act.

You can take the position, on the contrary, that it was not incumbent upon them, but this was a separate entity, and Mr. von Opel did not have to give countermanding orders to stop it, and you can make a finding of fact based on what Dr. Meier said, that nothing was done, and so forth, and that that is not doing business. I think you can enlarge it.

I think that is really the better way to do that on this, because it probably is a material matter in this 2364 case, which ought to be passed on in the admitting and striking of evidence.

On the authenticity of it, I think I would have to rule it out without authentication.

I think you can do that tomorrow.

How long will it take to read the deposition?

Mr. Gallagher: I have a couple of more motions to make.

I would also like to renew my objection to Defendant's Exhibit 30, which the Court permitted, at page 295 of the record, the Government to identify and then permitted them to introduce it in the record.

That was a letter that was written by John Thomas Smith of General Motors to Mr. Wronker-Flatow, who, under inquiry by Mr. Burling, said he had a faint recollection of it. But we submit that is surely hearsay. John Thomas Smith is not here, and we wish to renew our objection and move that the letter be withdrawn. That letter would call for considerable controverting—

The Court: Tell me the circumstances of this. I have forgotten.

Mr. Gallagher: Well, at page 295 of the record he had Mr. Wronker-Flatow—Mr. Stansfield—on the stand—

The Court: That is Mr. Wronker-Flatow?

Mr. Gallagher: That is right, and Mr. Burling 2365 started asking him, on page 295:

"Question: I show you now a letter dated June 2, 1932, a copy of such a letter, which was addressed by the general counsel to Dr. Manfred Wronker-Flatow; and I would like to ask you to look at it, to read it, and see whether it refreshes your recollection, whether you received this letter."

He says:

"That was in '32. I remember some, now that I read this letter, that I got some information from John Thomas Smith on the things; but they were transactions where I was not involved," and so forth.

"Question: But you recall having received this letter?

"Answer: I have a faint recollection that I did receive such a letter. You see, there were many things happened; I don't recall all of them.

"Mr. Burling: I will ask to have this letter marked as Defendant's Exhibit 30. The original is in English"—

Mr. Burling: You omitted a sentence in reading it. You omitted a sentence:

"It is telling the whole story."

Mr. Gallagher: "It is telling the whole story."

That is right; that should be in there.

2366 We had objected, prior to the showing of the letter, at page 295, and I stated, at the conclusion of that statement, that there was no further need to restate our objection.

The Court: Is that all there is on it?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Burling: No. If Your Honor please, at the top of page 297, the record reads as follows:

"The letter was accordingly marked and received in evidence as Defendant's Exhibit No. 30."

It went into evidence.

The Court: Well, I guess he can move to strike it even if it is in.

What do you say about that, Mr. Burling? His objection is that it is hearsay, a statement on the part of Smith.

Mr. Burling: Actually I was reading a deposition. I will ask Mr. Baum to argue it.

Mr. Baum: Your Honor, the letter and the deposition were read, and what Mr. Gallagher was reading was the deposition before Mr. Stansfield appeared in person, pursuant to your request, and in that deposition he was asked whether or not there had not been a proposal by the von Opels to reacquire the stock; and he said, when we got to this letter, that he remembered such a proposal, 2367 which is what is stated in this letter, by John Thomas Smith, and he remembered some wild schemes of fictitious proposals, and then he demurred at using "fictitious."

If I may have a moment, Your Honor, I will find that.

Mr. Gallagher: But the only thing that is in evidence out of that deposition is what is read in, Mr. Baum. I do not think anything further should be read into the record out of that at this time.

2368 The Court: I have got to get this straight. Is this the witness Stansfield testifying?

Mr. Gallagher: No; this is Stansfield at the time of the deposition.

The Court: That is right; I had not finished yet: Stansfield by deposition before he came here to the stand?

Mr. Gallagher: That is correct.

The Court: On direct by you, he was asked— What question was it?

Mr. Gallagher: This is their witness; they were interrogating him at that time. It was direct because they had brought him here, although we brought him here by offering him, as you recollect. When they came to that portion of the deposition where they were going to put in this letter from John Thomas Smith, I objected. I advised the Court:

"If Your Honor wants to read it, we have no objection to Your Honor's reading it."

But on the basis—

The Court: That is purely hearsay.

Mr. Baum: No, Your Honor, because it is my recollection that part of the deposition that is read into this record, Mr. Gallagher to the contrary notwithstanding, identified—in other words, the witness said he remembered facts which were stated in that letter. It is a letter addressed to the witness. He remembered having re-2369 ceived it.

The Court: You should have asked him to testify to the facts from his own recollection. I do not know how Stansfield could adopt facts that this man told him in a letter except on hearsay, unless he was present when it occurred.

Mr. Baum: Well, he was present throughout, as you recall, Your Honor. He was counsel for Adam Opel, A. G.

The Court: He got this in Germany, and this was written from New York, wasn't it?

Mr. Baum: That is correct. By the way, the attorneys for the plaintiff have admitted that this is a letter written in the regular course of business.

The Court: Well, he could have had letters written in the regular course of business, and they would be hearsay. The point counsel is trying to make is that Mr. Smith makes certain statements in this letter as to which he had no right to cross-examine or no privilege of cross-examining him on and of not having the judge see his manner of answering. That is always subject to the objection of hearsay.

Mr. Baum: Mr. Smith has been dead for about a year and a half.

The Court: That does not admit his letters.

Mr. Baum: But the testimony of the witness, when he was shown the letters was, "Yes, I remember these. Mr. Connor, who is Mr. Gallagher's partner, had plenty of opportunity—

Mr. Gallagher: I just read where he said:

2370 "I have a faint recollection that I did receive such a letter."

He said, "I remember I got information from John Thomas Smith, but the transactions were forward and backward."

The Court: I will let you pick out the part of the deposition which you say shows that Mr. Stansfield was testifying to facts in here. Even then, I do not see how I could let this stay in, because he had probably refreshed his recollection from a lot of documents not properly used in this case. I do not want to get in any error on an important point like this. I will give you a chance to argue that in the morning.

Mr. Gallagher: I would like to say, by way of going back, that you stated our position with respect to Transdanubia. We have had no right of cross-examination of either of those men whose letters they want to try to put in now, as to whether or not we did business with them or what the situation is. That is just exactly what we have been deprived of.

The Court: What letters do you mean?

Mr. Gallagher: The letters we are talking about, 99 to 104.

Mr. Burling: Those letters were written by officers of a wholly-owned subsidiary.

The Court: What he wants to show is that they were taken from the files of the regular corporation.

2371 Mr. Gallagher: No, they are not taken from the files of our corporation, if there has been any misunderstanding on that. They are taken from files of a German in Germany by the name of Giulini. These are not taken from Transdanubia's files. No, sir. I am sorry if I have not made this clear. These are out of a German witness' file in Germany.

The Court: I will hear you on that tomorrow morning. What is your third point? Maybe you had better bring that up. That does involve a point I had not thought of.

Mr. Gallagher: Then, the third point is something I merely want to clarify for the record. Defendant's Exhibits 55 and 56, which were the General Motors' interoffice fourth degree hearsay memorandum, Your Honor subsequently sustained objection to, and they withdrew them. At that time you made a statement that that portion of the testimony that might not have pertained to the objection could still stand. I should now like to renew that objection and move to strike now the testimony on pages 996 through 1009, which pertain to those General Motors exhibits which are now out of evidence.

The Court: I won't consider any testimony that relates to them.

Mr. Gallagher: That is what had me a little confused. In reading over the transcript and going back, there was a little language that had me perturbed as to whether something would be standing in that area.

2372 The Court: What I probably said, or what I meant to say, was that if he had any personal knowledge of the transaction, I would permit it, but the interoffice memorandum itself I did not believe was permissible.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all, Your Honor.

The Court: I will give you a chance to look that up tomorrow. Then you can prove your handwritings and can argue the proposition more in detail. I had thought I would put it off to the end, but I think I can dispose of it tomorrow.

There is no reason why we cannot close this whole case tomorrow, is there?

Mr. Gallagher: I certainly see none. I have a few questions to ask Mr. von Opel and two questions of Dr. Kronstein.

Mr. Burling: We shall have 20 minutes on a deposition plus a handwriting expert.

The Court: Maybe you gentlemen can work out that authenticity yourselves. If you cannot, I will hear it.

We will adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

(At 3:35 p.m. an adjournment was taken until Tuesday, January 11, 1949, at 10 a.m.)

* * * * * *

Mr. Gallagher: If Your Honor please, if I may say so, we overlooked yesterday, in our objection and our motion to strike, also, including Defendant's Exhibits 90 and 98. There was a little confusion in the record.

The Court: Let me have the numbers, now.

Mr. Gallagher: Nos. 90, 98, and 99 through 104. As to those our objection is renewed, and also a motion to strike.

For clarification, I should like to state to the Court, in view of Your Honor's statement yesterday, and to make clear any confusion, that these documents were never shown to us before trial. There was no stipulation covering these. They are not out of the files of either Uebersee or Transdanubia, to our knowledge. They are out of the files of Giulini, and not shown to have been kept in the regular course of business.

Mr. Frick, of Giulini Brothers, whose name was mentioned by Mr. Burling, is, to our knowledge, alive, and, to the best of our knowledge, was not brought.

Mr. Burling: I believe 97 and 98 and 90-A fall into different categories.

There is no question there whatsoever as to the genuineness of the documents, because the genuineness of the signature of the officer of Transdanubia was flatly and unequivocally admitted by Fritz von Opel. As to 98, 2377 it was an aid memoir or a memorandum prepared by somebody in Giulini regarding what apparently was a conference that took place between them and some people in Transdanubia.

The Court: I am going to rule on that as soon as I get the testimony in. Do you have some experts?

Mr. Burling: No, Your Honor, we do not. We were told by a handwriting expert that some of these signatures—there being two of each man—are inadequate, so that the expert could not testify unqualifiedly.

The Court: Suppose you read your deposition while Mr. Yates is assembling these. Then we will come right back to this.

DEPOSITION OF JAMES D. MOONEY

Mr. Baum: This is the deposition of James D. Mooney, taken in Toledo, Ohio.

May I ask, Your Honor: Is it agreed by counsel that we need not read the opening paragraph?

Mr. Gallagher: That is O. K.

(The deposition of the witness James D. Mooney was then read. Mr. Baum read the questions on direct examination, and Mr. Goldstein read the answers.)

"JAMES D. MOONEY, of lawful age, being by me first duly sworn as hereinafter certified, deposes and says as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Harris:

2378 "Q. Mr. Mooney, will you state your full name for the record? A. James D. Mooney.

"Q. Where is your residence? A. 2404 Parkwood Avenue, Toledo, Ohio.

"Q. What is your present occupation? A. I am Chairman of the Board and President of Willys Overland Motors, Incorporated, Toledo, Ohio.

"Q. For how long have you held that position? A. Since January, 1946.

"Q. Were you ever employed by the General Motors Corporation? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. During what period? A. From 1919 to 1941, and then later from 1945 to 1946.

"Q. In what capacities were you employed by General Motors? Could you give us the various capacities chronologically by dates? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What I would like to get is simply a description of the positions you held and the dates? A. I guess that is it (refers to paper).

"Mr. Harris: Suppose you take down the following, in answer to this question: Mr. Mooney stated that 2379 he had recently prepared a summary of his experience, for the Willys Overland Publicity Department. It was stipulated by Mr. Gallagher and Mr. Harris that this summary prepared by Mr. Mooney might be copied into the record, in answer to the question.

"Mr. Gallagher: That is all right."

Mr. Baum: On page 3:

"Thereupon, a copy was made for the reporter, and is herein incorporated into the record as follows:

"James D. Mooney was graduated from the Case Institute of Technology, Cleveland, Ohio, 1908, with a Bachelor of Science degree in Mining and Metallurgy. Later he received post-graduate degrees in Mechanical Engineering and Doctor of Engineering from Case and a Bachelor of Science degree in Commerce from New York University.

"Mr. Mooney, during World War I, served overseas as a Captain in the 309th Ammunition Regiment, 159th Field Artillery.

"After World War I, Mr. Mooney became a special assistant to Alfred P. Sloan who then, in 1919, was a Vice-President of General Motors, in charge of the Accessories Divisions.

"In 1920, Mr. Mooney was made President and General Manager of the Remy Electric Company, a General 2380 Motors subsidiary, manufacturing electrical equipment, starting motors, generators and ignition for cars and trucks.

"In December, 1921, he was made General Manager of the General Motors Export Company.

"In 1922, he was elected to the General Motors Board of Directors, and during the following years served on the Corporation's Operation Committee, Executive Committee and Engineering Committee.

"He became successively President of the General Motors Export Company, President of the General Motors Overseas Corporation and Group Executive in charge of the Corporation's Overseas Operations.

"From 1923 to 1939, he installed, constructed and organized the Corporation's world-wide scheme of overseas manufacturing and assembly plants and warehouses.

"In 1940, Mr. Mooney was relieved of his responsibilities for the General Motors Overseas Operations, and was made Chairman of a small group of Directors given special sanction by the Board to plan and execute quickly the conversion of the Corporation's manufacturing facilities from the production of cars and trucks to the production of planes, engines, tanks, guns and ammunition for the Army and Navy.

"He became a member of the Naval Reserve in 1937, and was called into active service a month before Pearl 2381 Harbor. He was made head of the Production Engineering Section of the Bureau of Aeronautics with the rank of Lieutenant Commander. He later was transferred to the Advance Base Division, and was promoted to the rank of Captain while on duty in England as a member of the staff planning the Normandy invasion.

"In 1944-45 he served on the staff of the Chief of Naval Operations as part of the planning group charged with making recommendations for improving naval operations in the Pacific.

"In 1945, upon release from active service with the Navy, Mr. Mooney returned to General Motors and resumed his duties as Group Executive in charge of the Overseas Operations, a member of the Board of Directors and Administration Committee.

"Mr. Mooney resigned from General Motors in January, 1946, to join Willys-Overland Motors, as Chairman of the Board, President, Chairman of the Executive Committee and a member of the Finance Committee."

"Q. I call it to your attention, Mr. Mooney, that this memorandum of your experience which you prepared states that from 1923 to 1939, you were with the General Motors Export Company. In what capacity were you serving with General Motors Export Corporation in 1931 and 1932? A. Well, I was the responsible operating executive for anything in the General Motors Corporation that was 2382 outside of the United States and Canada.

"Q. That includes Germany? A. Oh, yes.

"Q. Where was your office? A. New York.

"Q. Did you sometimes travel through Germany during that period on the business of General Motors Export? A. Yes, sir."

Mr. Baum: I skip, now, to the first question on page 6:

"Q. Did you know in your capacity as President of General Motors Export Corporation who owned the stock of Adam Opel A. G. in the year 1930 and the first part of 1931? A. At that time I knew who owned it. It was part of my responsibility to know who owned it.

"Q. Who did own Adam Opel A. G. at that time? A. That is where you get into this memory thing. At that time I knew who owned it; but I would have to depend on my memory now for 1931 and 1932, and that is where I have to saw off because I could not say positively now out of my memory. Therefore might I sum up the answer: at the time I had a very definite responsibility for knowing who owned the stock of all these companies; that was my peculiar responsibility, and I knew at that time.

2383 "Q. But you no longer recall with certainty the details of the stock ownership of Adam Opel A. G. in 1930? A. That is right.

"Q. For the purpose of refreshing your recollection, I show you now a photostat of a letter dated April 11, 1929, from Wilhelm von Opel to the National City Bank, of New York. This photostat has been marked Defendant's Exhibit A. The typed words 'Exhibit A' at the top are not part of the original letter. Will you please read that?

"(Witness does.)

"Q. Does this refresh your recollection as to the ownership of certain of the shares of stock of Adam Opel A. G. during the year 1930? * * *

"Q. Will you go ahead and answer the question, Mr. Mooney? A. What is the question?"

Mr. Baum: The question was read to the witness.

"A. No, it does not.

"Q. I call it to your attention that this letter from Wilhelm von Opel to the National City Bank appears to constitute part of an agreement whereby he deposited 600 shares of Adam Opel, A. G. with the Bank, subject 2384 to certain rights of purchase by General Motors, or subject to certain rights on the part of Mr. von Opel to require General Motors to purchase. Does that refresh your recollection? * * *

"Q. You are to go ahead and answer the question, Mr. Mooney. A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you now recall that this was part of an arrangement between Wilhelm von Opel and General Motors whereby these 600 shares of stock owned by Wilhelm von Opel were deposited with the National City Bank, subject to the arrangements set out in this letter? A. I recall the general theory or the substance of the deal between Opel and General Motors because I was in on that; and, naturally, it was left to our General Counsel to handle these technical details.

"Q. Please tell us what you recall about the arrangements between General Motors and the Opels. * * * A. I remember that in essence it was considered useful mutually between Geheimrat von Opel and the General Motors group for the Opel group to retain some interest in the Opel Company. Part of the story on that was that—

"Q. Suppose you go back to the purchase of the Opel Works by General Motors. Do you mean at the time of that purchase it was considered desirable that the Opels 2385 retain some interest? A. Yes, that is the point.

"Q. In what year was that purchase? A. That was in 1929.

"Q. Go ahead. A. We wanted part of the Opel group, particularly Geheimrat himself, to give us a hand in the general administration, and what you might call the very general management of the property; and it was thought advisable from the General Motors standpoint to retain and have retained some Opel interest in the property because, naturally, if they held on to some of the stock in the company, they would have an incentive for working with the American management.

"Q. Was an arrangement therefore made with Geheimrat whereby he continued to hold some of his stock after the sale in 1929 to General Motors? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you learn something during 1931 that Geheimrat Wilhelm von Opel was considering selling out the balance of his stock to General Motors? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you recall how you learned that? A. In discussions with Geheimrat, he told me that he was considering it, and I made a plea to him to retain his interest.
2386 We had a very frank discussion about the thing between the two of us. He wanted me to tell him whether I really meant what I said, that I wanted him to go along with the company and be chairman of it, and actually be what you might call the public head man in Germany. I told him very earnestly at the time that I was eager to retain him as chairman and retain his interest in the property."

Mr. Baum: I skip now to the middle of page 10:

"Q. Could you give us as nearly as you can the date of these discussions with Wilhelm von Opel? A. There is where my memory is a bit vague, my recollection of it at the moment. I suppose if I refreshed my memory and took a chronology of my trips and made studious efforts—you know how you stimulate your memory by putting different pieces in—then I could tell you. It was, roughly, out of my vague recollection, two or three years after we got under way, perhaps a couple of years after we sort of got under way with the arrangements, trying to operate the company in harmony with the Opel people, starting with Geheimrat.

"Q. You do recall the date? A. No, I do not.

"Q. For the purpose of refreshing your recollection, I show you now a photostat of a memorandum dated 2387 October 22, 1931, from A. P. Sloan, Jr., to Donaldson Brown—you have seen that?

"Mr. Gallagher: We have seen it.

"Q. Will you please read that, Mr. Mooney?

"(Witness does.)

"Q. Have you read that, Mr. Mooney (Defendant's Exhibit B)? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Does that memorandum refresh your recollection as to the date of these conversations with Wilhelm von Opel? * * * A. It does not refresh my memory about the dates. It refreshes my memory about the general principle that I was interested in at the time, of keeping Geheimrat interested in going along as chairman of the property.

"Q. Will you tell us what you can recall concerning your negotiations or discussions with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel concerning his retaining his stock for a while longer? * * * A. My peculiar responsibility in General Motors for the various properties overseas was particularly in the field of getting them managed, which, in turn, meant providing management personnel for the various properties, and this included, of course, the German property, Adam Opel A. G.

2388 Geheimrat von Opel had been concerned for some years with the management of the property, was intimately concerned with all the details of operating it, knew the motor car business very well and generally had a type of personality that you look for in the management field. We had undertaken the problem of managing Opel with the approach that he would provide American technical know-how and skilled technical personnel; but that over in the fields that particularly related to German public relations, relations with dealers, etc., we would retain as many of the German executives as possible, so that we would get the advantage of the combination of knowledge and experience in Germany with technical knowledge of how to design and build cars and trucks. Geheimrat was a very important person on the German side of the management, so I was eager to retain him as part of the management; and so, therefore, when he began discussing with me the idea of selling the rest of his stock, I tried earnestly to discourage him from selling out.

"Q. With this memorandum of Sloan's before you, and with your recollection refreshed by it, can you state whether it was in October, 1931, that you discussed with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel an arrangement whereby he might retain his shares for a longer period of time? A. I cannot remember that exact date. I think it is seventeen years ago and I don't think I would be honest if I said I could 2389 remember the exact date at that time. I can remember the substance and principles of things we were striving for, but I just have not got that kind of memory; so therefore I cannot say, I cannot identify, any exact dates. If it were useful, those dates could be nailed down; if they are in controversy and there are two sides to the story, you can certainly get those nailed down. A little research upon my travels would settle that."

Mr. Baum: Skipping now, to the question toward the bottom of the page:

"Q. Do you recall whether you reported to Mr. Sloan your conversations with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel about his retaining his stock for a while longer? I am not asking you for your general practice on reporting to Mr. Sloan, but whether you recall reporting to him on this particular matter? A. There is where the memory thing comes in again. To remember a telephone conversation of some kind or something you did seventeen years ago; all I can say is that you have to exclude that. Quite obviously, if you are on the operating side of an industrial company, you report to the financial guys and lawyers, and let them carry on the rest of the day's work. You tell them what in principle you would like to get done, and they go along and do the best they can and mop up in back of you.
2390 "Q. I call your attention to the first paragraph of this document that has been marked as Defendant's Exhibit B, which states: * * *

"'I just want to put on record what Mr. Mooney told me over the telephone as to his recommendation with respect to the holdings of Dr. Wilhelm in Adam Opel A. G.'

"What I am asking you is whether you recall having such a telephone conversation? A. No, I do not.

"Q. Have you any reason to think that the statements in this memorandum, insofar as they refer to such a conversation with you, are inaccurate? A. I have no reason to believe—".

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment. At that point I object. I thought we were going to cover that. This is one of the exhibits excluded from evidence, 55 and 56, definitely a hearsay memorandum prepared in America, not prepared abroad. As a matter of fact, I think it is completely irrelevant that we are going any further with the question on the statements appearing in the memorandum, when the memorandum has been excluded.

Mr. Baum: I agree, Your Honor; I will skip that. I will go to the top of page 15. I will read the answer after the objection there—the ninth line:

2391 "A. I recall that after my conversation with him at Russelsheim, he seemed to be quite convinced—and by this time our relations were of such a nature that we were quite frank with each other—he seemed to be quite convinced that I meant what I said when I told him that I wanted him to retain his position as chairman of the board and retain his financial interest in the company.

"Q. Do you remember whether Mr. Wilhelm von Opel made a definite proposal that he would retain his stock on certain conditions? * * * A. I remember he told me he would proceed on the course generally of retaining his stock. We did not have—at least I have no recollection of the specific conditions at the time."

Mr. Baum: Going to the top of page 16:

"Q. Do you recall whether Mr. Wilhelm von Opel stated that he would be willing to retain his stock if the obligation of General Motors to pay for it were changed from one to pay in marks to one to pay in dollars? * * * A. No, I do not.

"Q. I now show you a copy of a radiogram or telegram dated October 23, 1931, from Wilhelm von Opel to Mr. Sloan, at General Motors, New York City. This document consists of two pages and is marked Defendant's Ex-2392 hibit D. Have you read that radiogram, Mr. Mooney?
A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Can you state whether this radiogram dealt with the negotiations which you have already described between you and Mr. Wilhelm von Opel, looking toward his retaining his stock?"

Mr. Gallagher: Will you please identify, Mr. Baum, that exhibit, now, with our new exhibits, so that the record is correct on it?

Mr. Baum: I believe that is Defendant's Exhibit 6 at present.

Mr. Gallagher: All right.

Mr. Baum: Page 16:

"A. Yes, it fits in with it.

"Q. With your recollection refreshed by that radiogram, can you now recall whether Mr. Wilhelm von Opel proposed to retain part of his stock if he were guaranteed payment in gold instead of marks? * * * A. I can remember that he proposed to retain part of his stock; but the technical details about what the foundation should be on them, whether gold or marks, I cannot remember.

"Q. Do you know what was the result of these negotiations between Wilhelm von Opel and General Motors about

Mr. von Opel's retaining some or all of his 2393 stock? * * ? A. I can remember that it went into some kind of confusion and misunderstanding between Germany and New York somewhere. Just how that got cleared up or what happened, I can't remember.

"Q. Do you know whether any arrangement was ever made between General Motors and Geheimrat whereby he did retain his stock? * * * A. I can't remember that positively, no.

"Q. Do you know whether at that time Geheimrat went ahead with his intention to sell his stock to General Motors? * * * A. I can't remember."

Mr. Baum: Skipping, now, to the top of page 18:

"Q. Do you mean your testimony to be, Mr. Mooney, that you are unable at the present time to recall whether these negotiations with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel resulted in his retaining his stock, or whether he went ahead and sold it? A. Yes, that is what I mean. * * *

"Q. During your discussions with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel about his retaining stock in Adam Opel A. G., were you ever told by him that he no longer owned any stock in Adam Opel A. G.? * * * A. No, I was not.

"Q. Were you ever told by anyone else at the time 2394 of those negotiations that Mr. Wilhelm von Opel no longer owned the stock? * * * A. I don't remember that.

"Q. Do you remember whether you were ever told at the time of these discussions with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel about his retaining stock in Adam Opel A. G. that he no longer owned any stock? * * * A. No, sir.

"Q. Do you mean, Mr. Mooney, that you were not so told? I am not clear how you meant to answer the question. A. The only thing I can remember— * * *

"A. —about that, I had general reasons to presume he was still chairman of the company, in conformance with the general understanding that we had had. * * *

"Q. At the time you were discussing with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel his retaining stock in Adam Opel A. G., was it your understanding he owned the stock you were discussing? * * * A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And at the time of these discussions, were you ever told by Wilhelm von Opel that he had made a gift of his stock in Adam Opel A. G. to his son Fritz? * * * A. No, I was not.

"Q. When did you first hear of such a gift? * * * A. Never heard of it.

2395 "Q. At the time of these negotiations with Mr. Wilhelm von Opel about his retaining stock in Adam Opel A. G., did you ever receive any proposal that Mr. Fritz von Opel hold shares of stock in Adam Opel A. G.? * * * A. No, sir.

"Q. If the proposal to retain shares of stock in Adam Opel A. G. had been made in behalf of Fritz von Opel, rather than by Wilhelm von Opel, would you have favored the acceptance of the proposal? * * * A. No, sir.

"Q. Will you please give us the reasons for your answer? * * *

"Q. Will you please tell us why you would not have been interested in the proposition that Mr. Fritz von Opel retain or hold stock in Adam Opel A. G.? * * * A. Because Fritz had shown disinclination to be mixed up with the management of the company.

"Q. Had Mr. Fritz von Opel worked for General Motors Export Corporation? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you recall in what capacity he had been employed by it? A. Not very clearly. As I recollect it he was employed over at General Motors Continental S. A., Antwerp, Belgium, for a while.

2396 "Q. What type of plant was the plant in Antwerp? A. An assembly plant.

"Q. Do you recall what Mr. Fritz von Opel's duties and responsibilities at that plant were? A. No, I do not."

Mr. Baum: That concludes the direct examination, Your Honor.

(The questions on cross-examination were read by Mr. Gallagher, and the answers were read by Mr. Boland.)

Mr. Gallagher: This is the cross-examination by Mr. Gallagher:

"Q. Mr. Mooney, are you familiar with the fact that this week General Motors took over control again of the Adam Opel A. G. Plant of Germany? A. I saw it in the newspaper a couple of days ago, yes. * * *

"Q. Subsequent to April of 1929, when General Motors assumed control of the Adam Opel A. G. Works in Germany, did you go to Germany very often to visit those facilities? A. Well, yes, I did; I went rather often.

"Q. You stated that Geheimrat von Opel and you became quite frank after a period of time; on how many occasions did you see him in Germany during the first two or three years of G. M. operation of those facilities?
2397 A. Oh, perhaps an average of a few days every three months.

"Q. How did you address him? A. Geheimrat.

"Q. You did not call him Bill or William? A. No, sir.

"Q. You have previously stated in your testimony that he made no statement to you about any gift to Fritz. Did he ever make any statement to you about any gift to his daughter? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did he ever discuss with you the settlement he made on his daughter at the time of her marriage? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did he ever discuss with you how he had invested his wealth? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did he ever discuss with you the contents of his will? A. No, sir.

"Q. Mr. von Opel was considerably older than you, was he not, Mr. Mooney? A. Yes, I think he was about ten years older.

"Q. How did he address you, by what salutation? A. Mr. Mooney.

2398 "Q. In 1929 when General Motors determined to acquire the Opel Works, did you make that decision for the General Motors Corporation? A. No, I made it as part of the group that visited Germany at that time.

"Q. Who was the deciding factor in the purchase? A. The group.

"Q. You were one of the group? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How large a group was that, Mr. Mooney? A. About five, as I recollect.

"Q. Who else were in that group? A. Donaldson Brown.

"Q. Donaldson Brown, Financial Adviser of General Motors? A. Yes, chairman of the Finance Committee.

"Q. John Thomas Smith was General Counsel? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Who else, Mr. Mooney? A. Albert Bradley.

"Q. What was his position? A. Vice-President in Charge of Finances.

"Q. Anybody else? A. I think Fred Fisher was in on part of it.

"Q. What was his position with General Motors?

2399 A. Vice-President and member of the Board and Executive Committee.

"Q. Was there anybody else, to your recollection? A. Myself, of course.

"Q. And yourself? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was Mr. Sloan a member of that group? A. No, sir.

"Q. He was not? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did he participate in the determination to acquire these works? A. Yes, he did.

"Q. Subsequent to or contemporaneous with the time you gentlemen— A. Contemporaneously.

"Q. Did you make that determination here in the States or in Germany? A. Germany.

"Q. Where was Mr. Sloan at that time? A. New York.

"Q. Did your group submit the proposition to him? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you have to await his approval? A. Those things were decided as part of the group. He did not 2400 take any positive position. We decided as a group those matters that were of mutual interest to him.

"Q. If he had objected would the deal have fallen through? A. Not necessarily.

"Q. Geheimrat von Opel knew Mr. Sloan personally, did he not? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He also knew Mr. Donaldson Brown? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He knew you, of course? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He knew Mr. John Thomas Smith? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did he know any of these other gentlemen you mentioned—Mr. Bradley? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. In other words, is it true that he knew all of the top level men in General Motors? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. As a matter of fact, those were the men with whom he dealt when he entered into the escrow agreement with General Motors; is that not correct? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And it is a further fact, is it not, that the 2401 escrow agreement was entered into between Wilhelm von Opel and General Motors Corporation, not General Motors Export Subdivision; is that correct? A. That is right.

"Q. Getting down to the latter part of 1931, specifically, between the date October 17, which is just prior to the date appearing on Defendant's Exhibit B which defendant's counsel showed you, which is the Donaldson Brown memorandum; just prior to that time and for a period of the next three or four weeks, when was it during that period that you first learned that a call had been made on General Motors for them to purchase the remaining Opel shares? A. I don't remember when a call was made.

"Q. Defendant's Exhibit B, dated October 22, reflects a telephone conversation which you had with Mr. Sloan. Do you recollect where you made that telephone call from? A. No, I do not.

"Q. Do you have any recollection whether or not at that time you were in Germany? A. No, I have not.

"Q. Do you recollect at the time that these conversations which you have mentioned, with respect to Wilhelm von Opel retaining his interest in the Opel Works; 2402 whether or not John Thomas Smith came to Germany to participate in those discussions with you? A. I have a vague recollection of his being there shortly after I had had one of the conversations.

"Q. You at this time, if I understand you correctly, have no specific recollection of any details that transpired at that time; only a general recollection that discussions were had with Geheimrat von Opel looking toward his retaining a stock interest in Opel; is that correct? A. Yes, that is right.

"Q. Do you recollect how many times you talked to him at this time about this situation? A. Well, several.

"Q. Do you recollect that at this time Fritz von Opel also came to Germany? A. No, sir.

"Q. Do you have any recollection of the fact that Fritz von Opel had served prior to this time a notice on General Motors calling on them to purchase the Opel shares? A. No, I have not.

"Q. When you had your conversations with Wilhelm, then, do I understand you correctly you had no knowledge of the fact that a call had already been made on General Motors to purchase these 600 shares? A.
2403 I have no recollection of it; you use 'knowledge'; I say 'recollection.'

"Q. Am I correct in saying, Mr. Mooney, that you were in favor of Wilhelm von Opel retaining what you thought his interest to be in Opel? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Am I also correct in stating that from your knowledge, John Thomas Smith, Alfred Sloan, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Donaldson Brown and all the other gentlemen whom you have mentioned as part of this group, were interested in having Wilhelm von Opel retain what you thought his interest to be in the Opel Works? A. They left it to me to operate these properties, and, in turn, provide largely the management personnel for them; so that when I took the position that I wanted to have Geheimrat retained in the management as chairman, they went along with that.

"Q. Do you recollect that John Thomas Smith—you said you turned these matters over to the lawyers—do you recollect that John Thomas Smith was also interested, as you were, in having Wilhelm retain what you thought his interest was? A. That is right.

"Q. Do you recollect generally from your own recollection, as refreshed from the memoranda which de-2404 fense counsel has shown you, Defendant's Exhibit B, that Donaldson Brown and Mr. Sloan were likewise interested in having Opel retain what you thought his interest to be? A. Yes, that is right.

"Q. By the way, Mr. Evans was manager of the Opel Works, was he not? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He was likewise interested in having Wilhelm von Opel retain what you thought his interest to be in Opel? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you recall Mr. Wronker-Flatow? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Mr. Flatow was counsel for that subdivision of General Motors Export; is that correct? A. He was for a while. I am a little vague about that. * * *

"Q. Pertaining to the Opel German properties? A. He was counsel for a while, and then took an executive job down at Opel. I am a little vague about that.

"Q. He was also interested in behalf of General Motors in having Mr. Opel retain what you thought his interest to be? A. He never discussed the thing with me 2405 and I never asked him whether he was:

"Q. You did not ask Mr. Flatow his ideas? A. No, sir.

"Q. These other gentlemen were interested, as you were, in Mr. Opel retaining what you thought his interest to be? A. That is right.

"Q. At that time, if I understand you correctly, Mr. Wilhelm von Opel indicated to you he was interested in retaining what you thought his interest to be, is that correct? A. He was willing to retain his interest as part of the business of retaining the job of chairman, and going along to give us a hand to operate the company.

"Q. And retaining this stock interest that you discussed? A. That is right.

"Q. But in spite of the unanimity of desire on the part of all you gentlemen, the interest was not retained; is that correct? A. That is the thing I don't recall, whether it was retained or not.

"Q. You know that the Opels did not have any interest in the Opel Plant subsequent to 1931, do you not, 2406 Mr. Mooney? A. I would have to take your say on that. I really don't recall that now. I have sort of lost track of that.

"Q. You never saw the records of General Motors to disclose whether or not they finally, after the fall of 1931— A. I suppose I did at the time. At the time, as I say, I knew all about these things; but now, seventeen years ago, I could not say, 'Well, they did this or that.' I just can't recollect.

"Q. Do you not recollect that Fritz von Opel was opposed to retaining an interest in the Opel Works? A. I don't know that.

"Q. Just to clarify a few other things, Mr. Mooney; you stated that Fritz von Opel worked for General Motors Export Continental S. A., at Antwerp: Is it not a fact that while Mr. von Opel was making a study of methods of production and operation, he was not an employee of General Motors Export? A. I don't remember.

"Q. Is it not a fact he never drew any salary from General Motors Export? A. I don't know. He passed out of my sort of horizon or area of visibility.

"Q. You have no recollection? A. Not only no 2407 recollection, but I did not know at the time what he was doing; and it did not make any difference to me."

"Q. When you say employed, you are not certain he was employed, as we use the term usually; he was around the property, but whether on the payroll you could not state at this time? A. No, I just don't know; did not know at the time."

Mr. Gallagher: Going over to page 31:

"Q. Have you stated previously, or does the memorandum which you prepared with respect to the dates of your association with General Motors reflect when you left Germany? A. No, sir.

"Q. Do you recollect when you left Germany? A. I was in and out.

"Q. I mean when you left prior to the war. Was it 1939, 1940 or 1941? When did you sever your connection? A. (Witness refers to memorandum.) Yes, in 1940, it says here. Have you looked at this at all?

"Q. Just briefly. Do you remember independently of that memorandum whether or not you left in 1940, or was it 1941? A. I was in Germany the last time in the spring of 1940.

2408 "Mr. Gallagher: That is all, Mr. Mooney. Thank you."

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, there are two pending arguments—two motions to strike. One concerns the Giulini document, and one concerns Defendant's Exhibit 30. I would respectfully suggest that we discuss the latter one now, because the memorandum directly relates to the subject matter of the Mooney deposition. There was a motion made to strike this document.

Mr. Gallagher: Will you identify to the Court Defendant's Exhibit 30, which is the letter to Wronker-Flatow from Mr. Smith we claim is misleading?

Mr. Burling: The motion to strike as made yesterday—I myself did not take the deposition; I was not in the matter then—I left to Mr. Baum to argue. Since then Your Honor said we could speak further about it today. I find that Mr. Baum was correct: there was an additional reference.

Mr. Gallagher: I thought His Honor really ruled on this yesterday.

The Court: No; I will give him a chance to argue.

Mr. Gallagher: All right.

Mr. Burling: I submit that the motion to strike cannot be supported, on the ground that the plaintiff here made the following admission concerning this document:

2409 that on June 2, 1932, John Thomas Smith, General Counsel of General Motors Corporation, sent a letter to Mr. Wronker-Flatow in the regular course of business; that said letter was received by Manfred Wronker-Flatow; that at the time the said letter was sent a file carbon copy thereof was made by General Motors Corporation in the regular course of business; that it was the regular course of business of General Motors Corporation to make such file carbon copy; and that the exhibit attached hereto is a true and correct copy of said letter and of said file carbon copy.

I submit that under the Federal Shop-Book rule—and I am sure Your Honor is familiar with it. Would it be helpful to you if I read it?

The Court: I know the shop-book rule, but you may read it.

Mr. Burling: "In any court of the United States and in any court established by Act of Congress, any writing or record, whether in the form of an entry in a book or otherwise, made as a memorandum or record of any act, transaction, occurrence, or event, shall be admissible as evidence of said act, transaction, occurrence, or event, if it shall appear that it was made in the regular course of any business and that it was the regular course of such business to make such memorandum or record at the time of such act, transaction, occurrence, or event 2410 or within a reasonable time thereafter. All other circumstances of the making of such writing or record, including lack of personal knowledge by the entrant or maker, may be shown to affect its weight but they shall not affect its admissibility. The term 'business' shall include business, profession, occupation, and calling of every kind."

Now, yesterday my friend, Mr. Gallagher, said the problem was the same as the problem of the other two General Motors documents. I submit that this letter shows on its face that that is not so. There is no multiple hearsay here. In this case, John Thomas Smith, in the regular course of his business as general counsel of General Motors, is advising Wronker-Flatow, as general counsel of Opel, what he, John Thomas Smith, had personal knowledge of—that is, what Wilhelm von Opel said to him and what Fritz von Opel said to him.

As I say, there is no multiple hearsay problem, as there was in the case of the other document, where Sloan was repeating to Brown what Smith had told him Mooney had said over the phone. I admit that that was multiple hearsay.

Mr. Gallagher: Have you finished?

Mr. Burling: So our argument is that this writing is a matter of the personal knowledge of John Thomas Smith of what admissions were made to him by Wilhelm and Fritz von Opel and, hence, within the scope of the statute.
2411 The Court: Let me see that Federal statute which you have there.

2412 You see, I make a distinction, Mr. Burling, between what is referred to here as a writing in the form of an entry, whether in a book or a memorandum, or an act and a writing which recites a conversation with another party. This letter indicates an act on the part of the General Motors Corporation, of which this man is an agent, so that any act that he took might be admissible if that act is material; but I do not think that a memorandum of a conversation you had with another party, even if it is written, comes within this. The conversation itself would not be admissible unless it was an admission—

Mr. Burling: That is exactly my point. I agree. If Smith was recording what Jones told him Brown told him Fritz von Opel said, I think I would have to agree. I say there is no hearsay here except as to Smith.

The Court: Isn't that enough?

Mr. Burling: No, if Your Honor please. The shop-book rule has always been recognized.

The Court: The shop-book rule is here. The shop book is a memorandum of a transaction which is written into the shop book. Now, this statute extends it to a memorandum of an act or an event, not the substance of a conversation. If you record an act of the corporation, just like you do in the shop book, so and so was shipped that day, or such and such an act was done, and they 2413 record it, any writing of that would be evidence of that; but a conversation that this man heard von Opel telling him—

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor—

The Court: Just a minute, I will call on you if I need help. According to Geheimrat, "He never received my cable," and so forth. "This time Fritz is violently opposed." That is not an act of this company or of this man in the regular course of business.

Mr. Burling: It is a report of admissions made to General Motors representatives by he von Opels, who are the real parties in interest in this litigation. The Office of Alien Property has proven almost all its cases by documents of this sort. Many other cases, of considerably larger sums, are coming up involving this same problem. We have done enormous work on it.

The Court: Yes; I can understand.

Mr. Burling: Before Your Honor rules, I will ask leave to submit a memorandum.

The Court: I will be glad to consider it. The point I have in mind is this. I am perfectly familiar with the fact that you can lay the foundation to contradict Wronker-Flatow—Stansfield—by anything in this memorandum which brought to his attention a fact which he either acquiesced in or confirmed by a replying letter, or 2414 if he was challenged to make a statement and he did not, it might be an admission on his part. I am familiar with that approach.

The thing that concerns me is, where we have a letter which contains a statement as to what the attitude of another person was—coming right here, the attitude of Fritz violently opposing—whether that recital of the feeling of a certain individual is an act or an event or a transaction or occurrence within the meaning of this statute. There may be some cases on that, on this very statute. I will be glad to consider them if you produce them.

Now, a statement of a person made to him is not the thing that ordinarily is an event within the terms of that.

Mr. Burling: We have many cases that we say do say that. May I say this? Will Your Honor reserve the ruling until final argument in this case and give us a chance to prepare a memorandum on it, which we will submit?

The Court: Yes, I am perfectly willing to do that. The importance of my decision here is whether I rely upon it in the final analysis or not.

Mr. Burling: To be quite frank, Your Honor, my concern with this is equally with the precedent value of this. I have personal knowledge of cases involving hundreds of millions of dollars.

2415 The Court: Yes. I will tell you my misgiving about it. Of course, this is a letter from an outside party. It is a letter from the general counsel of the General Motors. That is who it is?

Mr. Burling: Yes.

The Court: There is not any question about the authenticity in this case. I think you have established it.

Mr. Burling: It is admitted, and the regularity of the course—

The Court: A letter in the regular course of business. That reduces the question to the proposition whether this is a recordation or a memorandum in writing of an act, transaction, occurrence, or event in the regular course of business and it was the course of business to make such memorandum.

What I am having my trouble with is whether it would be the custom of a business to make a memorandum of a conversation. We know it is customary to make a memorandum of an act, such as a shipment, or such as what the price is. That is oftentimes told. That is the shop-book entry. It is the contemporaneous writing down of an event which is a part of the business.

Now, is it the custom, in a business of this sort, to make a memorandum or record at the time of the act, 2416 or within a reasonable time thereafter, of a conversation? That is apparently what this is. I have not read this carefully enough to see whether there are any acts in that.

Mr. Burling: May I state what my position is?

The Court: Yes. Tell me what you are trying to prove on it.

Mr. Burling: On the question of admissibility, we say that where negotiations are carried on by Geheimrat von Opel in 1932 to reacquire the Opel shares from General Motors, those negotiations looking toward a transfer of stock are transactions within the purview of the statute.

The Court: Yes, that would be. This is a recordation of the transactions.

Mr. Burling: I believe, if Your Honor please, that the statute was passed for the precise purpose of getting away from the narrow rule that only things kept in shop books, in technical books, could be kept, but that writings kept in the regular course of business—

The Court: Your shop books, as a rule, did not record conversations. He says, "Fritz was very violently opposed to his father's proposition; in fact, this opposition was one of the reasons why he wanted to return to lay them before his father in person."

2417 I would like very much to be enlightened on it.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I have the decisions here, and this has been determined in this circuit by 147 Fed. (2d).

The Court: Here is my situation with regard to all of these items. You gentlemen know the rule, I am sure, in equity in these non-jury cases. The important proposition is what I consider in the final analysis. It is not whether I admit it and then strike it. That is not so important. The question is whether I consider it ultimately.

I am perfectly willing, in view of the importance of this as a precedent in other cases, to permit him to submit his authorities at the time of the hearing and, you, of course, submit yours. What I am doing now is to tell him the difficulties I am having and see if he can find anything on it.

I have not had any trouble on the writing. In the course of business, if a man would make a writing of this sort recording an event, I have not any trouble with the fact at all that it is shop book.

The only thing I have trouble with is whether that writing is entitled to recite impressions of one member of the company as to the attitude of a person, a recital of what was said to him at different times. If the cases are 2418 with you on that, of course, I will admit it. I am perfectly willing to reserve decision on that. That to some extent might apply to some of these other cases.

Mr. Burling: We will direct our attention to that point, Your Honor.

The Court: All right.

Now, let me ask you this, Mr. Gallagher, on these other points. These are things that occur to me. Maybe they would dispose of them; I do not know.

Mr. Burling has granted that his experts say they cannot tell about these signatures by way of comparison. If they cannot tell about these signatures by way of comparison, I wonder if I can. That is the question I was going to ask you. Ordinarily, you can have an admitted handwriting in evidence and compare it with others. You have an anamolous situation here—an expert cannot say that they are the same.

Mr. Gallagher: Might I say, Your Honor, I submit that the question of the authenticity of the signatures, even if their experts could have proven them, would not have aided—

The Court: I have got to hurdle that one first. That is the first thing I have got to get over.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, three of the documents are not subject to this vice, because the 2419 signatures are identified unquestionably, without qualification, by von Opel; that is, 90, 98, and 97. I have the record references handy.

The Court: Well, I will come to those a little later. Tell me what you think about these others on authenticity.

Mr. Burling: Our position is that where the letter appears to be signed by the officers of the company, where the letter has the stamp signature of the corporation, where it is on the corporate letterhead, a presumption that they are corporate documents arises—that is, that we have made a prima facie case—and the question would, rather, be whether my friends would call experts to show that they were not.

The Court: I had not thought that that was the rule. I thought the burden was on the person who introduced them to prove them, not by stamps, but from someone in the organization.

Mr. Burling: I won't press that.

The Court: I think that is the rule.

Mr. Burling: Then I submit, if Your Honor please, if that is Your Honor's ruling on authenticity, I would agree that 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, and 104 cannot be established by us.

The Court: Well, that is my inclination, unless you 2420 show me something to the contrary.

Mr. Burling: Frankly, I have nothing on it.

The Court: I do not want to be quick on any of these points, but I do not want to have any gross error here by violating an obvious rule of evidence when challenged.

Mr. Burling: In order to simplify matters, I will withdraw my offer of 99 through 104.

(Defendant's Exhibits 99 through 104 were withdrawn.)

The Court: That leaves 90, 97, and 98?

Mr. Burling: Yes, if Your Honor please.

The Court: Mr. Gallagher, let me tell you a little bit my present impression on this. I am going to leave open the argument, for you on the one hand and Mr. Burling on the other, what a subsidiary does, a subsidiary being a separate corporation. I am going to leave open the argument whether you have to show affirmatively a continuendo of the business, within the knowledge of the principal corporation, after war starts. I will leave that open, because all you are asking me to rule on now is the question of leaving things in evidence for possible consideration.

I frankly do not know—once we have Uebersee Korporation, which owns all the stock of this Trans-2421 danubia, as I understand; we find one of the officers of Uebersee before the war carrying on in the business of mining bauxite, and then there comes the war, and we have a circumstance (I know the limitations that you argue with regard to it) of protecting financial interests over there—whether the fact that this officer of Uebersee carried on business before the war would make it mandatory on him or his associates to issue a directive, if they had a directive, to the subsidiary to stop the business, or, if it challenged them, to take affirmative action, if they could, with regard to the subsidiary, or whether they could sit absolutely tight, as Dr. Meier said they did. I do not know the law on that, and I am going to leave it to you gentlemen to argue.

But let us assume that I should find, in accordance with Mr. Burling's argument, that there was a duty on the part of the owners of Uebersee, a neutral corporation, to absolutely order these subsidiaries to stop. Suppose I should say that. Wouldn't the fact that the subsidiaries carried on the relationships which would lead to doing business with an enemy be a material point, and wouldn't the fact of the writing of letters be a spontaneous act showing the doing of business?

Mr. Gallagher: These letters, which, we submit, are clearly inadmissible, would leave no inference to be 2422 drawn thereafter that we continued business. As a fact we do not whether Transdanubia did or did not.

The Court: Then, you are getting to the other point. He is trying to establish that Transdanubia did and that these letters—These are authenticated, aren't they?

Mr. Gallagher: No. These letters are the same letters out of Germany, not out of our files, as 99 or 104. They are out of the files of Giulini Brothers and they relate to a letter from them to Transdanubia—

Mr. Burling: May I read the record?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes.

Mr. Burling: At page 1371, with regard to Exhibit 97, I asked Fritz von Opel:

"Question: You recognize the signatures of Krausz and Timar, do you not?

"Answer: Yes, I do.

"Question: And they appear on the third page of this document?

"Answer: Yes."

Later, at 1378:

"Question: At any rate, you recognize the signature of Georg von Krausz, do you not?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: And von Krausz had what position 2423 with Transdanubia?

"Answer: He was one of the managers jointly with Dr. Timar."

With respect to Exhibit 90, I asked the question:

"In any event, this document, 90-A, is signed by one of the managers of Transdanubia?

"Answer: Yes. That is signed by Dr. Timar."

The Court: That is authenticated. Were those before the war?

Mr. Gallagher: No, Your Honor. 98 is before the war, but 90 is not. 90 is February, 1942, 97 is March of 1940. 98 is October of 1940, when von Opel is in America here, and it is a record of a conference—complete hearsay—in which Giulini—

The Court: I do not have it here.

Mr. Gallagher: 98?

The Court: 97. Let us take them up in order. Let us see number 90.

We are talking about 90, 97, and 98; is that it?

Mr. Gallagher: That is right.

The Court: Now, here is number 90, which is a letter from Transdanubia to Giulini Brothers.

Who were Giulini Brothers?

Mr. Gallagher: They are a purchasing outfit in Germany.

The Court: Now, he says, "Referring to your letter 2424 of January 23, 1942, we wish to advise you as follows * * * The quantities established by you"—

That is a letter of doing business, isn't it?

Mr. Gallagher: It is a letter from Transdanubia—that is what it purports to be—out of the files of Giulini Brothers, but there has been no basis laid here that they were kept in the regular course of business, and we have not stipulated anything on this.

The Court: This is a little different. We have a letter here of a corporation, which has been identified as being signed by the president, and who else?

Mr. Gallagher: Well, von Opel says, "I guess it is."

The Court: What is the name?

Mr. Gallagher: At the top of page 1980, where Mr. Burling says:

"I show you Defendant's Exhibit 90-A, which you have previously identified as being the letterhead of Transdanubia"—earlier he had merely offered it for the letterhead purpose—"state, if you will, whether the signature on the right hand—there are two signatures—the right-hand signature is not that of Dr. Timar.

"Answer: Yes, I guess it is."

2425 The Court: That might go to the weight.

Mr. Burling: At 1381, after some more conversation, von Opel said unqualifiedly that it was. My question was:

"In any event, this document 90-A, is signed by one of the managers of Transdanubia?"

He said:

"Yes, that is signed by Dr. Timar."

The Court: Gentlemen, I do not have very much doubt about the admissibility of these. The effect of what I decide on them I am very much in doubt on. I will leave these in, over your objection, and save your point.

Mr. Gallagher: We save our objection.

The Court: I want to make it clear at this time that I am not ruling that the fact of the writing of these letters imposes the liability on Uebersee, the plaintiff here, of doing business with an enemy. I am leaving that entirely open for argument, but I am leaving these in as properly authenticated and as indicating that they show the fact that Transdanubia—whatever that fact is worth in this case—might have been doing business, or tending to show that it was doing business, with an enemy. In other words, if I had the question of Transdanubia before me, whether it was doing business with an enemy, I think this would be evidence of it.

2426 Now, as to Uebersee, I am not going to rule right now that I think that that has any relevancy to Uebersee's position, but I am going to leave that open for you to argue,

Mr. Gallagher: May I clarify, where Your Honor is ruling, that the record in no wise reflects and there has been no showing that these exhibits were kept in the regular course of business by Giulini Brothers, and they have not been identified by anybody from Giulini Brothers or Transdanubia, and Mr. Frick, from whom they were obtained, is still living and available in Germany.

The Court: I think the circumstance here that they have produced the files of Giulini and that the president of Uebersee, which is the sole stockholder, as I understand it, of this Transdanubia, identified the signatures and that it was the stamp of the corporation, and the very articles themselves indicate that it was the doing of business—it dealt with business matters—makes a prima facie case out.

Mr. Gallagher: May I correct Your Honor? You said the president of Uebersee. Mr. von Opel is not an officer of Uebersee, as I know Your Honor is aware of.

The Court: I cut out the "president"; a very prominent stockholder. I think that makes out a prima facie case of that.

2427 Now, what weight I am going to give to it, I have not the slightest idea. I am going to depend on that very largely. I would like for you to dwell on that pretty thoroughly in argument, because it might very well be that the separate entity situation, even of a subsidiary, would negative the claim of the Government. On the other hand, I have an entirely open mind on it. I just do not know the answer. So that I will leave that open for argument.

Have we finished everything now?

Mr. Gallagher: Now, Your Honor, I wish to recall Mr. von Opel in rebuttal, and then we have two questions of Dr. Kronstein, and I believe we will have concluded.

The Court: All right.

Thereupon—

FRITZ VON OPEL was called as a witness in rebuttal and, having been previously duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Mr. von Opel, there were some questions put by Mr. Burling. You were in the courtroom yesterday, were you not? A. Yes.

2428 Q. You heard Mr. Burling's cross examination of Dr. Meier? A. Yes.

Q. There were some questions asked by Mr. Burling and put to Dr. Meier by Mr. Burling with respect to conversations with you with relations to exhibits which pertained to the so-called Swiss francs transaction in 1931. Did you hear those questions and answers? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And Dr. Meier stated that you had discussed it with him. I will ask you, Did you discuss those exhibits in German with Dr. Meier at my request? A. Yes, I did so.

Q. All right, that is all.

Now, in Mr. Burling's cross examination of Dr. Meier he asked him whether or not he knew that you, Fritz von Opel, had stated that the Tanganyika plantations were valued at $12,000. Did you ever make such a statement? A. No, I did not.

Q. What statement did you make before the Alien Enemy Board? A. I checked the entire record, and the only statement I could find is the following: I explained in detail how I acquired this plantation in Tanganyika Territory and said I am asked about its value in the books of 2429 Overseas, and I say it is valued at approximately 200,000 Swiss francs, or $40,000.

Mr. Burling: May I ask if counsel will fix the place in the record where this statement appears?

Mr. Gallagher: I am sorry. Counsel is not able to do it. Mr. von Opel checked the record, after you made that statement, himself personally.

Mr. Burling: I object to any testimony about what is in the record unless I be told the page number.

The Court: I won't take what was in the record; I will just take his answer. What is this?

Mr. Gallagher: Tanganyika plantation.

The Witness: It is called the Opel Estates.

The Court: How do you spell it?

Mr. Gallagher: T-a-n-g-a-n-y-i-k-a.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Is that it? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. von Opel, Mr. Houghland, when he was on the stand, stated that he met you for the first time in 1934 in Paris. Is that correct? A. No, that is not correct.

Q. Mr. Houghland further stated that you came to Nashville for the first time in 1935, driving a Mercedes car.

2430 Is that correct? A. No, that is not correct. That is wrong by about two years.

Q. Will you state when you met Mr. Houghland for the first time? A. I am not definite whether I met him even before my first visit to Nashville, but I am absolutely sure that I was in Nashville, driving this Mercedes car, late in 1933.

Q. And that was the time when you met Mr. Houghland with the Mercedes? In 1933? A. Yes.

Q. Have you any way by which you have refreshed your recollection, so that you can state with assurance that you were driving the Mercedes in 1933? A. I definitely have. I had this car only for about six months. It was unsatisfactory and I returned it to the factory at the end of 1933, and I remember it vividly because in 1933 I participated in the International Air Races in Chicago at the World's Fair, and that is where I took the car, and I even had gotten—it was a present of my father to me, but I had negotiated it with the factory—Mercedes factory—and they had given me a rather large discount of 30 or 40 per cent when I promised them I would take it to America and show it at the World's Fair.

2431 Q. Did you have any motor difficulties with that car in 1933? A. Yes. I had to exchange the carburetor. I sent it to the factory and they shipped me another carburetor, which arrived in New York October 27, 1933.

Q. And if I told you that the Collector's Office in New York reflects that, on Form 5101, the entry number of the carburetor was 12830, import number, 140176—

Mr. Burling: I object to the testimony by counsel. If it is a document, it can be put in.

Mr. Gallagher: I am asking him, if I tell him. This is merely to lay the foundation for the—

Mr. Burling: I object to a long statement by counsel.

The Court: That is objectionable.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Did you pay a duty on that carburetor on its importation into the United States in 1933? A. Yes; I paid a slight duty. If I remember correctly, less than five dollars—only a couple of dollars.

Q. Is it your testimony that you shipped that car back out of the United States in 1933? A. Yes. I took it out with an Italian steamer, either the Conte de Savoia or the Rex, to Cannes, France.

2432 Q. Did you ever bring any other car to America? A. No, I never did.

Q. Now, Mr. Houghland stated that you told him you had fooled the British at Gibraltar with respect to your Liechtensteinean citizenship. Did you ever make any such statement to Mr. Houghland? A. No, never. All I told him, when I was detained for a few days, that the Liechtenstein Government got in touch with the Swiss Legation, and I contacted my friends in England, and first I told him—I told him I was very nicely treated and only detained for three days.

Q. Did you ever tell Mr. Houghland that your father owned the stock of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation? A. No, never.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Houghland state that he always resented the fact that you owned the majority control of Spur? A. Yes, I heard him state so, and I must say I was always aware of this fact.

Q. Were you aware of his resentment? A. Yes, definitely so—

Mr. Gallagher: Mark this.

(Letter was marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 178 for identification.)

A. (Continuing)—and as early as right after the be-2433 ginning of my acquisition of Spur I was warned by Mr. Hoffacker against the loyalty of Mr. Houghland.

Mr. Burling: I object to this letter on the ground that this is clearly hearsay. It is a letter from Hoffacker to Mr. von Opel, telling him what Hoffacker thought Houghland's view as to John Cole was. It is hearsay.

Mr. Gallagher: I am not offering it for the truth of what Hoffacker stated, Your Honor. I am merely offering it as proof of the fact that he had been advised whether it was true or not; that he had been advised, as early as 1933, and the letter states: "Regarding our relationship with Mr. Houghland"—

Mr. Burling: Just a moment. What would the relevance be, if Your Honor please, of the fact that he was warned, assuming he was, unless Houghland in fact was disloyal?

Mr. Gallagher: Do you want me to state what our theory is on it?

Mr. Burling: I submit, if Your Honor please, that the test of when a letter is or is not hearsay is when there is some relevance to the fact, assuming that what he stated is not true. Now, this must be offered as to the truth of the matter or it is irrelevant.

Mr. Gallagher: We are merely offering it as proof 2434 of the primary fact that he was advised to beware. We are not offering it as proof of the ultimate fact.

The Court: He was advised and what?

Mr. Gallagher: And thereafter we suggest that the inference can be well drawn that, having had that picture constantly before him, and knowing that Houghland resented him, it shows, in our opinion, how ridiculous is the statement that he stated on the transchannel call, "My father owns this stock."

The Court: In other words, you want to establish that it is unlikely that he could have made admissions to him if he was hostile to him?

Mr. Gallagher: Our whole proof has been to anybody, but particularly to this man, who he has known at all times resents his ownership and as to whom he has been warned by others; that it would be very unlikely, on a transchannel call, with the Gestapo listening on in England, and then later on in a trans-Atlantic call—neither of which have been corroborated—that von Opel is going to say, "My father owns this stock," when he knows it is going to cause his throat to be cut.

The Court: For that limited purpose, I think it will be admitted to show his hostility. There is only one thing. I do not know whether it rebuts Mr. Houghland or not. He admitted that, didn't he?

2435 Mr. Gallagher: He admitted that he personally resented von Opel, but he did not admit that he knew that von Opel knew how much he resented him. That is the difference.

The Court: You want to show the intensity of it?

Mr. Gallagher: No. I say this: that it is quite apparent—

The Court: What I am getting at is that Mr. Houghland admitted, as I remember it, right along that he was very much opposed to the Germans owning any interest in his outfit.

Mr. Gallagher: That is true.

The Court: And that he would like to have divested them at any time whatever, and he felt that way all along; but, having admitted it, do we prove it here on rebuttal?

Mr. Gallagher: I believe so, Your Honor. I submit that the fact that he personally, in his mind and heart, always resents von Opel and the Germans being in there does not mean that—unless von Opel sensed it or someone told him that to be a fact—von Opel would think he was anything other than a very grateful employee who was getting $90,000 a year from him.

The Court: You want to bring the fact home to him. All right.

By Mr. Gallagher:

2436 Q. I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 178, a letter dated August 22, 1933, addressed to Mr. Fritz von Opel, addressed to 56 Pine Street, New York City, and signed—I can't read the signature—dated on the letterhead of Theodore Hoffacker & Company, and ask you if you can identify that letter (handing a document to the witness)? A. Yes; it is a letter from Mr. Hoffacker.

Q. You received this letter? A. Yes.

Mr. Gallagher: I now offer this Plaintiff's 178 and would merely like to read the second paragraph and call it to your attention.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit 178 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Gallagher (reading): "Regarding our relationship with Mr. Houghland, would see that it appears greatly improved; still I cannot really say that Mr. Houghland's loyalty is all it should be. He seems to harbor within him a grudge against John Cole and apparently does not like to be watched too closely. As you know, I placed our own man in the company as assistant treasurer, and Mr. Houghland appears not to be any too friendly with him. Under all circumstances, we must be prepared to meet any issue precipitated by him. I have not been in Nashville since 2437 last fall. However, it is advisable that you and I go there during your present sojourn in the United States."

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. You heard Mr. Houghland testify with respect to the fact that you had called him from somewhere in Germany, at Cologne, transchannel, the latter part of August, 1939, and that the following day he called back and talked again and at that time stated that he called the operator again to find out how to get you. Did you have any telephone calls from Germany with Mr. Houghland in the latter part of August, 1939? A. Definitely not, because at this time I was not even in Germany. I was in Switzerland.

Q. Do you know when you arrived in Switzerland? A. I arrived in Switzerland August 17, 1939.

Mr. Gallagher: Mark this.

(Document was marked Plaintiff's Exhibit 179 for identification.)

The Witness: I found this fact in the books of Overseas, where certain telephone bills and certain hotel bills are booked.

Mr. Burling: I object to these, Your Honor, on the ground of authenticity. There is no showing at all.

Mr. Gallagher: I do not intend to offer them. I am merely going to show them to him for the purpose of refreshing his recollection.

2438

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. I show you Plaintiff's Exhibit 179 for identification and ask you if that refreshes your recollection as to when you returned to Switzerland in the summer of 1939 (handing a document to the witness). A. Yes; on August 17, 1939.

Q. On August 17. What is it you are refreshing your recollection from?

Mr. Burling: I object to that. In the first place, I object to any further refreshing of his recollection. The witness testified first that he arrived the 17th, and was then asked to refresh his recollection.

Mr. Gallagher: I will strike it, Mr. Burling, and withdraw the question.

The Court: I think I had better rule that that is not the proper means of refreshing his recollection.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Have you refreshed your recollection from the books of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation which are in evidence? A. Yes, certainly I did. I found in the Overseas book the entry of a hotel bill of $1563, and I knew that that was a hotel bill for quite a considerable time; and, furthermore, 2439 I remember that there was an international automobile race in Bern, and that I arrived in Switzerland three days ahead of this race; and I checked in the newspapers in the Library of Congress that this race took place on August 20, but, to make sure, I asked the hotel to identify copies of bills which were shown in the Overseas books, and that is a copy of the original bill.

Mr. Burling: I move to strike any testimony about what any piece of paper purports to be.

Mr. Gallagher: I have no objection to your motion being granted.

The Court: I sustain the motion.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. So it is your testimony, then, that during the latter part of August, a few days before the Normandy sailed for the United States, you did not have any transchannel telephone call with Mr. Houghland from Germany? A. Definitely not.

Q. By the way, in 1935, at the time you endeavored to establish a niessbrauch—that is, at the time of the gold litigation—what assets were there in the Uebersee Finanz-

Korporation? A. Overseas owned at this time this gold valued at about 6.4 million Swiss francs, and I held the claim to this amount against Overseas, so if you speak about assets, the net assets were the capital of Overseas.

2440 Q. And what was that capital, approximately? A. At this time I think either 250,000 francs or 500,000 francs.

Q. Excepting the gold, where were the remaining two and a half-odd million dollars which you had acquired from the sale of your Opel shares? A. They were kept by myself either in my name or in the name of Consortium O or Frima.

Q. Until when? A. Until the waiver took place.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, may I ask that there be a clarification as to where the remaining two and a half million dollars were? It has been stated by the witness they were on Consortium O or in his own name. I would like to know where they were.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Would you make a clearer explanation to the Court, Mr. von Opel, as to where those other two and a half million dollars were in 1935 before you put it into Uebersee? Where was it? A. In 1935, in the first part of this year, they were kept by Overseas—pardon me; by Frima, and either at the end of 1935 or in the beginning of 1936 they were sold by Frima to Overseas.

Mr. Gallagher: Is that satisfactory, Mr. Burling?

2441 Mr. Burling: Yes.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Now, just to check a few other places in this record here, at page 1918 of the record, Mr. Crittenden, on direct examination, was stating that, after a dinner with you in Germany, he asked what your relationship was to Hoffacker and who owned the funds and how you were operating, and the record states:

"Now, to give you a very general description, he told me that he was entrusted with the use of a considerable amount of money by his father under what he described as a usufruct contract and, in a general way, he had the handling of the funds and accounted back to his father; and also at that time related that he had a cousin, whose name I do not recall, who was operating under a similar usufruct contract with funds entrusted to the cousin by Fritz von Opel's uncle."

Did you ever make any such statement to Mr. Crittenden? A. No; definitely not.

Q. As a matter of fact, to your knowledge, did you ever have a cousin who had any kind of a contract with a usufruct provision related therein? A. No, I never have.

2442 Q. Now, at page 1938 of the record Mr. Crittenden stated as follows. He was talking about going to Hungary in connection with bauxite, and the question put, at the bottom of 1937, was:

"Did you have any further conversations with him as to this aluminum property in Hungary?

"Answer: Oh, yes; both him and Dr. Frankenberg. There was a general discussion—going back to Europe, and I was going to take a walking tour with the Doctor, and Fritz was going to drive me to Hungary.

"Question: To Hungary?

"Answer: Yes.

"Question: For what purpose?

"Answer: To show these ore mines. He told me they shipped quite a lot of ore to Germany, they did not get money for it and his father did not like it very much."

Now, let us take that in three sections. First, is his statement correct when he states, "He told me they shipped quite a lot of ore to Germany"? A. That is not correct.

Q. How much ore had ever been shipped to Germany at this time Mr. Crittenden is talking about, which is 1937? A.

2443 At this time the only sales which ever had been made were a thousand tons—approximate a thousand tons—sold to Hungarian Bauxite Trust in, I think it was, 1936.

Q. All right. Now, I might ask you, up until the time that you cabled Transdanubia in May of 1941, suggesting that they accept the Hadik's offer and lease the mines, to your knowledge how much ore had been mined out of the Transdanubia properties? A. In addition to those approximate 1,000 tons I just mentioned which were sold to the Bauxite Trust and paid for in cash on delivery, less than a thousand tons were sold to Giulini.

Q. So the total production, if I understand you correctly, from the Transdanubia properties up until May of 1941, to the best of your knowledge, was slightly less than 2,000 tons of ore? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much was that ore worth? What did it sell for in dollars? A. You want dollars?

Q. Yes. A. If you take the highest rate of exchange, which is not correct today, but for argument's sake we can take it, it is about six or seven thousand dollars.

Q. Let us get to the second portion of Mr. Crittenden's answer, "they did not get money for it." Did 2444 you get paid for the ore you sold to the Hungarian Bauxite? A. Certainly. There were never any sales made without cash paid prior to delivery.

Q. Let us get to the third part of the answer, and he says, "and his father"—meaning your father—"did not like it very much." Did your father ever indicate his approval or disapproval? A. He did not even know of this affair.

Q. By the way, did you ever receive any money for these 2,000 tons of ore which you stated were mined? Did you personally ever receive any money out of that? A. No. That all went into Transdanubia.

Q. To your knowledge, did Uebersee ever receive any of that money? A. No, they did not.

Q. Now, you heard Mr. Crittenden testify here and you heard Mr. Bayer testify with respect to the conferences held in Zurich.

Mr. Crittenden made a statement that Dr. Frankenberg stated that he was your father's agent and that your father owned the property.

Mr. Bayer stated he never had such a conversation.

With that in mind, let me ask you this question.

2445 Were you present at all the conferences which were held in Zurich? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Did you ever hear Dr. Frankenberg, during any of those conferences, make the statement which Mr. Crittenden attributed to Dr. Frankenberg? A. No, never. It is ridiculous.

Q. Did you ever at any time, in the long course of years, in your association with Dr. Frankenberg, ever hear him tell anybody that he was your father's agent? A. No, never.

Q. Now, Mr. Burling asked Dr. Meier on Friday why Dr. Meier, the president of Uebersee, did not supervise the operations of the Transdanubia Corporation. Had you ever given any instructions to Dr. Meier in that regard? A. No.

Q. Or to Dr. Henggeler? A. No.

Q. Or to Dr. Adolph Gaeng? A. No.

Q. Have you ever asked Dr. Meier or Dr. Gaeng or Dr. Henggeler to supervise the operations or management of any of the American corporations or other investments of Uebersee?

2446 A. No. They never had anything to do with it.

Q. Now, would you state briefly, inasmuch as you speak in English, and I think it would be a little simpler, just what were the duties of Dr. Meier as president and Dr. Henggeler and Gaeng as members of the board of Uebersee?

Mr. Burling: I object on the grounds that there is no showing that this witness is a Swiss lawyer or that he is familiar with the corporate charter of Uebersee.

Mr. Gallagher: I am asking him if he could state briefly what he knows of the duties of Meier and Henggeler and Gaeng in respect to Uebersee. I want him to tell, if he knows, to clarify what their job was.

The Court: He can tell what positions they hold.

Mr. Gallagher: As Mr. Burling said, if he is familiar with the corporation charter and all, he could state what their duties are under that, could he not?

Mr. Burling: No. It is a matter of construction.

The Court: Unless the charter defined them.

Mr. Burling: In that case it would be its own best evidence.

The Court: Yes, unless you account for the absence of it—

Mr. Gallagher: It is not too important. I will strike it, Your Honor.

2447 By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Now, let us come down to Dr. Frankenberg. Did he have anything to do with the supervision of Transdanubia? A. No, never.

Q. Did he have anything to do with the supervision of the operations of any of the American corporations? A. No, never.

Q. Did he supervise or direct the investment policies of Uebersee? A. No, he did not. In effect, before he even came into the picture, with the exception of about $230,000, everything was already invested.

Q. You are talking about the year 1932 or 1931, are you? A. Yes, sir, I do.

Q. And that was before Dr. Frankenberg was a member of the board of directors? A. Before he heard about those investments.

Q. Well, if Dr. Frankenberg did not advise you with respect to your investments at the time that you sold the Opel shares to General Motors, who aided you in determining how you were going to invest that three and a half million dollars? A. I did that all alone in the beginning.

2448 Q. Would you explain, step by step, what you did when you arrived in the United States and what steps you took looking toward the investment of the funds which you thereafter were receiving from General Motors? A. After I had terminated the escrow agreement General Motors offered me a block of General Motors shares, 47,625, I remember, at the price of $24, which was a dollar or a dollar and a half below the stock exchange quotation, and they seemed very eager to sell this block, and as I had to wait for payment about four weeks, I thought it was a kind of an insurance against any devaluation of the mark in the meantime to acquire this General Motors stock.

Q. You say General Motors suggested to you that you purchase the 47,000 shares? A. Yes.

Q. Now, with respect to the remaining money, who gave you any advice, if anybody, in the United States with respect to those investments, with respect to that money? A. I think the first man I talked to about it was Mr. Von Clemm.

Q. Who was Mr. Von Clemm?

Mr. Burling: Would you like me to stipulate that, counsellor?

Mr. Gallagher: No. I will take the witness' answer.

2449 Mr. Burling: I believe he was prosecuting when you were first assistant in the criminal division.

Mr. Gallagher: I move that that be stricken, because I know nothing about it.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Will you state who Mr. Von Clemm was? A. Mr. Von Clemm at the time was the so-called customer's man of a firm by the name of Burden-Cole, and I had met Mr. Von Clemm through a schoolmate of mine who had invited both of us to lunch.

Q. This was in October, 1931? A. In October, 1931, yes.

Q. You say Mr. Von Clemm was customer man of Burden-Cole? A. Customer man of Burden-Cole. In fact, he was the one from whom I bought the first Spur stock.

Q. Did you meet anyone else who aided you in investments through Mr. Von Clemm? A. I asked Mr. Von Clemm whether he knew any man versed in investments, and I specifically asked him for somebody speaking German, because at the time I could not speak much English, and he recommended me Mr. Hoffacker.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Hoffacker? A. I met Mr. Hoffacker in October, the second half of October, 1931.

2450 Q. Did you employ him as your investment counsellor? A. Yes. I made an agreement with him that he should trade the General Motors stock. I thought when General Motors was so eager to sell me this stock that the market might fall, so I thought I had better watch that stock and have it sold.

Q. Did he work with you thereafter for several years? A. Yes, that's what he did.

Q. At that time had your father given you any advice as to whom you were to employ as investment counsellor? A. No.

Q. Did he give you any directions as to how you were to invest the proceeds from the sale of the Opel shares if you determined to sell them? A. No. In a general way, he told me, "That is quite a big property you have. Don't try to enlarge it. It is big enough. The only thing you should do is to keep it together, and when you succeed doing so in these troubled times, you have done a lot."

Q. And he did not give you any suggestions as to whom you should talk to when you arrived in New York 2451 to aid you in investment policies? A. No; no. I think I did most of my investing through a firm by the name of Hallgarten and Company, in Pine Street, New York.

Q. Mr. von Opel, when you began to act for Uebersee thereafter, who gave you the power of attorney? Dr. Meier or Dr. Frankenberg or Dr. Haggeler? A. No; they were not in the picture yet.

Q. You mean Dr. Frankenberg was not even in the picture yet? A. No. I had not even acquired Overseas yet.

Q. I see. A. The first power of attorney I got from Overseas was signed by Dr. Martin Bloch, who was at the time, if I remember, president of Overseas.

Q. Now, you stated that Dr. Frankenberg came into the picture after you had invested practically all the proceeds which you had received from the sale of the Opel stock, with the exception of about $200,000. When was the first time that you did have any conversation with Dr. Frankenberg about the investments that you had made? A. I think that was after I had acquired the Spur stock, and I got somewhat worried—

Q. Could you fix that time, approximately? A. That must have been in the summer, 1932. I either had already acquired it or was in the way of acquiring it. I 2452 acquired it through Mr. Cole, of Burden and Cole.

Q. You say you had a conversation with Dr. Frankenberg about Spur? A. Yes. I told him that it seemed rather risky to have a gasoline retailer without its own gasoline supply and said they had always to fight off the big units like Shell and Standard, and they might cut off their supply; and I said I was interested in investing some of my money in crude oil in the ground, which was at the time selling at between six or eight cents. Even Dr. Frankenberg, who was not well versed in the oil business, thought that I could not make a mistake buying oil so cheaply.

Q. When was the next time, to the best of your recollection, that you had any conversations with Dr. Frankenberg with regard to your investments? A. I think the next time was in 1933, when the American banks got into trouble. I had certain applications at the time, and I was afraid that my funds in American banks might be frozen. So I talked to him, what could be done about it, and he suggested I should either convert those dollars into Swiss francs or should acquire gold.

Q. I see; and did you acquire the gold? A. I 2453 wired over to the National City Bank, which were holding securities of mine, and I asked them to acquire this gold; but, unfortunately, I did not follow Dr. Frankenberg's second advice and did not ship it immediately to Switzerland. I could have done such for at least a period of ten days.

Q. You have said previously that neither Dr. Frankenberg nor any other member of the board of administration of Uebersee took any part in the administration of the American corporations in which you, through Uebersee, had stock interest; is that correct? A. That is correct, with one qualification. I think I should point out that Dr. Frankenberg had a dual capacity, and so the turning point was 1935, in the summer, when I became heavily indebted, and at this time Dr. Frankenberg became, or, rather, the Adler Bank became a creditor of Overseas to the tune of three or sometimes even four hundred thousand dollars.

The Court: Suppose we take a five-minute recess.

(A short recess was had.)

2454 By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. We were at the point, I believe, when we took the recess, Mr. von Opel, when you stated that Dr. Frankenberg became important to you in this picture in and around 1935, 1936, and 1937, when you needed money, because you were not in a liquid position; is that correct? A. Yes. At this time I could not export the gold from the United States, and I had to meet certain obligations, and I became rather illiquid.

Q. Did you negotiate loans through him and with the Adler Bank? A. Yes, I did such, and he loaned me at this time about $350,000.

Q. Did you pledge some of your securities with him? A. Yes, most of them.

Q. Did you pledge Uebersee shares? A. At the time, yes; later on I pledged some American stock.

Q. So in the years between 1935 and 1940, and thereabouts, if I understand you correctly, you were quite dependent on Dr. Frankenberg and his banks; is that correct? A. I should say between the years—about, somewhere, 1935 up to 1940 or 1941. Just before the war I sold some property and got into a liquid position again.

Q. But Dr. Frankenberg was not in the picture 2455 at the time you made investments in America with the proceeds from the sale of the Opel shares; is that correct? A. No.

Q. By that you mean he was not in the picture? A. He was not in the picture, no. He was—I think he became board member, together with Dr. Henggeler and Dr. Meier, in the beginning of 1932. But at the time, none of them knew anything about my investment.

Q. Just to come back to Mr. Crittenden again, in discussing Theodore Hoffacker, Mr. Crittenden made the statement that Theodore Hoffacker was an agent for Fritz von Opel and that Fritz von Opel did not breathe, move, or talk without his permission or advice. Is that a true statement or a correct statement? A. It is partly correct; I would say so much that Mr. Hoffacker had a very domineering position toward everybody, and he was the kind of man who thought he had all the answers, and it was really very difficult to get along with him. I tried hard to. I hired him, and after I couldn't improve his manners, I fired him.

Q. Now, Mr. von Opel, you heard Miss Schoch testify that your father could not have become a devisen auslander and have taken his property out of Germany. Is that correct? A. I think that what Miss Schoch meant, if I understood her correctly—I think she later stated—2456 Mr. Burling: Just a minute. I object, if Your Honor please, on the ground that it is not proper to rebut the testimony of an expert legal witness with a layman.

The Court: That is correct, isn't it, Mr. Gallagher?

Mr. Gallagher: Probably so. We will strike it and leave it for Dr. Kronstein.

By Mr. Gallagher:

Q. Let me put an assumption to you, if I may, and I hope in somewhat the method of Mr. Burling.

Let us assume that your father did not want to leave Germany, and let us further assume that he did not want to give any of his property to you—that is, the Opel shares; that he wanted to keep everything for himself, particularly all the rights under the escrow agreement with General Motors. Was there a way for him to do this practically without breaking any foreign-currency regulation?

Mr. Burling: The same objection.

The Court: The same ruling.

Mr. Gallagher: All right. That is all.

Cross Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I believe on redirect, Mr. von Opel, you testified that you heard Mr. Crittenden testify that you had said to him in Essen, in the summer of 1937, that you were operating under an escrow agreement with your father, 2457 that you had the management of your father's funds, and that you had a cousin who had similar relationship to an uncle of yours; is that right? A. Pardon me. You speak about an escrow agreement. What do you mean by that?

Q. I am sorry; a usufruct agreement. Pardon me. A. That is what I stated.

Q. I am just trying to refresh your recollection—just trying to place your recollection—now.

You heard Crittenden say that you told him at this dinner in Essen that you were managing your father's funds under a usufruct agreement and that you had a cousin who was managing funds of an uncle of yours under a similar arrangement; is that not what you heard him say? A. Yes, that is what he testified. Yes.

Q. You told Mr. Gallagher just now, did you not, that you had no cousin who had any such relationship with any such uncle; is that correct?

Mr. Gallagher: I think the record will reflect, Mr. Burling, that he testified in response to my question that he had no cousin who had a contract with his uncle which contained a usufruct provision or a provision similar to a usufruct.

Mr. Burling: All right.

By Mr. Burling:

2458 Q. But you did have a cousin to whom your uncle transferred 600 shares of Opel stock; is that not true?

Mr. Gallagher: Now, Your Honor, at this point, if Mr. Burling is going to go into the question of the relationship of the uncle with the cousin, then I submit that this opens up the criminal decrees, and we are back into that situation.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please—

The Court: Whether it opens it up or not, I don't know. I will hear you on the question of the admissibility of it.

Mr. Burling: Mr. Gallagher sought to—

The Court: Let me hear from him, first, on his objection.

Mr. Gallagher: All that I asked Mr. von Opel about was a question which negated directly the answer given by Mr. Crittenden, and it was confined to the question of whether or not a contract containing a usufruct provision was being exercised and under which his cousin was operating. I submit that any further cross-examination by Mr. Burling is limited to a contract of that nature.

The Court: What he was trying to rebut, as I understand it, was the statement of Mr. Crittenden as to what Mr. von Opel told him—what this witness told him; isn't that right?

Mr. Gallagher: This witness was rebutting the fact that he did not state that to Mr. Crittenden.

The Court: But in rebutting it, then he said his 2459 cousin never did have any such transaction.

Mr. Gallagher: No; he said his cousin did not—he had no cousin, to his knowledge, who operated under a contract containing a usufruct provision, or provision similar to a usufruct, with his uncle. Now, any other contract which may have been negotiated with his uncle, and the validity of that, or otherwise, I suggest or submit is not relevant.

Mr. Burling: I submit, if Your Honor please, that it is directly relevant to show that Crittenden, who was a widely known American lawyer, let alone German lawyer, correctly understood what Fritz von Opel said.

I wish to show that Fritz von Opel had an uncle who also had 600 shares of Opel stock, just as his father did; and that that uncle purported to sell those shares to a cousin of Fritz von Opel, which cousin also is in Switzerland, and got the money out of Germany in exactly the same relationship.

I offer that not to show that the uncle was guilty of fraud or that there was some tendency in the Opel family generally to commit frauds, but merely to show that what Crittenden was told at the dinner in Essen is substantially what he said here, except that he made a highly technical error of German law in saying it was a usufruct contract instead of a sale contract.

Mr. Gallagher: And, I might say, a highly technical error of fact, in that he is saying in 1937 that the cousin 2460 is holding under a usufruct, whereas in the contract that Mr. Burling is talking—

The Court: I think the testimony Crittenden gave was as to conversations this witness had with him. If you deny the conversations and stop right there, then, of course, the record will be one way. But, as I understand it, you went a little further and said to his actual knowledge no such transaction—or in effect no such transaction—as that had occurred.

Now, then, he wants to show that one like that was—I mean as to what he told him and what Mr. Crittenden understood really is important—

Mr. Gallagher: Then, I would like to ask if we may conclude from that that we could submit the decree which found the uncle guilty and that he had to bring back the money?

Mr. Burling: I will stipulate that the uncle was found guilty of the fraudulent transfer and did bring the money back.

The Court: We cannot get too far away from the issue. If we get off on too many collateral issues, we will have this case reversed no matter which way I decide it.

If you want to stand on the fact that they did not have any transaction, and let it stay in, then I think probably the fact that they had some such transaction is admissible, because you are asking me to draw the inference that Mr. von Opel never made any such statement as that, 2461 because no such transaction ever occurred that he knew about. Counsel is now asking if there was not a transaction at least of that purport that happened.

Mr. Gallagher: And that the cousin was operating under it in 1937?

Mr. Burling: No; I am asking, Wasn't it a highly similar contract? It would not rebut Crittenden if he made some error as to provisions of usufruct.

Mr. Gallagher: Go ahead. Let him answer.

The Court: That is the length to which I am going to permit you to go: that it was a somewhat similar transaction.

Mr. Burling: I do not want all the details of it, because I do not want to get too far afield. I think I understand Your Honor's ruling, and will be guided accordingly.

Will you read the question now, Mr. Reporter, please?

The Reporter (Reading):

"Question. You told Mr. Gallagher just now, did you not, that you had no cousin who had any such relationship with any such uncle; is that correct?"

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Is that your testimony? A. That is correct, yes.

Q. On October 5, 1931, you had an uncle, Dr. Fritz Opel, who owned 600 shares of Adam Opel A. G., did you not? A Yes, that is correct.

2462 Q. You had a cousin, Hans von Opel, residing in Switzerland at that time; is that not true? A That is correct, yes.

Q. Is it not a fact that in October, 1931, Dr. Fritz Opel purported to sell to Hans Opel the 600 shares? A. No; that is not the way I remember it.

Q. At some time or other after October 5, 1931, there was a transfer—there was a purported transfer—of the shares from Dr. Fritz Opel, a devisen inlander, to Hans Opel, your cousin, a devisen auslander; isn't that so? A. Are you asking me what I know about it, or what I have read in the secret Nazi report you gave us?

By the Court:

Q. What you knew about it before you talked to Mr. Crittenden. A. I knew the following: I arrived in New York by the middle of October, 1931, and I received a wire from my uncle whether I would represent him, and I wired him back I would not; and I heard from General Motors—John Thomas Smith—that they had a block of 200,000 General Motors shares for sale and that my uncle already had sold his 600 Opel shares against the block of 152,000-odd numbers of General Motors shares.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. So as not to go too far—

2463 Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment. I want him to finish explaining what he knew before 1935.

Mr. Burling: I am trying to comply with His Honor's request and not go too far in detail.

Mr. Gallagher: You asked him as to his explanation of what he knew. I submit the witness should have an opportunity to finish explaining what he knew. It will take only another minute.

The Court: I think probably so.

The Witness: That makes for this odd number of shares, this 47,625, they wanted to sell me. That was the remainder of 200,000 they wanted to sell at all.

By the Court:

Q. The principal thing we want to know, is, What was the nature of the relationship of your uncle to the shares after he transferred them to your cousin? A. I heard about this matter about two years later in connection with the criminal proceedings.

Q. Was that before you had this talk with Mr. Crittenden? A. Oh, yes; it was many years before this time I had this talk with Crittenden.

Q. What information did you have with regard to what interest your uncle retained, if any, after he transferred it to your cousin? What was that information? A. I knew 2464 at the time I met Mr. Crittenden in Essen that this whole contract was a sales contract between my uncle and my cousin and that that was immediately revoked after the authorities found out about it. That is all I knew about it.

Q. Well, but as of the time of the conveyance, did you have any information as to whether your uncle retained any title to it? As of the time of the conveyance by your uncle to his son, did you have any information? A. It was no conveyance to his son, Your Honor. It was a purported sales contract from my uncle to my cousin, but that was immediately revoked.

Q. Wasn't that his son? A. No; his cousin.

Q. His nephew? A. Pardon me. I said my cousin. It was his nephew.

Q. That is what I mean. As of the time before you talked to Crittenden, we are trying to find out—at least, I think that is what he is trying to find out—as of the time you talked to Crittenden, what was your understanding that your uncle had done with regard to retaining any interest in that stock as of the time that he is reported to have sold it to his nephew. A. I knew in 1937, of course, that my uncle was forced to return everything into Germany—back into Germany.

Mr. Burling: Into his hands, if Your Honor please.

The Witness: Into his hands, yes; that is correct.

2465 Mr. Ingoldsby: May the witness be permitted one minute to explain what the transaction was? I submit that taken out of its setting, the way it is left, I think, does not present the correct picture.

The Court: I don't mind his telling what he knows. I think that is what we are trying to find out.

Mr. Ingoldsby: The conversation about which we are talking occurred in the summer of 1937 in Essen. Now, all the proceedings involved in this other transaction with the uncle dated from 1931 through 1934, so—

The Court: I understand all that. Here is the point: Mr. Crittenden testified to a conversation which he denies.

Mr. Ingoldsby: That is right.

The Court: Then, Mr. Gallagher asks him, in effect, if any such conversation occurred. Mr. Burling tried to show that one substantially along this line did occur.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I get the point.

The Court: I am trying to find out what he knew about it.

The Witness: When this gift agreement was made October 5, I asked my father to keep it secret and under no circumstances to tell my uncle anything about it, because he knew that he was not dependable and would try to do something of his own in a foolish way, and therefore I was very much embarrassed when I arrived in New York and when I heard that on October 6 General Motors had received a cable where my uncle had sold his 600 Opel 2466 shares.

I knew then, at this time, that my father apparently had told my uncle; and when I came back in Germany, of course, I told my father that it was a big mistake he made, and he said it was his own brother, and he couldn't—he felt he should tell that to him.

Then; the next thing I heard was in the spring or summer of 1932, when I was in New York. I heard in Wall Street that somebody was buying German bonds—special Karstardt bonds—and I knew that my uncle was interested in Karstardt, and so I immediately thought that he was the one who was going to repatriate those shares into Germany, and I knew that that was not permissible under the German law.

The Court: I think we are getting right many details in. I guess we have enough on it from his point of view, probably. If you want to bring anything out on redirect, you may.

Mr. Burling: My point is satisfied, Your Honor.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. Coming to a different topic, Mr. von Opel, you say that up to the time you left Europe about 2000 tons of bauxite was the total production of the Hungarian mines? A. Yes, approximately.

Q. Yet it is the fact, is it not, that you negotiated a contract on behalf of Transdanubia with Giulini Brothers in the fall of 1939 to supply Giulini with a hundred 2467 thousand metric tons of bauxite? A. Yes, that is correct. It was done to offset this stealing of bauxite by Koranyi.

Q. But, at any rate, you did cause Transdanubia to contract to deliver a hundred thousand metric tons? A. Yes. As I told you, there was a loophole in this contract.

Q. Your father knew nothing about the bauxite business; is that your testimony? A. No.

Q. He was several times in Budapest before you left Europe, was he not? A. Yes; he always went hunting in Hungary.

Q. You never told him you had bauxite interests in Hungary? A. It is possible that I mentioned it to him in a general way.

Q. You say that General Motors in October, 1931, were agreeing to sell you a block of shares below the Stock Exchange price; is that right? A. That is correct.

Q. Did you not know that General Motors went on the Stock Exchange and bought the shares which they delivered to you? A. No, that is not correct; they came from 2468 Morgan and Company.

Q. Did not Morgan buy them on the Exchange at the request of General Motors? A. I have no way of knowing where Morgan got them from, but I think they were—they must have been owned by somebody connected with General Motors, either Morgan or maybe General Motors Management Corporation. I have no way of knowing that. But it certainly would not make any sense if they bought stock at a higher price and they offered it to me.

Q. No, if that were the fact.

In May, 1932, you got a power of attorney from Dr. Frankenberg to deal with Uebersee securities; is that right? A. That is correct. I think that is the second power of attorney I got.

Q. It was on the basis of the power of attorney which you received from Frankenberg that you directed the City Bank-Farmers Trust Company to transfer the funds to Uebersee; is that right? A. No, that is not right, Mr. Burling. I did not receive power from Dr. Frankenberg but from where it is signed by the officers of the corporation.

Q. I will read to you from your affidavit in the Gold Case at folio 171:

"At the end of May, 1932, I received from Dr. Frankenberg a further power of attorney dated May 9, 1932, 2469 of which a true copy is attached marked Exhibit W. On the basis of this power of attorney I wrote City Bank-Farmers Trust Company on May 31, 1932, directing it to open an account in the name of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G."

and so on. A. Not a power of attorney from Frankenberg. I understand that it is a power of attorney of Uebersee. It is an exhibit attached to the Siold Case. It is signed by, if I remember correctly, Dr. Frankenberg and, on the other hand, Dr. Henggeler or Dr. Meier.

Q. In the early months of 1932, you gave Dr. Frankenberg a proxy to vote Uebersee shares, did you not? A. That is possible; I don't remember it.

Q. Well, I will ask you to examine Exhibit L to your affidavit and state whether that refreshes your recollection.

Mr. Burling: This, if Your Honor please, is the minutes of the tenth regular general meeting of the plaintiff corporation.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. "Mr. Fritz von Opel, represented by Dr. Hans Frankenberg, Zurich, by virtue of written proxy of 497 shares." A. Yes, that is correct.

The Court: You will be some few minutes longer, won't you?

2470 Mr. Burling: I have no more, if Your Honor please.

The Court: If you cannot complete it in a few minutes, it can wait?

Mr. Burling: It would greatly assist me if we could finish before the luncheon recess.

The Court: Very well.

By Mr. Burling:

Q. You recall that it was your father who suggested that Frankenberg should be made the major director of the holding company? A. I think I answered that before:

that I had discussed with my father and that I asked him whether—what he thought of Dr. Frankenberg, and I told him—I said, "I would like to have Dr. Frankenberg come on the board. He sold me originally the Uebersee Korporation."

Q. In fact, you had a conference with Dr. Frankenberg at the very moment you received the first power of attorney, did you not? A. Afterward or in connection with it, yes. I received the first power—At this time, as I just stated, after I had received the first power, afterward I asked Dr. Frankenberg whether he would like to become a board member.

Q. Perhaps I misunderstood you. Did you not say to Mr. Gallagher that when you got the first power of attorney, Frankenberg was not in the picture? A. I stated

2471 and—

Q. Well, did you or did you not state that? A. May I say what I feel I have stated?

Q. Surely. A. I think I have stated that Mr. Gallagher asked me whether the first power of attorney was signed by Dr. Henggeler, Dr. Meier, and Dr. Frankenberg; and I said, "No, none of the three were yet members of the board. It was signed by Dr. Martin Bloch."

That is what I have stated.

Q. At any rate, right after you stated that, Frankenberg agree to become a member of the Board of Managing Directors of the Korporation, did he not? A. Yes; all three of the gentlemen.

Q. They were not all three managing directors, were they? A. Not managing directors; board members.

Q. Frankenberg also agreed to become managing director? A. Yes.

Mr. Burling: That is all.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all.

Mr. Boland: We will recall Dr. Kronstein.

Thereupon, DR. HEINRICH KRONSTEIN was recalled
2472 as a witness and, having been previously duly sworn, testified further as follows:

Direct Examination

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Doctor, you were here during the course of the testimony of Miss Schoch, the Government expert on German law, were you not? A. Yes, I was.

Q. You heard her testimony? A. Yes, I did, sir.

Q. As a result of her testimony, do you wish to change your testimony in any sense of the word? A. No.

Q. Did you hear Miss Schoch discuss certain court decisions of Germany in respect of sham transactions? A. I did.

Q. Do you have any comments to make on those cases, Doctor? A. Those cases show that even original documents can be scheinvertrag. I never denied that.

Q. So it is your opinion that they add nothing to the case?

By the Court:

Q. There isn't any difference in the German law with regard to what is sham from what is in the American 2473 law, is there? Your approach is just the same? A sham is a fake transaction, not an honest transaction, not a true one? On the face of things it is regular, but if we disregard the face of the instrument or the face of the transaction, and something else is the true situation, it is a sham in German law; isn't that true? A. German law distinguishes between two different types of sham. One type of sham is when two parties agree that it is a contract, when it is not a contract at all. Another type is if those parties agree to A but write B.

Q. I understand. A. That is the first of two types. Then, the second type, if A is valid but not B, nothing is valid.

The Court: That is exactly the same as in American law.

A. The only difference is that the German contract is something different. But the whole approach is a question of scheinvertrag.

Q. That is what I mean, yes. A. It is a question of evidence.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Changing the subject slightly, Doctor, Miss Schoch testified that in analyzing Plaintiff's Exhibit 5, which is the gift agreement, and the Hachenburg drafts and letters—so-called Hachenburg letters—which I think are Plaintiff's Exhibits 7, 8, and 9, she came to the conclusion that 2474 the father had intended to have a right in rem created in the future.

On cross-examination, I believe, she testified that this right of the father was an in personam right against the donee—the son—to create a usufruct as a right in rem in the future.

Do you believe that such an interpretation is a reasonable interpretation? A. That is a possible interpretation. I believe it is my possibility No. 2 in my scheme of possible interpretations.

Q. So that being a reasonable interpretation, it is, in fact, your No. 2, is it not? A. Yes, it is my No. 2.

Q. There was one qualification. I am not sure of the significance Miss Schoch placed in this, but she said, "in the near future." Is that a reasonable interpretation of those letters? A. May I see the documents?

Q. Yes (handing papers to the witness). A. I do not see any reference in the Hachenburg draft to the time when the demand might be made. It just states that Mr. Fritz von Opel is entitled, and upon demand of the donors obliged, to assign shares to a holding company which he owns. In this case the parents would have the use of a usufruct.

Q. Let us assume that "in the near future" were a 2475 reasonable interpretation of those papers.

The Court: Excuse me. May I see that a minute?

Let me tell you what I think she said. I may be wrong, but I thought there was some language in here—Is this No. 5?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Boland: No; these are the Hachenburg papers.

The Court: I may be mistaken, but I would like to ask you this myself, whether she said it or not. I thought she took this language which immediately follows the transfer of the title to the shares:

"Usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel; it remains with Wilhelm and his wife until both," and so forth.

I understood her to say that that indicated, in her mind, that that was to have come about immediately or in the very near future, and that it was simply a mistake of the draftsman that those words of conveyance were not included. I think that is what she stated.

The Witness: That is based on one point. My friend, Miss Schoch, believes that usufruct can only mean having a right in rem; but it can have different meanings.

The Court: I thought she agreed to that, but she said that that language, as I understood it, was one of the reasons—that, as well as this language of the previous 2476 lawyer—that indicated to her that it meant in personam. That is what I understood.

By the Court:

Q. Do you think there is any significance to that language, that this usufruct in the shares is not assigned; it remains with him and his wife? Does that rather positive statement indicate to you that that might tend to show that the donors wanted to keep the right with them at that time or sometime in the immediate future, rather than some indefinite future? A. The parties agreed on a contractual right. The Opel parents shall have a contractual claim for income, since they do not include conveyance.

The Court: I do not know that it is a question of law anyway.

Mr. Boland: The only point in this question, Your Honor, is to bring out this: Let us assume that they did contemplate "in the near future." What, in effect, would have occured if they did not set it out?

The Court: He agrees to that.

Mr. Boland: I am not sure I asked her that question.

The Court: I made it perfectly clear before she left the stand that if there came a time when there was some word of conveyance or some delivery to him or his agent, the actual right in rem did not occur. She certainly said that.

2477 Mr. Boland: That is true, but she did not testify as to what effect there would be legally if the original intent of the parties was that they create a right in rem in the near future and, in fact, did not.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Boland: If there is not some legal significance to that position, I think we are very close to being in agreement on what the law is.

The Witness: It has no effect on the contract.

The Court: You can ask him that. Until there comes a time when they would specifically perform, then no absolute right lodges.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. So if no demand had been made by the donors of this gift agreement, if it meant that the intent was that one be created in the near future, and if in fact no demand had been made, it would have no effect on the contract? A. No effect on the validity of the contract.

Q. Doctor, you heard Miss Schoch, in a long dissertation and analysis of laws concerning foreign funds control, describe why and how the Reichsbank director had nothing to do with the issuance of licenses in respect of waiving rights of the donor. You have had quite a bit of experience in practicing in Germany under the foreign 2478 exchange laws and regulations, have you not? A. I have.

Q. From your experience and practice, would you attach any significance to a statement of clearance by the Reichsbank director to this effect: that our lawyers have gone over the problem carefully, and we have come to the conclusion that no court action can be taken; that, in effect, our hands are tied?

Would that have any significance to you as a German practicing lawyer, familiar with this foreign fund problem? A. That would have very much significance for me. It is perfectly correct, what Miss Schoch said, that the licensing authority is a section of the Department of Commerce, but under the director of the Reichsbank, handling the entire collecting of foreign currency, and whenever a lawyer had such a problem, he was perfectly accustomed to go to the Reichsbank, because—at least, that was the feeling of every lawyer—that was where the decisions were made; and Mr. Wilhelm had such a high position, so high that I believe I would not have even dared, in the Nazi state, to say, "I don't believe, Mr. Wilhelm, if you tell me that you have this decision on the basis of a discussion with the Department of Commerce"—I would not even have dared to write a letter and say, "I would like to have that in written form by the Department of Commerce."

Mr. Burling: I move to strike that as not being a legal answer. The witness testified that he agreed with 2479 Miss Schoch that Wilhelm had no jurisdiction in the matter, and the waiver would have to be written.

The Court: I will let it stay in and will let you argue it a little later.

By Mr. Boland:

Q. Coming back to October 5, 1931, and considering the evidence that Wilhelm von Opel had 600 shares of stock in an escrow agreement located in New York City—Are you familiar with the escrow agreement? A. I have seen it.

Q. Now, was there any way in which Wilhelm von Opel, assuming that his primary motive and purpose would be to protect those shares as an American asset here in America for his own protection, should he ever desire to leave Germany—was there a way available for him to accomplish this purpose without having gone through the gift agreement? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. How could he have accomplished this purpose? A. One would be to extend the agreement for as many years as General Motors would agree with him.

Q. To extend the escrow agreement? A. To extend the escrow agreement.

Q. You know, do you not, that the escrow agreement by its terms would have expired in 1934? A. Yes.

2480 Q. So what you mean is— A. Extend it without any license at the time when the gift agreement was made.

Mr. Boland: Thank you. That is all we have.

Cross Examination

By Mr. Burling:

Q. I correctly understood you to testify, did I not, that you agree with Miss Schoch that, technically speaking, the Reichsbank did not have authority to grant waivers or to declare that waivers were unnecessary? A. Technically, yes; but practically, no.

Q. I see. But, as a matter of technical law, an oral statement made by Wilhelm would be of no value in a defense to a prosecution; isn't that true? A. Mr. Burling, practicing law in Germany in 1935—December, 1935—when I left, especially in the matter of currency, was not a matter of law; it was a matter of false power and diplomacy.

Q. But insofar as there was any law, as you understand the concept of law— A. As far as—

Q. Wilhelm's statement would have been irrelevant, wouldn't it? A. Irrelevant. Even under the regular situation, I couldn't see it. If the highest next to the 2481 president of the Reichsbank—the highest official tells me, or one of the very highest officials of the Reichsbank tells me, that is the case, and I have discussed this matter with lawyers, I couldn't see it is of any significance.

The Court: He is making the same distinction as if the Attorney General would say it over here and the Supreme Court might say something to the contrary.

The Witness: That is possible.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, not quite that. It is more like the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

The Court: I understand the distinction. That probably was not an apt illustration. Yes, I see. I have your point.

Mr. Burling: I have no more questions.

Mr. Boland: We have no more questions.

Mr. Gallagher: We have no more questions, and we have no further witnesses.

Mr. Baum: On the question of exhibits, we have gone through the record, and we find that there are ten or fifteen exhibits which we neglected to offer in the course of the testimony; and I also note in the record that we have, in the case of a great majority of the exhibits, the whole number, such as Exhibit 2, and the translation, such as 2-A. I think I would like to arrive at an understanding with counsel that where one number is offered, both may be considered as exhibits.

2482 The Court: That is all right.

Mr. Gallagher: I have no objection to that where one is a translation.

The Court: That applies to both sides. All exhibits that have been heretofore identified in the German and the translations that have been identified may be received in evidence where either one has been received. That is by stipulation of the parties.

Mr. Baum: Now, the list of exhibits which have not been offered are—

The Court: I will tell you what I think you should do. I think you should show that to Mr. Gallagher, and if there is any objection, I will let you argue it. But you let me know.

Mr. Baum: May I note just two, Your Honor. Two of them are reporter's mistakes. Defendant's Exhibit 43 has come into the record as received in evidence as 43-A, and there is no 43-A. Defendant's Exhibit 68 is marked received as 69, which means there are two 69's. If that can be corrected—

2508 PROCEEDINGS

The Court: Gentlemen, I have arranged, now, to give you today to argue this, and as much time as you need on Monday to conclude. I hope you will try to conclude before noon on Monday, if possible. I shall probably have to adjourn today between half past 3 and 4. Are you ready to proceed?

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, we have pending before the Court the question of the deposition of Mrs. von Opel which was taken on yesterday. The Government's official copy has not arrived; but anticipating that perhaps there would be a delay, I brought a report from New York with me, and I have tendered the Government a copy of that deposition. I feel at this time that before we renew any objections, and before we go forward with our closing argument, we should have a determination of the question of Mrs. von Opel's testimony.

The Court: What is the question about it?

Mr. Burling: I believe it is in the form of a motion made by me on the ground of newly discovered evidence. I believe Your Honor reserved ruling on that pending the taking of Mrs. von Opel's deposition.

I now renew the motion and ask leave to read Mrs. von Opel's deposition into the record.

Mr. Gallagher: We have no objection.

The Court: All right. Then, the motion is granted.

Mr. Burling: We do have a mechanical problem.
2509 We have only one copy. If counsel would be good enough to let us have two momentarily, we can read it with more facility.

Mr. Gallagher: There are just a couple of corrections that, to my recollection, should be made. I do not have the other copy of the report. I have no objection to pointing them out to Mr. Burling, and the reading will be subject to correction when we get the official copy. Is that all right?

Mr. Burling: That will be all right.

(The deposition of Margot von Opel was then read to the Court. Mr. Burling read the questions on direct examination, and Mr. Baum read the answers.)

Mr. Burling: This is the direct examination by Mr. Baum of Mrs. von Opel:

"Q. What is your full name? A. Margot von Opel.

"Q. And you live at this address, 433 E. 51st Street, Apartment 120, New York City?"

Mr. Gallagher: Just a moment, Mr. Burling. If I might suggest it, will you have the record reflect that the oath was administered prior to the taking of the testimony?

Mr. Burling: Yes; the reporter administered the oath prior to the taking of this deposition.

(The reading of the deposition was continued as follows:)

"Q. And you live at this address, 433 E. 51st Street, Apartment 120, New York City? A. Yes.

2510 "Q. You are the wife of Mr. Fritz von Opel? A. Yes.

"Q. And you and Mr. Fritz von Opel were married in 1929? A. Yes.

"Q. And you have lived together as husband and wife since that date? A. That is correct.

"Q. Mrs. von Opel, I call your attention to the year 1937—April, 1937. Do you remember where you were at that time? A. I would not know.

"Q. Do you recall that in April, 1937, Mr. Fritz von Opel was on a trip? A. I was in Berlin then.

"Q. And do you remember that Mr. von Opel came to Berlin from Essen in April, 1937—the end of April, 1937? A. I do not remember but since I saw the letter that I have written to Mrs. Langnick, I did say that he had come. I could not tell.

"Q. You are now referring to an excerpt from a letter you wrote on April 28, 1937, which I presume Mr. Gallagher has shown you? A. That is correct.

2511 "Q. In that letter you stated Mr. von Opel came the previous day and would stay with you until Friday of that week? A. Could you show me the letter?

"Q. Surely. I show you the excerpt of the letter of April 28, 1937 (hereinafter referred to as Exhibit A) for the purpose of assisting the witness to answer.

(Witness reads.)

"Q. Who was Mrs. Langnick, by the way? A. She was our secretary and very good friend.

"Q. When you say 'our friend' you mean Mr. von Opel as well as yourself? A. Yes.

"Q. You said in that letter that Mr. von Opel would remain with you until Friday and then would return to St. Moritz via Russelsheim where he expects to have a conference with Dr. Frankenberg. A. That is what I wrote.

"Q. And how did you know Mr. von Opel was going to have a conference with Frankenberg in Russelsheim? A. Perhaps he told me—I don't know—or perhaps he had planned it before.

"Q. Mr. von Opel told you that before? Had Dr. Frankenberg told you he was going to be in Russel-2512 sheim? A. That is not true.

"Q. You were told by Fritz von Opel that he was planning to have a conference in Russelsheim with Dr. Frankenberg? A. Yes. Mr. Baum, I must say all I know about this is what I wrote in that letter.

"Q. But what you wrote in that letter is correct? A. What I wrote in that letter is correct, yes.

"Q. Now I will draw your attention to December, 1940, at which time I believe you were in the United States?

"Mr. Gallagher: For the record, the exhibit you have now directed Mrs. von Opel's attention to will be marked Exhibit B.

"Q. I asked you, you were in the United States on December 24, 1940, were you not? A. Yes.

"Q. And at that time you wrote a letter to Mrs. Langnick bearing the date of December 24, 1940, and containing the language which appears in the excerpt Exhibit B, is that correct? A. Yes.

"Q. I call your attention to the statement in that letter which, in English, reads, 'To be sure, it was high time—and a true piece of luck—' A. How do you translate it 'to be sure'? How do you get that?

"(Off the record discussion of the translation.)

"Q. (Continuing) 'To be sure, it was high time—and a true piece of luck that Frankenberg came over with us who continued to kick our little master until he cleaned up the mess in Shreveport.' A. Where does the word 'kick' come in? Our 'treten' is never 'kick.' Certainly not. You can say he 'sat upon him.' We use that word when we make wine. It means to 'stamp' or to 'work on a person.' You never say 'kick.' 'Kick' would mean that you pushed somebody.

"Mr. Gallagher: How do you translate the word 'treten', Mrs. von Opel—to 'work on somebody'?

"A. I would say 'working on somebody.'

"Q. Did you make that statement, Mrs. von Opel? A. I did.

"Q. And what did you understand by the expression 'the mess in Shreveport'? A. First, I know Fritz was losing very much money down there and he was talked into this whole thing by people I did not believe in. That was Crittenden and Mr. Grogan. They were brought to Fritz as far as I know by Mr. Hoffacker, whom I personally had thrown out of the house in St. Moritz; so I had no 2514 reason to believe the other people were any better.

Then I knew from conversations that Fritz had lost money there and when I came over here and saw a great deal of Dr. Frankenberg, I had hope that Fritz would stop that down in Shreveport and I asked Dr. Frankenberg to influence Fritz as much as he could, that Fritz should give that up and I wish Fritz would listen, but he never listens—he gets mad at him.

"Q. And do you remember when you came to the United States, Mrs. von Opel—in about the year 1940? A. Oh, that was on the 8th of May, 1940.

"Q. And Dr. Frankenberg came over on the same boat? A. He came with me and with a friend of mine, Mrs. Schwarzenbach. She is dead.

"Q. And is it your testimony, Mrs. von Opel, that to your knowledge Dr. Frankenberg worked on your husband Fritz to clean up the mess in Shreveport? A. I made that statement.

"Q. And it is correct? A. It is correct. He did it because I asked him to do it.

"Q. You asked who to do it? A. I asked Frankenberg to help me—to ask Fritz to give up the work in Shreveport.

"Q. And Dr. Frankenberg you knew was a director of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation at that time, did 2515 you not? A. Yes. He really has tried his best to give Fritz advice. Fritz never listens.

"Q. Well, apparently Mr. von Opel listened in this case, since you say he did clean up the mess in Shreveport. A. That is correct.

"Q. Now I draw your attention to November, 1939. I show you a paper, which will hereinafter be known as Exhibit C A. She was in Germany when I wrote this letter.

"Q. Who? A. Ruth—Mrs. Langnick.

"Q. Now this excerpt, which will be referred to as Exhibit C, purports to be an excerpt from a letter from Mrs. von Opel to Mrs. Langnick written from Zurich and dated November 18, 1939, which reads as follows:

"'There can be no question of American citizenship. I should like to know who continues to put such rumors into circulation, most likely Dr. P. whom I dislike doubly since his failure toward you. It is true, in this direction various other matters have transpired which became necessary because of the business over there.'

"You made that statement, Mrs. von Opel? A. Yes, I did.

"Q. And it is correct? A. It is.

2516 "Q. It would appear you were referring to a question raised by Mrs. Langnick as to whether someone had become an American citizen. Who was the person involved? Was it Mr. von Opel? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, the last sentence which I read you—'It is true, in this direction various other matters have transpired which became necessary because of the business over there,' Would you state what that sentence refers to? A. You must understand I wrote this letter into Nazi Germany. All letters were opened and censored. Mrs. Langnick had, on account of us, very many difficulties in Germany and I was all the time worried about her because she had been with the German-Russian Petrol Company before she came to us and then she became our secretary and couldn't get another job. This is what I refer to when I say that Dr. Pilder I disliked anyway and as far as I remember I had tried to get her in at the Dresdner Bank and Pilder would not take her on account of her—call it political outlook, and so on.

"Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, this excerpt which I read you refers to citizenship. That is what I am asking you about.

A. I understand that very well, and when I say in 2517 that letter that other things had developed which were necessary on account of business, I meant that in case people tell her, or there are rumors, that we have changed our citizenship, which will certainly be considered in Germany a crime, it would reflect on her. So I said it was done for business reasons.

"Q. In other words, in that sentence you are referring to the fact that you and your husband had become citizens of Liechtenstein? Of course, on that date you had not yet become citizens of Liechtenstein, had you? A. What is the date?

"Q. November 18, 1939. A. Oh, I thought it was October. November 10th, and confirmed by Parliament on November 21. That is as a member of the community of Planken and formal adoption on the 21st of November.

"Q. And you said this citizenship was acquired for business purposes, is that correct? A. To give her protection.

"Q. Why did she need protection? A. Because she had any way so much trouble from knowing us.

"Q. Oh, I see.

"Now, Mrs. von Opel, I draw your attention to the year 1946. Did you have conversations in July, 1946, 2518 with your husband concerning the subject of the usufruct? A. When?

"Q. In July, 1946. A. That is very likely.

"Q. Isn't it true that you and your husband tried to analyze the origin of the usufruct which is contained in the gift agreement—Plaintiff's Exhibit 5—which related to the 600 Opel shares? A. When you ask me this way I certainly couldn't tell you whether it was a certain month, day or hour. I certainly had conversations with Fritz about it. We talked about it at all times.

"Q. I am not asking you for any particular day, Mrs. von Opel. I am asking you whether around July, June, or a month in 1946 you discussed the origin of the usufruct with your husband. A. Possibly.

"Q. Why were you worried about the usufruct in 1946? A. The property was vested and as far as I understood the vesting order was because the Government had the absolutely absurd and crazy idea that the money did not belong to Fritz.

"Q. You did know the usufruct had been waived in 2519 1935, did you not? A. It had been waived, yes.

"Q. I see, and you came to the conclusion in 1946 that the origin of the usufruct was the distrust of your father-in-law, Wilhelm von Opel, towards his son, Fritz von Opel? A. I don't understand the word 'trust.' Please repeat that.

"Mr. Gallagher: I would like the record to show that this deposition is being taken of Mrs. von Opel while she is in bed recovering from an operation and with a perforated ear drum.

"A. And continuously under medication and I am dizzy.

"Q. Reread the question. (The question was read.) A. 'Distrust' is not the word. As far as I know about the usufruct—Am I entitled to see this letter? So far as I know about this usufruct it was at that time made when my father-in-law gave my husband the money and we were just married and the old man was afraid that we would spend too much money.

"Q. You knew a Dr. Daniel Gros, did you not? A. Yes.

"Q. And he was a lawyer in Germany? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you not write him in July, 1946, referring to the usufruct, 'In trying to analyze its origin one finds 2520 that it grew from nothing but a distrust of a father against his own son'? A. How did I write that in German?

"Q. I will now show the witness a photostatic copy of what purports to be a letter dated July 22, 1946, to Dr. Gros from Margot von Opel, hereinafter referred to as Exhibit D. A. (Reads the excerpt.) I remember the letter.

"Q. Did you come to the conclusion in 1946 that the origin of the usufruct was the distrust of a father against his own son? A. I used in this letter 'misstrauen.' That would be translated 'distrust.' That is correct because, as I told you, when we married, the old man had the idea we would spend too much money and I call that mistrust. To start out with, it is more in the word. What I mean is that the old man did not trust his son when he married me. He thought it was a crazy idea and that I would do nothing but spend money.

"Q. Did that mistrust continue throughout the years? A. No.

"Q. But anyway, in 1946 you believed the origin of the usufruct was that mistrust as you described it? A. Yes.

"Q. Now I am coming to another topic. Is it correct to say that the family relationship between Wil-2521 helm and Fritz von Opel was psychologically extremely complicated? A. I think it was not more complicated than all human relationships are.

"Q. Didn't you tell Dr. Gros that it was? A. That is what I write in this letter, definitely. But I believe all human relationships are terribly complicated.

"Q. And isn't it right to say these complicated family relationships are the only explanation for the never-ending distrust—almost fear—of the son for the father? A. You must understand, Mr. Baum, that I have worked for a psychiatrist and sometimes I go perhaps a little bit too far when I analyze things. There is certainly the father-son complex—something very complicated.

"Q. Did you not tell Dr. Gros that there was a never-ending distrust? A. That is what I write.

"Q. And you told Dr. Gros that? A. Yes, but I refer to the conclusion I come to. You must understand that as you read this letter. At that time Fritz was always risking his life with sporting things; I had gone through the experience of having gotten interned—getting 2522 afraid of life—and I would say, 'Good God, what is going to happen to me if something happens to Fritz.' Then I said I couldn't suggest to the old man to change this in his will and I said because what would it help. I would sit here without a penny and I didn't want to suggest that to Fritz because I think it is an awful thing to say to somebody—what is going to happen when you die. I don't like to do that.

"Q. Whether or not you were concerned as to what would happen in the future, you did state, and now state, there was a never-ending distrust between Wilhelm von Opel to his son, Fritz von Opel? A. I put first of all 'misstrauen' in quotation marks in this sentence.

"Q. May the record show that 'misstrauen' refers to the English word 'distrust.'

"And you thought there was a curious shyness—almost fear—of your husband Fritz towards his father, is that correct? A. I wrote that.

"Q. Is it correct? A. I must have felt about it that way at that time. And it is correct. Every son has a feeling that he has to prove to his father that he is a superman or something like that. Fundamentally, the old man was scared of Fritz.

2523 "Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, you have been married some twenty years, is that correct? A. That is correct.

"Q What has been your relationship with the mother-in-law in those twenty years? A. Not too good.

"Q. Not too good? A. We get along, but I don't like her.

"Q. And she doesn't like you, is that correct? A. She writes me very sweet letters.

"Q. But she doesn't like the people with whom you are friends, is that correct? A. I wouldn't be surprised.

"Q. And she doesn't like the way you live, is that correct? A. I wouldn't be surprised.

"Q. That is what you told the Hearing Board in Miami, isn't that so? A. Yes.

"Q. And you also told the Hearing Board you didn't like your father-in-law, didn't you? A. I don't think I ever said it that way. I said I get along with them and I respect them. It is a different word for me.

2524 "Q. Did you not tell the Hearing Board in Miami, 'I don't get along with the old man but I respect him'? A. It is possible, I said it and if you read it out of the record, it must be correct.

"Q. Did you ever know a man by the name of Eric Deku? A. God forgive me, yes!

"Q. Did you ever tell Mr. Eric Deku that people think you are wealthy but in reality all your wealth belongs to the parents of your husband? A. He is crazy!

"Q. I am not asking if he is crazy. I am asking if you ever said that. A. I never said a thing like that. He was one of my special friends who always had a pleasant time meeting me because I told him he is a crook. I even told him that he is interested to have Fritz killed, because of his idea of flying a balloon in the middle of the night and wrecking it, almost, in Germany. I said he must have great interest in having Fritz killed.

"Q. Who was flying a balloon in the middle of the night? A. Fritz.

"Q. And when was this? A. Sometime in the thirties at the time when we knew Eric Deku—I don't know just when.

2525 "Q. Would it be correct to say it was sometime between 1932 and 1936 or 7? A. That could be.

"Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, I believe that for the moment I have only one more question. Will you describe in detail the circumstances under which you had dinner with Adolf Hitler? A. I knew Leni Riefenstahl. She was a movie actress, a sports woman, a kind of crazy person. I knew her, I think, from 1925 on. She was making at that time the picture of the Olympic games. I must say she was an excellent movie director.

"Q. That was in 1936, was it not? A. Yes, 1936. And I was on my way down to Switzerland coming from Kempen, and going down to Switzerland Leni told me that she is going to finish some sport pictures in Nuerenberg and asked me whether I would come with her. I disliked the idea because I wanted to go on and I disliked the idea of spending days with her, but Fritz said to me, 'You better go, you'll probably laugh your head off when you see all these people down there. So I went, and at the evening we went to the hotel to have dinner and at the same hotel Mr. Hitler was with his gang and he sent over to us to the table his adjutant, who came to me and said, 'Pardon, you are arrested.' I looked up and said, 'Good God, 2526 don't make jokes!' because I did not feel very safe there. I had the feeling I was really sailing under the wrong flag sitting there. But he said, 'You are arrested to have dinner with the Fuhrer.' And he turned to Leni and asked her to join them also. Leni was delighted and I said I think I better stay here with the cameramen and she said no, no, no, you must come, must come. So we both went over there and we certainly had no dinner because nobody gets anything while this man was talking. I wanted a glass of wine but she said in the presence of the Fuhrer there was no wine. He himself was drinking almond milk. The conversation between him and Leni did not stop, as though she had known him all her life. It was too beautiful for words, because she was sitting there, almost on her knees in front of the Fuhrer, and he said, 'In the year 1943 you are going to make for me the bible of the Nazi Movement,' and Leni, with her hands like in prayer, said, 'My Fuhrer, my Fuhrer, how could I ever have the strength?' And he banged his fist on the table and said, 'The strength I am going to give to you.' And she was absolutely swooning. And then she got up. I never have seen such manners in my life. They left us sitting there, their hands raised in 'Heil Hitler.' And I said to Leni, 'Good God, what are you doing in a situation like that?'

2527 "Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, you went to Germany practically every year through 1939, did you not?

A. Yes.

"Q. I believe that is all now. I would like to ask that in event the files arrive before we have concluded, I may be permitted, if I find it necessary, to ask any additional questions based on the letters in that file. I think in fairness we can't hold up the deposition indefinitely today.

"Mr. Gallagher: Certainly."

(The questions on cross-examination were then read by Mr. Gallagher, and the answers were read by Mr. Boland.)

"Q. Mrs. von Opel, when you use the phrase 'too beautiful for words' to describe Leni Riefenstahl's actions and all, I gather from your manner when you are saying it that you are being sarcastic? A. Certainly.

"Q. Mr. Baum asked you some questions and showed you a letter which you wrote to Dr. Gros in 1946 and identified as Exhibit D, and drew your attention to the fourth page where you state therein, 'I suggest that my father-in-law, if he agrees to modifying the contract, write directly to Fritz informing him about it and leaving me out altogether.'

"Would you state what portion of the contract you 2528 are asking Dr. Gros to talk to Fritz and the father about modification? And in connection with that sentence, I also draw your attention to page 2, the fourth line thereof, in which it states, 'It seems absolutely crazy to leave this provision in the contract.' Now, will you state as to those two portions of the letter what you were talking about? A. I was talking about the reversion.

"Q. By that you mean that the fact that if Fritz were to die without issue the parents Opel would have the legal right to get back Fritz's money and that would leave you with nothing, is that correct? A. That is correct.

"Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, in 1939—November of 1939—you and Mr. von Opel became citizens of Liechtenstein. The defendants have stipulated that to be a fact. Would you state the reason why you and, if you know, why Fritz became citizens of Liechtenstein? A. Because we wanted to denounce our German citizenship."

Mr. Burling: "Denounce" should be "renounce."

(The reading of the deposition was continued as follows:)

"Q. By that do I understand you to mean you no longer wanted to be considered Germans by any fashion under the law? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you stated in connection with Exhibit B, which is the letter of December 24, 1940, in which you said, '—and a true piece of luck that Frankenberg came over with us who continued to kick our little master until he cleaned up the mess in Shreveport,' that you asked Frankenberg to work on Fritz von Opel. At that point I wish to ask you this: Why did you call Fritz von Opel 'the little master'? A. That is a long story.

"Q. Can you state the story briefly? A. The first secretary we had was called 'Poodle' and when you talk about your master from Poodle's point of view you call him 'Herrchen.' It has nothing to do with little master.

"Q. Now, when you say that you asked Frankenberg to work on Fritz, would you state again in general what you told Frankenberg and what you asked him to do? A. You see, I had discussed quite often with Frankenberg matters concerning Fritz because I was very often worried that he didn't take advice from anybody under God's sun and he was running for that reason, not knowing people too well, into lots of difficulties and Frankenberg was a very conservative man. I always had hoped he would have some influence on Fritz.

"Q. Frankenberg was a friend of yours and a friend of Fritz'? A. Yes.

"Q. Did you ever hear Frankenberg give Fritz any orders? A. Orders! Certainly not! He has advised him. First of all, he is a much older man, he is a banker and Fritz was working at the factory—he was an excellent mechanical engineer but I don't think that he understands too much about industries and so on. That was the reason why he got into the hands of crooks.

"Q. Now, did you ever hear Frankenberg tell anybody that he was Wilhelm von Opel's agent for the purpose of safeguarding this gift Wilhelm had made? A. That is ridiculous.

"Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, in connection with Exhibit A, which is an excerpt from a letter of April 28, 1937, in which you state that Fritz is going 'to St. Moritz via Ruesselsheim (Saturday and Sunday) where he expects to have a conference with Dr. Frankenberg,' could you tell me why you put Saturday and Sunday in that letter and in parentheses? Do you have any recollection? A. Yes.

"Q. Would you state what that is? A. I did not believe Fritz was going to Ruesselsheim at all.

2531 "Q. And why did not you believe that, or did I understand you correctly then that the parentheses indicated your disbelief? A. Yes, I think he went away for the week end, just as I made the crack here about the geese with feathers. Because I think perhaps usually he was chasing the girls, but this time he was really going out for geese.

"Q. And do I understand you to say that the parentheses indicated you did not believe this story? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, let me ask you this. On April 28, 1937, do you know whether Wilhelm von Opel was in Ruesselsheim or Wiesbaden, or any point in that area? A. No, he was not. He was in South America.

"Q. On April 28, 1937, he was in South America? A. He was in South America.

"Q. And do you have any recollection as to when he went? A. He left on the Capareona with Count and Countess Edelsheim.

"Q. Did Fritz ever tell you whether he had ever given any money to Count Edelsheim for his father on that 2532 trip? A. Yes, he did, as far as I remember.

"Q. Do you have any idea about how much he gave the Count for the father? A. It could be around 1,000 pounds, or something like that.

"Q. So then, if I understand your testimony correctly, on April 28, 1937, it would have been impossible, even if it were true, that Fritz von Opel was going to meet with Frankenberg in Ruesselsheim, for Wilhelm to have been there, inasmuch as he was in South America? A. He certainly was not there. I doubt very much if there was ever a conference with Frankenberg. I don't even remember that Frankenberg ever went to Ruesselsheim. When he was a man of around 25, Frankenberg may have been in Ruesselsheim, but as far as I remember, Frankenberg was never in Ruesselsheim.

"Q. Did you ever hear Dr. Frankenberg, Wilhelm von Opel and Fritz sit down and have any discussion about the proceeds of this gift or about the American corporations? A. Never.

"Q. To your knowledge, did Wilhelm von Opel ever give Fritz von Opel any instructions as to what he was to do with the gift or the American corporations? A. Never.

"Q. To your knowledge, did Wilhelm ever request 2533 any dividends or sums from Fritz? A. Never. Why should he? He had all the money he wanted in Germany.

"Q. Now, you stated at the Miami hearing to which Mr. Baum has referred—By the way, what was your physical condition when you were in Miami? A. I was not well.

"Q. You stated at that time that you did not like the father but that you got along with him. What, however, were your relations with the father during the 1930's? Were they good or bad? A. They were friendly. He came every year to our house, and would continue there for a couple of weeks, and I tried to give him a good time.

"Q. That was the house at St. Moritz? A. Yes.

"Q. If I understand you correctly, from your previous statement in response to Mr. Baum's question, you were apparently not friendly in 1929 when you were married, but thereafter, during the thirties, you became friendly with the father. Is that correct? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, you have a home in St. Moritz, do you not? A. Yes."

2534 Mr. Gallagher: At this time we recessed due to the arrival of Mrs. von Opel's doctor. He had to "shoot her up" a little bit.

(The reading of the deposition was then continued:)

"Q. Mrs. von Opel, you have maintained your home in St. Moritz since about 1934, I believe? A. 1932. We bought the house in 1932. In 1933 it was remodeled.

"Q. Do you have any ornamentation on your house at all? A. What do you mean—ornamentation?

"Q. Do you have any flags or decorations on your house at all? A. Certainly. I always had the flag out when we displayed flags.

"Q. What flag did you display? A. Liechtenstein.

"Q. Do you have any friends in Liechtenstein? A. Many.

"Q. Did you have any friends, any members of the royal family of Liechtenstein? A. Yes.

"Q. Will you state who that is? A. Prince Constantin.

"Q. Is Mr. von Opel also a friend of Constantin? A. He does not know Tino.

2535 "Q. Are you a friend of his wife? A. Yes, I know her very well. She is a daughter of Count Wilczeck from Vienna.

"Q. In view of the fact that there has been a recess while your doctor was here, I can't quite recollect whether I asked this question or not. You know of no income or dividends or payments of money or the like to Wilhelm von Opel by Fritz? A. No, he never made any.

"Q. Did you ever hear Wilhelm ask Fritz for any accounting or statement or information about the American corporations owned by Fritz? A. No. He only asked Fritz sometimes how the business is and whether it is good or bad and I think Fritz had always been a little afraid his father might find out he has lost money because when the old man gave him the money he said to him, 'If you can keep, under the times in which we are living, just that which you have, that is a great achievement nowadays' and when Fritz was losing money in Shreveport I think he always felt a little ashamed that he was not living up to what the old man expected of him as a business man.

2536 (Mr. Burling then read the questions on recross examination, and Mr. Baum read the answers.)

"Recross Examination by Mr. Baum

"Q. Now, Mrs. von Opel, you said Dr. Frankenberg was a friend of yours and of Fritz. He was also an old friend of Wilhelm von Opel, was he not? A. He was not an old friend. He knew him. You see, we make a difference between a friend and an acquaintance. Frankenberg was a friend of us and an acquaintance of Wilhelm.

"Q. At least he had known Frankenberg for many years, had he not? A. Yes, because he had lived near him for many years.

"Q. Is your answer yes, then? A. That they knew each other, yes.

"Q. If I told you that your husband, in an affidavit in 1935, referred to Dr. Frankenberg as an old friend of his father, is that incorrect? A. Fritz probably made the same mistake. I would call him an acquaintance.

"Q. This affidavit was made in English. A. But he probably said friend and meant acquaintance. I would not say they were friends.

"Q. Now, in referring to the excerpt Exhibit A, 2537 you say that you did not believe Fritz was going to have a conference in Liechtenstein"—

Mr. Gallagher: It is a mistake; in Ruesselsheim.

Mr. Burling: "Question: Now, in referring to the excerpt Exhibit A, you say that you did not believe Fritz was going to have a conference in Ruesselsheim with Dr. Frankenberg, is that correct? A. You see, when I wrote it I put it in parentheses. It was a crack.

"Q. You mean sarcastic? You mean even though he told you he was going to see Dr. Frankenberg you did not believe it? A. Yes.

"Q. You stated that Wilhelm von Opel was in South America at that time. How do you know he was in South America at that very date? A. Because he left in April.

"Q. How do you remember that? A. I just remember it.

"Q. And he went to South America, you say, with Count Edelsheim? A. Yes. Count Edelsheim came from Budapest.

"Q. Was his name Gyilai? A. Yes. Something like goulash.

"Q. And you said that you believed that Fritz 2538 had given Count Edelsheim about 1,000 pounds for the father in connection with the trip to South America, is that correct? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you know whether other payments were made to the Edelsheims in Budapest? A. I think Fritz once invited the Count and his father to shoot a stag in Hungary and paid something for that.

"Q. Do you know whether Wilhelm von Opel frequently went to Budapest? A. I even met him there once.

"Q. When was the last time you were in Budapest, Mrs. von Opel? A. I do not know.

"Q. Was it in 1939? A. No. Before that.

"Q. Since you were married to Fritz, have you ever been in the home of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel in Weisbaden? A. Certainly.

"Q. How many times? A. I do not remember.

"Q. Was it often? A. Not too often.

2539 "Q. Isn't it a fact that Mrs. von Opel, referring to your mother-in-law, did not want you to come into that house? A. No. I didn't like to go there because she didn't like dogs. They keep the dogs in the cellar with the coal and I hate that.

"Q. Referring to Liechtenstein, you stated in reply to Mr. Gallagher's questions that you had friends there and referred to Prince Constantin. Who was Prince Constantin? A. He was a cousin of the ruler.

"Q. What is the ruler's name? A. Franz Josef.

"Q. Now, you stated that at the time your father-in-law gave Fritz the property he told him to see if he could keep it, which would be a great achievement. Were you present when that was stated, or did Fritz tell you his father said that? A. Fritz told me.

"Q. In other words, you did not hear Wilhelm von Opel say that? A. No.

"Q. Were you in Liechtenstein or Wiesbaden"—

Mr. Baum: "or Ruesselsheim," it should be.

Mr. Burling: It must be an error again.

2540 Mr. Gallagher: Ruesselsheim.

Mr. Burling: "Question: Were you in Ruesselsheim or Wiesbaden in 1931, or were you living in Belgium at that time? A. We were living in Braschaet at that time.

"Mr. Baum. I believe that is all."

(Mr. Gallagher then read the questions on re-cross examination, and Mr. Boland read the answers.)

"Re-cross Examination by Mr. Gallagher

"Q. Have you any recollection, Mrs. von Opel, as to how long Wilhelm von Opel was in South America? Was it a period of weeks, months, or what? A. Several months.

"Q. Let me ask you this. Do you know of any transatlantic telephone calls that Fritz von Opel ever made from America? A. No, I do not know of any. Fritz is rather stingy himself. He always writes postal cards but when it comes to telegrams and telephone calls he always writes a penny card."

Mr. Gallagher: If I might correct that, I think she said he was very generous.

Mr. Burling: No.

Mr. Gallagher: All right.

"Q. Then you know of no transatlantic calls? A.
2541 He never made any. He would not even call me if I were dying.

"Q. There has been some testimony in this case that Calvin Houghland stated that in February of 1941 he and his wife were at your house for dinner and at that time, in West Palm Beach, Fritz came back after an absence from the room and stated to Calvin that he had just been talking to Hungary for thirty minutes. A. Perhaps it was another 'geese with feathers' he was talking to.

"Q. Was there any such statement made by Fritz, or any such telephone calls? A. The telephone call certainly was not made.

"Q. Now there has also been some testimony in this case that J. Mason Houghland called Fritz von Opel on the transatlantic telephone to Switzerland in September of 1939. Did any transatlantic telephone call come into your home from Switzerland? A. None.

"Q. Do you have any knowledge of any such transatlantic telephone call from Houghland? A. I have not the slightest knowledge.

"Q Now, I am going to direct your attention to August of 1939 Mr. J. Mason Houghland testified that in the latter part of August 1939 Fritz von Opel telephoned 2542 him from some place in Cologne, Germany to England and asked him to come over to Germany to meet the father Wilhelm, that after all Wilhelm was really his boss, and Mr. Houghland stated that the next day he called Mr. von Opel back somewhere near Cologne, Germany. Do you know where Fritz von Opel was during the latter part of August, 1939? A. I positively know it.

"Q. Where was he? A. In Switzerland. He left Kampen in the first days of August.

"Q. Do you recollect why he left? A. Because we knew that there was a war coming. I had put Fritz on a train with 100 litres of gasoline that he personally carried with a friend in the train, because you just couldn't get any gasoline in Germany and he had to go with the friend to"—

Mr. Gallagher: I forget what that town was.

Mr. Baum: I do not remember, myself.

—"where he dropped her and then continued to go down to Zurich—at least 400 kilometers."

Mr. Gallagher: At that point I believe the record should reflect I asked a question, Where was the family estate, as far as the route was concerned that he took? and she said around 400 kilometers away.

2543 Mr. Burling: That is correct.

Mr. Gallagher: "Q. And your recollection is that Fritz left Kampen to go back to Switzerland— A. I know it. For one reason I left Kampen around the 20th and I worked there at least ten days.

"Q. So that Fritz would have left Kempen some time before the 15th of August? A. Definitely. I would say between the 12th and the 15th.

"Q. Then do I conclude correctly from your testimony that Fritz von Opel did not have a channel call to England and a return call the next day to Germany? A. It is impossible."

(Mr. Burling then read the questions on second re-cross examination, and Mr. Baum read the answers:)

"Second Re-cross Examination by Mr. Baum

"Q. Is it not a fact, Mrs. von Opel, that Wilhelm von Opel made more than one trip to South America? A. He made a world cruise once.

"Q. How about trips just to South America? A. No. As far as I remember, not.

2544 "Q. In other words, you remember only one trip? A. Yes.

"Q. There is an estate near Cologne we have been talking about. It belonged to Fritz von Opel. What was it called? A. It is called Williamsruh.

"Q. And that is near Cologne, is it not? A. It is near Sost in Wesphalia.

"Q. Now, you stated that Fritz never made any transatlantic calls. If I told you that between Decemeber 1940 and May 1941 there were 105 long-distance calls made from your home in West Palm Beach, including at least 12 transatlantic calls, would you say that is incorrect? A. I would say it is incorrect. Long listance calls it is absolutely possible, because my friend Anna Marie Schwarzkopf was very ill at that time and I practically called her every day.

"Q. And you had no knowledge of whether or not any transatlantic calls to places like Switzerland, Hungary, Germany, England or Holland were made? A. I told you I absolutely believe it impossible. To Germany is out of the question anyway because all long distance calls to Germany were discontinued after about November 20, 1939.

2545 "Mr. Baum: That is all."

(Mr. Gallagher then read the remaining questions and Mr. Baum read the answers.)

"Mr. Gallagher: If I were to tell you, Mrs. von Opel, that Mr. and Mrs. von Opel made another trip to South America early, I believe, in 1935 or so, would you say that might be possible? A. It might be possible.

"Q. But you are certain that in 1937 he traveled with Count and Countess Edelsheim to South America? A. Yes, that is correct.

"Mr. Gallagher: That is all."

* * * * * *

2546 Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I do not know who identified this document or anything about it.

Mr. Gallagher: I realize that is the matter. I am asking whether or not you will concede the fact that this is a back-up folder of the books which have heretofore been offered. Any entry in here can be confirmed in the books which are in evidence.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I can't concede a document I have absolutely no knowledge of. There is nothing in the record, as far as I can recall, about this.

Mr. Gallagher: Yes. I originally offered it pursuant to the stipulation. Then when I withdrew to put in the books, I offered what I thought were all of the so-called back-up folders. This is one of the back-up folders for one of the years that the books are in for.

The Court: Give him a chance during the noon recess to check on it. Call his attention to what identification you had.

Mr. Gallagher: All right. The importance of it, Your Honor, is that it contains therein an itemization showing a charge to Fritz von Opel of a thousand pounds to be delivered to Count Edelsheim at the boat which was sailing on the 7th of April.

The Court: He wants to check on the identification.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I do not be-2547 lieve the document identifies itself.

The Court: That is what I say. You want to check on the identification to see what the record shows.

Mr. Gallagher: The entry is right in the books.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, if there is a document here which tallies with this book, it still does not identify it.

The Court: I understand that. I understood Mr. Gallagher to say it was identified by some witness along with others, but he simply failed to offer it. I say, you can check that up during the noon recess.

Mr. Gallagher: I want to correct you. I do not want you to labor under any misapprehension. When I offered the books, after Mr. Burling's stipulation, this was one of the books that was being stipulated and had been offered at that time, identified, and put into the record. However, when Dr. Meier came here and we subsequently offered Plaintiff's 141 through Plaintiff's 154 and 174 to 176, included therein, in those numbers are the books which are in and the back-up folders for the years covered by those books, which were 1937 to the present date.

This is the one remaining back-up folder, which covers the year 1937, which we unfortunately forgot to offer at the time. It confirms the fact of the payment to 2548 Count Edelsheim. The same entry appears in the book which is in the record. I was merely offering it for the purpose of putting the whole charge in there.

If not, we will stand on the record in the book, but I would appreciate it if Mr. Burling would look it over and see what he thinks after the noon recess.

Your Honor, at this time—

Mr. Burling: Before you argue—

Mr. Gallagher: No; this is not an argument.

Mr. Burling: We have some exhibits which Your Honor said we should stipulate with counsel, if possible.

Mr. Gallagher: Before we get to that point, if I might, I would like to renew again, Your Honor, our objection to Defendant's 90, 97, and 98. I move to strike any testimony with respect to them from the record, as well as remove the documents themselves.

As you recollect, those are the three documents from the Giulini files. One is dated in March of 1940; one is October, 1940; and one is a letter of February, 1942.

Now, as I have previously advised the Court, these documents were not admitted by us pursuant to any motion to admit. Number one.

There has been no concession that they were kept in the regular course of business. There has been no showing that in any wise the shop-book doctrine would be 2549 applicable. The only showing that has been made is somewhat of an authentication of the signatures being the signatures of the gentleman involved.

Now, purportedly, or apparently, these letters came from the files of Giulini Brothers in Germany. They were apparently kept by Mr. Frick. Mr. Frick is alive and living, and has not been brought here.

We submit that anything kept in the Giulini files, including an aid memoir, which is a reporting, in one of the plaintiff's exhibits, of what took place at the conference, prepared by whom we do not know, kept in Giulini's files, is sheer hearsay and inadmissible.

As far as the letters showing any continuendo at that time which would tie in the plaintiff corporation, Uebersee, with a subsidiary, Transdanubia, we submit there is no predicate for that assumption.

True enough, one letter is written on the letterhead of Transdanubia; but Mr. von Opel, prior to that time, had advised him to lease the mines.

There has been no showing as to whether or not the man who writes the letter to Giulini in Germany, on a Transdanubia letterhead, is acting as the agent of Transdanubia in his capacity of Transdanubia being our subsidiary and operating as such or whether he is writing the letter as an agent for the lessee who has acquired the 2550 enemy properties of Transdanubia under a lease. There has been no showing as to whose agent he is at that time.

We submit the record shows, much more convincingly, that he be the agent of the new lessee, pursuant to Mr. von Opel's orders of the previous May, 1931.

So, with that thought in mind, and with the additional thought in mind that they are from Giulini's files, with no showing that they were kept in the due course of business, no person here to identify them, the substance of them being hearsay, we again renew our objection and move to strike.

Mr. Burling: I agree that these documents do not come under the shop-book rule. They are not offered on that theory at all. I submit, however, that our friend's objection is premature as a matter of logic, because, of course, if we can't tie Uebersee in to Transdanubia, then what Transdanubia is doing is wholly irrelevant; but I submit that we will be able to show that. In the course of our argument I am prepared to argue that. But I think the time to say those letters should be put out is after Your Honor has considered whether we tie Uebersee in to Transdanubia.

If Your Honor finds that Uebersee was in fact managing or controlling Transdanubia in 1942, then the contracts and reports of Transdanubia's officers are admis-2551 sions. If Transdanubia is a wholly owned subsidiary of Uebersee, the plaintiff here, and if Uebersee kept up a business relationship with it, then I say that a report written by the president or the manager of Transdanubia is an admission that they were doing business.

We do not offer these exactly to prove the truth of the declaration, but these letters themselves are acts of doing business, particularly one in 1942.

The Court: That was the view I took of it, because I understood it was the act of an officer of this particular corporation. That was the basis of it. I mean, one of those spontaneous acts of an officer of a corporation, which, if it does have any connection with Uebersee—and that question I have left open until the argument is completed—might constitute the doing of business with an enemy.

The point is not that we are going to consider the point that he made as being correct, or take that into account, but the mere fact that, as an officer of the corporation, he is taking an act in furtherance of the program in Hungary. It is the act itself. I mean, the mere writing of the letter by a president of a corporation is an act. It is an act of 2552 the managing director, or whatever he was—I have forgotten his title now—but he was one of the managing officers. He is writing a letter in that capacity, and that might be doing business—in other words, may constitute the doing of business—subject to your argument.

I will leave it in and let you argue it more fully at the trial.

As you gentlemen know, in these equity cases the appellate courts do not hold us very strictly to what we admit. After I hear the whole case, it may be that I will hold that it does not amount to doing business, anyway.

Mr. Gallagher: All right, Your Honor. I will abide by your ruling.

The Court: You can argue, during the course of your argument, again, if you like, the question of the inadmissibility, and I will take the whole matter under advisement, and I will give that some thought. Mr. Burling's argument was the basis of my tentative admission of the documents. I understood they might consist of an act of the corporation itself which might be held to be the doing of business.

Mr. Gallagher: With just one thought that I would like to leave in your mind—that there was no showing that this man, when he wrote, was writing as an officer of the Uebersee or as an agent of some new lessee, which was 2553 our last knowledge of the fact.

The Court: I will hear you on that when you argue the case. I will leave it in for the time being and probably won't make a specific ruling on it, but I will bear that in mind in connection with the argument of the case.

Does that clear up your point?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes. We will re-raise it.

The Court: In other words, I am leaving it in evidence, subject to further argument, if you wish.

Mr. Gallagher: All right, Your Honor.

Mr. Burling: Now, I believe it is agreed, if I may read a stipulation, as to certain documents that we have offered: Defendant's 8, 10, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 50, 54, 68, 79, 84, 85—

Mr. Ingoldsby: If you will skip 84, 85, 86, 87, and 109, we will agree to your stipulation.

Mr. Burling: Then we also offer 108. I omitted 113 and 114, which will—

Mr. Ingoldsby: To keep the record straight right there, we will agree that we have no objection to the reception in evidence of any of the documents which were referred to by Mr. Burling, with the exception of documents numbered 84, 85, 86, 87, and 109.

(Defendant's Exhibits for identification 8, 10, 42, 43, 44, 47, 48, 50, 54, 68, 79, 108, 113, and 114 were received in evidence.)

2554 Mr. Burling: I offer these documents, and I might say to Your Honor, these are documents which all relate to the transaction which has the X mark on it on the chart, the purported sale of the Uebersee shares to clients of the Swiss Bank in 1936.

I do not understand my friend's objection to the documents. I do not believe there is any question as to the authenticity, because they come from the files of the plaintiff corporation. I am unable to argue the point, because I do not know what the objection is, since the documents have been identified and are concededly documents from the plaintiff's own files.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Your Honor, our objection to the documents just referred to is all on the same basis, and it is all on the ground of relevancy, and I press this point with some vigor, because I think it becomes important, because I think the X'd out transaction, referring to the Swiss corporation on the chart, all refers to the transfer of the Uebersee shares to the Swiss Bank.

I believe that Your Honor will recall what the transaction was. Do you recall the details of it? Mr. Burling has stated it several times.

The Court: I believe I do, if we are talking about the same thing. Remind me of it again. Is this the 2555 Frima?

Mr. Ingoldsby: No, Your Honor.

The Court: This is not Frima?

Mr. Ingoldsby: No. Frima is the Liechtensteinean entity which held the shares of Uebersee.

The Court: Now, that had to do with this holding tax?

Mr. Ingoldsby: That did not, Your Honor.

The Court: I mean the Frima.

Mr. Ingoldsby: No, Your Honor.

The Court: Well, identify this one to me, the one you are talking about.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Frima, the administrative corporation, appears here (indicating). In 1936 this corporation, Frima, was holding the Uebersee shares. The corporation went through a transaction with this Swiss banking corporation, which is now X'd out. The transaction, in effect, was to pass the technical legal ownership of the stock and, by virtue of a proxy arrangement which put the voting power back into Frima—

The Court: Isn't that what we are talking about?

Mr. Ingoldsby: Yes, that is what we are talking about.

The Court: That is what I understood, yes. That is what I understood when I said I thought it was the 2556 Frima transaction.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I beg your pardon. I thought you meant the transfer of the shares from Uebersee to Frima.

The Court: No; I meant from Frima to the Swiss corporation and out to a half dozen Swiss people who had an agreement that it would remain in escrow. Is that it?

Mr. Ingoldsby: That is it.

The Court: Yes; I remember that.

Mr. Ingoldsby: May I state my objection to them?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Ingoldsby: My objection to the admissibility of those documents, which relate to that transaction, is simply this: that the inference which I am quite sure will be sought to be drawn from that transaction is that this was a fraudulent or sham and fictitious arrangement in connection with the handling of the stock of the Uebersee Korporation.

Now, first of all—I do not mean to argue the point; this is stating the objection—we contend, of course, that it is not a fact, and that the Treasury Department never seriously contended that it was. There has never been any fraud penalty assessed in connection with this.

We submit, further, that the going into the transfer of the Uebersee stock from Frima to the Swiss banking corporation is completely collateral to this proceed-
2557 ing, collateral in the sense that I am quite sure that we would not have been permitted to have called as a witness in rebuttal, say, for example, Isadore

Kresel, who was an attorney in connection with it, or Mr. Marin, who handled the matter directly, officials of the Swiss banking corporation or of the United States Treasury Department, to show what took place.

Now, undeniably, there was involved in the transaction some connection with the personal holding company tax. We submit that that is completely collateral to the main issues in this case.

It is not that we deny any of the genuineness of any of the documents which are offered; but we say that, granting that they are genuine, what do they have to do with the particular issues in this case: namely, Did Wilhelm von Opel pass valid legal title to the gift to Fritz von Opel? Does it have anything to do with the citizenship of Fritz von Opel? Does it have anything to do with the usufruct or with anything else which might be material to this case?

Now, in view of the argument that we anticipate will be made on these documents, we strenuously object to their admission.

Mr. Burling: May I say, Your Honor, before I come directly to Mr. Ingoldsby's main point, that there 2558 is a further point to these documents. They are offered to tie Frankenberg in as the manager—the de facto manager—of Uebersee. For example, plaintiff's 84 is a cable from New York which Frankenberg sent to the Adler Bank, relating to this. 85 is a cable which the Adler Bank sent to Frankenberg. 86 is entitled, "Memorandum for Dr. Frankenberg." I am not sure that I am not skipping. I am trying to pick these up hurriedly. 84 is a cable signed "Frankenberg."

A second argument which I make, which also precedes my reply to Mr. Ingoldsby, is that one of these documents relates to what we charge is the use of this device by Uebersee, by the plaintiff corporation here, to defraud the British Enemy Property Custodian. I think it is admissible to show that the plaintiff so managed its affairs, so hid its true ownership, that it defrauded and concealed from the British Enemy Property Custodian the true ownership and recovered back its plantation in Tanganyika; notwithstanding the fact that it is conceded here, or, at least it is asserted here, that the beneficial owner of Uebersee is Fritz von Opel, and notwithstanding the fact that it is conceded that at the time they tried to and succeded in getting the plantation back, Fritz von Opel was a German and hence not entitled to recover back the plantation.

2559 I say that there is this entire picture, starting with whatever happened either in October or November, 1931, right down to date, to show the whole pattern or plan of concealing the true ownership so as to defraud whatever government might be involved—Germany, Britain, the United States—and that Your Honor can take the entire thing as a single pattern of deception, of concealment.

I would like to refer to what Frankenberg said when he said that we did not understand in this country, but in Switzerland it was customary to hide capital. Capital came from all over the world to be hidden there. I think it is the totality of plan, and Your Honor can see that ultimately the capital here was in 1942—

The Court: Did the plaintiff offer any testimony about this at all?

Mr. Ingoldsby: About the transfer to the Swiss banking corporation?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I do not believe so. Did we?

Mr. Baum: Fritz.

Mr. Ingoldsby: If we did, it was only in the tracing of Uebersee—frankly, I do not recall any.

Mr. Gallagher: My best recollection is that in tracing this chronology, even though we are in effect 2560 presenting an anticipatory case, we did discuss the fact that in 1936 they were sold and in 1941 they were repurchased.

The Court: Of course, if you opened it up, I suppose the actual picture could be completed.

Mr. Burling: May we have until the luncheon recess to look at the record?

Mr. Gallagher: I join in that request that we have until then.

The Court: That will be all right.

I would like you also to consider the argument about Dr. Frankenberg's connection with it.

This actually has to do with some securities that were in question here, does it not?

Mr. Ingoldsby: No, Your Honor.

Mr. Burling: It has to do with the shares of the plaintiff.

The Court: That is what I mean.

Mr. Ingoldsby: Yes.

Mr. Burling: We have not vested the plaintiff; we have vested the plaintiff's assets; but the shares are the subject of that transaction.

The Court: That is what I mean.

Mr. Ingoldsby: That is correct.

I do not know whether Your Honor wants to 2561 hear me further at this time or wait until we check the record, but I have something more to say about it before you rule.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I did not understand Your Honor.

The Court: Go ahead.

Mr. Ingoldsby: So far as these particular exhibits relate to Frankenberg being connected with Uebersee, we have never denied that and we have admitted all along that Frankenberg occupied the technical position of managing director. All you have to do is look through our books and records and you can see that compensation was paid.

The Court: His activity of supervision over transactions might have some bearing on whether he was representing the father or the son. It might depend on the individual circumstance of each case.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I will pass that one.

The Court: I do not know just exactly what this shows.

Mr. Ingoldsby: I do not know what it shows, either, Your Honor—

The Court: I had the impression that Mr. Gallagher started to introduce some testimony about it. Then, after he got into it to some extent, he decided to 562 abandon it, and that is the reason he put that mark on there.

Mr. Gallagher: No, Your Honor. That was up there when we brought the chart in here.

The Court: Was it?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes. We had it on there.

The Court: You can check the record on it during the lunch hour.

We have had in this case a great many collateral transactions that were not objected to which, as I understand it, were offered by the Government to show that the plaintiff at least went through certain transactions with the idea of concealing some identities. I think Mr. von Opel admitted to one of them, as I remember it, about this attachment of his father's account; that he had in mind allaying some hostile action of the German Government; and this question about the passport. A great many of these matters might be collateral, but they were not objected to at the time they were offered; and I am very much inclined to let you argue the case with them in and give you all the latitude you want in arguing that they are not persuasive or not relevant.

So much of this testimony went in without objection that it is a little difficult, right at this stage, to winnow—out all the points in absence of a very full argument;

2563 so I am inclined to let all this testimony stand, and I will admit these particular documents over your objection, and let you argue their weight or lack of probity. I do not want to make formal rulings on evidence at this time; I would much rather hear you.

That will save the record. I will admit these over your objection and hear you on that as part of your argument.

Mr. Gallagher: Could we have about a five-minute recess before argument?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Burling: Before that, I do not believe the record showed the numbers. Defendant's 84 through 87, plus 109, which are the subject of Your Honor's ruling.

The Court: All right.

(Defendant's Exhibits for identification 84 through 87 and Defendant's Exhibit for identification 109 were admitted in evidence).

2649 APPENDIX

(The following is a stipulation between counsel for the plaintiff and counsel for the defendant with reference to the deposition of Mrs. Fritz von Opel):

Plaintiff and defendant agree that the deponent need not sign the transcript; and in addition, that after the transcript has been prepared by the reporter, it may be sent to counsel for defendant directly by special delivery and need not be filed by the reporter with the Clerk of the Court. However, plaintiff will receive a copy of the transcript.

Let the record note that the taking of this deposition commenced at 10:40 a.m. and recessed at 1:40 p.m. The letters which the defendant had requested from Germany did not arrive until 2 o'clock. Subsequently, the taking of the deposition began at 3:30 p.m.

It is stipulated by the parties that Mrs. von Opel wrote a letter on April 28, 1937 to Mrs. Ruth Lengnick from which Defendant's Exhibit A is an excerpt, and that the letter may be identified as Exhibit E.

It is further stipulated by the parties that on November 18, 1939, Mrs. von Opel wrote a letter to Mrs. Lengnick from which Exhibit C is an excerpt, and the letter is to be identified as Exhibit F.

It is further stipulated that on December 24, 1940, 2650 Mrs. von Opel wrote a letter to Ruth Lengnick, an excerpt from which has been heretofore marked Exhibit B, and this letter is now hereby identified as Exhibit G.

It is further stipulated that Mrs. von Opel wrote a letter on November 20, 1939, to Mrs. Lengnick, in which she said, "The little master is in Hungary about some bauxite business. He is interested in some Hungarian geese—this time real ones with feathers." And it is stipulated that this letter can be identified as Exhibit H and the excerpt therefrom as Exhibit 1.

2911 Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Boland points out to me, and I think that I should recall to your attention, that this Defendant's 90 was admitted by Your Honor temporarily, because of the signature identification, and not as to what the contents of the letter itself were, because there has been no showing that the writer thereof was working as a director or as an agent of Transdanubia or Uebersee.

Mr. Burling: Ordinarily, I would resent the interruption, particularly in view of the fact that there have been five or six motions to strike and other controversies 2912 concerning this document, but this time I do not.

I am glad Mr. Gallagher did interrupt me. I can make my argument a little more full.

May I have the document, please?

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I do not like to get up on this point, but I have refreshed my memory very recently on the discussion with Your Honor on this exhibit, and it was very clearly stated by the Court that the reason for the admission of this particular document was on the basis of the fact that a letter was written, and Your Honor stated that whether or not that act of writing a letter constituted business would be left open for oral argument.

There was no question of admitting this document for the purpose of what was stated in the document itself. We had argued that it was hearsay. You said, "I understood, Mr. Burling, that you are offering this merely for the purpose of showing that an agent of Transdanubia wrote a letter, and whether or not the writing of a letter constituted business if a question for argument."

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, I will argue it once more. The testimony is that this document was written on the letterhead of Transdanubia, that Fritz von Opel positively identified the signature of Timar, that von Opel said that when he was last in Budapest Timar was one of the managers. The letter, in other words, is a letter 2913 which we know Timar signed for Transdanubia to Giulini Brothers.

There has been a rather involved argument about what the letter is admissible to prove, but I submit that once you have the document, signed by a manager of a wholly-owned subsidiary corporation of the plaintiff, it is then admissible as an admission of the plaintiff as to what the facts are. The earlier debate related to other documents, largely, or to questions as to whether Transdanubia was doing business.

The Court: I do recall that the point that I thought you argued at the time you offered it was that the letter itself showed by its contents that it was a communication with some party in the pursuance of some business.

Mr. Burling: That is correct, Your Honor.

The Court: And therefore that the letter itself was an act. It was one of those contemporaneous acts which described the transaction. The recital of that act or a recital of some event which took place would not be admissible as to that particular act, because if the letter itself promoted or was in pursuance of the act, a discussion or recital on that act would not be evidence of the act itself.

Mr. Burling: Even though it was signed by a manager of the wholly-owned subsidiary?

2914 The Court: That was my impression of it. I told you I would let you argue it on any phase. That was the basis on which I admitted it. I told you you could argue it.

The point I had in mind was that sometimes a man, in writing a letter, even though it is a business letter by an officer of a corporation, might be making a totally inaccurate and misleading statement of the event, and it might be hearsay and it might not.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, in addition to that—I have difficulty in finding the transcript—I am sure that you directed a statement to Mr. Burling along this line: "Mr. Burling, I understood that you are offering this to establish the fact that an act of writing this letter had been actually done by the corporation for that purpose alone." Mr. Burling said, "That is precisely the basis upon which we were offering it."

The Court: I was ruling on the admissibility of it. I did leave it open for both of you to argue whether it is hearsay or not. The point I was ruling on right then was as to its admissibility. It looked to me to be fairly admissible if you have an authentic document of a corporation which, in and of itself, by its officer and at a date which is fixed, is an act contemporaneous with a declaration or is a description of it. It is not exactly res gestae, but it is 2915 along that line. It is a spontaneous declaration; that is what it is. That is a clear exception to the hearsay rule.

Whether there are also admissible statements in the letter which recite an event which occurred in the past, I have some doubt about that. I am not sufficient familiar with that letter right now as to whether it has any such recital.

Mr. Burling: I agree in part with what Mr. Boland said. I did agree that one of the grounds of admissibility was that the mere writing of the letter to Giulini was the act of doing business.

The Court: Yes. I remember your argument.

Mr. Burling: I did not mean to limit myself.

I would now like to hand to Your Honor a document in translation and to argue that it is a recital, in very nearly technical bookkeeping terms, of the shipment of bauxite and of correction of shipping records, and that that being so, the statement of Timar, the manager of Transdanubia, which in turn was 100 per cent wholly owned by Uebersee, is an admission that bauxite was being shipped as recited in this document.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, with respect to that, as you noted, it points out certain transactions taking place in 1941. As you also know, the record is uncontra-
2916 dicted in this respect—

The Court: I do not see that.

Mr. Gallagher: Yes. It reflects the shipments, as I recollect, in October, November, and December, of 1941. Is that not correct?

Mr. Burling: I think it would be much more orderly if each side could argue.

The Court: That is a little bit different. This is an absolute discussion of a business transaction between parties. That is a discussion between the parties of a transaction. That would come within the rule I am talking about. The only one I would have any doubt about would be the last paragraph.

Mr. Burling: I am perfectly willing to exclude the last paragraph from the exhibit.

The Court: That is the only thing. That is a recital of past events. I have no doubt about the others.

I will hear you on rebuttal. I can tell you very plainly what I have in mind. When you have a letter of a business organization in the regular course of business, written by one of its officers to another party, which interprets a transaction, or an alleged one, that tells the quantities in it, and things of that sort, and discusses how to treat it or how you will have the bookkeeping entries or how you will operate on it, I think that is a contemporaneous act. It is a statement in and of itself which is a part of the ordinary business.

Now, there may be a distinction—I am not entirely convinced on this, but I had it in mind—when the writer begins to say, for instance, in this last paragraph, "We have vigorously urged, however." Now, what is vigorous and what is repeated, and all that business, comes in a different category. He is reciting something he did in the past. That is entirely different from the carrying on of the business as it is here in the upper part, where he said if we deduct this, the difference is so and so, and if the weight is added, the weight to be settled properly amounts to so and so. That is pretty close to doing business.

Mr. Gallagher: I would like to just remind Your Honor of one factor. This is not a document which has been shown to be kept in the regular course of business.

The Court: I think the inference is that it was. Here is the letter from a party—

Mr. Gallagher: It is from Germany.

The Court: It is a party who is an officer of Transdanubia.

Mr. Gallagher: We do not know that, Your Honor. We do not know if he is, after May of 1941, an officer 2918 any longer.

The Court: You are straining a little bit on that. Under the circumstances, you have a letter from an organization that you would normally deal with and had dealt with. You have the name of a party who, according to your own witness, was an officer of the outfit at the time, and he purports to be one right now of a company which the plaintiff controls. I think the circumstantial evidence is that it is in the regular course of business. You can prove it another way.

I have admitted the letter. I will leave out that last paragraph. I think the other is clearly within my ruling.

(Defendant's Exhibit 90 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Burling: Your Honor, I might say, if Your Honor please, all that I now want to get out of the letter is the fact that there were these shipments of bauxite. The business which is referred to, and which this letter is a part of, I say goes to show that the mines were not leased. Transdanubia did not (A) lease the mines and then (B) produce bauxite out of them. If Transdanubia had followed von Opel's suggestion and leased the mines, then it would not have any mines to produce bauxite out of; and

I might say there is nothing in the record to indi-2919 cate that the mines were leased other than Opel's suggestion that they be leased. There is nothing in the record, other than repeated statements or hints by counsel, that they were leased. The record is bare on this point except that long after the suggestion of Opel that they be leased, Transdanubia was writing, referring to shipments in considerable quantities which it had made, not its lessee.

As to Transdanubia itself, the record shows that it had a contract running into 1942 which von Opel negotiated, which was that it was to produce these 100,000 tons of bauxite. We have the letter which Your Honor has just ruled on, which shows that quantities were shipped in October, November, and December, 1941. We have the letter relating to these shipments in February, 1942, after the war started, dealing with clearance of accounts with Giulini relating to the shipments, the writing of which letter itself was an act of doing business. Then there is also the fact that the loan of 32,000 francs was repaid in November, 1942. So no argument could be made that Transdanubia was not doing business within Hungary during the war and was not an enemy.

Now, the remaining question is what relationship existed between Transdanubia—

The Court: Excuse me just a minute. Mr. Gallagher, for the record, I think probably, because of Mr.
2920 Burling's argument, I ought to make clear that I am not going to foreclose you from arguing contrary to his argument, that that letter is not admissible as showing transactions in October, November, and December, 1941. I will let you argue on that point. I am not ruling one way or the other on that proposition, Mr. Burling.

The thing I am ruling on—and I want the record to be clear on it—is that in so much as this letter apparently, to me, was written by an officer of Transdanubia and was produced from the files of an organization with which Transdanubia did business, and the officer who wrote it was described as one who had been, at least, an officer, and now, apparently purports to be, as of the time of the writing of the letter, that fairly establishes the letter as having been written in the usual course of business; and that in so much as all of the paragraphs except the last paragraph of the letter constitute in and of themselves a discussion of some deduction and addition, that in and of itself is a deal, an act which tends to indicate one.

Now, whether it properly may be received to indicate that it was business in October, November, and December, 1941, I will let you argue that in reply. I will leave that in abeyance. But my definite ruling is that it is in evidence for the purposes that I have described with regard to all paragraphs except the last—I want to 2921 get the record straight on it—for what it is worth.

* * * * *

Now, going back a moment, I have said that the question is what the relationship between Transdanubia and Uebersee after the outbreak of war between the United States and Hungary or Germany. And here, except 2922 for the extension of credit which I have already spoken of, we find ourselves in a void, or, to change the metaphor, Transdanubia disappears into a haze and we just don't see it any more. There is no testimony in this record of an act of dissociation. There is no testimony in this record that Uebersee did anything to cut itself off from Transdanubia. There is no evidence that a corporate decision was made to have no further dealings with it. It just disappears.

Fritz von Opel and Frankenberg are in the United States after 1940 and they do not know anything about it at all. The Uebersee books are sent for, but no file on Transdanubia is shown at all, and the plaintiff did not see fit to bring its books governing the years 1941, 1942, 1943—

Mr. Gallagher: I have to object. They are in as exhibits 141 to 154 and 174 to 176, down to the present date when they were sent here.

Mr. Burling: At any rate, there is no file indicating what happened to Transdanubia.

Meier, the president of the corporation, comes over here and he testifies that he hasn't kept the books for a long time; and Your Honor will recall my strenuous efforts to find out when he last saw the books, and he saw the books at some time after he first got them, but then he could not say when he first got them, and he could tell when he got them because he knew when he last had them, and 2923 he had them before he got them. That is the best we could get from him. He could not say when he last saw the books, although he thought he saw them at the time they were packed up to be sent here. But he does not know about the bookkeeping entries or the files relating to Transdanubia during the war.

Now, it seems entirely probable that somebody must have voted the Transdanubia shares at stockholders' meetings, but no witness who was called could tell us who voted the shares or even who decided not to vote the shares. Apparently, the plaintiff would have the Court believe that suddenly all its officers collectively suffered from amnesia and just forgot that they had a wholly-owned subsidiary corporation in Budapest with an investment of more than 100,000 Swiss francs in it. As a matter of fact, the only amnesia they do not seem to have with respect to Transdanubia is the carrying of the investment on the books until it was written off in 1946, but otherwise they seem to forget entirely their obligation to manage the property.

Your Honor will recall that Dr. Meier testified he felt obliged, since Frankenberg and Mr. von Opel were here, and von Opel was in the internment camp, to look after the investments; and then Your Honor will recall my total inability—my total failure—to find out what it 2924 was that Meier did, what act he took, what decision he made, in supervising the Transdanubia investment. He finally admitted, under my persistent cross-examination, that Uebersee supervised Transdanubia; but what that supervision consisted of we never found out at all.

Now, yesterday morning I accused Mr. Gallagher of using an old lawyer's trick of the missing witness. Your Honor will recall that he wanted to know why we didn't call von Klemm, and the vice president of Spur, and he read off a list of directors of Harvard Brewery, and why didn't we call Hoffacker, and Ulrich, and even Isadore Kresel, instead of calling the witnesses that we did call who testified to such effect. And I say that that is a trick that you see in a lot of lawsuits. Whoever the lawyer calls, his opponent says, "Why don't you call somebody else?" and I do not desire to open myself to the same charge, but I do think I am entitled to ask what Henggeler, and later Gaeng, did with respect to Transdanubia.

Your Honor will recall that there were three directors of Uebersee, one of whom was Frankenberg, who was therefore inactive during the war because he was in America. Then there was Meier, who testified here that he did not know anything about it at all. Then there was Henggeler, who was succeeded in 1942 or 1943 by Gaeng.

Since Frankenberg and Meier knew nothing about 2925 what happened to Transdanubia, it must be that Henggeler and Gaeng are the men who know where it went; and when my friends have the burden of showing that Uebersee did nothing whatever with respect to the management and supervision of Transdanubia during the war, I submit that it is not enough for them to call two of the fore possible men and have them say they know nothing about it. This, it seems to me, is a problem of negative proof, and to negate the presumption that somebody in Uebersee managed Transdanubia, they should call all the officers or else suffer the inference that the officer they do not call is the man who did it.

I want to say again, on the face of this record, Transdanubia is not cast off by Uebersee. No corporate decision is reached by an officer to do nothing about it during the war, just to let it sit. No act of dissociation takes place. It just vanishes from the mind of men. It is a will-o'-the-wisp. Now we see it, now we don't.

Let us suppose arguendo that at some time the officials of the plaintiff corporation did decide to give up or write off or dissociate themselves and Uebersee from Transdanubia. That would be an affirmative act which somebody would have to take. Somebody would have to reach a decision. But there is nothing in this record that shows that anybody ever reached that decision. Von Opel states that 2926 he decided not to invest any more money and that he suggested that the mines be leased. But it is clear that after that he was still interested in the property, because he was interested in the royalty that would be paid if the mine was leased.

Surely, when Transdanubia was able to pay back the 32,000 franc loan in the fall of 1942, that told Henggeler, who had been handling the extension of the guaranteed loan, that the company was doing better. They must have known that it was making money. Is it reasonable to suppose that Henggeler and Gaeng never thereafter even inquired as to what Transdanubia's profits were in 1942, 1943, 1944, and 1945? Weren't they curious to know how the bauxite production was coming on? Didn't they want to know whether Giulini had renewed the contract at the end of 1942? Didn't they want to know if they could expect dividends? What did happen to Transdanubia? Where is the file of papers which the Transdanubia officials must have sent Uebersee? I say that the plaintiff has totally failed to bear the burden of proof that Uebersee cut itself off from Transdanubia.

I am well aware that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not directly apply here, but it suggest an analogy that I would like to suggest to the Court. Supposing—and I hope this does not happen—Mr. Gallagher were walking by my house and the window were open and a brick 2927 sailed out the window and struck Mr. Gallagher on the head, and Mr. Gallagher were then to bring suit against me, and I would take the stand, like Meier here, and I testified, "Gee whiz, I don't know how that brick came to fly out the window. I know nothing about it," and then the defense rests. I feel quite sure that Your Honor would direct a verdict for Mr. Gallagher.

Put another way, I do not think it is enough for the plaintiff, once it is shown that it was actively managing Transdanubia and that Fritz von Opel had negotiated a contract for it to ship the 100,000 tons of bauxite, and once it is shown that plaintiff was assisting in the financing of the corporation and that Transdanubia was successful producing bauxite, to say, "Gee whiz, we don't know what became of Transdanubia." They have got to explain what became of it.

I think, in order for the plaintiffs to be successful in this line, it would be necessary for them to prove a decision to abandon and a severance of ties with Transdanubia, or else and at least, to call all the officer witnesses who could have acted, and to have them say that none of them took any action with respect to Transdanubia.

Now, plaintiffs will argue that this is a question of negative proof, and that that is a hard kind of proof to establish; and I admit that, but, nevertheless, that is the 2928 burden that they have as a matter of law. They do not meet that burden of negative proof by calling one of three directors of Uebersee who resided in Switzerland during the war and have him testify that he personally never did anything. I say that the burden is not met until everyone who could have acted on behalf of Uebersee in relation to Transdanubia has testified that he did not so act.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that there is a stipulation between the parties as to what Henggeler and Gaeng would testify to if they were called as witnesses by the plaintiff. In the stipulated testimony, however, there is not one word about what they did or did not do with respect to Transdanubia. It is also noteworthy that the record shows that the one official who, during the war years, did in fact do something with respect to Transdanubia, namely, directed Adler, who extended the guarantee, was not called, whereas the one officer who was called—other than Frankenberg who admittedly was out of the picture—Meier, said he had not had anything to do with this and apparently had not had anything to do with the guarantee.

In conclusion, I say that it is obvious that unless the plaintiffs satisfy Your Honor that they did not do business with Transdanubia, that they cut themselves off from Transdanubia at the outbreak of war with Hungary, then they were doing business, through their wholly-owned subsidiary in Hungary, namely, the mining of bauxite—that is, business within an enemy territory—and if they do not so satisfy Your Honor, they fail, because the plaintiff corporation is an enemy.

The Court: Your position on the Supreme Court case cited by Mr. Connor is that that only dealt with evidence of the total ownership of the shares?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor; that is, bare ownership.

The Court: And that there was no affirmative act?

Mr. Burling: Candidly, Your Honor, I am not familiar with the case. I suppose I should have been. I have been in this—

The Court: Well, he did argue the Supreme Court case. I took a note of it myself, and I understood his argument was that the Supreme Court had held that where the evidence was solely that one corporation held all the capital stock of another, that was not sufficient to make out responsibility on the part of that corporation for the acts of the subsidiary. Was that the effect of it?

Mr. Connor: It was a service of process case, Your Honor.

The Court: I understood that it was on the service of process, as to whether they were doing business in 2930 a certain community. I know your answer to it.

Mr. Burling: My answer is that I conceded that point and therefore did not look up Mr. Connor's case. I agree with him.

The Court: That is what I say. You say we have some act beyond that?

Mr. Burling: I say two things. One is we have some acts which affirmatively we proved and, secondly, we have a great many acts before the war which raise a presumption of continued ownership which is not overcome.

The Court: Yes. All right.

Mr. Gallagher: I know it has been a pretty hard day, but if we could have perhaps a five-minute recess, I think Mr. Connor might be able to finish this entire portion in 30 or 40 minutes, and then he would be free.

The Court: I do not mind sitting until 5 o'clock, but I do not believe I can run much beyond that.

Mr. Connor: If Thursday would be at all possible to Your Honor—

The Court: I think the new matter that Mr. Burling has brought out, if you can answer it, deals with only two propositions, I mean new matter. You have already argued at length the economic proposition and the other and this control. The two things that he has brought out that I have noted particularly were, first, he says that the def-2931 inition of the act itself indicates that the putting up of security or the extension of security—I do not know whether it was extension or not; it was the putting up of security—would constitute doing of business.

That is point number one, in effect, that he brought out that was new. The second point was that in the ordinary course of business it would be anticipated that Transdanubia would continue with its business, and that Uebersee would continue as it had before in supervising it and carrying it on, and that the burden is on you to show the contrary.

Those are the two big points that he has brought out, other than refuting what you have argued. If you can cover those in a half hour, I will be glad to hear you.

Mr. Connor: I had also in mind most particularly replying to Mr. Baum.

The Court: I had understood Mr. Boland was carrying that.

Mr. Boland: No, Your Honor. If you recall, I covered it very briefly and made reference to the fact that Mr. Connor was going to cover that.

The Court: How much time do you want except for Mr. Connor?

Mr. Gallagher: I would say, with the exception of Mr. Connor, perhaps a maximum of two hours, possibly an hour and a half, for Mr. Boland and me, Your Honor.

2932 The Court: You mean the whole matter can be concluded in two and a half hours?

Mr. Gallagher: Rebuttal for the plaintiff in about two hours.

The Court: Why do we slice it up? Why don't we hear it all Thursday morning?

Mr. Gallagher: That will be fine.

The Court: I would like to get through, if we possibly can, by the noon recess Thursday, because I have got to go into some important cases not later than Tuesday of next week, and I want to do much work before then.

We will go over until Thursday morning. I have to receive a verdict, but that won't take long, about ten minutes. Let us try to see if you can get through by 12:30.

(At 4:30 p.m. an adjournment was taken until Thursday, January 27, 1949, at 10 a.m.)

2935 PROCEEDINGS

The Court: All right, gentlemen, I think we are ready to proceed in the Uebersee argument.

DISCUSSION REGARDING DEPOSITION OF MARGOT VON OPEL

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, Your Honor will recall that there was some rush in the deposition of Margot von Opel, and we read a transcript which was prepared by Mr. Gallagher's secretary rather than wait for the official report.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Burling: The official report is now here, and there are four lines that I find were not correctly read before. I would like to read them into the record.

The Court: I think that is all right.

Mr. Burling: Page 4. The original question is in the record, but the answer, then the next question, and the next answer are either omitted or garbled:

"Question: How did you know that Mr. von Opel was going to have a conference with Dr. Frankenberg in Duesseldorf?

"Answer: Because he told me on the phone, perhaps, that he had planned to do so. I don't know.

"Question: Mr. von Opel had told you; is that 2936 correct?

"Answer: Obviously; I would not have made it up."

The Court: All right.

* * * * *

The Deputy Clerk: Uebersee Finanz-Korporation v. Clark.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Gallagher: If Your Honor please, I do not know exactly what procedure you want us to follow today, but in the light of suggested changes that the plaintiff has made to the Court's tentative findings, Mr. Boland and I have broken them down along the lines and in the way in which we handled the plaintiff's case in chief. If you agree, Your Honor, we should like to break down the findings individually as we go along.

The Court: I am wondering if it would not be helpful to me for you to express each one and then let Mr. Burling answer it as we go along.

Mr. Gallagher: That sounds very good.

Mr. Burling: I would prefer to answer each one as it is taken up.

The Court: Yes. Let us do that, then.

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Boland will handle the suggested change of finding No. 4.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, do you have a copy of our proposed changes before you?

The Court: Yes, I do.

Mr. Burling, in case there isn't any objection to any of them, will you let me know before the plaintiff's 3056 counsel starts to argue?

Mr. Burling: I am afraid, Your Honor, that there is objection to every one of them.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Boland: The first finding, Your Honor, is finding No. 4, and the main reason for the change in our proposed amended findings is in respect of Mrs. Elinor Sachs, the sister of Fritz. The record shows merely one thing in respect of Mrs. Sachs, and that is that she is residenced in Switzerland. The record is barren of any evidence to show that she was residenced or domiciled in Germany.

At the time of presenting our case, we were not aware of the fact that Mrs. Sachs was an element or an issue in this case. Had we been so aware, we would have put on evidence to show that she has been domiciled in Switzerland for the last 17 years. This is extremely important to us because Your Honor will recall that our legal position is that under the Trading-With-the-Enemy Act, specifically under Section 2 of that Act, a non-resident German citizen is not an enemy within the definition of section 2, unless by Presidential proclamation such persons are so declared. You will recall that during this war no such proclamation was made by the President.

Therefore, from the standpoint of an appeal, it becomes very important to us, having taken the position that 3057 a non-resident German citizen is not an enemy, to have either a finding that Mrs. Sachs has been domiciled in Switzerland, on the basis of what is in the record, or that reference to her as an enemy be limited merely to the fact that she is an enemy on the basis of citizenship regardless of domicile. That may seem quite confusing, but that is the point we have in mind.

Specifically, the main reason for our objection is that there is no evidence to the effect that she has been residenced in Germany. The only evidence in the record shows that she is residenced in Switzerland. The reference to that is pages 51 and 52 of the record.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, the record is silent as to the sister's present domicile. The record does establish, of course, that she acquired domicile by birth in Germany. Whether she lost that domicile is a matter of German law or Swiss law. The record does not state. It leaves her domicile in Germany. So from the record the conclusion that she is domiciled in Germany is proper.

I do not mean to be coy with the Court. We did interview her in Switzerland. We know that at some point she has been in Switzerland. If we are going to go outside the record, we understand the facts to be that she ran away from her husband and that at least part of the time she has been living in Switzerland.

3058 The Court: I cannot go outside the record. You say Mrs. Elinor Sachs, nee von Opel, the sister of Fritz von Opel, was born in Germany. What does the record show on that? Does the record show that she was born in Germany and lived there or was domiciled there until her marriage?

Mr. Boland: No; the only thing the record says about the daughter is in connection with the questioning of the father—the deposition of the father—on page 51.

"Question: Do you have any other children?"

"Answer: I have one daughter living in Switzerland."

But for that, there is no other reference made to Mrs. Sachs.

Mr. Burling: I think that is correct; but when I said the record establishes that she was domiciled in Germany, I meant to say the record establishes that the parents were at all times domiciled either in Wiesbaden or Ruesselsheim, Germany.

The Court: The only part that that would have to do with would be this reversionary interest; is that right?

Mr. Boland: Yes, Your Honor; that is the only place it comes out. In discussing enemy taint in your opinion, you spoke of the fact that she probably would be one who would inherit in the event of reversion subsequent to the death of the mother, and that she being an enemy, that enemy interest caused taint of the plaintiff corporation.

3059 The Court: Of course, I am held by the record.

Mr. Boland: As a matter of fact, Your Honor, I can say this truthfully, that we are not aware of whether or not Mrs. Sachs is actually a German citizen at this time. The last time Fritz von Opel was in contact with his sister was in 1940.

The Court: If we both agree that the record shows that the only evidence is that she is a sister of Fritz von Opel and is a resident of Switzerland, that is all I can find. I am bound by that. Then, I will just change my finding in this way:

"Mrs. Elinor Sachs, nee von Opel, is the sister of Fritz von Opel and is a resident of Switzerland."

Mr. Boland: All right.

The Court: I don't know whether there would be any point in writing a supplementary opinion saying that. I don't know whether it has anything to do with it or not. It would not change the result. In my judgment, it would not. It would give you something to argue. I will look that over.

Mr. Gallagher: The next requested change, Your Honor, is with respect to tentative finding No. 6. I believe that the plaintiff's proposed amended finding states accurately and exactly what the record reflects. That is shown from particular reference to page 1435 of the record. To refresh 3060 your recollection, Mr. Burling asked, during the course of the trial, that Mr. von Opel break down the time during which he had made visits to the United States and had resided in Switzerland and had gone to Germany.

Mr. von Opel's compilation reflected that approximately 35 percent of the time was spent in the United States, 35 percent of the time in Switzerland, 9 percent in Germany, and the remaining time traveling elsewhere.

Even under Mr. Burling's own compilation, I believe, if I am correct, he would have had a figure of 11 percent as the amount of time Mr. von Opel spent in Germany during the years from the date of his departure.

The Court: Let me see if we can cut this short. There may be some significance to the word "permanently." Why not say:

"After December, 1929, Fritz von Opel never lived continuously in Germany but lived successively in the United States, Belgium, and Switzerland, where in 1934 he became a Swiss domiciliary. Between December, 1930, and August, 1939, he went to Germany for short visits."

Wouldn't that be right?

Mr. Gallagher: Well, Your Honor, with respect to the fact that you would change it to "He never continuously resided," while that is more accurate, we believe, than the present finding, nevertheless, he never had, as you recollect from the record, any residence whatsoever where 3061 he resided. He had no home or apartment at any time from 1930. He was out of the country from 1929 to 1930, in the United States. He never had an apartment or a home, and the only place he ever stayed was at, basically, Sylt, where he went to visit on a few occasions in the summer. Other than that, he made some visits to his father's home in Berlin. The man never maintained any home or apartment in Germany.

The Court: You might say he never maintained residence in Germany; but to say he never resided has a meaning which in law is treated in various ways. We have a residence here in the District of Columbia for one purpose and have a residence somewhere else for another. It just depends upon the purpose of it. That is a legal term. You might say he never maintained a place of abode in Germany, unless there is some evidence—

Mr. Burling: We contend there is.

Mr. Gallagher: We are not asking for a finding that he never resided in Germany. Our finding merely states that he left Germany permanently in 1929 and lived in the United States, Belgium, and Switzerland, where in 1934 he became a Swiss domiciliary. Between December, 1930, and August, 1939, he occasionally went to Germany for short visits. That is what the record reflects.

The Court: I have that myself.

Mr. Burling: My principal objection is to the word 3062 "permanently." I agree except that such residence as residing in a house rented by his wife on the island of Sylt does not show any legal residence in Germany. But I object to the plaintiff's use of the word "permanently," because I think it is ambiguous. It suggests intent to leave his residence in 1929.

The Court: How about striking out—

Mr. Gallagher: "Left Germany and lived successively in the United States—"

The Court: "After December, 1929, Fritz von Opel never resided in Germany but lived successively in the United States, Belgium, and Switzerland."

I don't know about the next clause.

Mr. Gallagher: The record will show, and I think the Government will concede, that subsequently, from 1934 on, he became—

The Court: From 1934 he became a Swiss domiciliary. Between December, 1930, and August, 1939, he went to Germany for short visits.

Mr. Burling: If the "short visits" has any significance, would Your Honor add to his finding, "totaling about 10 percent of his time"?

The Court: All right.

Mr. Gallagher: No objection to that.

The Court: Ten percent of what time?

3063 Mr. Burling: Ten percent of the time between the date of the gift and his departure from Europe.

The Court: Maybe that will do it.

"Between December, 1930, and August, 1939, he went to Germany for short visits totaling about 10 percent."

Mr. Boland: The next finding, Your Honor, is finding No. 7, which has to do with the Liechtensteinean citizenship of Fritz von Opel. It seems that findings Nos. 7, 8, and 9 fall more or less in the same category, generally, with respect to what I am going to say.

The Court: Mr. Boland, I do not think I can find that his purpose in acquiring Liechtensteinean citizenship was his desire to sever his ties with Germany. I feel pretty definitely that his purpose was to get membership in a neutral country, that would make possible some of the things he is trying to do now.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, the record shows, in Mr. Henggeler's affidavit, if you recall, specifically that Fritz and Margot von Opel wanted to renounce their German citizenship, and Margot von Opel, who was a Government witness, testified that they wanted to renounce.

This aspect of the purpose for which he acquired his Liechtenstein citizenship is going to be argued by Mr. Gallagher. Just basically I might state that at the time all these questions came up about Liechtenstein, you will 3064 recall that we made serious objection to questions being asked as to what the color of the Liechtenstein flag is, what date they last had their constitution revised, and so on and so forth.

The purpose given by Mr. Burling at that time was as an indication that perhaps the manner in which the citizenship was acquired would lead this Court to the conclusion that Fritz von Opel had in fact applied to the German Government for the retention of his German citizenship, and that was the purpose for which these questions were asked.

However, when we read Your Honor's opinion, we saw that the purpose had been turned into a question of allegiance and fealty. Had we been aware of the fact that Fritz von Opel's allegiance had been in issue in this case, we may rest assured that we had more than several witnesses to bring here on the question of allegiance. As a matter of fact, we have before us some twenty-three affidavits on the allegiance of Fritz von Opel by outstanding people, such as General Eichelberger's brother, who was commandant of West Point during the war, and by the author of All Quiet On The Western Front. All those affidavits were in the hands of the Government.

But it is unquestionable, from the standpoint of the allegiance of this man, that had we known of his allegiance being in issue, we would have brought witness after witness—Jewish refugees who were here, and subse-3065 quently became United States citizens—to attest how this man felt about the German Government.

As a matter of fact, it seems to me clear that the whole purpose of Fritz' leaving Germany and remaining away and acquiring Swiss domicile after the Nazis came to power in 1934 could only be for two purposes: either that he was disgusted with the Germans and wanted to stay in Switzerland and stay away from Germany, or that he wanted to maintain this credit that he had in American currency and keep it away from the Nazi Government.

The Court: Let me tell you the way the man impressed me on the record. I would have thought that most anyone else would agree to this situation. When you try to determine enemy taint, you don't look only to the cloak of citizenship that a man carries. Hitler might have taken out Liechtensteinean citizenship in order to accomplish several or certain of his decisions. He might have done it. Yet if he came in here immediately after the end of the war and claimed that he was a type of citizen, we would certainly say he had taint because his fealty was to Germany. It seems to me that that is one circumstance to be taken with every other circumstance in the case, not by way of an absolute bar. I mean I never did reach that point, but I am recognizing for the purposes of this case, tentatively at least, that going through that formal proposition that is effective under the laws of Liechtenstein, 3066 would give him a right to keep the money, provided you did not have other circumstances in the case that showed him hanging onto that property, with a tendency to clear it back into Germany. That is the way I dealt with it.

It seems to me, as I remember it, although you complained about the testimony to some extent, that the father was close to Hitler, and Fritz was close to his father, and he made certain—at least, I found in my own mind that he made certain statements, that it would be a short war if one came, and he would have a part in devising these bombs. He had been reared in that country. You would expect him to love it. That is not against him. I would love my country if I had been in it for 30 years.

With all that tendency, notwithstanding the cloak of citizenship, there was taint. That was the manner of my approach to it. He was well thought of in Germany. He was a sportsman and represented them. He made his fortune there and had relatives and friends there. His father was at least subservient to Hitler and that regime and prominently displayed it. The most natural thing in the world is that he would have fealty to his country. That did not condemn him at all, but, along with the other facts in the case, it showed enemy taint. That is the only way I dealt with it. That is the way I wrote it.

If that stood alone, the mere fact that he maintained
3067 an affection for his country and his parents and everybody who was over there—all his relatives—if that stood alone, and he was a citizen of Liechtenstein, it might very well be that he would not be barred from recovery. I did not pass on it one way or the other. I left that out. But that did seem to me—that meaning along with all these other facts—to go to make up what the Supreme Court calls taint.

Mr. Boland: The Supreme Court in discussing the question of enemy taint was discussing a corporation. That was the problem involved before the Supreme Court—namely, this corporation; and prior to the decision in our case in the Supreme Court—

The Court: It is corporate securities. That is the taint. It is property taint.

Mr. Boland: Yes.

The Court: If the owners are tainted, then the property is tainted.

Mr Boland: The problem presented to the Supreme Court was, namely, this: whether or not, for a Swiss neutral corporation—whether you could go behind the corporate veil and see who was actually running it. Having decided that the corporation was owned and controlled for economic warfare purposes—a Trojan Horse exclusively—Congress must have intended that that sort of set-up could not prevail and that you should be able to look through the corporate veil.

3068 The Court: That is right.

Mr. Boland: However, I think the Government will agree that the Supreme Court had no question of lifting the citizenship veil or of going into the subjective mind of each and every individual in the United States from all over the world, saying, "Well, you are pro-Italian, and Italy was an enemy of ours during the war; and you are an American citizen, or a British subject; you can't get your property back."

That was not the issue.

The Court: Of course it wasn't. They said that enemy taint had not been defined. But when you determine it, you take every single, solitary element. When you look into a proposition of that sort, you take every tendency. Standing alone, as I said, it may very well not be enough. I did not decide that. But taken with a whole lot of other facts, it would be.

Mr. Boland: There has never been a case in the history of the Trading-With-The-Enemy Act, both our own or the one from which it was copied, the English or British Act, of an individual who is a citizen, and by his citizenship goes under the Enemy Act—the courts have never looked into the subjective system of the individual and said, "You are barred from recovery." That has never been in issue.

The Court: No, and it is not controlling here. But let us use Hitler as an illustration. Let us say he took 3069 out Liechtensteinean citizenship, and let us say that that was all there was to it, and that he is a valid citizen under the laws of Liechtenstein. Then you would have one question, which is not the question in this case, as I determine it, certainly. But suppose you had Hitler taking out Liechtensteinean citizenship and then having property partially owned by his brother or his son, who is plainly a citizen of Germany, and that he had a controlling and very positive interest in it, and then you had a reversionary situation, and then you had this very corporation which claimed to own it, which had a subsidiary digging out material which was of help to Germany. Let us assume all those facts.

It certainly would be proper to show that Hitler had been dictated to there.

What we have to do in determining taint is to find out whether there is a tendency on the part of the holders of this property to take it back into Germany and to frustrate the whole purpose of this Trading-With-The-Enemy Act. Then you have to look at all the circumstances, not just that one standing alone. That is the way I approached it.

Now, I do not see how I can possibly hold that his acquiring that citizenship was to sever ties with Germany.

Mr. Boland: Mr. Gallagher is going to argue per se the allegiance aspect, and the one thing I want to call Your

Honor's attention to in findings 7, 8, and 9 is the fact 3070 that the manner in which Fritz von Opel acquired his citizenship by the payment of money is a speculative study of the statute. The way the finding is made, it would appear that Fritz von Opel through some devious method had paid for citizenship, which, of course, is obnoxious to the American mind.

The Court: Where is that finding?

Mr. Boland: You made that finding in your opinion about the payment of money.

The Court: I did not mean that. What do you want me to say in that regard?

Mr. Boland: As a matter of fact, Your Honor, it seems to me if your position is that a person having acquired citizenship through normal channels and normal means, and having the tendencies which you attribute to Fritz von Opel, would lead you to the same conclusions as you have come to in your opinion, then Fritz von Opel, having acquired his citizenship in the normal manner under the statute, that might well make the findings there of no significance.

We can point out specifically, for example, finding 8, in which you say that it took a special act of the legislature. Actually, Exhibit 177, which is the Act of Liechtenstein, says specifically that no one who is naturalized—acquires the citizenship through naturalization—can acquire that until it is approved by Act of Parliament. That is not any unusual circumstance, nor is it a special 3071 act of the legislature for Fritz von Opel which is out of the ordinary. It is provided for in the Act.

The Court: No. 7 is all right.

"On November 21, 1939, Fritz von Opel was naturalized as a citizen of Liechtenstein; however, the only times he was ever in Liechtenstein was when he was traveling through it. He has been in the United States since 1940."

Mr. Boland: Yes.

The Court: That is all right.

Mr. Gallagher: With one clarification, if I might suggest it, Your Honor, with No. 6, to the effect that the Liechtenstein naturalization law expressly permits the principality to waive the condition of residence—which it does.

The Court: Is there any objection to that?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor. If I may address myself a little more particularly to the significance of citizenship, I agree with Your Honor as to enemy taint. Of course, the factor of Fritz' fealty to Germany is a factor to be considered as one of the things making up enemy taint. I also think that the obviously quasi-fraudulent nature of his Liechtensteinean citizenship, the fact that it was a bare legal technicality, and the buying of the passport, as he said to Houghland, strengthen the quality of German nationality, whether or not Your Honor finds that he was still technically a German citizen as well as a Liechtensteinean citizen.

Of course, his acquisition of Liechtensteinean citizenship was highly abnormal. He himself testified as to the amount of money he paid; and putting that against the annual budget of the principality—the government—he paid something like 3 percent of the entire revenue of Liechtenstein that year.

Mr. Gallagher: I hesitate to interupt, but Mr. Burling carried that throughout the hearing. Mr. von Opel pointed out very clearly that when he took the percentage of the total budget, he took the amount that was paid to Planken, which was the municipality, which is two-thirds of the price that was paid.

Mr. Burling: Then, taking that one—

Mr. Gallagher: And that mathematically it comes to the percentage which Mr. Burling gave for the total budget figures. Mr. Burling gave—

Mr. Burling: May I continue without interruption?

If we talk about Planken, von Opel paid $70 for every man, woman, and child living in Planken. It would have been the equivalent of paying $70,000,000 to acquire residence in the District of Columbia.

Of course, Liechtensteinean law, for the purposes of getting revenue, does contemplate exceptions, but it is 3073 normal procedure, which did call for residence both in the community and in the principality.

One exceptional feature, however, in von Opel's case was that he paid this enormous sum of money.

The Court: What is your specific objection to the statement that the Liechtensteinean naturalization law specially permits the principality to waive the condition of residence? Is that a correct statement?

Mr. Burling: "Under extraordinary circumstances." The law is section 6-D. Citizenship may be granted if they have had their permanent residence in the principality of Liechtenstein for at least 3 years; but this condition is not to be fulfilled under extraordinary circumstances, but to ask for special consideration.

The Court: "The Liechtensteinean naturalization law expressly permits under extraordinary circumstances."

Mr. Gallagher: We have no objection to that.

The Court: Now, here is the way I am going to fix this No. 7 and the way I am going to find it:

"On November 21, 1939, Fritz von Opel was naturalized as a citizen of Liechtenstein; however, the only times he was ever in Liechtenstein was when he was traveling through it. He has been in the United States since May, 1940. The Liechtensteinean naturalization law expressly permits under extraordinary circumstances the 3074 principality to waive the condition of residence."

Mr. Gallagher: If I might have just a word to say at that point. With respect to the purpose, the line that we requested, "Fritz von Opel's purpose in acquiring Liechtensteinean citizenship was his desire to sever his ties with Germany," I submit with respect to that line that the record is absolutely uncontradicted. There is Henggeler's statement, which Mr. Burling referred to, as to the reason why he acquired Liechtensteinean citizenship. That is shown from Plaintiff's Exhibit 49, and I would like to refer to that for just a moment, because in your opinion you made a comment at page 7 also to the effect that until November, 1939, von Opel never had made any attempts to change his citizenship. Well, we submit, Your Honor, that the record reflects quite to the contrary.

Plaintiff's Exhibit 49, which is the Henggeler affidavit, shows that on repeated occasions prior to the war Fritz von Opel discussed the question of acquiring Swiss nationality with Mr. Henggeler. Henggeler goes on to say that after the outbreak of the war Mr. von Opel came to consult him again on this matter and repeated to him that he did not approve of the political attitude of Germany.

Therefore, this affidavit of Mr. Henggeler's, which is in evidence, constantly repeats the fact that Fritz von Opel explained to him that he and his wife wished to renounce their German nationality because they did not approve of the political set-up in Germany.

In addition to that, Mrs. von Opel, whose testimony I know you will recollect—

Mr. Burling: You inadvertently read the affidavit incorrectly.

The Court: I do not want to take up a lot of time on this, because frankly—what is it I said about not until 1939?

Mr. Gallagher: In your opinion you said it was not until November, 1939. That is in your opinion.

The Court: All I said was:

"* * * In November, 1939, Fritz von Opel, formerly a German citizen, became naturalized under the laws of the Principality of Liechtenstein * * *"

I did not say it was not until 1939.

Mr. Burling: In any event, that is what Henggeler's affidavit says. Mr. Henggeler's affidavit reads:

"Mr. von Opel has during the years since the outbreak of the war repeatedly asked me my advise with regard to obtaining Swiss citizenship."

Mr. Gallagher: I think you will agree with me if I point out that that is an error that a foreigner would make in using the words "since" and "before."

The Court: Let me get what you say is wrong. I 3076 have got to get this in my mind.

Mr. Gallagher: First of all, in your opinion you said:

"* * * It was not until November of 1939, after World War II had begun, that Fritz von Opel took any steps to change his citizenship."

The Court: Where is that?

Mr. Gallagher: I believe that is on page 10 of your opinion, as I have it typed here—the top part of the page, about ten lines down.

The Court: That is right.

Mr. Burling: That is what the record shows.

Mr. Gallagher: I submit it absolutely does not, Mr. Burling. You are standing on the word in the second paragraph in the affidavit.

If you will just bear with me a moment to clarify this, Your Honor, foreigners use the words "since" and "before" mistakenly many times. You will find that is true among foreigners. You will find it with the Spaniards. I will show how they have used this thing. You will see when you read the contents. The second paragraph of Henggeler's affidavit says:

"Mr. von Opel has during the years since the outbreak of the war repeatedly asked my advice with regard to obtaining Swiss nationality."

I say that that word "since" is "before," for the following reason: He goes on to point out what the require-3077 ments were to become a Swiss. Now, further he says:

"After the outbreak of war, Mr. von Opel came to consult me again in this matter and repeated to me that he did not approve at all of the political attitude of Germany."

I submit that that paragraph shows clearly that Mr. Henggeler in using the word "since" used it interchangeably as foreigners mistakenly do in translating "since" and "before."

If there were any question, or if we had thought your Honor was going to make a finding that that was the first time that Fritz von Opel had made any endeavor to change his citizenship, we would have introduced further testimony, because Mr. von Opel in the middle 30s had an immigration visa to come to the United States. That is out of the record, I admit.

The Court: He did not take any steps except to talk to Henggeler.

Mr. Gallagher: As far as the record reflects, he tried before the war to become a Swiss.

Mr. Burling: The record does not reflect that.

Mr. Gallagher: This affidavit does.

Mr. Burling: This is a fantastic waste of time. The affidavit says that since the outbreak of the war von Opel has done something.

3078 Mr. Gallagher: I will show the affidavit to Your Honor (handing a paper to the Court).

The Court: What I am trying to get at is even if he did talk to Henggeler before, it would not be taking any steps; it would be a discussion.

Mr. Gallagher: That is not a matter in issue. I am merely pointing out that in your opinion—it is not in your findings—you make that statement which we feel from Henggeler's statement is not accurate.

The Court: I think this finding of fact I make here does not deal with that subject matter, and if the opinion is contrary to the evidence in the case, then you can argue that to the Court of Appeals. That will be in the record.

Mr. Gallagher: All right, Your Honor.

The Court: I won't make any finding on the subject at all other than this opinion. I will leave No. 7 the way I have it. Do you understand how it is now?

Mr. Boland: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Now, let me turn to No. 8 for a minute. Mr. Burling, have you No. 8 there?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: See if you can follow this:

"Fritz von Opel's naturalization in Liechtenstein was accomplished under a waiver"— Would that be all right?—

"a waiver of the usual naturalization laws."

3079 Mr. Burling: I have no objection to that.

The Court: I think it is probably a little better than the way it is.

Mr. Burling: I have no objection.

The Court: "which provide for extensive residence." How about a period there? Was there a special act required?

Mr. Gallagher: For all naturalized citizens. Anyone who was naturalized in Liechtenstein had to be approved by the Parliament.

Mr. Burling: But anyone who does not take the oath of allegiance, who does not even come to the country—

The Court: Why don't we say:

"Any person who does not take the oath of allegiance under the laws of Liechtenstein" would have to do what?

Mr. Burling: The waiver had to be granted by the Parliament in his case. It is true that even if you comply with the ordinary law, Parliament must approve the naturalization; but where this extraordinary cause comes in, then I believe Parliament determines the existence of that.

Mr. Boland: The statute itself says nothing about a special act being required in respect of extraordinary circumstances. If you recall, at the time we had Dr. Kaufmann, we tried to get him to testify as to what the 3080 law or custom was over there, and the custom is that if you reside in Switzerland, that is an extraordinary circumstance.

The Court: Do we need this last sentence?

Mr. Boland: That is what we object to.

Mr. Gallagher: We object to the inference that is drawn from the way in which this is drawn.

Mr. Burling: I do not believe it is important.

The Court: Let us put a period there.

Mr. Gallagher: Strike out from the word "and"?

The Court: No. 8 will read:

"Fritz von Opel's naturalization in Liechtenstein was accomplished under a waiver of the usual Liechtenstein-ean naturalization laws that provided for extensive residence—"

Mr. Gallagher: Could we change that to "three years' residence"?

Mr. Boland: The statute says three years.

Mr. Burling: I think if Your Honor is going to cut it down, it might be appropriate also for Your Honor to find that in connection with the obtaining of this waiver von Opel paid approximately $10,000, two-thirds to the community and one-third to the principality.

Mr. Boland: Where are you putting this, Your Honor?

The Court: In connection with obtaining, he wants to add, at the end, "In connection with obtaining 3081 waiver."

Mr. Boland: "That in connection with obtaining his citizenship he paid."

The Court: All right.

Mr. Boland: "In accordance with the provisions of the naturalization law."

The Court: "In connection with obtaining his citizenship, Fritz von Opel paid"—how much?

Mr. Burling: Approximately $10,000 in all, two-thirds to the community and one-third to the principality.

Mr. Boland: "In accordance with the naturalization laws."

Mr. Burling: No, if Your Honor please, it was not.

The Court: Two-thirds to which?

Mr. Burling: Two-thirds to the community and one-third to the principality.

The Court: Let me hear what you want, Mr. Boland.

Mr. Boland: We would like there "in accord with" or "pursuant to the naturalization laws," or however the naturalization laws require payment for acquisition of citizenship.

Mr. Burling: The Act contemplates some payment.

Mr. Boland: Payment or purchase price.

The Court: Then, just say "the naturalization laws of Liechtenstein."

Mr. Boland: "Require payment."

Mr. Burling: Would Your Honor say, "some payment"?

The Court: "Require some payment."

3082 Mr. Boland: "for acquisition of citizenship through naturalization."

The Court: "acquisition of citizenship by naturalization."

Mr. Boland: Yes.

The Court: All right.

"* * * require some payment for acquisition of citizenship by naturalization."

Finding No. 8 would then read:

"Fritz von Opel's naturalization in Liechtenstein was accomplished under a waiver of the usual Liechtensteinean naturalization laws which provide for extensive residence. In connection with obtaining his citizenship, Fritz von Opel paid approximately $10,000, two-thirds to a community and one-third to the principality. The naturalization laws of Liechtenstein require some payment for acquisition of citizenship by naturalization."

Now, finding No. 9. I would add at the end of 9:

"The oath was not prerequisite to naturalization."

Mr. Boland: There is an additional point, Your Honor. Section 14, if you will bear with me—it is very short—reads:

"It is within the jurisdiction of the executive or an authority empowered by him to administer citizenship oath after the state citizenship has been granted. The citizenship oath has only to be taken by male citizens of 3083 full age."

I am advised that the translation of the words "within the jurisdiction" is rather difficult. I do not know anything about it except that I am advised by Dr. Kronstein and Dr. Kaufmann, and that there is no question in reading the German, that what this means is that it is within the discretion. It is a little short of the word "discretion," but there can be no other interpretation than that it is really within their jurisdiction to require the oath, and that is what we have in mind by saying that the record is barren of any request of Fritz von Opel to take an oath.

Mr. Burling: I submit, Your Honor, that we should not now, at this time, start taking any expert testimony as to what the translation is. I am advised just the opposite.

The Court: I agree with you on that.

Mr. Boland: As a matter of fact, the record itself, if you read this, may not mean anything other than discretion.

Mr. Burling: Will Your Honor also consider the sentence which reads:

"The citizenship oath has only to be taken by male persons of full age"?

Mr. Boland: That is right. Therefore, it can't be required of anyone other than male persons.

Mr. Burling: I did not know that there was any contention that Fritz von Opel was either a child or a 3084 woman.

Mr. Boland: There is not. It is in their discretion to request male persons of full age to take the oath, and they cannot require anyone else to take the oath.

Mr. Burling: I submit the contrary; that the common sense, plain, obvious meaning of the first sentence is that the person before whom the oath is to be taken is the executive or authority empowered by him.

The Court: Of course, the simplest thing to do— This is in evidence, isn't it?

Mr. Boland: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: (Continuing) Is to copy it in, then.

"Under the laws of Liechtenstein, it is within the jurisdiction of the executive or authority empowered by him to administer the citizenship oath after the state citizenship has been granted."

Do you want this "male" business in there?

Mr. Burling: I certainly request it.

Mr. Boland: Yes, I think it would be helpful to us too, Your Honor.

The Court: All right. I will just copy that in bodily.

What about No. 10?

Mr. Gallagher: I should like, if I may, to take a few minutes' time on that one.

The Court: Let me say this one thing. I have pretty well made up my mind. I frankly believe Mr. Hough-3085 land's testimony.

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Calvin Houghland, do you mean?

The Court: And the boy's too, as far as that goes.

Mr. Gallagher: That is Calvin and Mason.

The Court: I believe both of them in regard to these discussions. Contrary to your view, I put a good deal of credence in what both of them said. If there wasn't any testimony with regard to that, then I might be susceptible to the argument. Frankly, gentlemen, I tried hard to keep out of these findings a lot of reasons, because they are not part of the findings, any more than a jury when it passes on facts tells why it reached its conclusions.

With regard to witnesses as they came on the stand, I wrote in my notes, as they were testifying from time to time, certain temporizings I thought some of them were guilty of and certain good points I thought had been made, and this was, frankly, the net result of my views with regard to that situation.

If there is no testimony to support it, then I will hear you on that; but if there was, on the weight of the evidence I do not think there is the remotest chance of my changing my mind.

Mr. Gallagher: Then, I submit, Your Honor, if I may be so bold as to say so, that there is nothing in the record to support your finding that "at all relevant times 3086 Fritz von Opel indicated a continuing sympathy for and allegiance to Germany, his native country."

There is no statement in the record that would in any wise bear out Your Honor's findings.

There is the statement of Mason Houghland, purportedly in August, 1939, with respect to the transchannel call—Your Honor said that this was highly improbable—that took place with his father. That is the only time he says anything.

The only time Calvin says anything is in the early summer of 1940, a year and a half before the United States goes into the war. The record reflects that he said, as I remember it:

"I said to von Opel that it might be a very long war and the United States might even get into it, and he said or replied, 'No, it will be a short war, and we will win, because we have a lot of secret weapons.'"

That is the way he quoted what he said von Opel said. Even reading just that language, you cannot in any wise conclude that von Opel's statement meant the United States was going to get into the war. Certainly in 1940 if a person was for or against Germany, as many Americans were, that certainly was not a sin; we were not at war at the time.

The Court: I do not think it is a sin for him to like Germany right down to this minute; as a matter 3087 of fact, I think it is a sin for him not to. I do not hold that against him.

Mr. Gallagher: There were too many hundreds of thousands of Germans who came to this country and declared their allegiance.

When we get down to what this record reflects—and I can't bring this out too strongly, Your Honor, because we are going to stress this on other claims—there is only one relevant period of time in this whole case. Mr. Burling has made a lot of going back to 1931. The only way we had to put our case in was, in a sense, to exhibit what their defense was, so we could make a coherent story in the light of the Supreme Court opinion. But there is no relevant time in this case—none whatsoever—until December 7, 1941—from then until the date of vesting.

On December 5 the plaintiff corporation could have been loaded with the top members of the Nazi hierarchy—Hitler, Goering, Goebbels. Those men could have been the directors instead of Frankenberg, Meier, and Henggeler.

They could have had the top members of the Nazi hierarchy. They could have come in and sold stock on the Swiss Exchange validly and the Swiss could legitimately have walked in and bought it on December 6, and we could not have touched that property.

Even though Mr. Burling has tried to say what happened in 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940, it is meaningless. You have two statements in this record, and 3088 they are all you can look to for support in your findings. That is Mason Houghland's statement which purportedly happened on a transchannel call; and Calvin Houghland's statement as to what he says Fritz said in 1940 at the time when we were not in the war, even if it was said, which, of course, we deny. But even so, if that statement as made, it was made a year and a half before any relevant time for the purposes of this case.

What does the record reflect to the contrary? We have the record replete and uncontradicted that Fritz von Opel worked constantly with Colonel Charles Mettler of Army Intelligence. He lend great aid to our war effort during the war years. In 1942 he was assisting materially the British war effort. He designed airplane fasteners which our Air Force used. He developed a forging process which our War Production Board took over. During the time he was in internment, the man was consulting with Army Ordnance and Army Intelligence. That is completely uncontradicted. If that was not the truth, the defendant would have brought Colonel Charles Mettler here. But I will tell you why they did not bring him. Not only is it the truth—and we tried to get him up here and asked that he be heard—but in the prior deposition—although this is out of the record—it stated—

Mr. Burling: If we are going to go out of the 3089 record, I may say that I was assistant director of the Enemy Alien Control Unit during the war, and I know very well why von Opel was interned. If we are allowed to go out of the record—

The Court: Of course, I can't do that.

Mr. Gallagher: I am talking about what the record states. The record, uncontradicted, shows that Fritz von Opel rendered valuable aid during our war effort, during the war years. He was producing fasteners for the British in our war effort in 1940.

Against that there is the one, single unsupported statement of Calvin Houghland that in the early summer of 1940 Fritz said, "Germany will win the war in short order." The only thing in this record as to relevant time is from December 6 or 7, 1941, to the summer of 1942.

The Court: Let us see about this. Suppose I made this finding:

"Statements made by Fritz von Opel after 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, indicate a continued allegiance to and sympathy for Germany."

I will stop there. That is what I said on page 10 of my opinion.

"Statements made by Fritz von Opel after 1939, when 3090 he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, indicate a continued allegiance to and sympathy for Germany."

Stop there.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, there is more in the record than the statements. I believe, Your Honor, that there is a showing also that in 1939 the fourth largest fabricator of aluminum wrote to him saying, "You will do a great service for Germany and for the entire German war economy if you will tackle the problem of increasing bauxite production with all your energy."

He replied that he would do so. He replied, "I stand by my prior offer," which was to go to Budapest. Then he went to Budapest and was there in November at the time that his naturalization in Liechtenstein became complete.

and he negotiated a contract for the production of a hundred thousand tons of bauxite.

The Court: Was that before 1941?

Mr. Gallagher: Certainly.

Mr. Burling: The contract was to run. It was negotiated in 1939 and entered into in 1940.

The Court: That would come within this finding. I could say, "Statements made and acts performed."

Mr. Gallagher: First of all, there were not statements made after 1939. The only statement in the record is Houghland's statement as to what Fritz said in 3091 the early part of 1940. So "statement" would be the most you could say.

Mr. Burling: He made several statements in the course of that conversation. He made the statement that he was pleased at the great German military successes; he made the statement that it would be a short war, "which we are going to win." He said he was gratified that he had contributed to the German success by inventing rockets.

The Court: You won't have any trouble with that. If the Court of Appeals finds that there is only one statement in that one conversation, why, it can take care of that all right. I think I ought to say, however, "Statements made and acts performed after 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, and before the outbreak of war with the United States."

Mr. Gallagher: All right; put that in.

The Court: I am trying to be fair to you, because there was no evidence that it was. I am substituting for No. 10:

"Statements made and acts performed after 1939, when Fritz von Opel became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, and before the outbreak of the war with the United States, indicated a continued allegiance to and sympathy for Germany."

Mr. Gallagher: I do not see what acts Your Honor is talking about.

The Court: What he talked about on the bauxite.
3092 That was before the war with the United States.
This just deals with the Liechtenstein situation.

Mr. Gallagher: How are you going to revise it?

The Court: "Statements made and acts performed by Fritz von Opel after 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, and before the outbreak of the war with the United States, indicated a continued allegiance to and sympathy for Germany."

Mr. Gallagher: Continued allegiance and sympathy to Germany when?

The Court: For that period.

Mr. Gallagher: Would you add that on: "existing during that period"?

The Court: I think this is plain enough. It indicates continued sympathy.

Mr. Gallagher: During that period. That is all the record does reflect, Your Honor.

The Court: It indicates continued sympathy to Germany. It just does not say how long it continued.

Mr. Gallagher: But there is nothing in the record contrary to the aid he gave our Government.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, there is no testimony except Fritz von Opel's, whom you obviously did not believe.

Mr. Gallagher: Which could have been contra-309 dicted if you had wanted to bring Mettler.

The Court: Gentlemen, I think this covers it, really. His statements indicated an allegiance to and sympathy for Germany. Anything I would say there would not be intelligent beyond that statement right there. We are talking about that time.

"Statements made and acts performed by Fritz von Opel after 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Germany"—

Mr. Gallagher: "of Liechtenstein."

The Court: Just say: "between the time in 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of"—

Mr. Gallagher: "Liechtenstein."

The Court: I mean of Liechtenstein. (Continued) "and before the outbreak of war with the United States, indicated a continued allegiance to and sympathy for Germany."

Mr. Gallagher: Look at your opinion, then, again, Your Honor, on page 10, where you pointed out to me that next sentence:

"* * * in technical form Fritz von Opel is a citizen of a neutral country, but I find beyond doubt his fealty at all times has been to his native country of Germany."

The Court: I am going to consider amending this opinion in that regard. I made a note of that. I will 3094 give some thought to that.

Mr. Burling: I think that the record would justify Your Honor in making a finding in language—I do not ask for it; I am seeking to avoid having the opinion rewritten—

The Court: I was not going to rewrite it. The only thing I was thinking about doing was, in the light of these amendments and discussions, by way of a supplementary memorandum. I might say that the written opinion rendered in the case has been amended by striking out so and so. If you want me to leave it in and have some reason, I shall be glad to hear you.

Mr. Burling: Yes. I think the record does justify a finding that at all times—the record starts off with his prominence in Germany—it warrants a finding that his purpose in staying outside of Germany was definitely to hold the money outside of the Foreign Exchange Controls; his close association with his father and his father's association with the Nazi Party; his statement to Hougland—Mason Hougland—about the Polish war and what "we" are going to do; his statement as to how he had bought a Liechtenstein passport to fool the British; his extensive statement in Nashville in the spring of 1940; his statement in 1941, when—

The Court: When was that passport incident? I remember that I had that in mind.

Mr. Burling: In the spring of 1940, in Mason 3095 Houghland's house. But Calvin Houghland testified to it.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Burling: Then, in January, 1941, Your Honor will recall, Mason Houghland said to him, "You should not have those navigational maps. If we go to war, and you are a German, and you get caught with those in your possession, they will get you in trouble."

He did not deny in any way that he was a German.

Then, the record goes on to show that he was interned by the Attorney General as a potentially dangerous alien enemy all during the war. He was not released until after hostilities were over. The only evidence to contradict that is his own statement as to how helpful he was; and I submit that the best evidence of that is that after he purportedly and allegedly helped the services, he remained in internment right up to the end.

I submit also the inference is warranted from his deal with Colonel Mettler, in that he was to stay in Miami, Florida, under much pleasanter conditions of detention than the camp to which he was sent.

Mr. Gallagher: I might say that you have been talking about the opinion when we were talking about the finding. How is the language going to read as to finding No. 10, because I have one further remark to make, if I may?

The Court: "Statements made and acts performed
3096 by Fritz von Opel between the time in 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, and before the outbreak of the war with the United States, indicated a continued allegiance to and sympathy for Germany."

It is limited to that period.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, with respect to that, with the word "allegiance" we take considerable serious issue, if you are going to amend the finding to the effect that he still had continued allegiance to Germany, then we would have to move to re-open and take testimony in that regard. This was not in issue at any time during the course of this proceeding.

The Court: What I was talking about—"allegiance" is almost synonymous with "sympathy."

Mr. Gallagher: If you strike the work "allegiance," we have no objection.

The Court: That is all right. Is there any reason why it should not be stricken?

Mr. Burling: I think Your Honor weakens the point very greatly. I think "allegiance" is a stronger word. The man was born a German. He was a very prominent person in Germany. For personal and financial reasons he goes outside of Germany but keeps coming back. His visits totaled three a year. There is all this evidence of broad Nazi sympathy.

Mr. Gallagher: My friend must have known that that was in the case, because he kept talking about it and 3097 kept examining him on his father's Nazi activities.

One of our main contentions, if Your Honor will remember—the last line there—related to the citizenship.

The Court: Frankly, I do not know whether or not the word "allegiance" is misleading. What I really meant was that it indicated a continued interest in the welfare—

Mr. Gallagher: That is what I mean.

The Court: I do not want to force a technical term on them in that regard. I do not mean to find that failure to take an oath of allegiance was fatal to his citizenship. What I am trying to get at is his leaning that way.

Mr. Burling: May I suggest that the word "limited" be substituted?

Mr. Gallagher: No, Your Honor. Crittenden, their witness, testified on the stand that von Opel deplored what the Nazis had been doing around Berlin. That is in the record, page 1913.

Mr. Burling: The character of that deploring was that the buildings were shabby and that they had cut down trees on the Unter den Linden.

Mr. Gallagher: He is still criticizing the Nazis.

Mr. Burling: That is bitter criticism of one's government!

Mr. Gallagher: He was never in Germany—

Mr. Burling: I have heard people criticize the 3098 present Administration—

The Court: This is what I have decided to do. Findings of fact, when you deal with submitted, formal findings of fact, really are on the inclinations you have. Inferences drawn from them in the opinion do not make additional findings, as I understand it. In other words, if they are inconsistent with them, then they should be stricken; but if they are consistent with the findings, they can very readily remain. So I think I will make that change, but I believe I will let that opinion stay as it is.

In other words, I have the feeling that Fritz von Opel continued to like Germany, and I just don't know how to get away from it. If that does not follow from the testimony or from this finding I have made here, then you are entitled to argue that that is illogical and unreasonable. The only proposition is this: Mr. Burling's attempt, as I understood it throughout this trial, was to indicate that Fritz von Opel, at least to a large extent, had maintained a very great interest in the affairs of Germany. He went so far as to say that this Liechtenstein citizenship was a completely bogus affair, although he said it was accomplished, and he made a whole lot of point about the lack of allegiance. He was pointing that up. Of course, I would have taken your testimony on it if you had offered it.

Mr. Gallagher: If you are still going to use the 3099 word "allegiance"—

The Court: I have stricken that out. I have changed it this way, now:

"Statements made and acts performed by Fritz von Opel between the time in 1939 when he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein and 1941, when war was declared with the United States, indicate a continued interest in the welfare of and sympathy for Germany."

The point I was talking about is that I do not see much use in amending my opinion on it.

Mr. Gallagher: The finding would govern rather than the language of the opinion, is my understanding?

The Court: Unless the language of the opinion is inconsistent with the finding. The language of the opinion will stay; but if it is inconsistent with the finding, then the Court of Appeals will just say I went too far on it. I do not want to begin amending this unless it is plainly inconsistent. That was the point that you made on page 8.

Mr. Gallagher: You said on page 10:

"* * * but I find beyond doubt his fealty at all times * * *."

Mr. Burling: So it is.

Mr. Gallagher: There is in the record to support that statement, Your Honor, I submit—

The Court: Well, I do not think background would 3100 be evidence of it. I do not think it is evidence.

Mr. Gallagher: His background certainly would not indicate his fealty for Germany.

The Court: I will give it a little more thought. I have got the point of both of you.

Mr. Gallagher: All right, Your Honor. The next one is finding No. 18.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, the only point we have in finding No. 18 is the possibility for us that perhaps this finding might exclude the fact that full title to the shares had been passed to Fritz in the case. Our amended finding is designed to take care of that one part only. You see, the words "intended to be a gift of part interest" might lead one to conclude he had not gotten full title. If there is a finding to the effect that he did get full title to the stock, that is the only change we have.

Mr. Burling: I have no objection to that part of the amendment which works that change—the second sentence of the proposed finding. But I believe the remainder of that proposed finding anticipates finding No. 32 and merely confuses that point.

Mr. Boland: I have no objection to the addition:

"Legal title passed to Fritz von Opel."

The Court: "Legal title to the von Opel shares passed to Fritz von Opel by the agreement."

3101 Mr. Boland: "Legal title to the 600 Opel shares passed to Fritz von Opel."

The Court: What is the date of the agreement?

Mr. Boland: October 5, 1931, Your Honor.

We thought it well to add as a finding that which you stated in your opinion at page 6 and have added an additional sentence:

"The purpose of the gift was to provide for payment in the form of gold or American currency on the sale of the Opel stock and to make financial provision for Fritz von Opel."

The Court: You have no objection to that, have you?

Mr. Burling: No, if I understand it correctly.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Gallagher: The next suggested change, Your Honor, is finding 29. Your finding as it now reads is:

"The record is bare of any evidence of who voted the shares of Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G. from 1940 through 1945, inclusive."

Our suggested finding is:

"After December 6, 1941, the shares of Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G. were retained by the plaintiff corporation in its safe and were not voted from that time on."

In support of that suggested change, we refer to the record, pages 2269, 2271, and 2320, the testimony 3102 of Eugen Meier, President of the Korporation.

The Court: Is there any objection?

Mr. Burling: Oh, yes, there certainly is, Your Honor. The record is bare; Your Honor's finding is correct.

Mr. Gallagher: The record references are at page 2269. Mr. Burling is questioning. He says:

"At any rate, you do not deny that Transdanubia Bauxit was wholly owned by Uebersee at all times after December 6, 1941?"

"Answer: I believe yes, but there was nothing we could do about it, because nobody would have bought these shares from us. If we would have sold the shares, we would have to sell them to persons within the German territory—that is, enemy territory. Thus we kept the shares in the safe and we did not do anything about them."

That is one statement of his.

The Court: That has to do with disposing of them. He is talking about voting.

Mr. Gallagher: He said they did nothing about them.

The next reference is at page 2271:

"Question: You not only did not sell it; you watched over and supervised the investment; isn't that true?"

"The Witness: It was there and we did not sell. It was there and it stayed there, and we kept it there 3103 until the postwar period, and there it is now.

"May I ask a question: What should I have done?"

The next reference is at page 2320:

"Question: Well, didn't you take any action with respect to voting that stock for all those years?"

"Mr. Gallagher: State the years. Will you give them again?"

"Mr. Burling: 1941 through 1945, inclusive."

"The Witness: I stated the matter this morning. I did not do anything."

Mr. Burling: "I did not."

Mr. Gallagher: That is right. You yourself in questioning Mr. Meier referred to him as being chief officer and the man who took over all duties of the corporation after Frankenberg had departed.

The Court: The record is bare of any evidence whether the shares, and so forth, were voted; and if so, who voted them. That will do it.

Mr. Gallagher: We suggest, Your Honor, that the record would not support that finding.

Mr. Burling: The record is absolutely bare as to whether Henggeler did or did not vote the shares.

Mr. Gallagher: You mean Meier?

Mr. Burling: Henggeler. I agree with you that Meier said no, but Meier did not vote the shares. But 3104 one of the three may have.

The Court: What is the matter with this:

"The record is bare of any evidence as to whether the shares of Transdanubia from 1945, inclusive, were voted; or if so, who voted them"?

What is wrong with that? We just do not know whether they were voted; or if they were, who did it. I think that is all right. I will run along with that, unless you find some very strong objection to it, because that is what the record is, I am sure.

Now, I think finding No. 30 is next.

Mr. Gallagher: Our suggested finding there is:

"While attempts were made prior to December 7, 1941, to sell or lease the Transdanubia Bauxit properties, no attempt was made after December, 1941. However, no control was exercised by the plaintiff corporation over its subsidiary corporation after December, 1941. Nor, at any time, did plaintiff corporation ever receive any income from Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G."

I think the record is quite clear on that. We have in the record, at pages 1496 and 1502, Plaintiff's Exhibits 70, 71, 72, and 73, which were cables back and forth, as you will recollect, and the letter, Plaintiff's Exhibit 70, from von Opel, instructing them to sell it or lease it.

The Court: Let me suggest that we change find-3105 ing No. 30 to read:

"After December 7, 1941, plaintiff corporation never took any affirmative steps to sever its relations."

Now, Mr. Burling, what about this "no control"?

Mr. Burling: That is the point I argued at such great length.

The Court: You mean there is no evidence?

Mr. Burling: I submit it is proper for Your Honor to make a finding that there is no evidence, because the burden of proof is to show non-control.

The Court: That is what I was going to say. Is there no evidence one way or the other on it?

Mr. Burling: Meier testified that he personally did not do anything about it. The books were first in Henggeler's and then in Gaeng's custody; and the record is bare as to what they did about it.

Mr. Gallagher: Meier was the president of the corporation, as you recollect, Your Honor. He was the one, sole member of the board of administrators who at all times was a member, Henggeler having resigned in 1942, and Gaend having taken his place. He is the man whom Mr. Burling repeatedly in the record calls the chief officer for the corporation after Frankenberg's departure for the United States in 1940.

The Court: How can I say there is no control?

Mr. Gallagher: His statement is that "we did ab-3106 solutely nothing"—never contacted them, never got in touch with them, never did anything about it. The record is replete with statements in that respect.

Mr. Burling: The record shows that whatever was done, the handling of the guarantee was handled by Henggeler. Meier was off somewhere else and did not have the books. I could not find out when he had last even seen the books.

Our position is—and I am sure Your Honor recalls—that there is absolute failure of proof to show what happened to Transdanubia after December 7, 1941, except for Henggeler's activities in connection with the guarantee. There is no evidence except that Meier did not do it and Frankenberg did not do it, but the remaining director knew who had the books and may or may not have voted the stock and communicated with the directors, and so on.

Mr. Gallagher: The books of the corporation reflect that the investment was written off.

The Court: Frankly, a study of the testimony in that regard left me very much undecided about this proposition. My recollection of it was very general on it. I do not think that that would justify, in the absence of more authoritative evidence, my making a finding one way or the other about the control. I think I will let finding No. 30 stand with that amendment:

"After December 7, 1941, the plaintiff corporation 3107 never took any affirmative steps."

Isn't that finding of the evidence in No. 31 right?

Mr. Gallagher: No.

The Court: I know you objected to some testimony there.

Mr. Gallagher: You have the finding there:

"and during this period Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G. shipped bauxite to Germany."

There is only one exhibit, which you will recollect we objected to, in this record, Defendant's Exhibit 90, a letter dated February, 1942. That letter reflects bauxite shipments in October, November, and December, 1941. It reflects approximately 1,600 tons of bauxite in October, approximately 1,100 tons of bauxite in November, and approximately 600 tons of bauxite in December.

Hungary and the United States were not in a state of war until December 13.

That is the only thing in the entire record which in any wise would indicate any shipments of bauxite to Germany or elsewhere. We submit that with that showing of a falling off of from 16 to 11 to 6, with a declaration of war taking place on December 13, it would be just as reasonable to conclude, if not more so, that no further shipments were made or that they ceased with the declaration of war. There is not one other line of evidence in this record about shipments during the war 3108 period.

The Court: Why don't we say, "During the months of—"

Mr. Burling: May I object? I do not agree at all with the statement of the evidence.

Mr. Gallagher: All right; take it and look at it.

Mr. Burling: In the first place, there is additional evidence besides this letter that showed a shipment and gave the total quantity shipped.

Mr. Gallagher: What is the exhibit number?

Mr. Burling: Defendant's Exhibit 90.

Mr. Gallagher: That is what I am speaking of, the letter of February, 1942. That is the only one in the record. All the others were withdrawn by Mr. Burling himself.

Mr. Burling: I find I am wrong on the subject of this particular letter, However, I will address myself to the contract. Your Honor will recall that Fritz von Opel negotiated a contract to ship bauxite to Giulini Brothers in Germany, and the contract called for shipments in 1940 and 1941 and a shipment of 40,000 tons in 1942. There was a showing that there were shipments made in October, November, and December under that contract of 1941, the contract to run all through 1942, and no showing whatever of cessation. I believe the record does support the finding that there was shipment of bauxite during the war.

Mr. Gallagher: But no showing that this contract was in any way complied with.

3109 The Court: You had Fritz von Opel's efforts to speed it up, and then you had this letter of February 4, 1942, which evidently dealt with shipments in October, November, and December in 1941. Did you have any after that?

Mr. Gallagher: Nothing.

Mr. Burling: Nothing except the fact that the contract which von Opel negotiated called for shipments in 1942.

The Court: Yes, but that would not indicate shipments in there. You have already said there was nothing done to stop it. He is just saying here that during October, November, and December, 1941, they shipped bauxite.

Mr. Burling: Would Your Honor also find that there was a contract to ship bauxite during 1942 and that the record is bare of any evidence that that contract was terminated?

Mr. Gallagher: Then, I would have to request also the making of a finding so that the findings themselves reflect what our exhibits 70 through 73 indicate: that Fritz von Opel gave instructions to sell or lease the mines in the spring of 1941 and refused to advance any further payments to the corporation, although requested on many occasions by them to advance for mining operations. That is right in the testimony here. Those exhibits are in without objection.

Mr. Burling: I agree that there are exhibits in. They state that Fritz von Opel suggested leasing.

The Court: What do you say about the contract?

3110 Mr. Burling: I say the contract called for shipment of 40,000 tons of bauxite to Germany in 1942.

The Court: By contract executed when?

Mr. Burling: March, 1940.

The Court: By Transdanubia?

Mr. Burling: And Giulini Brothers.

The Court: Transdanubia agreed?

Mr. Burling: Transdanubia agreed by contract.

The Court: Transdanubia agreed to ship bauxite to Germany until when?

Mr. Burling: Until the end of 1942.

Mr. Gallagher: With respect to the exhibits—I will show them to you so that you can refresh your recollection—they were the letters where they are asking for further money, and von Opel cables thereafter refusing to give it to them and telling them to try to lease or sell the mines.

I should like a finding to the effect that Fritz von Opel refused to advance any funds to Transdanubia after March, 1941, for furthering the operations of the mine and gave instructions to the corporation to endeavor to sell or lease the mine.

Mr. Burling: He did not give instructions, if Your Honor please; he suggested in the alternative.

Mr. Gallagher: All right; change it to that—"suggested."

3111 The Court: Bring that in at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Gallagher: All right; I will write it up. That is finding No. 31, Your Honor. We will rewrite it during the recess.

The Court: Now, finding No. 32.

Mr. Boland: Finding No. 32 is very simple.

The Court: The only thing you want is "dividends" substituted for the word "interest"?

Mr. Boland: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Is there any objection to that?

Mr. Boland: Actually, to quote the gift agreement verbally, it is "dividends and interest of the gift."

The Court: "80 percent of the dividends and interest." Is there any objection to that?

Mr. Burling: We have no objection to that change. I should like to point out in general that the usufructuary interest was reserved—that is, the in rem interest was reserved—in all, not 80 percent. The testimony is that there was an in personam right—

The Court: That is covered somewhere else.

Mr. Burling: I do not think it is material.

The Court: You can leave out "intended" and say "agreed to have."

"It was agreed that Wilhelm and Marta should have."

Mr. Boland: All right.

3112 Mr. Burling: I do not think it was, if Your Honor please. My own position is, if you will recall, that Miss Schoch testified that the legal situation would be that the usufruct to the income was 100 percent to the parents, except to an in personam right which Fritz had to 20 percent.

The Court: The only thing I am trying to get at is this: I can say:

"A usufruct interest was established in their favor"—period. I would stop right there. That is all I was trying to get at in that point. Then I could define it later.

Mr. Boland: That is all right.

The Court: Since we cover that later, why don't we stop right there?

Mr. Burling: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Now, finding No. 36.

Mr. Boland: I would say the finding of the Court may be subject to an ambiguous interpretation. What we are doing is to limit what we think the Court had in mind.

"A person having a claim for the creation of a usufruct."

Mr. Burling: I object to it if it also means striking out what Your Honor has written. Actually, if the other propositions of law are correct—

Mr. Boland: The only thought we had in mind, if Mr. Burling would bear with me, is that the finding is so 3113 broad it may also include the fact that after the usufruct was established and sale had been made to bona fide purchasers—whether or not it could still follow the proceeds. As I understand the law, the right of a person having a usufruct is to trace the assets from the gift in order to establish a usufruct and its results—in other words, the corpus of the res.

Mr. Burling: I don't understand the elements of what my friend is saying. I have no objection to his proposed language if Your Honor will add it rather than substitute it.

Mr. Boland: As long as you put "i.e."

The Court: That it is limited to the original?

Mr. Burling: I think my friend is confused as to the law. The record does not tell us when Fritz gave the key to Frankenberg which created or brought into being an in rem right. I do not know whether, in other words, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel were usufructuaries following the proceeds of the gift into Uebersee or whether they were persons having an in personam right of usufruct at the time that the agency was created, in which case they follow through a different path.

I submit that both propositions of law are correct and that one or the other is applicable, depending upon when the key was handed to Frankenberg. Therefore, the simplest thing is to find both, since there is no dispute as 3114 to the correctness of both.

The Court: Is there any question about whether it applies to a double transfer? Could you say "from any proceeds from the sale"?

Mr. Burling: He did sell it to one person, and then they sold those securities and obtained still others.

Mr. Boland: No question of transfer; you could trace right through.

The Court: Then, your word "originally" might mislead there.

Mr. Boland: We used that word "originally" merely to connote the idea of transfer from one end to another, right through, so that you could establish usufruct at the time.

The Court: Cut out "originally" and then you are all right. "property covered by the claim." What is the difficulty about both going in? I don't know what we are trying to get.

Mr. Boland: The only thought I have in mind is the right of the person who claims establishment of usufruct to trace the proceeds before he establishes; but after it has been established, and particularly here, where you are dealing with bearer shares, the law is not such that it may be traced after it has been established. He has a personal claim against the individual; but query: as to whether the law is so clear as to how he may trace assets afterward.

3115 The Court: I don't remember any testimony on that.

Mr. Boland: I suppose probably it is academic.

Mr. Burling: I think it is.

Mr. Boland: Dr. Kronstein seemed to think it was very important.

Mr. Burling: I am perfectly willing that my friend's language be added.

The Court: Let us add that, then, and make both sides happy.

Mr. Boland: If you are going to add that, I would prefer to withdraw ours and leave yours unchanged.

Mr. Burling: I haven't any objection to that either, if Your Honor please.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I would like to take up at this point, rather than discuss findings 39 through 45, even though we do make some suggested changes in the tentative findings in accordance with your view on it—I would like at this time to bring to Your Honor's attention what to us is a very important point, and one in which we feel that the Court has inadvertently run into serious error. I mention that and would like to raise it with you at this time so that the question is not raised for the first time in the Court of Appeals.

You will recollect that the testimony of the ex-3116 perts, both for the Government and for the plaintiff, with respect to the establishment of usufruct was that copossession is a sine qua non. Until you have copossession, you don't have usufruct established as a right in rem. Your Honor is quite cognizant of that fact, as evidenced by your opinion and your findings, and in finding that the delivery of the key to Frankenberg constituted valid delivery and established a usufruct in rem. You state under one theory of German law voting rights go with the usufruct, but the res had taint, and hence the corporation is tainted.

Following out this understanding of the German law and the testimony of the experts both for the Government and the plaintiff, unless you have copossession or possession in your own hands or in the hards of your agent, you do not have a usufruct in rem. If you do not have a usufruct in rem, you are back to a usufruct in personam. You are where you have to again demand establishment of usufruct before even under that one theory of German law there would be any voting rights, hence control, hence taint. The record is quite clear. Mr. Burling throughout the record and in his cross examination evidenced no question about it. I am not discussing the sale of the shares in 1936. I am not taking issue with Mr. Burling whether it was, as we contend, a valid sale or tax evasion or sham sale. Let us say for the sake of this argument that I make no objection to what it would be 3117 called. But the simple fact is, as you have found the record in your findings up to this point. You found that sometime between 1932 and 1934 the key was given to Frankenberg, and that gave possession to the usufructuary's agent. An in rem right was established, and under at least one theory of German law you had voting rights.

Frankenberg has the key to that safe. The record clearly reflects that in 1936 those shares came out of that safe. They could come out only with the consent of the usufructuary's agent, Frankenberg, following your theory. They in turn were delivered to the Schweizerische Bankgesellschaft, as reflected by Plaintiff's Exhibit 78, for the account of Frima, which is Fritz—and there is no question raised in this case that Frima and Fritz are synonymous. Regardless of what kind of sale you call it, Frankenberg does not have his hands on those shares any longer, and they are bearer shares.

Mr. Burling in his summation went on to describe the fact that this was a bogus sale; that while those people were getting something von Opel retained the voting rights to those shares in the Schweizerische Bankgesellschaft physically.

Mr. Burling: The Bank in Baden.

Mr. Gallagher: I stand corrected on the bank. They are in the hands of another bank which is holding them on behalf of 16 Swiss purchasers. And does the record 3118 reflect that? They stayed over there all during the remaining '30s. Frankenberg comes to the United States in 1940. He is over here all during the so-called relevant times. "Relevant times," as I again want to stress to Your Honor, is simply from December 7, 1941, to the date of vesting. That is our relevant time. No other time is relevant; just those six or seven months. During those six or seven months Frankenberg is in the United States.

Frankenberg is in the United States all during 1941. But the record also stands uncontradicted that in November, 1941, the shares are repurchased. By whom? By Frima, which is Fritz von Opel.

From November, 1941, to adopt Mr. Burling's argument of continuendo—we now use continuendo ourselves—from November, 1941, they are on deposit in the bank in Switzerland in the account of Frima, but not in Frankenberg's possession.

The record is not too clear on the German or Swiss law with respect to how important that copossession is, other than the statement that copossession is a sine qua non.

We have discussed this at great length with Dr. Kaufmann and Dr. Kronstein, and we will ask Your Honor to permit us, in the light of that record on bearer shares, and who votes those shares—only the person that has got possession—and without voting power—even fol-3119 lowing out your opinion, from November, 1941, without having voting power in anybody other than Fritz—we say it is in Fritz; it is in nobody else. We have no control, even following your discussion of taint. So for that reason we would request the Court to permit us to re-open just for a sufficient length of time to take additional testimony from both Dr. Kronstein and Dr. Kaufmann as to the laws of both Germany and Switzerland as to who votes bearer shares and as to what, secondly, because it is the most important question in the control feature, following your opinion, what happens to a usufruct in rem when possession is given up by the usufructuary or his agent. That is a secondary consideration. The other is the important part for purposes of this case or for the purpose of appeal or for Your Honor's decision in this case. But Plaintiff's Exhibits 78, 79, and 80 show the record to be completely uncontradicted that from November, 1941, onward, and particularly during our relevant time, from the outbreak of war until the date of vesting, these shares were held in the bank in Switzerland for the account of Frima, and Frankenberg has no possession. Therefore, any control features rest with Fritz von Opel.

For that reason I would like to re-open and take additional testimony from Dr. Kronstein and Dr. Kaufmann in corroboration of the statement I have just made to you with respect to Swiss and German law, that 3120 the holder who physically has the possession, or the one for whose account are being held the bearer shares in Switzerland is the one who has the right to vote them.

The Court: Gentlemen, I think it would be a very serious mistake at this time to take additional testimony. It would start here a precedent that would be very, very serious. If I took your witnesses, I would have to take Mr. Burling's; and after having written an opinion and made findings of fact, if I let you come in on some other phase of it at this late hour, I am sure I would commit reversable error beyond any question. It would not be in the exercise of sound discretion. I think it would set a terrible precedent.

I frankly think, in my own judgment with regard to that whole matter, that that type of possession you are talking about is not what I would call possession. It is a power or custody proposition, unless there is something in this record that shows a passing out of the shares without any intent on the part of the beneficiary of the usu-frust to give up his interest in it would constitute a divest of his interest. Unless you could establish that—

Mr. Gallagher: The experts would testify, Your Honor, and we would not contend that the usufructuary has given up his interest. We merely submit he would be in possession in personam, which was before it became in rem.

3121 The Court: Suppose I own a watch or I own an interest in some shares of stock. I say to you, "Here are bearer shares. You go out and get out of some taxes if you can, because I am going to keep my interest in this thing. I am going to control it ten years from now."

You say, "That is all right. I just want to go up there to have a transaction and get out of some taxes."

If I do that, I don't believe there could be any law to divest that interest.

Mr. Gallagher: I think Mr. Boland can clarify you on this phase.

Mr. Burling: May I speak for a moment?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Burling: The matter can be solved very simply without any reference to German law. Plaintiff's Exhibit 80 shows that the shares on November 4, 1941, were delivered to Adler and Company. Adler and Company is the bank of Frankenberg. He has also been a director of the bank from 1931 to date and at various times has been managing director.

The record is bare of any evidence that the shares were ever taken out of Adler and Company from 1941 to this minute. So Frankenberg did have possession during what Mr. Clark says is relevant time.

The Court: I have to find the facts that are here. Of course I will do that. If there is any correction of 3122 findings of fact, that is all right. But I think reopening of the testimony would establish a very bad precedent. I shall be glad to straighten out any mistake I have made in the proposed findings, but I could not, if there is any opposition to it, receive any testimony that the mere handing over of custody to shares of stock with intention to keep interest in it would take away interest in the rem. I just can't understand it.

Mr. Gallagher: It would put you in a position where you could demand reconveyance.

Mr. Burling: I am compelled to object to it. I should like to state my formal grounds.

The first ground is that it is not the law, that an expert would testify to, that once the in rem right is created, a usufruct is created. That is all the possession you have to have.

The Court: Until there comes a time that with your consent your interest is divested.

Mr. Burling: That is right. With physical possession of the bearer shares, it is not necessary to maintain an in rem usufruct.

The Court: If he used it without giving up his interest. That is the point. You have to give up your interest in the rem.

Mr. Burling: Second, the evidence is that the shares 3123 remained at all times subject to the control of Frankenberg. Frankenberg arranged this scheme—this tax-evasion scheme—and it ran through Adler and Company. The shares, I agree, were physically the custodial account of a bank; but before Frima could get them back they had to pass through Adler and Company. When the transaction was reversed in 1941, the shares physically went back to Adler and Company.

Mr. Boland: Mr. Burling has mentioned what he thinks the law is; I think I ought to be permitted to mention what we think the law is.

The Court: State what you expect to prove.

Mr. Boland: I think all the experts are in agreement, including Dr. Holstein, from the University of Frankfort. They all state, with respect to bearer shares, that the voting right, which is the main element of control, is lost when possession is gone, even though usufruct has been established.

Under the terms of this agreement with the 16 Swiss bankers, as I understand it, Fritz had the right to buy the shares back at the purchase price paid to him. However, Fritz also had the opportunity, if he did not buy them back —and if he did not buy them back, the shares became the property of Fritz' bankers—but notwithstanding the fact they were bearer shares, the only way you can establish a right in rem is through possession. Once bearer shares are gone, the voting rights go with the bearer shares.

3124 Under the agreement, it is true that Fritz von Opel retained the right to vote them himself. So we have a factual situation of Fritz having taken these shares out of the deposit box, which created usufruct under your theory—taking them out necessarily with the consent of his father's agent—let us assume that—and putting them into the account for the 16 Swiss bankers under an agreement by which he—not Frankenberg—voted and retained voting rights. When these shares came back, they came back to Adler and Company through another bank, but they came back, as Defendant's Exhibit 80, to Frima Trust Establishment. They did not come back to the account of Frima or Fritz or Dr. Frankenberg. Dr. Frankenberg was over here, and there was no way under Swiss law or under German law that Frankenberg here in the United States, after the reconveyance of those shares back to the account of Frima, could have exercised voting control.

The Court: Suppose the owner of a usufruct interest in shares of stock told a co-owner he might take these shares out to operate "for your tax benefit, with the understanding, however, that I maintain my interest in them, and that my agent, Mr. Frankenberg, is going to control those stocks and control this corporation and its operations for years to come. No matter what the form of your transaction is, your custody, or what you do with it, I am going to 3125 keep that interest."

I would not believe under the law that he would lose it any more than I would lose it if I told you you could use my watch for two or three days and then give it back to me.

Mr. Boland: Our experts state that the father would retain the right to re-establish usufruct. There is no question about that. He still has an in personam right. If there were such an agreement between the parties, perhaps the father would count upon the son or count upon the agent to make sure it would be re-established. But the record is absolutely devoid after these stocks came back on November 4, 1941—not only devoid of any showing of re-establishment, but, as a matter of fact, it seems to me—

The Court: You have shares of stock that simply evidence a right.

Mr. Boland: Bearer shares are a right in themselves.

The Court: No, they are evidences of a right. Your right is a right to part of your corporation's proceeds. It is not a tangible proposition like that. You can assign that by a separate instrument. He could have taken those shares of stock and written back at that time:

"Whereas I take the evidence of the right to the interest in there, I vouchsafe to you retention of your right, title, and interest in that corporation."

This is just a piece of paper; it is not like a watch.

3126 Mr. Boland: You have a gift under the usufructuary. Legal title is clearly in Fritz. Everybody admits that.

The Court: You make your offer of proof; I shall have to deny it. I just do not think I can reopen this case at this time. It would be a very serious thing. If I did that, lawyers would be after me to do it in every equity case I decided. I will have to exercise my discretion not to do that now on these findings of fact.

If there is anything in here that I have done wrong, or if I have gone beyond the record, I shall be glad to correct it. But I do not believe I can reopen the testimony.

Now, I shall have to go across the street. We have two visiting judges here today, and I have to take them to our meeting. I think I can be back here by 2 o'clock. You be here promptly at 2. I think I will be on time. You be on time.

In the light of this, we will see if we can go through the rest of these quickly. Don't forget to have No. 31 written up, if you can, because I want to get rid of this today if I possibly can.

(At 12:25 p.m. a recess was taken until 2 p.m. of the same day.)

3127 AFTERNOON SESSION

(The hearing was resumed at 2 p.m., upon the expiration of the recess.)

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, with respect to finding No. 31, I believe you have the preliminary part, but if I may, I should like to state it again for the record. It reads, in effect:

"In October, November, and December, 1941, Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G. shipped bauxite to Germany. Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G. had entered into a contract with Giulini Brothers in Germany in 1940, providing for shipments up to and through the year 1942. However, in the spring of 1941"—

Do you want me just to dictate this to the reporter?

The Court: Have you agreed on it?

Mr. Burling: We have agreed on that, but it is not written down.

The Court: Why don't you just send it in to my secretary and let her type it and then bring it in in that form. Have her make a couple of copies.

Mr. Gallagher: It is pretty rough. I don't know whether she will be able to read it. I showed it to Mr. Burling. May I dictate it?

The Court: I want to turn over what I have to Mr. Burling to have it typed.

3128 Mr. Gallagher: May I be excused for 30 seconds?

The Court: Surely. Can the others carry on?

Mr. Gallagher: No, I don't believe so.

Mr. Burling: I have a statement to make which will take perhaps 15 seconds.

In relation to the motion to reopen, I might further protect the record by stating an additional ground. I further object to the reopening on the ground that the matter which is proposed to be inquired into is not newly discovered in any sense; it is additional testimony concerning the law of usufruct, which was fully explored during the trial.

The Court: All right. Can you read Mr. Gallagher's handwriting, Mr. Ingoldsby?

Mr. Ingoldsby: I can come pretty close to it.

The Court: Well, tell my secretary to make a rough copy of it; we can correct it if it is not correct.

Mr. Gallagher: That brings us to finding No. 39, I think, Your Honor. No. 39 as it now stands is to the effect that

"Hans Frankenberg was made managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation in the spring of 1932 at the request of Wilhelm von Opel."

We have changed that in our proposed finding to the effect that it was at the father's suggestion.

You may recollect that early in the argument I 3129 raised the point that Defendant's Exhibit 8, which was the Gold affidavit, used the word "suggested." I pointed out to Your Honor at that time that the New York attorneys in their memorandum of law used the word "requested." The affidavit itself uses the word "suggested." We submit there is nothing else in the record to reflect that the father requested that Frankenberg be appointed managing director.

Mr. Burling: I freely concede that the word "suggest" was used by Fritz in his affidavit and in the memorandum of law. I think the record, however,—the entire record—and Your Honor's findings support the notion of request. Your Honor has found that Wilhelm von Opel had the usufruct to the property and that he wanted Frankenberg as his agent to safeguard his usufructuary interest. When he said, "I suggest"—assuming he used the words, "I suggest," to Fritz—even that would be a request. For example, if Your Honor were to say to me, "I suggest you sit down," that would be more than a request.

The Court: I do not think it makes very much difference. I will leave it as it is.

Mr. Gallagher: I might point out that the only record reference Mr. Burling set forth in his proposed findings of fact—if we are wrong, you can check us, Mr. Burling—was Defendant's Exhibit 8, the Gold affidavit. In their record reference in support of the word "request," we feel 3130 it should conform to their own citation.

The Court: "Request of Wilhelm von Opel in the form of a suggestion."

I will change it that way.

Mr. Gallagher: No, No. 40, as your tentative finding now is, reads that—

"Thereafter, Hans Frankenberg continued to be at all times and still is managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation."

Our suggested change is:

"Thereafter, Hans Frankenberg continued to be managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, but between 1940 and 1945 Dr. Eugen Meier, president of the Korporation and a member of the Board of Administrators, acted as chief officer of the Korporation."

The Court: Why not just say that:

"Thereafter, Hans Frankenberg continued to be at all times and still is managing director of Uebersee. Between 1940 and 1945 Dr. Eugen Meier, president of the Korporation, acted as chief officer of the Korporation."

Mr. Gallagher: Exactly.

Mr. Burling: Meier started to be chief officer long before that in the technical sense that he was president of the board. There is no evidence that he ever acted or did anything. I think to make the finding "thereafter" would 3131 suggest there was some change in who was really director.

The Court: Yes, it would.

Mr. Gallagher: Mr. Burling himself, at page 2299 of the record, in questioning Mr. Meier, referring to the fact that Frankenberg had left, said:

"Did there ever come a time when you did have a direct hand in the management of the affairs of the Korporation?"

Meier answered:

"That became necessary when Mr. Frankenberg left in the year 1940, and we were left alone without connection with Fritz von Opel."

"Question. In other words, up until 1940, Frankenberg ran the company; isn't that true?"

"Up until 1940." This is Mr. Burling himself.

"Frankenberg ran the company; isn't that true?"

Meier: "Administratively speaking, yes. The technical and financial management was in the hands of Fritz von Opel."

At page 2266 of the record, Mr. Burling asked:

"Question. What action did you take as chief officer of Uebersee after that date with respect to this investment?"

Mr. Meier answered: "I have not taken any action. We had no means for engaging in transactions. I have 3132 not taken any action whatever."

There is not one line in this record, and there is not one exhibit in this record, which reflects that at any time after 1940 Hans Frankenberg occupied any position with respect to the plaintiff corporation other than the fact that he was and remained a director of it.

The record is completely devoid of any testimony or exhibits that he in any wise engaged in the operations of American subsidiaries or that he in any wise engaged in the operations of the plaintiff company. The record does reflect conclusively that Meier was the man who from 1940 to 1945 did run the plaintiff corporation.

Mr. Burling: The record reflects no such thing. The record reflects that the last time anybody did anything with respect to assets—that is, securities—which are deposited, and which this suit is about—the last action anybody took that was testified to was when Frankenberg arrived in the United States from Europe and took Fritz down and "kicked the little master around until he straightened up the mess in Shreveport"; that is to say, the oil-producing companies which had their headquarters in Shreveport.

Mr. Gallagher: With respect to that, their own witness gave a different definition of the German word "vertrotten."

Mr. Burling: I believe there is some controversy as to whether the translation of the German is "worked 3133 on" or "kicked." At any rate, Frankenberg forced Fritz to do something in 1940. After that Meier's own testimony is he did not do anything. I do not understand how my friend can argue that Your Honor can find that Meier acted as chief officer when Meier testified he did not act at all.

I will concede that Meier was at all times from 1932 to date chief director, but I object to a finding that he acted after that date, because as long as anybody continued to act, Frankenberg was doing it.

There is a hiatus from the spring of 1940 to the spring of 1942; and after that we—the Custodian—had the property, and, of course, Frankenberg could not do anything.

Mr. Gallagher: But Meier could have acted with respect to it from 1940 to 1942.

With respect to the record, referring to page 2239, Mr. Burling asked Mr. Meier:

"Did there ever come a time when you did have a direct hand in the management of the affairs of the corporation?"

"Answer. That became necessary when Mr. Frankenberg left in the year 1940, and we were left alone without connection with Mr. Fritz von Opel."

With respect to the word "trotten," as to which Mr. Burling says there is some question whether it means "kicked," "worked on," or "persuaded," we submit 3134 that the definition that Mrs. von Opel gave—and she was their witness—is the definition that applies in this case.

I should like to remind Your Honor of the fact that in her testimony she stated quite arbitrarily that it was at her request that Frankenberg talked to Fritz about bailing himself out of the Shreveport set-up, where he had dropped over half a million dollars.

I am not standing too much on the technical ground that she is the Government's witness or the fact that she is Mr. von Opel's wife. Nevertheless, it is her testimony as to how it happened that Frankenberg had anything to say to von Opel and why she wrote what she did in that letter which came into evidence here.

Under those circumstances, and with the Meier testimony in here that from 1940 on, after Frankenberg left, we feel that the record warrants amplification of this finding to say that during the years 1940 to 1945 Meier acted as chief officer of the corporation.

Mr. Burling: That argument in no wise attacks the fact that Meier testified he did not act at all. If he did act at all, he did not act as chief officer of the corporation.

Mr. Gallagher: He was talking about Transdanubia at the time he said, "We took no action." But when Mr. Burling said:

"Did there ever come a time when you did have a 3135 direct hand in the management of the affairs of the corporation?"

Meier said:

"That became necessary"— that he have a direct hand—"when Mr. Frankenberg left in the year 1940 * * *."

Those record references refer to the fact that he had said, "We did nothing about Transdanubia; merely left the shares in the safe; didn't do a thing about them; what could we do? What would you suggest, Mr. Burling?"

That is the same question we posed in closing arguments. Mr. Burling says just don't do business.

Mr. Burling: May I ask my friend to tell me the record reference where he says that the answer, "I didn't take any action," was limited to Transdanubia?

Mr. Gallagher: I might turn the question about, if I may. You give me the record reference where it says he took no action and I will point out the reference to Transdanubia.

Mr. Burling: I heard Mr. Gallagher read that just now. I can't find it.

Mr. Gallagher: That page is 2266. I am sorry.

"Question. What action did you take as the chief officer of Uebersee after that date with respect to this investment?"

"The Witness. I have not taken any action. We had 3136 no means for engaging in transactions. I have not taken any action whatever."

Mr. Burling: I again say that is ambiguous. There was no evidence that anything had been done in Switzerland after 1940, with the possible exception of the Transdanubia matter which we discussed. The remaining assets of the plaintiff corporation were a plantation in South Africa or in Tanganyika, and it was not Meier who misrepresented the status of the plaintiff or caused the status of the plaintiff to be misrepresented to the British authorities. Aside from that the remaining assets are all in this country, and Meier never acted with respect to them.

But if the question is whether Meier was titular chief officer of the corporation from 1932, I would have no objection. But this change in 1940, I think, is not in the record.

Mr. Gallagher: At page 2266 the Court said, when Mr. Burling was inquiring of Meier—the Court said to Mr. Burling:

"He has been asked by you about activities with Hungary since then."

"Mr. Burling. Would you read the question, Mr. Reporter, please?"

Then the question came:

"What action did you take as the chief officer of Uebersee after that date with respect to this investment?"

3137 "The Witness. I have not taken any action."

That was with respect to Transdanubia. But on the more general question of running Transdanubia, at page 2299, to again repeat:

"Question. Did there ever come a time when you did have a direct hand in the management of the affairs of the corporation?"

"Answer. That became necessary when Mr. Frankenberg left in the year 1940, and we were left alone without connection with Mr. Fritz von Opel."

The Court: "That became necessary" is a very vague term. I will just put in here:

"At all times from 1932 Dr. Meier, President of the corporation, was chief officer of the corporation."

Then, if your records show without any contradiction that he managed it, you can still have that in the case whether I find it or not.

When he says, "That became necessary," that is very vague. I do not know whether he was active or not. There were a great many vague statements by some of these witnesses. I do not know the significance of that. If you want a formal finding that he actively governed and ran the affairs without any intervention by Frankenberg, I think I should have something a little more specific on it.

Mr. Gallagher: Don't you think Mr. Burling's 3138 question is pretty specific?

The Court: The way I would answer it, if I had to answer that, would be that "I was very active. I over-looked it. I spent hours having complete control over it." I would not say, "That became necessary"; it is so vague.

Mr. Gallagher: Meier did not talk in English; his Swiss was translated by Mr. Laufer. I don't know that that was—

The Court: I will find that he was president and was chief officer at all times from 1932. If your record supports that without my finding it, you can still get it in; if it does not, you can argue on the record. It does not seem to me that there was a very clear-cut issue on that as to which I could make a finding.

Mr. Gallagher: I might submit, without laboring the point, that there is certainly nothing in the record to reflect that Frankenberg or von Opel had anything to do with the corporation.

The Court: I have some recollection that Frankenberg had some communications after that.

Mr. Gallagher: No, sir. I can assure you the record is silent.

Mr. Burling: So far as I can recall, the last evidence relates to Shreveport.

The Court: And that was in 1940?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, Your Honor.

3139 Mr. Burling: I may say, Your Honor, that the principal assets of the corporation were not disturbed at all by anybody. That is, so far as the record shows, nobody did anything about the management part of the brewery, and nobody did anything about the management of Spur.

Mr. Gallagher: I might submit that nothing was done with the assets from the time Fritz von Opel purchased the companies.

The Court: If there is any contradiction, you can argue it.

"At all times from 1932 Dr. Meier, President of the Corporation, was chief officer of the Corporation. Dr. Meier testified" so and so. You can copy that word for word when you see what it is.

Mr. Gallagher: All right.

Mr. Burling: Frankenberg did testify that after the hostilities were over, he personally selected the documents in Switzerland to be brought here for use of counsel.

Mr. Gallagher. We will agree with that. That was in 1947. He was back in Switzerland, and we requested that he get the books.

The Court: You can copy that part of the record in. I do not want to make a formal finding on what the significance of that is, because it was never in issue.

3140 Mr. Gallagher: How does your finding read, Your Honor?

The Court: "At all times from 1932 Dr. Eugen Meier, President of the Corporation, was chief officer of the Corporation. Dr. Meier testified that—"

Mr. Gallagher: Do you want me to give this language to your secretary to be typed—"Dr. Meier testified that"?

The Court: You had better give that to her so that I can paste it in here. I want to give it to Mr. Burling when I get through and let him have it typed up.

Mr. Gallagher: "* * * testified as follows: Record page 2299:

"'Question: Did there ever come a time when you did have a direct hand in the management of the affairs of the corporation?'"

The Court: Just give that to her; she will write it up. I want to paste it in here, so that he can copy it from this. That is finding No. 40. I have the first part of it. Just say:

"Dr. Meier testified as follows:"

Then copy that.

Now, finding No. 44.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I might state with respect to finding No. 44 that I have a few general remarks that I should like to make to you and bring to your attention which apply also to findings Nos. 41 and 43, if 3141 you will look at those for just a moment before I continue.

The Court: I have those handy; I can follow you, I think.

Mr. Gallagher: In finding No. 41 you said:

"Hans Frankenberg acted at all relevant times as managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation as agent for Wilhelm von Opel."

Finding No. 43 reads:

"Hans Frankenberg, as such agent, from the spring of 1932 until the date of vesting, exercised control over the investments and activities of Uebersee-Finanz Korporation."

Then, finding No. 44 reads:

"Fritz von Opel, from time to time, from the spring of 1932 until the date of vesting, engaged in activities in behalf of Uebersee-Finanz Korporation and gave instructions concerning its investments."

Those three can basically be more or less lumped together, as we see it. This is the point I want to stress a little more than the remaining ones. I do not think it is going to take too much time. I should like to recall to your recollection what the record is with respect to these investments and who made them, who gave directions, who controlled them, and who controlled the activities.

First of all, I won't labor as to what Frankenberg 3142 had to say; I know you will recollect what he said.

He said, "Fritz did the investing, and I gave him banking advice."

As Mr. Meier said, at page 2262, Fritz von Opel always controlled and directed the investments and policy of the Uebersee-Finanz Korporation. At page 2272 he said:

"Moreover, as I stated before, the policies as to investment and business transactions issued from Mr. Fritz von Opel."

At page 2299:

"The technical and financial management was in the hands of Fritz von Opel."

Next, as to Mr. Adolph Gaeng, one of the directors, as to his affidavit it is stated:

"It is stipulated that he knows of his own knowledge that Fritz von Opel controlled the policies and operation of Uebersee-Finanz Korporation."

Mr. Burling: Did counsel use the word "stipulated"?

Mr. Gallagher: It was stipulated that that would have been his testimony if he had testified.

Mr. Burling: That certainly is not what happened.

Mr. Gallagher: I think the Court recollects. Von Opel himself goes into great length in testifying he carried on the investments.

Now, we get down to a few more pointed factors, one of which, because of the nature of whose witnesses 3143 they are, might lend more weight to their testimony than perhaps the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses.

First of all, Mr. Hoffacker, you will recollect. I am reading from his affidavit in Defendant's Exhibit 8, just to refresh your recollection about that.

"My only communications, written or oral, regarding investments, * * * were with Fritz von Opel."

Then he says, folio 210, taken orally, May and June, 1932:

"I discussed with Mr. von Opel investments to be made in this country."

He goes on with the discussions. He finally got orders from Fritz; as a result Spur, Harvard, and so forth, were bought.

Folio 218, October, 1931. There is the recommendation to buy stock from Burden, Cole, and the making of an offer of $5 for the purchase of 50,000 shares.

That is his testimony as to whose agent he was. His affidavit states categorically that at the time when they did that questioning, he was agent. He said he was Fritz von Opel's agent and aided and gave him advice in his investments.

Now we get to Crittenden. What does Crittenden say about these American companies and who controlled the investments and policies?

3144 "Did Mr. Hoffacker make any reference to the source of the funds he referred to?"

"Answer. Yes."

"Question. What did he say?"

"Answer. He said that he was agent for and adviser to Fritz von Opel, the son of Opel, the automobile manufacturer in Germany, who had sold that company to General Motors."

That was Mr. Crittenden saying that.

"* * * described * * * that he was an agent"—this is Crittenden's testimony—"for Fritz von Opel and guided him solely in all of his investments in the United States."

That is out of Mr. Crittenden's mouth here.

At page 1942 of the record, Crittenden again states:

"Question. Regarding your first meeting with Hoffacker, with relation to Mr. von Opel, I believe it was your testimony on direct examination that Hoffacker told you that he was an adviser, an agent, of Fritz von Opel; is that correct?"

"Answer. Yes."

"Question. And it is your further testimony that he never deviated from that statement; is that correct?"

"Answer. Never."

Now, page 1909. What does he have to say there?

3145 He was asked if he recalled what Hoffacker said when he introduced Mr. Frankenberg to him. That was in Montreal.

"Answer. Why, he explained to us that Dr. Frankenberg had assisted or was a representative of Fritz von Opel and knew his father in many ways."

That is all Crittenden.

Let us go to Mr. Houghland himself. We have this record that Crittenden himself—one of the Government witnesses—now states that Hoffacker was von Opel's agent; that Hoffacker was influencing investments and policies.

Mr. Burling: If Your Honor please, counsel omitted to read that Mr. Crittenden said Hoffacker described the very Opel Motor Works in Germany intrusted to the son by the owner. That is at page 1899 of the record.

Mr. Gallagher: You can read any part I have omitted, Mr. Burling, when I get finished. I am reading the excerpts we have here.

Bear in mind that the Hoffacker affidavit is in evidence, offered by the Government as part of Defendant's Exhibit 8.

Houghland, at page 1852 of the record, says:

"Question. And on many occasions since 1932 you have followed the instructions of Mr. Fritz von Opel, have you not?

"Answer. Very, very few occasions. I can't recall any instructions from Mr. Fritz von Opel, although it 3146 is perfectly possible that there were. I followed the instructions of Mr. Theodore Hoffacker."

He does not say anything about Frankenberg; it is Hoffacker.

At page 1854 of the record, the same Mr. Houghland testifying, the question was asked:

"He"

meaning Fritz von Opel—"gave you a completely free hand, didn't he?"

"Answer. Somebody did, after some period of turmoil. After the company was shown to be profitable and, I hope, well managed, why, there wasn't much interference in later years, particularly after Mr. Hoffacker got out. Mr. Hoffacker occupied a very dominent position as a man giving me instructions."

Having shown the place that Hoffacker occupies in here by Fritz von Opel's statement—by his own statement—and by Crittenden's statement of Hoffacker being the man controlling the investments and suggesting to Fritz where to invest, and with Houghland himself stating that Hoffacker is the man giving him orders, we submit that the finding that Frankenberg was controlling the investments—and there is not one line in the record that he is controlling those investments, other than the story about getting Fritz to bail himself out of the Shreveport deal
3147 —as a matter of fact, the only two conversations that have really linked Frankenberg at all with this picture, even according to the Government's theory, are with respect to Zurich in 1937 and with respect to New York in 1937, a talk with Houghland on one occassion, and on the other with Crittenden, and in each instance they were asked for money for different ventures. Houghland was not asked for money for the Spur Company. Crittenden was not asked for money for Oil Production, Incorporated.

The Court: There was some testimony by Houghland that there came a time when he did seek freedom with regard to Spur.

Mr. Burling: With regard to setting up another set-up.

The Court: And then Fritz von Opel telephoned him, I think, that he would like to go along with him and agree with him, but that Frankenberg would not permit it.

Mr. Gallagher: That was generally after that. That involved new capital.

The Court: That is right; new capital.

Mr. Gallagher: That was a different venture. That was not Spur. That was not one of the subsidiary corporations.

The Court: That is a circumstance. The one I am talking about is No. 44.

Mr. Gallagher: I am taking 41, 43, and 44 all together. No. 44 has to do with Fritz being engaged in activities on behalf of Uebersee. Our suggested finding on 44 is:

3148 "Fritz von Opel continuously from the spring of 1932 until the date of vesting, acting under a full power of attorney from the officers of the plaintiff corporation, engaged in activities of the plaintiff corporation and gave instructions for its investments."

The Court: Do you want No. 41 changed?

Mr. Gallagher: We feel as to No. 41 that there is nothing to support the relevant times phase, which is the period of the outbreak of the war until the time of vesting, to reflect that Frankenberg was acting as Wilhelm's agent during that period of time.

Then, No. 43 says that:

"* * * from the spring of 1932 until the date of vesting," Frankenberg "exercised control over the investments and activities of Uebersee-Finanz Korporation."

The investments are these American corporations whose stock has been seized.

Finally, the record is completely barren of any instructions he was giving the corporations or any actions he was taking with respect to the investments during the relevant time from December 7, 1941, until the time of vesting. He could have given five thousand orders in 1933.

The Court: Well, you see, I have a little different viewpoint. You are speaking of a technical view in that 3149 regard. He gave instructions previous to the time you are talking about, and unless there was some evidence of cutting off precipitately it is logical to draw the conclusion—it is reasonable to draw the conclusion—that he would continue that. I had definitely in mind—this Frankenberg situation gave me the impression or gave me the belief—that if any major conflict or problem would occur, he would be the guiding genius. He might not have to act very often.

Mr. Gallagher: Frankenberg came to this country in 1940, applied for American citizenship in 1941, and became an American citizen.

The Court: Of course, I am not dealing with that; I am dealing with what he did for Wilhelm.

Mr Gallagher: I am talking about the relevant period of December, 1941, until the date of vesting in 1942. Under the conclusion you are arriving at, with nothing affirmative shown in the record whatsoever, you would make Frankenberg an enemy agent, acting on behalf of the enemy, during the period of the war, at a time when the man has an application pending for United States citizenship, which is granted to him. I think it becomes, when you keep in mind that factor, somewhat illogical.

The Court: Do you want to say he acted as agent up to the outbreak of the war—is that it?—instead of to the date of vesting?

3150 Mr. Gallagher: There is no evidence whatsoever that he was acting in any agency when, even following Your Honor's tentative conclusion, after 1940—not 1941, but after 1940—there is not a thing in this record—

The Court: Here is what I am getting at. If I know that Mr. Fairless is president of United States Steel and carries on up to a certain time, and we haven't any word to the contrary or any action to the contrary—that he acted right along—do we stop right at the very moment with respect to which evidence stops? In other words, if a man has been engaged in an activity over years, and then you stop with a piece of testimony as of a certain date in 1940, does that mean, because the testimony stops at that date, your deduction stops at that date?

Mr. Gallagher: I think with respect to that the Government has the burden of proof of carrying it. It was during the relevant time period that something was done with plaintiff corporation or with the subsidiary corporations. Were the Americans being watched? Was there anything in this country that could be used to hurt us?

The Court: What I am getting at is that when a situation is established and it runs over a number of years, does the mere fact that the testimony with regard to it stops at a certain date mean that the Court could not draw the conclusion that it continued?

3151 Mr. Gallagher: No. I think we do not have a Trading-With-The-Enemy Act until the date war is declared.

The Court: I understand.

Mr. Gallagher: The burden is on the Government.

The Court: To make a homespun expression: I have been devoted to my family for years. Everybody knows it. The last time I made any overt act of expression was on December 25. Now, does the devotion stop there? Is there a presumption that it stops? Or don't you have to show that it stops? That is what I am getting at. They don't have to come in here and show that control exists over a long, continuous, unabated period of time; that the burden is on them to keep showing that afterward. It may be after 1941, when he is an American citizen, he is pretty quiet about it.

Mr. Gallagher: I do not think a man who is going to apply for American citizenship is going to commit any overt act on behalf of an enemy.

The Court: He is going to be careful.

Mr. Gallagher: I think you are finding he is acting on behalf of an enemy after he has an application in to become an American citizen, with not one thing in the record to show any action with the subsidiary corporations or with the plaintiff corporation.

The Court: I will give you a chance to be heard, Mr. Burling, before I make up my mind. Maybe we could say:

3152 "From the inception of this firm down until 1940 Frankenberg handled in behalf of Wilhelm all the affairs, and all the evidence with regard to continuation is nil. However, there is no evidence showing that there was a cessation of it."

Mr. Gallagher: That would be satisfactory with the plaintiff.

Mr Burling: Since we run the risk—I personally think the chance of reversal is negligible—I hope—but since we run the risk, I think the proposal makes that risk greater rather than less. In other words, I think it would be helpful if Your Honor would draw an inference of fact.

The Court: I shall. I can do it that way. In other words:

"I find from the facts that Frankenberg at the beginning of this transaction, as of the time the shares were deposited with him and the key was turned over to him—from that time down until 1940, continuously acted as agent of Wilhelm von Opel in the directing of all major policies of the corporation by reason of that last act being in 1940; that he continued to do it to the time of seizure."

If it is illogical and unreasonable, then the Court of Appeals can say this conclusion of facts is silly. But that is my conclusion.

3153 Mr. Burling: We have no objection.

Mr. Gallagher: You mean by that you draw the inference?

The Court: No, I make the finding.

Mr. Gallagher: That he was the agent from the time of the key until 1940, is what you said; is that correct?

The Court: No; I say from the facts or from the evidence adduced—that is what it really is—that beginning as of the time of turning over the key and continuously through 1940 the evidence shows he exercised the major control with respect to the policies in behalf of Wilhelm von Opel, in behalf of the policies of Uebersee and the purchase of securities, and the like; and there being no evidence with regard to the matter from 1940, the Court finds as a fact that he continued to do so.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all right.

The Court: In other words, I am perfectly willing to have the Court of Appeals know, Mr. Gallagher, that I did not make my findings of fact on any piece of evidence that occurred after 1940. I will grant you that consideration. But I must say that my own judgment is, when an agent of that importance goes on for all that period of time, making major decisions of policy, that he did not stop instantly, unless you show he did—unless you have some glaring evidence that he did. I do not want to go into the facts of the matter to any extent. I was very firmly 3154 convinced of Frankenberg's agency on behalf of the father. He did not answer the questions of Mr. Burling directly on that very point. He hemmed and hawed about it. I marked it down in my notes every minute he did it. It was the very heart of the case. Here is a brilliant man—an adviser. He was asked a question, and he did not answer it directly. Any man as brilliant as he, knowing all the facts, would have answered immediately. But every time we got around to Frankenberg's agency, there was some evasiveness about it. The evidence was too strong—just overwhelming, in my judgment—on that point.

Well, you have my idea about it.

Mr. Gallagher: Will that be substituted, then, for finding—that would be finding 43, as I would read it.

The Court: I think that is all right.

Mr. Burling, will you rewrite that in the light of my statement? I stated it very loosely, but you get the point.

Mr. Burling: I think so.

The Court: I want to let the Court of Appeals know that I acted on evidence that the agency ended in 1940, but that the continuendo of that control over that long period of time, of probably six or eight years, indicated to my mind that it kept on and continued, in the absence of some very powerful evidence to the contrary, which I did not feel was produced in this case.

Mr. Gallagher: All we are asking basically in 3155 finding No. 44—the only change in No. 44 basically—is that we want in there that Fritz was acting under a full power of attorney from the corporation. I do not know whether Mr. Burling has any objection.

Mr. Burling: Yes, I object on the ground that it is contrary to the record. Fritz acted at least up until the Gold Case affidavit intermittently under a power of attorney.

Furthermore, according to Dr. Meier's testimony, he was kept completely away from the management of the company, at least up until the Gold Case.

The Court: Whatever the record shows, if it was intermittently.

Mr. Boland: And thereafter continuously.

"Fritz von Opel, from time to time until 1935, and thereafter continuously until the date of vesting."

Mr. Burling: They would have Your Honor find Fritz von Opel continuously from the spring of 1932 acting under a full power of attorney, and so on. That is directly contrary to the evidence. They are still going directly contrary to what the theory of the Gold Case was.

Mr. Boland: Do you object to "after 1935"—stating that he acted continuously?

Mr. Gallagher: "Continuously" merely means that this power of attorney was outstanding at all times from the spring of 1932.

Mr. Burling: I do not believe the plaintiff corpo-3156 ration should ask your Honor to find as a fact something directly contrary to what the plaintiff corporation swore to in the Supreme Court.

The Court: No, I am not going to do that if it is contrary. Is it contrary?

Mr. Gallagher: I do not think it is contrary. Furthermore, it is a peculiar remark of Mr. Burling's, under the circumstances.

We would like you to find that what Hoffacker said in the Gold Case was true also.

Mr. Burling: What Hoffacker said in the Gold Case does not estop the Government of the United States.

The Court: I don't know whether it is estoppel, but what is the issue here? What do you want the power of attorney to do?

Mr. Gallagher: We want merely to show that under a full power of attorney he acted continuously from the spring of 1932, which he did. It is in the Gold Case that he had this power of attorney.

The Court: I will find anything he said. There is no conflict on that.

Mr. Burling: The relevancy of this relates to the next finding. My friend is trying to erode Your Honor's finding that the management was ultimately in Frankenberg's hands.

The Court: Do you admit that from time to time 3157 he had powers of attorney until 1935?

Mr. Burling: Yes.

The Court: And that after 1935 it was continuous?

Mr. Burling: I don't know whether it was continuous or not. I frankly can't state. If my friend can show it to you in the record, I may. I know it was discontinuous prior to 1935.

Mr. Gallagher: Our record references are Plaintiff's Exhibit 74 and pages 630, 2308, 2309, 2468, and 2469.

Mr. Burling: I can't check those references that fast, Your Honor. My friend referred to Plaintiff's Exhibit 74, which is a power of attorney made out in 1932, which expired, in accordance with the affidavits of Meier and von Opel, filed in the Gold Case. It does not establish a continuous power of attorney, but quite the opposite.

Mr. Gallagher: Let us drop it and leave it as the Court found it before.

Our next one is No. 45. Counsel for the plaintiff had moved that this be stricken. However, in the light of your new finding on 43, that very much covers it, except that, at least, to be in accord with your finding No. 43, with the record testimony, and with your theory of the case, we still feel should read:

"carried on with the guidance and direction of Hans Frankenberg, agent of Wilhelm."

3158 There isn't anything in the record to indicate that Wilhelm ever gave him any orders.

The Court: I understand your point on that. I started at one time to write in my opinion a great many reasons why I reached this conclusion. It would not be very helpful. If I started giving reasons, it would be just like a jury coming out and saying, "We find this because of this, that, and the other." It is bad practice. I can assure you I gave that matter very careful study, and I reached this conclusion. I am going to leave No. 45 as it is.

What is No. 49?

Mr. Gallagher: In No. 49 we are changing the fact. In your finding you say a usufruct was created by the gift agreement, while, as a matter of fact, the affidavit stated that a usufruct had been created pursuant to the gift agreement.

The Court: This is not what I say; it is what Fritz von Opel said. Did he say it had been created by an agreement?

Mr. Gallagher: "Created pursuant to," is what he stated in the Gold affidavit.

The Court: Is that all right, Mr. Burling?

Mr. Gallagher: That is the theory of their case.

Mr. Burling: I don't see the relevancy of it, but I don't care.

Mr. Gallagher: Just one other addition, and that 3159 is at the end, where you said:

"* * * and he further stated he had bare legal title."

If we ask you to add:

"* * * plus 20 percent of the income."

He also stated that in the affidavit, and you are talking about what is stated in the affidavit.

The Court: That is right; there isn't any question about that.

Mr. Gallagher: So "plus 20 percent of the income" is what is in the affidavit.

The Court: That is not going to hurt it.

Mr. Boland: In No. 51, the only point we have is the fact that insofar as usufruct had been established and waived, we do not think it is in conflict at all with the theory of the Gold Case. Our position is that the usufruct, if the usufruct had been established and waived, is not in conflict with the theory of the Gold Case. The waiver came subsequent to it. So our proposed finding is insofar as there was usufruct established.

Mr. Burling: That statement is clearly not supported by the record. The only two people who testified that there was waiver were Fritz and Dr. Gros, and they said the waiver conversation took place in the midsummer or autumn of 1935, as these Gold cases went on up through the Second Circuit.

3160 The Court: Mr. Burling, there isn't any doubt on earth but that you are entitled to a finding, and I will make it just as plain as it can be. It is utterly inconceivable to me that Wilhelm von Opel, with the case pending in the United States, would have waived his interest so that he would have lost it. I just can't believe it. He is soo smart. All of them are. I don't know that this, however, is much of a finding of fact, if you want to strike it out.

Mr. Burling: I would like to have it in as is.

The Court: If the Court of Appeals finds it inconsistent, I don't know what they will find. You can argue that in the Court of Appeals without my finding it. I am inclined to have it come out. I think I will strike it out. That is really not a finding of fact. I will strike it out entirely.

Now, I simply can't believe that he would have waived his right, in finding 52.

Mr. Gallagher: We say, Your Honor, that the mere finding you make that in 1935 waiver was discussed but never abandoned left us with four or five different bases upon which it could have been. We were not sure whether it was because of foreign currency regulations or because the agreement was invalid—

The Court: I just think he didn't waive it. He talked it over with Dr. Gros. Here was one of the major things he was trying to accomplish in this country—the getting of that gold over to Germany. The argument that your side used was that he just didn't want to be bothered with 3161 this thing any more. He didn't want to be bothered with it—with this usufruct. He wanted to get rid of it in this form. That is one side.

The other side is that they made formal waiver of that, which would defeat every possible chance of his getting the gold which was over here, which he had been trying to do for years. He simply wouldn't do it. Goodness knows, these people are not stupid people; they are smart people.

Mr. Boland: Our position has always been that the father knew nothing about this Gold Case. I think that is clearly evident from the fact that these letters were written to the German Government. They were introduced in the Gold Case. He was claiming he had no rights, in any manner, semblance, or form, under this gift agreement. It is completely inconsistent with the whole theory of the Gold Case.

The Court: He claimed he had no rights?

Mr. Boland: He claimed he did not want any and that he was completely finished with them. The first letter was written October 5, 1935, at the time this Gold Case was going on. It was written to the German Government—and letter after letter was written to the German Government. He has taken a position which is absolutely contrary to the whole theory of the Gold Case.

The Court: That is not what I say.

Mr. Boland: I do not see how it is such a far step 3162 to say that he is going to waive all the rights he has when he is telling the German Government in open public that he does not have anything and he does not want anything.

The Court: What was his motive in getting rid of that?

Mr. Boland: His motive in getting rid of that was simply and solely this: that because the gift agreement of 1931—because of the extreme desire of the German Government to get foreign credits, which is what they wanted—and I think the record is quite clear they were after every nickel of foreign credit they could get—they were after Wilhelm von Opel either to establish a usufruct to bring this back or to upset the agreement, to get all those foreign credits here in the United States. After all, there was $4,000,000 worth of foreign credits tied up here that Fritz von Opel had slipped out from the German Government. They wanted that back, and he was fined in connection with this.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Boland: Therefore, after this thing was over—the father's fine—his main object—and it is clear from the letters what they were trying to do was to convince the German Government that nothing more—that the father didn't want to have anything more to do with this. He never claimed he had any rights; if he had them, he didn't want them.

The Court: Let us see, now. If he had won his Gold Case, he would have taken the gold into Germany, wouldn't 3163 he?

Mr. Boland: Oh, no.

The Court: Where would it have gone?

Mr. Boland: It would have gone to Switzerland.

The Court: Oh, yes; of course. He would not have taken it directly to Germany. It would have been involved in the claim of the German Government, which wanted to get it.

Mr. Boland: If the usufruct had been established, they would have been right in there for it. As a matter of fact, he would have been subject to death in 1937 or 1938 for not having reported his interest and his rights in this usufruct. He never reported it, and they gave him plenty of time for immunity or amnesty statutes. They put through amnesty statute after amnesty statute.

"All right. We will let bygones be bygones. But if you report it now, we will forget it."

Never once did he report that he had an interest.

Mr. Burling: None of the reports here in the record—

Mr. Boland: The Judge asked me what my theory is.

In 1935 he is writing to the German Government, stating his position, which is absolutely contradictory of the theory of the Gold Case. So is it a far step to say he is willing to forget it forever; he does not want it?

The Court: The only argument I heard you make on that waiver—and I listened to it very carefully, because I asked you to argue that—the only argument I heard made on that was that he wanted to get out of this; he just 3164 wanted to wash his hands; he had an oral agreement to waive it. As you say, that is directly contrary to this suit here in America. What is the evidence that he did not know about this suit?

Mr. Boland: Well, we have Fritz' statement that he did not tell him anything about the agency until he went back there. We have the father's statement that when he was asked by Fritz whether he wanted to ratify and set up a usufruct, he said no, he didn't want to have anything to do with it.

The Court: I am talking about this suit in New York. What is the evidence that Wilhelm did not have any knowledge of it?

Mr. Boland: The father's statement, himself; Fritz' statement—

Mr. Burling: May I ask for the record reference as to where Wilhelm said he had no knowledge?

Mr. Boland: Specifically, he did not state that he did not have any knowledge. The question was never asked of him.

The Court: If I did not make this finding, I think probably I would be reversed in a minute. If the evidence does not support it, I would have to grant you a rehearing.

Mr. Gallagher: In that connection, I might say I am premature at the moment, because we do not have an affidavit to support it—we are going to ask your indulgence, before any judgment can be entered, to move for a rehearing on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

3165 The Court: I am afraid I shall have to make my finding and then let you do it. If you want to make a motion for rehearing on newly discovered evidence, I will let you do it, but I have to act in an orderly way on it.

I think I will hear Mr. Burling on this.

Mr. Gallagher: There is just one additional point which has a bearing on this. You will recall Mr. Burling had Mr. von Opel on the stand on cross-examination and asked him whether or not he had told Dr. Gros about the Gold Case. Dr. Gros himself testified, I believe, that he was unaware of the Gold Case and that Fritz von Opel had not told him. Fritz testified he had not told Dr. Gros about it.

The Court: Did Frankenberg have an affidavit in connection with this?

Mr. Burling: I do not have a copy of the affidavit, but Fritz' affidavit was sent to him in 1935.

Mr. Gallagher: That is not in the record, is it?

Mr. Burling: Yes, that is in the record.

The Court: Let me hear from you, Mr. Burling. This goes right to the heart of the case. I felt pretty positive about it. I am trying to refresh my recollection on it.

Mr. Burling: I did not realize we were going to have a reargument.

The Court: No, neither did I. I want to get it back in my mind.

3166 Isn't it correct that Gros testified—he brought into the testimony some letters, as I remember it. Then, the testimony of some of them was that there was an oral waiver.

Just as Mr. Boland says, it seems to me, in the first place, unusual that the man who had held control over this usufruct for such a long period of time should give up that large sum of money at that period; secondly, it is beyond belief that he would do it with this case pending over here for it would absolutely ruin this case and ruin something that has been fought for.

I had not the slightest idea that Wilhelm von Opel had not known about this Gold case; I thought the evidence was pretty strong that he had.

Mr. Burling: I did not know of any that he did not, but there are other pieces of evidence indicating nonwaiver, which Your Honor also recalls. To me, one of the most persuasive ones is that the two people who could do the waiving—that is, Wilhelm and Marta—were both examined on depositions, and my friends omitted entirely to ask them anything about the waiver.

The Court: Yes, I remember.

Gentlemen, I think I shall have to find it. That is the heart of what I found.

Mr. Boland: If the basis for this finding that there was no waiver is solely on the one fact that the question
3167 was not asked of the mother or father—

The Court: No, that is not solely the thing. You certainly have a great many things. In the first place, here you have writings and you have steps which deal with tremendous interests, and pains taken to support them; and then in a most informal way you find some oral agreement being set up to waive it. That is a very striking circumstance. There is a lot of money involved. As you say, it would defeat this case in the United States if it were known. In the absence of very powerful testimony showing that Wilhelm did not know about this case, I would certainly think he knew about it. How could that go on—all that tremendous activity go on—without his knowing about it, unless somebody testified he had no idea about it, and it was very clear?

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, is it reasonable? Here is the mental hurdle we have all had in respect of your finding: Is it reasonable to assume that a man who had gone through what Wilhelm von Opel went through in respect of this gift agreement—criminal proceeding where he was threatened with prosecution, threatened with everything, and finally fined a very sizeable amount of money—a man who is independently wealthy—is it reasonable to assume that at the time—the very time—when he is being fined in Germany, he would permit, through his agents, a suit to be filed in a United States court which states that he 3168 has a usufruct, when he has been arguing to the German Government that he has not?

The Court: When he is fined at the behest of Hitler, he can do almost anything.

Mr. Burling: Furthermore, I have here an exhibit which shows he reported use of a usufruct.

Mr. Boland: A tentative usufruct, which makes an in personam claim.

The Court: I gave this question of waiver very careful thought and asked you to argue it. I did make this finding. I am as firmly convinced he did not do it as you are that he did, Mr. Boland. Unfortunately for you, I have one view. If I thought he had orally waived it, I would have had to find in your favor.

Mr. Boland: You had no question in your mind that those letters were written to and discussed with the German Government and that Director Wilhelm testified Gros did come.

The Court: The fact of waiver is just as astounding to me as the writing of letters.

Mr. Burling: Most of the letters were in 1937. This is in 1937. That is another piece of evidence, I think, that sustains your Honor's finding. The purported oral waiver was in 1935. Yet Gros prepares a letter in 1937, two years later, in which he says the parties intend to waive, not that they have waived.

Mr. Boland: The significance—and I think it is very important—is that at the time they agreed to waive 3169 —we take this position—their waiving was a waiver or certainly—and this has always been our position—certainly by 1937, when Director Wilhelm told them then he could not take any action—then at that time a waiver becomes effective. It is certainly not reasonable to assume they would publish an agreement to waive during a time when they were negotiating with the German Government to find out what was going to happen to them if they did waive.

The Court: If your weight of the evidence is overwhelming, you can reverse it. That is my conclusion.

Mr. Boland: Our request is for additional findings.

The Court: Where are you?

Mr. Boland: We are at finding 52. We have a separate request for more specific findings.

Mr. Ingoldsby: May I point out one document in evidence which I believe has been overlooked? I speak of a letter of August 2, 1935, which Fritz von Opel wrote to Dr. Gros. That was the one in which he discussed with Dr. Gros the question of waiver. He spent pretty nearly a whole afternoon on the witness stand squirming because he had failed to state in that letter to Dr. Gros anything about the statement that the usufruct was established, as stated in the Gold Case.

The Court: Mr. Boland, what is it you want made more specific?

Mr. Boland: We now know the basis of Your 3170 Honor's findings, and it may help clarify it if it were agreed on appeal that it would be limited to that basis. I don't know whether you found the agreement was insufficient under German law or whether it was due to the foreign currency regulations.

The Court: No; I thought I made it perfectly plain that it was in fact made.

Mr. Boland: That is the only thought I had.

The Court: In other words, I do not think Wilhelm ever said orally or otherwise, "I hereby waive any interest of whatsoever kind I have in this property." I don't think he said that.

Mr. Boland: As long as it is clearly understood as to what the basis is.

The Court: "was never waived or abandoned by any statement or act"—I will say that—"by any statement or act."

Mr. Boland: As long as we have the basis, that is all we need.

The Court: What I say here won't go in the Court of Appeals. I will write in here:

"* * * by any statement or act of Wilhelm or Marta."

I will amend it that way, if that will help you some. I was not undertaking to say, in other words, if that is what you wanted me to say, that under the German law it could not be orally waived. If that is what you want, I did 3171 not intend to say that. What I did intend to say was that I did not believe—and I thought I wrote that, or made it plain—I did not believe they had in fact done as you argued they had done.

I was not impressed that he wanted to get rid of this whole thing. It was something he fought to sustain and hired lawyers to sustain, and accomplished it by getting possession of it. I don't think he gave it up as readily as doing it by oral act. He knew how to execute solemn instruments, if he had wanted to.

I also still think, subject to your differing with me, which you undoubtedly do, that he knew about this proceeding over here in America, having followed the matter as carefully as he did, and that his son would not go through with an important matter of that sort without his knowledge.

My whole idea of the matter is different from yours. We are, of course, fallible. I thought plainly that Wilhelm followed this property pretty intimately through Frankenberg all the time. I felt it before the case ended. That is why I asked you to argue it very carefully. This is the finding I reached. I do not mind telling you the closest thing I had to decide was between this and whether the whole matter was a sham. I thought the weight of the evidence was this way.

I will change that as I have indicated:

3172 "* * * by any statement or act."

That will make it perfectly plain.

Is there any objection to No. 53? Did I get that right?

Mr. Boland: Just a few things; very minor changes.

"A person having a usufruct * * *."

I think basically what we have here is exactly the same as this, with the exception of (d), and in your opinion you spelled out the three views. This finding, however, it seems to me, is finding 2, under one view. It seems to adopt the third view, and if the Court is going to adopt one of the three views, the logical view to adopt is the middle view, because that is what is stated in Hachenburg's draft.

The Court: Let me get this in my mind. What do you want changed?

Mr. Boland: I would like to have (e) in your findings changed to the rights which are set forth in Hachenburg's draft, which is the middle view, which is a right to vote in respect of—

The Court: I am perfectly willing to cover all dividends.

Mr. Boland: Well, certainly we do not want the strongest one against us incorporated.

Mr. Burling: I am perfectly willing to have plaintiff's proposed (d) substituted for Your Honor's (e). I should like your Honor's finding otherwise to remain un-3173 changed.

The Court: All right.

Mr. Burling: My friend's proposal actually works in another change which I object to.

The Court: I will incorporate Mr. Boland's (d) as my (e).

Mr. Boland: That accomplishes it pretty much.

The Court: I did not see that.

Mr. Boland: I thought it was inadvertent, because in your opinion you spelled out the three.

On finding No. 54, the only thing we have is an addition:

"* * *. However, Wilhelm or Marta von Opel never demanded nor received any income of any nature from the usufruct."

The Court: That is correct, isn't it, Mr. Burling?

Mr. Burling: With the exception of certain sums—rather small sums—paid to them when they were out of Germany.

Mr. Boland: You don't claim they came under the usufruct, do you?

Mr. Burling: They came out of the plaintiff; I don't know whether they came out of the usufruct.

Mr. Boland: They did not come out of the plaintiff; they came out of Fritz von Opel.

Mr. Burling: That is not so.

The Court: I will include that; then you can add 3174 the other if you want to.

Mr. Burling: Yes, I would like it added.

The Court: You can say, "Fritz von Opel"; whatever the record shows.

Mr. Boland: How much they received.

The Court: "Fritz von Opel advanced moneys for a trip" so and so. You can work that in there.

Mr. Burling: I do not know what procedure I have to work it in.

The Court: I have put in here:

"Neither Wilhelm nor Marta von Opel ever received or demanded any income from"—

Mr. Burling: It was the plaintiff corporation.

The Court: "plaintiff corporation."

Mr. Boland: But it was charged to Fritz von Opel on the books of the plaintiff corporation, so that is still Fritz von Opel.

The Court: Whatever the record shows.

Mr. Boland: It shows it is charged to Fritz von Opel.

Mr. Burling: The record shows it is funds taken from the plaintiff corporation.

The Court: All right, "plaintiff corporation." "on occasions paid."

Mr. Boland: "expenses for a trip to South America."

Mr. Gallagher: "and paid for shooting stag in Hungary."

3175

The Court: You can dictate that. I will mark that.

"Plaintiff corporation on occasions paid expenses"; and then I will say, "dictated."

Now, why do I have to make a lot of findings of law?

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I have to make one other request as to No. 57. That is the last one. I would like that to read:

"Fritz von Opel is 50 years of age and has no issue"; and then I would like to go further and say:

"His father, Wilhelm von Opel, died in 1948, and his mother, Marta von Opel, is at present 75 years of age."

The Court: That is all right. Do you want to say anything about the sister?

Mr. Gallagher: No.

Mr. Burling: If you are going to discuss conditions now rather than condition at the time of vesting, which we contend is relevant, I think Your Honor should also find that she is now alive.

Mr. Gallagher: The Court has found that she is now alive. I merely said she is 75 years of age.

Mr. Burling: I am talking about the sister.

Mr. Gallagher: There is a finding showing that she is living in Switzerland. I presume she is not 6 feet under.

3176 The Court: Gentlemen, I shall have to leave here in four minutes. Why do we have to have all these conclusions of law?

Mr. Gallagher: Changes?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Gallagher: Because we think the conclusions as they now stand, Your Honor, if I may say so, are not fully accurate, in the light of some of the changes in the findings and some of the suggestions that have been made.

The Court: I will tell you what I am going to have to get you to do in these findings of law. I had to make an engagement. I thought we would get through with this much sooner. I should not have thought that.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, we would like to point out one thing in your opinion. You make reference, inadvertently, on a number of occasions to the use of the word "ownership" in discussing the usufructuary. As your findings now property do reflect, and as the testimony of the experts on both sides reflected, the title is in Fritz. The parents have a usufructuary interest in this property.

The Court: "Ownership" is a very broad term. You can't be too narrow. When you have a finding as to the law of Germany and what the interest is, the fact that I called it "ownership" in my opinion is not going to prejudice you at all. As long as you have a good, clear find-3177 ing of what a usufructuary interest is, if I refer to it as ownership it is not going to hurt you.

The Court of Appeals is not going to make its finding on my opinion. The only time they take findings of fact in an opinion is when we do not make adequate findings or make an adequate finding in this court. Then they scold us for not having made findings of fact. I doubt if they take anything out of that opinion. They might read it, but they will take the findings of fact and conclusions of law as I see them. That is what they will do.

You will find over and over again that they have criticized our trial courts because we have not made findings of fact, and they have had to look to opinions for that very reason. They want us to be precise in what we find.

Do you need to debate these questions of law very much? Could you let me have it in writing?

Mr. Gallagher: We could submit that. Could you possibly give us two days?

The Court: On the conclusions of law?

Mr. Gallagher: We want to see the new findings of fact as they now stand, so that we may make some comment on them. If we could have until—

The Court: I am going to hand this to Mr. Burling. I hope he can read my handwriting. I will give you a copy.

What I want to know is, Do you need any oral 3178 hearing on your conclusions of law?

Mr. Gallagher: I think we can submit those in writing.

The Court: If you do, I will give you an hour some day.

Mr. Gallagher: We are going to file a motion to reopen on the basis of newly discovered evidence.

The Court: You had better labor pretty hard as to why you could not get it before you tried the case.

Mr. Gallagher: We did not know the person knew the story.

Mr. Burling: May I inquire what the Court expects me to do?

The Court: What I should like to have you do, if you will, is to take this draft entitled, "Plaintiff's Proposed Amendments of Tentative Draft of Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law," and rewrite it for me and for Mr. Gallagher—the complete findings as I have made them.

These are the only ones in controversy, so the others you can just go right along with.

Mr. Burling: I will not be able to until I get the transcript.

The Court: Well, you might. I think I have written in here with pencil the way I found them. If you cannot understand my handwriting, I will straighten it out.

We are going to give you a copy of it anyway, Mr. Gallagher.

3179 Mr. Gallagher: Could we have until the beginning of the week, in the light of the reporter's statement that the transcript will not be ready for two or three days?

The Court: Oh, yes; I am not going to sign it without giving you a copy. If you need another hour or two some day, I will give it to you.

Mr. Gallagher: Thank you very much.

The Court: I want to be perfectly fair about the matter, of course.

If you cannot spell it out from my handwriting, Mr. Burling, and you do not mind coming to me, I shall be glad to interpret it for you. I do not want to have to do this all over again unless I have gone completely astray on this, because I have, I think, settled all of the findings of fact. On the conclusions of law, if you need an oral hearing on them, I will try to find a couple of hours for you.

All right.

(At 3:50 p.m. the hearing was concluded.)

3182 PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, I would like to inform the Court that Mr. Burling is unable to be here, because he has left for Sweden to take depositions in the Bosch case, and possibly will not be around for several months.

The Court: By the way, gentlemen, it just occurred to me. I noticed the other day that, inadvertently, in disposing of this matter, in my opinion I wrote that the judgment will be entered dismissing plaintiff's case. That is technically an incorrect statement. It ought to be, "Judgment will be entered finding for the defendant." I should have put it that way. I do not know how I overlooked that. So I am going to correct the opinion, but the important thing is to get the order right. I mean, the opinion does not control.

What is it we have this morning, gentlemen?

Mr. Gallagher: If Your Honor please, I believe you set this time down so that we might discuss the proposed conclusions of law, however, reminding Your Honor of the statement at our last meeting, namely, that Mr. Burling should prepare the findings in the light of the discussion that had taken place before Your Honor. We have no intention of going back into the findings of fact except to point out two changes, which we think are quite obvious on the face that I believe Mr. Baum won't have any objection to them.

3183 The Court: All right.

Mr. Gallagher: The first of these is with respect to findings 20 and 21, more specifically 21. There it is found that:

"Thereafter, plaintiff invested these funds in various corporations and other assets in the United States and elsewhere, including the property vested by the Alien Property Custodian."

As Your Honor will recollect, the record in this case disclosed that after the sale of the Opel shares, von Opel placed the proceeds in a number of varied stocks, which ultimately were put into Spur, Harvard—the vested properties—and others, and then in 1934 and in 1935 these shares were transferred to the plaintiff corporation, so the plaintiff corporation did not invest the funds from the Opel shares in the vested assets, but the vested assets in fact were transferred from the plaintiff corporation.

The Court: That is true, is it not, Mr. Baum?

Mr. Baum: I do not think that is quite true, Mr. Gallagher, because I think your own books show that as of 1932, when Fritz acquired the stock of Uebersee, or the end of 1931, whenever it was, he also had a credit on the books of the corporation for the entire value of the property which his father had given to him; so that whether he invested them personally, he was still doing it on 3184 behalf of the corporation.

The Court: The corporation had not been acquired then, had it?

Mr. Baum: Yes. It was acquired in the winter of 1931 or early 1932.

Mr. Gallagher: If you will recollect the chart, the funds were held by von Opel, in different accounts in New York and the only funds that were transferred to the corporation for which a credit was set up on the books for von Opel were for the purchase of the million dollars in gold. The other shares were held for von Opel, and it was not until 1934 and 1935 that he transferred these to the corporation and received a credit of some eleven million Swiss francs.

The Court: Let me ask you this. Look at 21. Why won't we get it by saying:

"Thereafter, these funds were invested"?

That is all you need. There is not any question that it came into the possession of the plaintiff before the vesting, and I think the findings will show that.

Mr. Baum: That is the only concern I had.

The Court: I think they do. I am sure they do.

"Thereafter, these funds were invested."

You can say, if you want to:

"Later, before the time of vesting by the Alien 3185 Property Custodian, they became the assets of plaintiff corporation."

Put it in there, if you want to.

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, I would like to call Your Honor's attention to Mr. von Opel's affidavit in the Gold case, which says:

"I left New York or or about June 5, 1932, returned to Switzerland; thereafter I got in touch by cablegram with Mr. Hoffacker with regard to the investments of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A.G. in the United States."

I also would like to call your attention to the fact that the bank accounts were transferred to the name of Uebersee in May or June of 1932.

The Court: Put it in here. The only point I had in mind was, I supposed from the beginning, when he was given the power of attorney by his father, he had to go through the transaction of investing them through various corporations. I had the impression he had done that before they were transferred to Uebersee.

Mr. Gallagher: That is what the record indicates.

The Court: That was my impression. It does not make any difference. If they went to Uebersee before the vesting, these funds were invested in various corporations, including property vested by the Alien Property Cus-3186 todian—

Mr. Gallagher: And subsequently transferred to the corporation.

The Court: Just say subsequently, but before vesting by the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. Gallagher: You can make the date, "And prior to 1936," because it took place in 1934 and 1935. Put it back as far as that.

The Court: Subsequently, prior to 1936.

Would that get it? They were vested in 1941.

Mr. Gallagher: 1942.

The Court: Subsequently, prior to 1936—

Mr. Gallagher: Were transferred to the—

The Court: —these funds—

Mr. Gallagher: These assets or these shares.

The Court: Assets.

Mr. Gallagher: Assets.

The Court: —assets were transferred to the plaintiff. I have written it in here. I will give it to you. That gets it all right.

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, that is satisfactory.

We have one other suggestion, and that is all.

The Court: You said something about 20. What about that?

Mr. Gallagher: 20 related with 21, and we were contemplating making it one, but I think 20 can stand the 3187 way you have changed 21 now.

Now, the only other suggestion, because we do think it gives an inference which I believe the Court would not want drawn, because the record does not reflect it, is in the finding 53.

With respect to the last sentence thereof, it now reads:

"Plaintiff corporation on occasions paid the expenses of trips made by Wilhelm von Opel."

The day that we were in court, you stated that Mr. Burling should draft it to read—this is page 3174—

"Plaintiff corporation on occasions paid expenses for a trip to South America."

I then added at that point:

"and paid for shooting stag in Hungary."

The Court then said:

"You can dictate that. I will mark that.

"'Plaintiff corporation on occasions paid expenses'; and then I will say, 'dictated.'"

We would like it to read:

"Plaintiff corporation on occasions paid expenses for a trip to South America and paid for the shooting of a stag in Hungary. However, said expenses were charged to the account of Fritz von Opel."

We would like that sentence added, and, in support of that request, I refer you to Plaintiff's 147 for April, 3188 1937, which, you might recollect, we pointed out at that time—that the amount is charged to him.

The Court: What was this in? You do not have to put in all the details. How did you have it? "Plaintiff corporation"—

Mr. Gallagher: "paid for the expense of a trip made by Wilhelm von Opel."

The Court: All you need is, "paid the expenses of a trip to South America."

And what is the other one?

Mr. Gallagher: "and for the shooting of a stag in Hungary."

The Court: You do not need that.

Mr. Gallagher: All right. "paid the expenses of a trip to South America," period.

The Court: And Hungary.

Mr. Gallagher: And Hungary, all right.

The Court: "paid for a trip to South America and another trip to Hungary."

Mr. Gallagher: "vacation trip to Hungary." I would like the word in there, so it does not show he was going on business.

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, they are now getting outside of the record. Nobody said over there it was a vacation.

3189 Mr. Gallagher: It was stated in the record that it was for the shooting of a stag.

Mr. Baum: It may have been business and a vacation as well.

The Court: Well, put what the record shows.

Mr. Baum: Mr. Gallagher, in reference to this Hungary business, is referring to a statement in the books of payments of expenses to Count Edelsheim in Hungary. There are at least 80 items in the books of Uebersee that were made to Count Edelsheim. If one is to Count Edelsheim, I think we might legitimately infer that all of them are.

Mr. Gallagher: I do not want to argue a point that has not at all been raised by defendants at this time, but I will state, to refresh his recollection, that Mrs. von Opel testified that in April of 1937, which is the date on which this advance to Edelsheim is credited, Edelsheim and von Opel went to Germany, and she met him at that time at Hamburg.

Now, in connection with the Hungary trip, there were only 509 Swiss francs advanced to Wilhelm von Opel, which is about $150, and that was brought out by Mr. Burling himself, and not by us, in the earlier portions of this case.

Those are the only suggestions that we have now at this time with respect to findings of fact.

The Court: This will get it, I think:

"Plaintiff corporation paid the expenses"—

3190 This was after the agreement of 1931? Is that it?

Mr. Baum: That is right.

The Court: "after the agreement."

It is 1931, is it?

Mr. Gallagher: That is when we acquired it. I think it is surplusage. I do not think you need it in here.

The Court: You want to tie it in.

Mr. Gallagher: All right; "after 1931."

The Court: I do not care whether you say 1931. You are talking about a usufructuary agreement, whenever it came into effect. After the usufructuary agreement came into effect.

Mr. Gallagher: Excuse me. I think you might better leave that language out, Your Honor, because the shooting of the stag took place back in 1934, and in your own findings you find that the usufructuary agreement came into being some time prior to June—

The Court: "After the usufructuary agreement was made."

Mr. Gallagher: "After the usufructuary agreement was made, or after October 5, 1931."

The Court: Now, this will give it:

"After the usufructuary agreement was made on October 5, 1931, plaintiff corporation paid the expenses of a trip to South America and a trip to Hungary made by Wilhelm von Opel, said expenses being later charged 3191 on the books."—Is it later?

Mr. Gallagher: "said expenses"—

The Court: "said expenses being paid on the books of plaintiff corporation to Fritz von Opel."

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, sir; I think that is correct. That is correct, isn't it, Mr. Baum?

Mr. Baum: I believe so, Your Honor.

The Court: Yes; I think that is all right.

Mr. Gallagher: I realize that Your Honor stated, at the time that we had our discussion about the tentative findings of fact, that you were reluctant, if it was feasible, to make any changes in the opinion as drafted. However, I would, with Your Honor's indulgence, like to point out several changes, some six or seven, which we feel are completely unsupported by the findings of fact which now have been arrived at.

I point first to page 7 of your opinion, and I point to the third line of that second paragraph, where you have the words "joint title."

I think Mr. Baum will agree with the fact that that should be deleted, and Your Honor has found to the contrary on your own findings.

The Court: Where is that?

Mr. Gallagher: Page 7.

Mr. Baum: Now, where is it contrary to the findings?

3192 Mr. Gallagher: He finds legal title is in Fritz von Opel.

Mr. Baum: And Wilhelm von Opel had in rem rights, which in our law is equivalent to some title. I think "joint title" is a short form of describing it.

The Court: I thought I took that bodily out of the testimony of one of the witnesses.

Mr. Gallagher: No, Your Honor. None of the experts testified to that. Your findings are to the contrary on that and as to what the experts all testified. There is no joint title in the usufructuary and in the owner. One has the legal title and the other has the beneficial ownership. Joint possession is what they get, not joint title.

Mr. Baum: It would be the equivalent, Your Honor, of an equitable title, under our law.

The Court: I knew that, but the testimony on the stand was that it was not exactly like our law. I remember that. I did not pick that out of the air, did I?

Mr. Baum: I do not think so, Your Honor.

The Court: I am positive there was some testimony on that.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, I handled the legal end of it, as you will recall, and I know definitely the whole theory that I worked with on German and Swiss law was absolutely the fact that there was only one title, and 3193 that was Fritz von Opel, under a gift agreement.

The Court: I have some recollection that Dr.

Kronstein said they did not have any such thing as we have here—equitable title.

Mr. Gallagher: There is no such thing as equitable interest in German law, as I understand. I am sure that I did not hear Miss Schoch testify that there was such a thing as point title under a usufruct. She gives no indication to me that she did.

The Court: I do not remember, frankly, where I got it. I thought I got that out of the testimony.

Mr. Baum: If I may make a suggestion, Your Honor, which Mr. Gallagher may agree to, if you want to strike out the words "joint title" and put in "beneficial enjoyment"—

The Court: All right.

Mr. Gallagher: All we are trying to do is conform to your findings, Your Honor, and, frankly, there have been a number of questions asked us by other lawyers as to the opinion. We are trying to clarify it.

The Court: There is a beneficial enjoyment, isn't there?

Mr. Gallagher: There is a beneficial interest in the usufructuary after it has been established, yes, sir.

The Court: That is what I say.

Mr. Gallagher: But that is not joint title under 3194 German law. Under German law, the whole title is in the legal owner.

The Court: All right. We will make it "beneficial interest."

Mr. Gallagher: How would that line read, then?

"Beneficial interest and the right to co-possession"—

The Court: Beneficial interest. If they have beneficial interest, they have a right. A beneficial interest is a right to demand that. That is a beneficial interest.

Mr. Gallagher: I think we might clarify it, Your Honor. You followed that in your finding 52, and you followed that in your opinion, except that if you took this first joint title, which you are now calling beneficial interest, and you conformed it to finding (a) in 52, it would be in complete conformance with your finding of fact.

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, it just does not include (a). Mr. Gallagher is overlooking the first part of 52, which says, "An in rem right in property," which is not stated in the opinion.

The Court: I will tell you what I will do, if you want me to. I will substitute (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) right in here.

Mr. Gallagher: Instead of that paragraph, then?

The Court: Oh, yes; that covers it.

3195 Mr. Gallagher: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: Isn't that all right?

Mr. Baum: If you get also the first sentence of 52, which says they have an in rem right.

The Court: We have all of that.

Mr. Baum: That precedes (a).

Mr. Gallagher: All of 52 would be his opinion.

The Court: Just say, "Under German law," and then copy 52.

Mr. Gallagher: That is satisfactory, because that conforms, then, with your finding, Your Honor.

The Court: Now, I want to leave some of that in. Then I take up other rights created by the terms.

Mr. Gallagher: That is where you would strike, in other words, from the first start of the sentence down to "other rights," and you would continue on, as I see it.

The Court: That is all right. I will insert, "under German law, copy 52," and then—

Mr. Gallagher: Pick up at "other rights"?

The Court: And then the words "other rights." That stays in. All right.

Mr. Gallagher: Now, the next suggested strike is on page 8, in paragraph 1, the third line thereof. You found that:

"Wilhelm and Marta von Opel and their daughter, 3196 Mrs. Elinor Sachs, were citizens of Germany and 'enemies', as defined by the Trading with the Enemy Act."

Your finding of fact is to the contrary. She is a resident of Switzerland and as such not an enemy within the definitions of the Trading with the Enemy Act. We feel that the sister should be stricken out of that paragraph to conform with your findings.

Mr. Baum: She may still be a citizen of Germany. She probably is.

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, but she is a resident of Switzerland.

Mr. Baum: I agree she is not an enemy under the Act; I agree.

Mr. Gallagher: I think she should be stricken from that line.

The Court: Where is that?

Mr. Gallagher: The second and third line of this paragraph here (indicating), "and their daughter, Mrs. Elinor Sachs." If you strike that much out, you would conform with your findings.

The Court: Where is that?

Mr Gallagher: Page 8.

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, I would suggest you do it another way. Why not do it before the words 3197 "and enemies" and why not insert "Wilhelm and Marta von Opel"?

Mr. Gallagher: I am striking their daughter, Mrs. Elinor Sachs.

Mr. Baum: That takes out the fact that she is a citizen of Germany.

The Court: We can put another paragraph in as to her.

"At all times involved in this suit, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel were citizens of German."

What do you want in there now?

Mr. Gallagher: "Were citizens of Germany."

The Court: What do you want to say about Elinor Sachs? She was a native of Germany living in Switzerland?

Mr. Baum: That is correct, Your Honor.

Mr. Gallagher: I would like you to add that the record is barren of any evidence as to what citizenship she does have.

Mr Baum: Nobody has proven to the contrary.

Mr. Gallagher: All right. Leave it that way.

The Court: "Their daughter, Mrs. Elinor Sachs"—Do you know how long it has been since she has been there?

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I frankly do not think there is anything in the record to indicate. Even Mr. von Opel does not know how many years, but a long period of time. He does not communicate with her, it is my understanding.

The Court: "Native of Germany, presently re-3198 siding in Switzerland."

All right.

Mr. Gallagher: Then, on page 9, sixth and seventh lines of that second paragraph, where you say, "It seems to me the usufructuary interests of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel and the contingent interests which they, their daughter or her issue, all alien enemies."

That should be changed.

The Court: You can just cut that out there.

Mr. Baum: You mean the words, "their daughter or her issue"?

Mr. Gallagher: If you strike out "their daughter or her issue," that would take care of it, and change the word "all" to "both," to read a little better.

The Court: Just say "alien enemies."

Mr. Gallagher: Strike the phrase, "their daughter or her issue."

The Court: "Alien enemies."

I do not know whether you need "alien enemies" in there at that point.

Mr. Gallagher: It does not hurt.

The Court: It seems to me it is really a little better to cut out the words "all alien enemies," and leave the others in.

Mr. Baum: It really is a matter of style, I believe, rather than anything else.

The Court: Although I think that styling is a little better.

Mr. Baum: I think the record is clear—

The Court: You do not have to call them what they are.

Mr. Gallagher: But the contingent interest of the daughter, or her issue, being a resident of Switzerland, does not taint.

The Court: But a native might. I have always had in mind that a native, even resident somewhere else—

Mr. Gallagher: But the Act, if I may say so, is controlled by residence, not nativity.

The Court: Not on your taint proposition. It will probably help your point a little bit, to be perfectly frank with you. You and I will probably disagree on the proposition, but I think if she were the only one who had any interest in the property—she and her brother Fritz were the only ones who had any interest in the property—it might very well be that you could not spell out anything out of that; but when you show that the mother and father and brother, who has had all these affiliations with his country, and the daughter, who has had that, and who may, for all we know, return back there, that gives a little flavor to the taint—not much, but a little. Do you see? All those circumstances may be taken into account. Very frankly, that might give you a point.

Mr. Gallagher: All right, Your Honor.

The Court: Of course, I may be wrong about that. It may be that if they get into another country, whether they take out citizenship or not, that stops all taint. I frankly cannot see that. I believe if Hitler went over into Switzerland and held property, it would still be enemy taint, unless he became a citizen. It is hard to divest yourself from all that. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. Gallagher: All right.

The Court: Start out with "alien enemies." That helps. I will strike that out.

Mr. Gallagher: The next suggestion is on page 10, starting the sixth line, the sixth, seventh, and eighth.

In light of your finding 10, in light of the evidence that he spent only about 10 per cent of his time in Germany, I think that sentence that he had his roots firmly planted in Germany—firmly planted in that country—is not founded on the record.

The Court: What I am talking about when I say "roots" is devotion, and I am trying to tie into the proposition that a man who is born in a country and has ancestors there from time immemorial, and has made fortunes there, and has been, as you say, a leading light in his country, 3201 and a representative in Olympics and world affairs, has the most powerful rootage in the world. I frankly could not understand the man's turning against his country under those conditions. There is not any opprobrium attached to him as far as I am concerned. As far as I am concerned, I rather dislike a man who would do otherwise. That is what I am talking about when I say "his roots."

Mr. Gallagher: All right, Your Honor.

The Court: It may be that down here at the bottom—

Mr. Gallagher: That is what I am going to indicate.

Where you have "continued allegiance to," that is not in conformity with finding 10, which is interest in the welfare of and sympathy for Germany. We had quite a discussion on the word "allegiance" at the time of our last hearing.

Then, the next sentence, "I find beyond doubt his fealty at all times has been to his native country of Germany."

In other words, as you found, it should be substituted for that sentence and we think that you could add that and start in, after the words "naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein," and carry on with finding 10.

The Court: "I find beyond doubt"—

Mr. Gallagher: The sentence just before that.

The Court: "I find beyond doubt that he had a 3202 continued interest in the welfare of and sympathy for Germany."

Mr. Gallagher: I think if you were to start with the sixth line from the bottom of that paragraph, "Statements made by Fritz von Opel after 1939"—

The Court: "Statements" is the reason for it, but this will fit into 10 if I say:

"In technical form Fritz von Opel is a citizen of a neutral country, but I find beyond doubt that he had a continued interest in the welfare of and sympathy for Germany."

Mr. Gallagher: That is all right, Your Honor. Then you can strike the last clause in the preceding sentence.

The Court: Wait just a minute. "Copy from finding 10," I will mark that.

"That in 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein"—

Mr. Gallagher: "That between the time in 1939"—

The Court: These are acts performed.

"Then in 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, and in 1941, when war was declared by the United States, he had"—

Mr. Gallagher: I think you can just put this whole thing in there (indicating).

The Court: When I put these words "he had" in here, I simply mean it is to be copied in this way, but not 3203 when you rewrite this. You do not bother this page at all.

Mr. Gallagher: You are not changing the finding of fact at all?

The Court: I am not changing the finding of fact, but in order to make that read smoothly, I say, "Copy finding that in 1939 he had—"

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, I suggest we need the words "between the time" in there, not to segregate 1939 and 1941, because the statements were not made in 1941.

The Court: You want to say—

Mr. Gallagher: "Between the time."

The Court: "Between the time" does not have any significance. "Between 1939."

Do not rewrite it, but that is inserted as changed in pencil.

Mr. Gallagher: One other change in the line before, "indicate a continued allegiance." That should be changed "interest." As a matter of fact, you could strike that phrase there.

The Court: No.

Mr. Gallagher: Leave it like that and put the word "interest" there.

The Court: Oh, I see what you mean. "Statements made." We can copy the finding.

Mr. Gallagher: Copy the finding.

3204 The Court: Copy page 10.

Mr. Baum: Your Honor, that takes out your statement that he was in technical form a citizen of Liechenstein, and I think we are entitled to have that in, and I think it is important to you as well.

The Court: I guess that is right. The statements made are not so very important. We will let that stand as it is here. That is a little better reasoning, but we will strike this whole paragraph out.

That is what you wanted, is it not?

Mr. Gallagher: You are going to let it read, "In technical form Fritz von Opel is a citizen of a neutral country, but I find beyond a doubt that"—

The Court: "That between 1939 and 1941"—

Mr. Gallagher: "When he became a naturalized citizen, he had a continued interest"?

The Court: Yes. This shows what is meant.

Mr. Gallagher: That clarifies it.

You have stricken that preceding sentence?

The Court: Yes, entirely.

Mr. Gallagher: Now, page 11 of the opinion, starting the end of the fifth line.

You have the line in there, "There is evidence tending to show."

Before that line, "Before the war, it is clear the 3205 output was shipped to Germany," is what you say.

I submit, Your Honor, that that is not correct. I refer Mr. Baum to record pages 2442 and 2443, wherein it was testified that a total of about 2,000 tons—slightly less than 2,000 tons—of bauxite was the output of the mines to von Opel's own knowledge; that of this amount 1,000 tons were sold in 1936 to the Hungarian Bauxite Trust; that subsequently the remaining portion—

The Court: What do you say?

Mr. Gallagher: That a part of the output—

Mr. Baum: Where is there evidence that only part of the output was shipped?

Mr. Gallagher: If you will read 2442 and 2443.

Mr. Baum: Is that Mr. von Opel's testimony?

Mr. Gallagher: That is Mr. von Opel's testimony.

Mr. Baum: Has he suddenly been endowed—

Mr. Gallagher: That is the only testimony.

Mr. Baum: Look at the defendant's exhibits which show where the output went—to the Giulini Brothers. The documents in evidence show a greater output than Mr. Gallagher is talking about, and that went to Giulini Brothers.

Mr. Gallagher: Less than a thousand tons, as of the time we are speaking of, in the '30s, before the war. There were 2,000 tons at that time. When you are talking about the war period, from the way the Judge has the 3206 language in here, you are apparently talking about two phases, before we go to war and before the others go to war, which would be the 1939 and the 1941 period.

The Court: I do not think it makes a terrible lot of difference, frankly. I did not intend to make any distinction between a claim that it was ever shipped and that it was not. I do not think there is any debate on that point.

Mr. Gallagher: Let us drop that and go to the next sentence:

"There is evidence tending to show also that Transdanubia shipped bauxite to Germany after declaration of war between Hungary and the United States."

There is no evidence now—

The Court: Before the war it was part of the output. Now, we have got that.

Mr. Gallagher: Now, the next sentence. After the United States and Hungary are at war—and there is no evidence in the record, as you will recollect from our last hearing, and from finding 31, that bauxite was shipped to Germany—after the declaration of war between Hungary and the United States—finding 31 sets forth what happens.

Mr. Baum: May I direct Your Honor's attention to Defendant's Exhibit 90-F, which says that 617 kilograms of bauxite were shipped to Giulini Brothers in December, 1941.

Mr. Gallagher: It has no date specification. As 3207 you will recollect, Your Honor, we showed that in October eighteen or nineteen hundred tons were shipped; in November some eight or nine hundred tons were shipped; and by the time you get down to December you had approximately 600 tons shipped; with a falling off and from which we say the inference could be well drawn that there were no shipments after the 13th of December.

Mr. Baum: Mr. Gallagher is now testifying that all the shipping was in the first 12 days of December. There is no evidence of that.

Mr. Gallagher: The inference can be drawn, from the falling off of production and the fact that it is about one-third of the production in October, that that was the fact rather than the inference that it was taking place all during December. We have no evidence, anyhow, as to what happened.

The Court: You could say, "at and about the time of the declaration." That certainly was at and about.

Mr. Gallagher: That is all right: "At or about" rather than "after."

The Court: At or about December.

Mr. Gallagher: December 13 was when Hungary and the United States went to war.

The Court: "Shipped bauxite to Germany."

Maybe I had better put the dates, along in October, November, and December.

3208 Mr. Gallagher: October, November, and December, 1941. That will be in conformity with your finding, then.

The Court: "Shipped bauxite to Germany at or about" —just say "in December."

Mr. Baum: In your finding you said "during," Your Honor.

The Court: All right; "during December."

Mr. Gallagher: "During October, November, and December," was your finding.

The Court: "During December." As long as you do not say it is after.

* * * * * *

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, Your Honor.

The Court: "During December, 1941, which was at or about the time of the declaration of war between Hungary and the United States."

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, I do not know what Mr. Gallagher is attempting to do by whittling away at sentences of the opinion at a time.

The Court: What he did not want me to say was that I make a specific finding that it was after. I did not mean that. The way I recall it is that there was definite evidence that it went in there in December. Then I came to the conclusion lafer on, as you remember, that in so much as that condition existed and the parties who were on the witnes stand did not tell anything of any certain 3209 cessation of it, it is reasonable to assume that the corporation was carrying on that way.

Mr. Baum: Not only that, but in 1941 you find that they had a two-year contract to ship bauxite, until the end of 1942.

Mr. Gallagher: That is correct, but, at the same time, in our last hearing you stated to Mr. Burling, "Mr. Burling, it you have no other letters or orders showing any shipments after December, I can't find that there were any shipments."

That is the statement you made.

The Court: This opinion does not control, anyway. The Court of Appeals will read it, but they are going to have the facts here. I do not want to write anything in here that is inconsistent with anything here.

Mr. Baum: They are pulling out part of your finding and not the other part.

The Court: I did not mean to find that there was specific evidence here that the shipped it there afterwards.

Mr. Baum: It seems to me, Your Honor, it is not asking too great an inference if we prove shipments during December and a contract going for another year. Frankly, I do not see the need for burdening your opinion and restating finding 31.

The Court: The only thing is, if I am making a finding that is inconsistent with it, I should change that.

3210 I think I will let that go that way, "During December, which was at or about the time of the declaration of war."

You have that in there. This is not anything that is going to change this one way or the other.

Mr. Gallagher: The last suggested change on the opinion is the last sentence of that same paragraph, the last clause thereof, "which apparently supplied war materials to the enemies of the United States."

The Court: I think that is probably so. They say that is a conclusion, but if it is illogical, then the Court of Appeals can say so.

Mr. Gallagher: I won't press it, Your Honor.

The Court: Have you finished it?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes.

The Court: I am going to put at the bottom, "Judgment will be entered in favor of the defendant," instead of "dismissing plaintiff's suit."

All right.

Mr. Gallagher: In discussing the conclusions of law—and I will try to make this as brief as possible—I would like, with Your Honor's indulgence, to turn to conclusion 6 first. We have previously argued 5, and Your Honor has made up his mind on what constitutes enemy taint. We see no necessity for taking time to reargue number 5.

We would rather argue 6 or point out a suggested 3211 change, and then I would like to lump 2, 3, and 4 together for a brief suggestion.

In 6, in the light of what we were discussing on Transdanubia, the fourth line, "During World War II mined bauxite," is an affirmative statement and goes much farther than the findings.

Mr. Baum: World War includes from September, 1939.

Mr. Gallagher: But you have "for the benefit of an enemy of the United States," and you do not become an enemy of the United States until the United States is at war.

Mr. Baum: All I can say is that this is a conclusion which the Judge is entitled to draw.

The Court: Is there any evidence that Hungary was doing that?

Mr. Baum: Hungary itself was an enemy.

The Court: All we have to do is say:

"Ownership of Transdanubia Bauxit, A.G., had mined bauxite for the benefit of Germany."

You do not have to say the time. Do not call them an enemy or anything else. It does not make any difference. You do not have to say the time.

Mr. Gallagher: There is nothing in the record to show that they mined bauxite for Germany after December, 1941.

The Court: I say, "which mined bauxite for the benefit of Germany." That is all I have got.

3212 Mr. Gallagher: At what time? Time becomes relevant.

The Court: The findings of fact are in here.

Mr. Gallagher: You are just going to make that broad statement?

The Court: That is all. This is not any additional finding of fact. As a matter of fact, you could say:

"The circumstances of the acquisition of Fritz von Opel's Liechtenstein citizenship and his attachment to and sympathy for Germany and plaintiff's ownership of Transdanubia."

That would do it, but it makes a little smoother reading to say:

"Which mined bauxite for the benefit of Germany."

Your time element is in there. I do not want to add anything to what I have said before.

Mr. Gallagher: In the next to the last line in that paragraph, where you say, "With the evidence of ownership," are you talking about the same ownership as you do in number 2, where you say it is indirectly? In one it is indirectly owned.

The Court: Cut out "evidence," if you want to.

Mr. Gallagher: In finding 2 you say the plaintiff is indirectly owned.

The Court: The enemy we are talking about here is Wilhelm. That is the one you are talking about here, 3213, is it not?

Mr. Gallagher: The corporation is the one that owns the securities. That is neutral.

The Court: We are talking about Wilhelm, the father. There is not any question about that, is there?

Mr. Baum: No, sir.

The Court: I am certainly not finding the plaintiff corporation is an enemy alien.

Mr. Boland: Your Honor, it seems to me that it is going to present a problem on appeal where you find that legal title—

The Court: Vested securities, with the evidence of ownership control by Wilhelm and Marta von Opel.

Mr. Boland: On appeal we have a problem where we have already found that Fritz von Opel is the title holder or that Uebersee is the title holder of the stock, of all the assets. Fritz von Opel has full title to all shares of Uebersee. We have a conclusion of law that he owned these assets. It seems to me we are in conflict if the Government is going to take any advantage of that conclusion.

The Court: I have labored the point out in the opinion that they controlled it. I have labored the point out that there is a certain type of ownership in them.

Mr. Boland: That is why Mr. Gallagher asked you the question, Are you talking about any direct 3214 ownership, as you are in conclusion 2?

The Court: I suppose they are writing this, but what I am talking about is the ownership of Marta and Wilhelm and their control. That is what I am talking about. If you want me to put their names in there, that is all right.

Mr. Boland: It is just that the word "ownership" does not connote any legal title as distinguished from Fritz.

The Court: I do not mean that. The ownership I am talking about is that interest that they have that we have been talking about—usufructuary.

Mr. Boland: As long as it is clearly understood.

The Court: Do you want to say "usufructuary ownership"?

Mr. Boland: I think that would improve it.

The Court: That is all the evidence—

Mr. Gallagher: "Evidence of usufructuary ownership."

The Court: I am not trying to add to anything that I have found by these conclusions.

Mr. Boland: You see, while we will be the same people arguing on appeal, I understand Mr. Baum and the others might not be.

The Court: The Court of Appeals would be a pretty poor group of Judges if they think that my conclusions of law make additional findings of fact. I am not doing that. That would be stupid of an appelate court to say that—to say that Judge Laws is finding some owner-
3215 ship he has not talked about before. It would be stupid. But if you want me to say "usufructuary"—

Mr. Boland: That will clear up the problem we have.

Mr. Baum: We object to that. It is very vague to say "usufructuary ownership."

The Court: I am going to leave "control" as it is.

Mr. Baum: I hoped you would.

The Court: I will tell you what we will do:

"The aforesaid ownership and control by Marta and Wilhelm von Opel."

That will do it. That will certainly get it:

What were the words I used?

Mr. Boland: "Aforesaid ownership and control by Marta and Wilhelm Von Opel."

The Court: "Ownership and control as aforesaid of the vested securities by Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, alien enemies."

Does that finish it up?

Mr. Gallagher: No, Your Honor. I would like to discuss, somewhat briefly, 2, 3, and 4, and I will group them all together.

2, 3, and 4 set up the elements which you also talk about in 5, which constitute taint, and are predicated on the finding of fact by Your Honor that Frankenberg was the agent of Wilhelm von Opel, and in finding 40 you 3216 stated correctly that the record is bare of any evidence that after 1940 Frankenberg exercised any control over the plaintiff, but you said the record was bare of any termination of said agency and that, from the evidence, the fact that Frankenberg during the thirties, you found, had exercised control, you were going to find by continuendo, and did as a finding of fact, that he still continued to be the agent until the time of vesting, and it would be because of that agency, which would continue from the time of the outbreak of the war until the time of vesting, that alien enemies Wilhelm and Marta would indirectly own and control, you find, this plaintiff corporation, and thereby constitute taint and bar the recovery by the corporation of the stock.

To state the one line again more succinctly, you have found by continuendo, subsequent to 1940, that because an individual, Frankenberg, was an agent and because there is no affirmative showing of any termination of such agency, as a fact said agency continued until the time of vesting.

I might submit to Your Honor that I honestly believe your finding of continuendo and the agency continuing until the time of vesting is completely contrary to the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Insurance Company v. Davis, in 95 U.S., at page 425, and I would like to state this sentence out of the opinion first, Your Honor—

The Court: Excuse me just a moment. Let me tell 3217 you this. I think you are limited a little bit on this, which makes quite a difference. When you create a usufructuary interest in a party, that usufructuary interest, I would certainly assume, continued even though the agency which set it up ceased to be active. In other words, if he has a custodian agency which vests interest in the party, he could stop his activities immediately, and you would still have that interest. Suppose then he had activities of control up to a certain time. You could stop your control. You could stop exercising your control through your agent for the time being, but not lose your right of control.

If you find anything in there contrary to that, then you might swing me around.

Mr. Gallagher: I find in here one statement first which I would like to state to you.

The Court: Let me tell you what I am talking about. suppose I have got to get a title in me or I do get a title in me by an act of an agent. Title vests in me then, does it not? In other words, the key is turned over to him. He has sole possession. The interest is in me. From that time forward let us say the agent did nothing. I would still have that interest. He could be inactive. He could be fired. I would still have the usufructuary interest, which would remain until it is divested by an overt act.

Now, that is point number 1.

3218 However, this agent, also, we find, goes on to a period of activity of five or six years or eight or nine years, or whatever it was, and then it just happens that I have not heard of any activity in the last year or two or three years. That does not take away from the principal his usufructuary ownership, and it does not take away the evidence of his control. That is what I mean.

If I have an agent for me right now and he does not happen to do anything for me for the last six or eight months, that does not mean that I have given up my ownership or interest and control.

Mr. Gallagher: That is correct, under a normal agency, but this case goes further than that.

The Court: I will hear you.

Mr. Baum: May I interrupt for one moment, Your Honor?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Baum: I am a little bit amazed by what Mr. Gallagher is starting to do. We came in here today to discuss ostensibly the conclusions of law. Mr. Gallagher is discussing the findings of fact. You told him to put them in writing. He now walks in with a stack of cases which I have never heard of.

The Court: I do not think we are going to have too much trouble about them.

Mr. Baum: I hope not.

3219 The Court: If he had some Supreme Court case that shows I am wrong, I will give him that opportunity.

Mr. Baum: I hope you will give me an opportunity to answer it.

The Court: I think so.

I want you to bear in mind the point I have before you argue something that is different, because I do not think the Supreme Court has held anything to the contrary on the point I have in mind. Go ahead.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor has stated—and I think it points up the first sentence in the opinion—that because you see no actual acts of agency, that does not mean the agency has terminated; it is still in existence. I agree with that statement. That is the law.

The Court: You also agree with me that if you are an agent of mine, in setting up a type of ownership, and then you stop being my agent, that ownership will continue?

Mr. Gallagher: Oh, no, not the usufructuary ownership; no, absolutely not.

The Court: You mean if this agent died, then the usufructuary would abate until you got a successor, until you got another one?

Mr. Gallagher: As a right in rem, you would have to re-establish it.

Mr. Baum: That is not the law.

3220 The Court: You would have to prove that law to me. Your right in rem exists, under every law that was ever known. Your title vests in the thing itself and never moves out of it by some agent's dying or taking a trip away from it by going into another country.

Mr. Gallagher: The whole purpose of this so-called usufructuary interest—and the Government's contention as to the evidences of control—is that if the agency is not in existence and the stock is back with the legal titleholder, there is no control element without coming back and re-establishing it as a right in rem.

The Court: You have to get an overt act to do that.

Mr. Gallagher: The record shows stock is being held at the Adler Bank to the account of Frima since October, 1941.

I would like to discuss just this one question, and then be able to answer any questions.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Gallagher: As Your Honor stated, you presumed the agency continues. I will discuss the facts briefly. I would like to read first one sentence from this decision:

"In some recent cases in certain of the state courts of last resort, for whose decisions we always entertain the highest respect, a different view has been taken; but we are unable to agree therein: In our judgment, the unqualified assumption on which those decisions are based 3221 —namely, 'once an agent, always an agent'; or, in other words, that an agency continued to exist notwithstanding the occurrence of war between the countries in which the principal and the agent respectively reside—is not correct."

Now, this case has been cited subsequently in Williams against Paine, in 169 U.S., and more recently, in 1924, in 297 Fed., a Second Circuit Court of Appeals opinion, the Second Russian Insurance Company case v. Miller, wherein that court cited the Insurance Company against Davis as the controlling authority.

I will just apprise you briefly of the background. I will read it from the syllabus. It states it more succinctly than I could:

"A resident of Virginia, who had been before the war a local agent of a northern insurance company, refused to receive the renewal premium, due December 28, 1861, tendered him upon a policy of insurance upon the life of a resident of that state. His refusal was based upon the ground that he had received no renewal receipts from the company, without which he could not receive the premium, and that the money, if received, would be liable to confiscation by the Confederate Government. The evidence further failed to show that the company had consented to his continuing to act as such 3222 agent during the war, or that he did so continue.

Held, that, waiving the consideration of any question in regard to the validity of an insurance upon the life of an alien enemy, such tender of payment did not bind the company."

Now, the Supreme Court went on to say—and I would like to read a few lines, because it sets forth the line followed in Williams against Paine and the Second Russian Insurance Company case—

"We deem it proper to consider more particularly the question of agency, and the alleged right of tendering premiums to an agent, during the war.

"That war suspends all commercial intercourse between the citizens of two belligerent countries or states, except so far as may be allowed by the sovereign authority, has been so often ascerted and explained in this court within the last 15 years, that any further discussion of that proposition would be out of place. As a consequence of this fundamental proposition, it must follow that no active business can be maintained, either personally or by correspondence, or through an agent, by the citizens of one belligerant with the citizens of the other. The only exception to the rule recognized in the books, if we lay out of view contracts for ransom and other matters of 3223 absolute necessity, is that of allowing the payment of debts to an agent of an alien enemy where such agent resides in the same state with the debtor. But this indulgence is subject to restrictions. In the first place, it must not be done with the view of transmitting the funds to the principal during the continuance of the war; though, if so transmitted without the debtor's connivance, he will not be responsible for it. In the next place, in order to the subsistence of the agency during the war, it must have the assent of the parties thereto—the principal and the agent. As war suspends all intercourse between them, preventing any instructions, supervision, or knowledge of what takes place, on the one part, and any report or application for advice on the other, this relation necessarily ceases on the breaking out of hostilities, even for the limited purpose beforementioned, unless continued by the mutual assent of the parties. It is not compulsory, nor can it be made so, on either side, to subserve the ends of third parties. If the agent continues to act as such, and is so acting, is subsequently ratified by the principal, or if the principal's assent is evinced by any other circumstances, then third parties may safely pay money, for the use 3224 of the principal, into the agent's hands; but not otherwise. It is not enough that there was an agency prior to the war. It would be contrary to reason that a man, without his consent, should continue to be bound by the acts of one whose relations to him have undergone such a fundamental alteration as that produced by a war between the two countries to which they respectively belong; with whom he can have no correspondence; to whom he can communicate no instructions; and over whom he can exercise no control. It would be equally unreasonable that the agent should be compelled to continue in the service of one whom the law of nations declares to be his public enemy."

Now, we have, in addition to that finding continuendo an agency in Frankenberg, a violation of the naturalization laws, as evident from the loyalty oath required to be taken by him. We have a definite violation of Section 2 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as to which the statute had not run prior to the amendments of the vested properties, and which were amended on the basis of the Gold case, setting up the agency in Frankenberg, because you will find, under your definitions, "To trade"—and this is now applicable in this case, because to trade, as we pointed out earlier in the trial, contrary to Mr. Burling, refers to Section 3—

3225 The Court: Did he testify in the Gold case?

Mr. Gallagher: No, sir; no affidavit from him in the Gold case.

In section 3 it is made unlawful and punishable by penitentiary sentence for any person in the United States to trade, and so forth.

When we get to the definition of "to trade," we find, under Section (c), "To enter into, to carry on, to complete, or perform any contract agreement or obligation."

The Court: I have not made any specific finding of agency.

Mr. Gallagher: If he is not the agent from 1941, there is nobody to exercise control over this corporation after the outbreak of war.

The Court: You mean the effect of that would be the outbreak of war would end—

Mr. Gallagher: Frankenberg's agency.

The Court: Wait a minute. Your argument was that the minute war broke out, and thereby ended Frankenberg's agency, the war in and of itself between the United States and Germany would end a man's usufructuary interest.

Mr. Gallagher: No. Here is what I say. I say the presumption that should be drawn by the outbreak of the war—in other words, revetsing the presumption of continuendo—

The Court: I do not care whether he was an agent 3226 after the war or not. My point is the usufructuary interest had been set up and it existed as of the time of the war and that the breaking out of the war between the two sovereigns would not kill this man's rights, according to the laws of Germany, which we now respect.

Mr. Gallagher: Your Honor, your findings are all set, and I am not discussing the findings. I am discussing the conclusions—that Frankenberg was exercising the right after the outbreak of war.

The Court: Did I say that?

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, back in the findings. That is not in the conclusions, but you have got the parents exercising the control in findings 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The Court: I still think so.

Mr. Gallagher: But they do it through Frankenberg, or do you say no?

The Court: I am going to let the record stay as it is, as far as the other control is concerned. I am not striking the other findings out. You can argue that to the Court of Appeals, but you will have argue this with me: I simply cannot see how the breaking out of war between Germany and the United States, which is an act of two sovereigns, could kill a usufructuary right on the part of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel.

Mr. Gallagher: Let us assume that the agency is 3227 terminated at the moment at the outbreak of war, because to hold otherwise would put Frankenberg in complete violation of Section 2. So the agency is terminated, because there is nothing to show that he has continued to act. Is that correct?

The Court: We will assume that for the argument.

Mr. Gallagher: We are back to the mother and father, and they had a usufructuary right set up by putting the shares in Frankenberg. The shares, in 1941 and subsequent thereto, are in the name of Frima. Number one. They are not in the name of Frankenberg. They are not held in Frankenberg. They are in the name of Frima. True, they are in the Adler Bank.

The Court: That is where you and I differ. This custody that was gone through for this tax appeal, in my judgment, did not break down the ownership.

Mr. Gallagher: Now, when the shares are back, Frankenberg is out. They were the people, you found, through whom he exercised control.

The Court: You get the shares out, whereas I do not.

Mr. Gallagher: They came back to the Swiss Bank.

The Court: It is all custody rather than possession.

Mr. Gallagher: We are looking at this thing from the question of control—

The Court: The way you are arguing, you are arguing a motion for rehearing.

3228 Mr. Gallagher: I am bringing to Your Honor's attention something that came to our attention the last few days.

The Court: As Mr. Baum said, this is really a motion for rehearing rather than findings, because, frankly, if I took that view, I would have to reverse my finding.

Mr. Gallagher: We wanted to raise this before. We wanted to give you an opportunity—

The Court: I appreciate that. I do not see how I can do it, on the findings of fact proposition. You see, I differed with you on your view about this passing out of the usufruct, and unless you can indicate to me that the German law is entirely different from the American law—the law in effect here—it will have to stay that way. Once you set up, through a valid agent, the usufructuary interest, even though the agent let it go over into Frima for some tax purpose, it did not indicate any relinquishment of the title or right of control, and therefore you are not having it pass out of the principal, so to speak.

Mr. Gallagher: A usufructuary interest.

The Court: That is right. It is not passing out, so it does not have to come back. That is where you and I differ. It does not pass out.

Mr. Gallagher: Here is where I would like you to bear with me. However, you have found, in your opinion, that it was through Frankenberg that the father was 3229 exercising control over the plaintiff, up to the time of the—

The Court: You are talking about a different thing. Control is one thing—

Mr. Gallagher: That is what I am basically directing my attention at—control.

The Court: There is nothing in here—

Mr. Gallagher: There is no possession in the father. That is with the bank. Your Honor, if I might submit that, just referring back to your findings—

The Court: What I find is that the possession of Frankenberg becomes the possession of the father and merges into that and it never goes out. That is what I am really in effect finding. Control is another point. That is a different point. What I am talking about control, it is a different kind of control. The control I am talking about is when he was bossing what happened over here through Frankenberg. That is a different kind of control. That might have ended with the war. You might be right on that, but I do not think you are right on the other proposition, on the proposition that the usufructuary interest comes to an end.

Suppose my wife or my brother or my friend has an interest in certain stock or securities and he lends it to me or lets me have custody of it for some transaction. He does not divest himself of ownership in it. You do 3230 not have to get it back to him then.

Mr. Gallagher: But on the important point of control, in findings 2, 3, and 4, you find that they had possession of the shares and you find that on a custodial basis, not actually. It is a custodial basis, and you find they exercised direction and control over such shares and the management, investment, use, and disposition of the property owned by plaintiff corporation, and the only pertinent time is December 7, 1941, until the time of vesting; and to support that sort of conclusion of law, the findings of fact, in your opinion, reflect that the person who was doing that exercising was Frankenberg, down to the time of vesting.

The Court: There are two forms of control that I am talking about. There are two forms. One of them exists by virtue of this usufructuary interest. That is number one. Now, that did not end, in my judgment.

I might grant that you are right on this other kind of control, by virtue of what the Supreme Court said, namely, that Frankenberg was over here bossing and telling them what to do. As you say, that might violate the Trading with the Enemy Act. I do not know whether it does or not. Let us say it does, though. I might say that if it violated the Trading with the Enemy Act—or, as the Supreme Court says, an agency—the boss over here—between a person not a resident of Germany and one who is a 3231 resident and a citizen of Germany would be a rational deduction—that is true. I mean to say where an agency of another one over here, an American with an agency in Germany, would end at the outbreak of war, that is not going to break down his control by virtue of this usufructuary interest.

You may be right, and I do not know whether you are right. You may be right, but I am inclined to think that, so far as bossing the company is concerned, I am not entitled to presume that after the outbreak of war; but on that usufructuary interest, I simply do not think that the declaration of war by the United States with Germany would break down Wilhelm's—

Mr. Gallagher: That is a different point that I won't labor with you.

The Court: That is right, but that very point would constitute the enemy taint and would constitute the right in rem that I am talking about in this conclusion of law. Do you see what I mean?

Mr. Gallagher: I know, and I am not trying to dissuade you, and I know you have made up your mind on that.

The Court: That is the heart of my decision, and I cannot believe it is wrong.

You see, one reason why I do not follow you on your Frima proposition as to title going out of him is that it is just as much to the interest of Wilhelm as to Fritz 3232 to go through that tax saving transaction through Frima. It is just as much to his interest, it saves money for everybody, and he says, "Sure, I will let that colorful transaction of these shares and my interest in them—I will let that semblance of dealing with them—pass over to Frima," but that is not what we call a divesting of interest, any more than it was a divesting of interest by Fritz. He held his own interest in that.

Mr. Gallagher: That is where earlier we wanted to reopen to take testimony from Dr. Hoffacker and Dr. Kronstein. You found that Wilhelm and Marta, either through Frankenberg or otherwise, because they had a usufructuary, which you say is not a loss of right in rem, exercised control. There is no evidence of that in the record.

The Court: You have two types of control. That is what you want to get in mind. I think the Government ought to have it in mind, too. There are two types of control we are talking about. One control is a control which, I have found, according to the testimony of experts, existed simply by virtue of owning this usufructuary interest. That is one type.

Then there is another type. This may clear it up in your mind. There is another type of control that I had in mind when I said that I felt that Frankenberg had bossed the affairs over here and that Wilhelm had been consulted from time to time. I cannot think of anything more logical than one of those pieces of testimony that Mr. Houghland gave. There was one move there he was very anxious to make, and it was very obvious that he wanted to do it, and there was testimony of his having obtained the agreement of Fritz to do it, which was vetoed after it had been taken abroad, which was very indicative to me, from the meetings that they had, that it was that type of control.

I am talking there about a bossing, but the other control that I talk about is simply that of the usufructuary, and there is not anything in here that is inconsistent with that.

Mr. Gallagher: Which was actually exercised, as you find. There is nothing in there to find the exercise of that control unless you find Frankenberg exercising it for them.

The Court: You and I differ on one proposition, and, in my judgment, the usufructuary interest came into being by the turning over of the key and the putting up of that deposit that vested in the interest of Wilhelm. I think you can strike out your agent from that time over, so far as existence of that right is concerned. You do not.

Mr. Gallagher: I say, let's strike them out.

The Court: No, but I mean that could have happened and the right still exist. In other words, if we 3234 strike down your agency, once your right has vested and set up anyway—

Mr. Gallagher: You are pointing up the proposition Mr. Boland has discussed before—that that beneficial interest does not constitute taint.

The Court: I am not giving you taint there. It is one step in taint. That is a question, in my judgment, on ownership. I guess it is taint, too. I guess you are right.

I tell you, as long as I have not anything in here that is contrary to something that I found, I do not want to change it. I recognize your point. It is a right interesting point, and if the defendant were depending in this case only on the control by way of bossing, as I have put it for want of a better term or a more illustrative term—if they were depending on that alone—it would be a very strong case. I will be perfectly frank with you on it. In other words, it is something I can see the logic of and I would have to follow, and that is very reasonable.

Frankenberg is an American citizen now, isn't he?

Mr. Baum: Now he is, but he was not at the outbreak of war. He was a citizen of Haiti, which was not at war with Germany.

Mr. Gallagher: But he was a resident here and applied for citizenship in 1941.

3235 The Court: According to that decision—

Mr. Baum: The decision would therefore not apply, because it is between citizens of belligerent countries.

Mr. Gallagher: He is a resident, however.

The Court: It is perfectly obvious, though, Mr. Baum, that if you have an agency to boss affairs here in the United States—an agency of a foreign country—I am not talking about ownership now, because I agree with you on that—but if he had an agency over here to run these organizations—just like the insurance company—and war is declared with his principal—the country in which the principal exists—I think that is directly in point there. That would terminate that agency, in the absence of some testimony to the contrary.

Mr. Baum: I would respectfully say to you, Your Honor, that that is no longer the law. We have won at least six cases completely contrary to that case.

The Court: In the Supreme Court?

Mr. Baum: No, not in the Supreme Court.

The Court: That was a Supreme Court decision.

Mr. Baum: I realize that. It is a Civil War case. Things have changed a great deal.

The Court: I know that, but that is a reasonable proposition.

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, I submit it is 3236 not, for this reason. If a German had authorized an agent in the United States to boss his property, as you put it, to say that the Alien Property Custodian must prove that, after we were at war with Germany, and after we could not even communicate with Germany we must prove that the German, nevertheless, communicated with the agent and gave him new authority, would mean we would never vest a piece of property.

Mr. Gallagher: They can always vest. It is a question of keeping. We have argued that before.

Mr. Baum: It is very interesting.

The Court: I am not going to decide that, but I think that is a right interesting point.

Mr. Gallagher: I did not want to take it up later and perhaps find it is correct.

The Court: I commend you for that. I wish all the lawyers were as fair. Sometimes I get in the Court of Appeals and the point decided is one I have never heard of. I have had two happen in the last two years. I never heard about the point at all, and it was made in the Court of Appeals. I sent for the briefs on purpose. They had not argued it at all. There was not any mention made of it. But I do appreciate that.

I do not think there is anything in the wording there, Mr. Gallagher, that needs to be changed. In other words,

I do not think there is anything in here that is out of 3237 keeping with that opinion.

Mr. Gallagher: What is that, Your Honor?

The Court: I do not think there is anything in the conclusion of law that I have made that is out of keeping with that opinion of yours that you have just read.

Mr. Gallagher: Well, the only point that I can see—

The Court: For the reason that the usufruct, in my judgment, did exist, even though we concede that the outbreak of war stopped his agency.

Mr. Gallagher: Let us say it did, but that does not mean you exercise control because it exists.

The Court: It means you had control.

Mr. Gallagher: You say they exercised. It is a different thing to say you have control of a corporation than it is to say that you exercise control of a corporation. It seems to me you need more of an affirmative showing.

The Court: No. This says, "Subsequent to said gift agreement and pursuant to said usufruct"—

Mr. Gallagher: You say, "Wilhelm and Marta von Opel had possession of all of the shares of plaintiff and exercised direction and control," and presumably down to the time of vesting.

The Court: I did not say "down to the time of vesting."

Mr. Gallagher: I would presume that you meant down to the time of vesting unless you put down there some 3238 date in conclusion 3.

The Court: This is a conclusion of law. I do not want to make it a finding of fact. In other words, I find that they exercised control. Well, that really is a finding of fact, isn't it?

"Subsequent to said gift agreement and pursuant to said usufruct"—it is really co-possession.

Mr. Gallagher: Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Baum: No, Your Honor.

The Court: What is that?

Mr. Baum: That is something Mr. Gallagher has been pounding away at for weeks. They did not have co-possession. Fritz von Opel testified that he gave Frankenberg the only key. You do not get into a safe deposit box without a key.

Mr. Gallagher: Who has co-possession now? If you are going to talk about that one key, the shares are in the name of Frima.

The Court: I was thinking about the question of law, though.

Mr. Gallagher: What is that, Your Honor?

The Court: I was thinking about the question of law.

Mr. Baum: I do not understand, Your Honor.

The Court: I am thinking about it as a question of law. This is not a finding of fact. I do not know whether you need 4.

3239 Mr. Baum: 5 does not make any sense without 4, Your Honor.

The Court: You do not need to say. You do not need much in there.

Mr. Baum: The reason I think we need 4, Your Honor, is because it is a two-step argument. If you say the corporation is enemy tainted and the taint it shown through Wilhelm and Marta, that is part of the conclusion.

The Court: Wait just a minute, You have this as strong as you need it, in my judgment. You cover that in your next one, don't you? You have got that.

Let us take out 4 and make it "the possession and control of the outstanding shares." You do not need any finding on that. You are not limiting that a bit.

The possession is what you talk about in your preamble in your findings of fact, and then you have got that supplemented. I do not know whether you have everything in there that I have found. I do not think it makes a lot of difference, because they are all in there. The nativity of his sister might have something to do with it. Really, the conclusion is that as of the time of vesting of the shares of plaintiff corporation, they were enemy tainted.

That is all you need, and the less you say about it, the better off you are about it on your conclusions of law, because you have my opinion telling my views about it.

3240 I would make that very simple.

Your usufruct is all right. 1, 2, and 3, are all right. But I think I would cut out 4, 5, and 6, and just substitute a finding that as of the time of vesting of the securities held by plaintiff corporation, they were enemy tainted within the meaning of so and so.

Mr. Baum: I think that would make it too general, Your Honor.

The Court: You are a whole lot better off. If you make it specific, then I have got to write everything in there. I mean, I have got to write an argument in there. You do not want to write an argument in there. The more general it is, the better it is.

Mr. Laufer is nodding his head up and down; he agrees with me.

Mr. Baum: I do not think he does.

The Court: I think he does.

The principal thing you want in the conclusion of law is that the decision is in favor of the defendant. That is the principal one.

Mr. Baum: Yes, but also, as you recall the final argument, you said it is up to me, paraphrasing the language, to decide what the Supreme Court meant by enemy taint. We think conclusion 4 shows what is meant.

The Court: That is a summation of it, that is 3241 true, but it is really in my opinion. I would rather you copy the language of my opinion, because you have left out the sister's reversionary interest, which is an item.

Mr. Baum: Those are items which are set out in your findings of fact.

The Court: That is right, but you are cutting it out of here. I think you are much better off if you make it general. You are tying me down, and I do not want to be tied down on that proposition, either rightly or wrongly. I might as well meet that squarely. I think I am perfectly right about it. The Court of Appeals may think differently, but I think I am perfectly right about it.

You have in your preamble—you have in your findings of fact—Fritz' birth, Fritz' activities and sports. I think you have that in there. You have got his visits. You have got his sister's nativity. You have the mother and father having lived there all their lives and being enemies, and von Opel's name was famous in Germany. You have all of that.

In addition to that, you have my opinion summarizing all that out, and all you have to say in your conclusions of law is that the circumstances, the ownership of the vested securities and the interest of the various parties involved, constitute enemy taint within the meaning of so and so.

Now, you have got the benefit of my views and 3242 argument by my opinion. You have all the salient facts in there. That is my better than summarizing my facts now. Do you see what I mean?

Mr. Baum: Would you mind repeating what you just said?

The Court: You think that over. I am not terribly wedded to the idea, but I have had a lot of experience with conclusions of law, and you do not need a whole lot on this. The thing you need is your findings of fact, and my arguments by way of opinion will be pointed up a whole lot by your arguments and brief.

What I do not want to do, and what I do not like to do here, is to limit, as I think you have done here, my conclusions to certain propositions that are not in there.

If you gentlemen are right in this, you win your case; but if you happen to be wrong and I happen to be right, by considering these others you might have a little bit of an argument there: "Judge Laws cut down his opinion."

Mr. Baum: I see your point.

The Court: You will never go wrong in generalities on findings of law.

Mr. Baum: I hope not.

The Court: The time you go right is in your findings of fact.

We will leave 1, 2, and 3 as they are and then substitute for 4, 5, and 6 language substantially to this effect.

3243 You can write all of this up, in case I have overlooked something.

Just put it that the circumstances of the ownership and control of the securities vested by the Alien Property Custodian constitute enemy taint, which the Supreme Court of the United States has decided bars recovery under the Trading with the Enemy Act. They did not define it, but they said it bars recovery. That ownership will get in everything that I have said, in my opinion. That will get the reversionary interest, it will get Fritz' mother's and father's—

Mr. Baum: It does not get in the bauxite.

The Court: Ownership and control? That is right. Maybe I should not strike out 6.

Mr. Baum: I think possibly the remedy is to write this in place of 5 and leave 6 in there.

The Court: And leave 6 in there, starting out with, "Plaintiff's ownership of Transdanubia."

Make this number 5, then:

"Plaintiff's ownership of Transdanubia Bauxit, A. G., which mined bauxite for the benefit of Germany, is further evidence of enemy taint within the meaning of Section 2 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, and taken in conjunction with the ownership and control defined in the preceding paragraph, bars recovery of the vested secu-3244 rities."

That will get rid of a lot of what you want.

Mr. Baum: That also eliminates the circumstances about Fritz' citizenship.

The Court: Oh, yes. We can leave 6, starting that way.

Mr. Baum: That is what I would suggest.

The Court: We can leave 6 about like it was.

Let us put that in the beginning. Put right ahead of what I dictated:

"The circumstances of the acquisition of Fritz von Opel's Liechtenstein citizenship and his attachment to and sympathy for Germany," and then go ahead with what I dictated.

I think I can get that now.

What about your orders? Have you drawn that?

Mr. Baum: I had submitted that to Your Honor early in March.

The Court: Have you seen that?

Mr. Gallagher: It was a long time ago. I do not recollect it.

The Court: You can rewrite this thing. Give it to Mr. Gallagher. I would like my law clerk to correct this opinion.

How should I handle that opinion proposition?
3245 Should I substitute it?

Mr. Gallagher: I think you should substitute this for the other.

The Court: Is that proper?

Mr. Baum: I think so.

The Court: Otherwise I would have to say, "The following is hereby substituted," and rewrite the whole thing.

Would you rather have me write it or would you do it?

Mr. Baum: I can undertake it.

The Court: I think I can do it.

Mr. Baum: It is just a mechanical difficulty. Some of the corrections on the findings—

The Court: All I need to do on this finding is this. Here is the judgment, now. It is not a dismissal.

Mr. Baum: That was on the basis of your opinion.

The Court: You leave this with me, then.

You pick up Monday morning, in my office, these notes, and by then I will have taken out of there the corrections I want made in the opinion. Then you rewrite the findings of fact the way I have marked them. Give Mr. Gallagher a copy, and then rewrite the judgment.

You give me a copy and each side a copy of what I dictated there, and then we can try to get it out next week, about Wednesday.

(At 12 noon the hearing was concluded.)

3248 PROCEEDINGS

The Deputy Clerk: Uebersee Finanz vs. Tom C. Clark.

Mr. Gallagher: May it please the Court, with respect to the plaintiff's motion for new trial, it is not my intention to labor Your Honor. Our motion sets forth the basis for the motion probably much more succinctly than I could state it orally.

As we have pointed out in the motion, the existence of Miss Firnhammer did not come to our attention as counsel until after this trial had concluded. The existence of her testimony did not come to the attention of either counsel or Mr. or Mrs. von Opel, Mr. von Opel being, as the Court well recollects, majority shareholder in the plaintiff corporation.

It seems to counsel for the plaintiff that Miss Firnhammer's testimony has considerable significance when read in the light of Your Honor's opinion and finding, which is to the effect that while Mr. Wilhelm von Opel discussed the question of a waiver with Dr. Daniel Gros in the year 1935 or thereabouts, he never did waive his Niessbrauch by any statement or act.

The statements of Mr. Wilhelm von Opel, Miss Firnhammer states, were made to her during the years 1935, 1936, and particularly in the year 1937, which is after plaintiff's exhibits 96 through 101 had been written and addressed to Director Wilhelm of the Reichbank; and Your 3249 Honor will recollect the testimony of Director Wilhelm, which is in the record in this case, indicated that he advised Gros that the Reichbank felt that it could take no steps to endeavor to have any of the income from the alleged niessbrauch returned to the Reich.

Miss Firnhammer's testimony, I concede, is in a sense cumulative, and I am well aware of the rule that testimony which is merely cumulative or corroborative is insufficient for predicating a motion for a new trial. In this case, however, proceeding in equity, it seems to counsel for the plaintiff that her testimony—when added to the testimony of Dr. Gros; Fritz von Opel, the father, wherein he stated that he never wanted to have anything to do with the niessbrauch, that the only purpose was for protection in case of need; the testimony of Director Wilhelm that Dr. Gros did come to see him on repeated occasions over a period of 2-odd years; the exhibits which have been introduced; the letters corroborating the fact that the matter was taken up with the Reichbank; and the fact that we are dealing here with the property of a neutral corporation; and, on a strictly one-premise question of law basically, namely, that of enemy taint, have determined that this plaintiff corporation is not entitled to get its property back and thereby have confiscated it in effect—it would appear that this testimony as to the waiver should move this Court, acting in 3250 equity, to grant plaintiff's motion.

Your Honor will also recollect, as is set forth in the plaintiff's memorandum in support of the motion, that we set forth there testimony given by Mr. Fritz von Opel in the year 1946, prior to the time that Wilhelm von Opel's testimony was taken in Wiesbaden, in which Mr. von Opel stated that his father had renounced all claims against him and the niessbrauch, and the defendant was well aware of this fact, having taken this testimony and its being taken at their request before they proceeded to Wiesbaden to query Wilhelm and Marta and the others.

During the course of the proceedings in Wiesbaden, as is evident from the affidavits of Dr. Henry Kronstein and Mr. Richard Connor, Mr. Wilhelm von Opel was present during the taking of the testimony. He was present during the taking of the testimony of Dr. Daniel Gros, the author of the letters to the Reichbank. If, as we point out in our motion and memorandum in support thereof, the defendant thought there was anything fabricated, specious, false, or otherwise with respect to that testimony, they had ample opportunity to have questioned Mr. Wilhelm von Opel at that time.

Plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Richard Connor, did query Gros about these letters in detail. His deposition testimony was not introduced, in view of the fact that he was present here in the court as a witness, and Your Honor will recol-3251 lect he testified with respect to each of those exhibits. The father had told him he wanted nothing to do with it, and Gros' job was to take it up with the Reichbank to see that it was washed out and that the father would be under no further peril or action on the part of the Nazi government.

So for all those reasons, and particularly since the defendant has repeatedly endeavored to make moment of the fact that neither Wilhelm nor Marta was specifically asked about the waiver, we feel that equity demands that Miss Firnhammer be heard from; and further, as we pray in our motion, that Your Honor, if he were to hear from Miss Firnhammer, permit us to bring Mrs. Marta von Opel here so that she herself could now testify with respect to the waiver.

That is all, Your Honor.

Mr. Baum: If Your Honor please, I will try to be equally brief, but I think certain facts must be pointed out which Mr. Gallagher has not made clear.

In the first place, Mr. Gallagher seems to premise his presentation to Your Honor on a request for an exercise of discretion. It is the defendant's view that there is little room left for Your Honor's discretion in this matter, for several reasons. In the first place, we strongly contend that this testimony of Miss Firnhammer is inadmissible and would not be ground for a motion for a new trial in any event. She says that she heard Wilhelm von Opel 3252 say that he no longer had any claims against his son. Those are clearly hearsay declarations.

The plaintiff says that those declarations are against interest, but I call Your Honor's attention to Miss Firnhammer's affidavit, in which she herself says, quoting Wilhelm von Opel, or at least paraphrasing him, that the best way out was to explain to the authorities what his intentions had been from the beginning, namely, that he had only wanted protection in case of need and that he did not want to have any claims against his son because they would involve him in the strict regulations with regard to foreign currency.

In that context those are only self-serving declarations. Mr. Wilhelm von Opel, as this very affidavit shows, was being bothered by the German authorities to bring in foreign exchange arising out of this usufruct, so for him the best way was to say he had no usufruct.

In fact, this affidavit states above: "He was afraid that the Nazi might use what we called the Niessbrauch provision of the gift agreement to jump on him anew year after year."

Therefore, these statements were nothing more than efforts by Wilhelm von Opel to get himself out of trouble with the Government, and those are not declarations against interest. When the German authorities were after him and he was trying to get out of trouble, he was not mak-3238 ing declarations against his own interest.

But beyond that, I think Mr. Gallagher adverted to a very important point on this motion. As we have set forth in our memoranda, the courts have stated that there are five requirements which must be met in order for the court to grant a motion for a new trial as here filed. These are that the evidence must be newly discovered evidence; that due diligence to discover it must have been shown; that the evidence must not have been cumulative or corroborative; that the evidence be material; and that there be a probability that it would lead to a different result.

We say that none of these requirements has been met here, even assuming that these declarations would be admissible.

In the first place, we say it is not newly discovered, for this very simple reason. Attached to the Defendant's answering memorandum is a statement from Miss Firnhammer which was obtained from an agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in which she states that Fritz von Opel came to her right after Your Honor's opinion was handed down and asked her what she knew about this case, and she further states, in the very same statement, that, from the manner in which Fritz von Opel questioned her, she knew that he knew that she was aware of the nature of the case, but did not know the exact extent of her knowledge.

3254 I submit that that shows at least knowledge on the part of Fritz von Opel, who can well be deemed the representative of the plaintiff, that there was a witness who had knowledge of material facts in this action, but who waited until after they had lost the case, as a result of Your Honor's opinion, and then came along and looked for additional witnesses. That is not the way to establish a basis for a motion for newly discovered evidence.

I would like to point out to Your Honor in that connection that that very statement of Miss Firnhammer which was obtained by the defendant is contrary to the allegations of the moving papers themselves. The moving papers contained a double hearsay statement by plaintiff's counsel that Fritz von Opel told them that Margot von Opel had spoken to Miss Firnhammer, whereas the true story, from Miss Firnhammer's mouth, seems to be that Fritz von Opel came running after her as soon as Your Honor's opinion had been filed and read.

Furthermore, Miss Firnhammer, in the affidavit which plaintiffs have submitted, says that she took the place of a daughter, with respect to Mr. and Mrs. von Opel, after their own daughter had run away to Switzerland.

It seems to me, and I believe it should to the Court, that it is somewhat incredulous to believe that no one thought of asking a person who was on such intimate terms with Wilhelm von Opel and Marta von Opel, whether 3255 she knew anything about this case before they came to trial; and I think that the failure to ask her, if there was a failure, was certainly a showing of lack of due diligence in preparation for the case for trial; and that seems to be what is inherent in this motion.

Furthermore, Mr. Gallagher admits that the testimony is cumulative or corroborative. I would like to point out just how strong that is to Your Honor, by virtue of the two cases which we have cited in our memorandum.

There was the Woolworth case, which is cited on page 8 of our memorandum, which was a negligence action. After judgment was rendered, a motion was made for a new trial on the ground that evidence had been discovered as to the identity of the shoes which the plaintiff had been wearing at the time of the accident. Testimony as to those shoes had also been adduced at the trial. The Court denied the motion, and the denial was sustained by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, on the ground that this was an issue which had been litigated and that a motion for a new trial is not a basis for relitigating old issues.

Then I also call Your Honor's attention to the Prisament case, which was a criminal prosecution for larceny, and it was alleged to have occurred in Georgia. The defendant produced evidence at the trial by witnesses, who testified 3256 that he had been seen in New York City on the date of the alleged larceny. He was nevertheless convicted, and he then filed a motion for a new trial on the ground that he had found additional witnesses who would testify that he was in New York City on this day of the larceny. The Court specifically overruled the motion, saying that that was not proper ground for a motion. It would merely add to evidence which was in the record, and it had nothing new. It was merely cumulative and corroborative of evidence previously introduced.

That is exactly what we have here. Fritz von Opel took the stand, as Your Honor well remembers, and for the first time we heard testimony in this case that there was a waiver in 1935, at the very time when the Gold Case was pending in the United States courts.

Dr. Gfos took the stand and said the same thing.

They produced documents which they claim showed waiver.

Then that is where it stops.

We produced evidence to the contrary. We produced the testimony of Mr. Houghland and Mr. Crittenden as to declarations and admissions which were inconsistent with the waiver; and that issue has been fully litigated from the very beginning.

It seems to me that certainly there is far less room for the exercise of the Court's discretion in a case such as this than there was in a criminal prosecution, where certainly the Court is even more zealous not to deprive a per-3257 son of liberty if there be any ground for avoiding it.

So I submit, Your Honor, that the evidence is purely cumulative and corroborative and there is no basis for this motion.

There are just one or two further points I would like to make. Mr. Gallagher in his papers, and again today, has stated to Your Honor that at the time of the taking of the deposition in Wiesbaden the defendant's counsel did not ask Wilhelm and Marta von Opel about any waiver. I think that is a very interesting point. We were cross examining the man whom we claimed to be the real owner of this property. He testified that he did not own the property, that he had nothing to do with it, that he never had any usufruct.

Yet the plaintiff, who has the burden of proof in this case to show non-enemy taint, never asked him whether he had ever waived any usufruct; and they now say that it was our duty to ask Wilhelm and Marta von Opel whether he had waived. To me that is synonymous to expecting the United States attorney to ask a defendant, "You did not commit the crime, did you?" I think that is all it amounts to.

Then in the affidavit of Dr. Kronstein and in the affidavit of Mr. Connor, who was then taking the deposition as counsel for the plaintiff, the incredible statements are made that they did not think it necessary to ask Wilhelm von Opel as to whether he had waived or not. To me, 3258 Your Honor, that is completely ridiculous. You certainly would think it necessary to ask the persons who were the alleged holders of a usufruct whether they had waived it or not and not expect to come into court and prove a waiver by purely secondary evidence.

Now they come in and they say, "Wilhelm von Opel is dead. We can't get his testimony any more. We will give you hearsay testimony as to whether he waived it or not." And that is what the result leads to.

Furthermore, the evidence which is contained in Miss Firnhammer's affidavit, as Mr. Gallagher apparently very well recognizes, does not relate at all to any waiver by Marta von Opel. Marta von Opel, as Your Honor will recall, also held the usufruct. It was held by both, but thi proposed witness would only testify as to a waiver by Wilhelm.

Plaintiff's answer to that is that the Court well knows that Wilhelm managed everything on behalf of his wife. There is no such testimony in this record, nor is there any testimony that, under German law or any other law, Wilhelm von Opel could waive a property right, an in rem right, belonging to his wife. In fact, that is not the law.

So that I submit, Your Honor, that even if this testimony were admitted, there would still be a failure to show that Marta von Opel had ever relinquished anything.

As to the prayer for reopening this case for allow-3259 ing the testimony of Marta von Opel, I see no basis upon which that can be raised at all. Certainly that is not newly discovered evidence. There is no claim that it is subsequent, and no claim could be made. All that it can be is that there was neglect in the preparation of the case, and I submit, Your Honor, that that is the basis of this motion.

I should also like to call Your Honor's attention to this deposition in Wiesbaden, to which plaintiff has referred. There is not one word in this deposition, by Wilhelm von Opel, Marta von Opel, or Daniel Gros, to the effect that Wilhelm von Opel or Marta von Opel ever waived their usufruct. The closest you come to it is in the testimony of Daniel Gros, in which he says, "I advised Wilhelm von Opel that the only thing for him to do was to abandon his usufruct." That is not testimony as to waiver.

The exhibits to which the plaintiffs referred are also interesting, since three of them mention no waiver at all. One of them refers to a waiver which is to be written up in the future, and the other two are memoranda submitted by Daniel Gros to the German authorities, in 1936, the year after the waiver was alleged to have been made, in which he asks the authorities to find as a fact that there is a claim in existence against the son.

I submit, Your Honor, that on the basis of all this there has been a complete failure of meeting the heavy 3260 burden which is imposed upon the plaintiff in order to secure a new trial after a lengthy and protracted one such as we have had.

Your Honor will well remember your comment to Mr. Gallagher last March, when he mentioned filing a motion for a new trial, in which you said, "You had better labor pretty hard as to why you could not get it before you tried this case." I think that ruling holds.

Mr. Gallagher: I have nothing to say, Your Honor.

Power of Attorney.

Know all men by these presents that I, the undersigned Geheimer Kommerzienrat Dr.ing.h.c. Wilhelm von Opel have made, constituted and appointed and by these presents do make, constitute and appoint my son Mr. Fritz von Opel my true and lawful attorney for me and in my name, place and stead to negotiate with the General Motors Corporation in New York and/or the National City Bank of New York in New York on all matters connected with or concerning my shares (Aktien) of the Adam Opel Aktiengesellschaft Nr. 1-600 and to give instructions for sale of said shares or for their exchange against other shares or securities and/or bonds and to ask for payment to my account with the said National City Bank of New York in New York of all sums of money which are or shall become due and payable to me from said General Motors Corporation and/or to ask for transfer of all shares or securities and/or bonds in exchange of my said shares of the Adam Opel Aktiengesellschaft or any part thereof. to my said account with the National City Bank of New York and on receipt thereof or any part thereof for me and in my name to give, sign and execute good and proper acquittances or other discharges for the same or for such part or parts thereof respectively as shall be transferred to my said account with the National City Bank of New York, and to sign, seal and execute all papers, writings and documents necessary in that behalf; GIVING AND GRANTING unto my said attorney full power and authority to do and to perform every act and thing whatsoever requisite and necessary to be done in and about the premises as fully to all intents and purposes as I might do if personally present hereby ratifying and confirming all that my said attorney shall lawfully do by virtue hereof.

In witness hereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal.

This sixth day of October 1931.

Signed, sealed and delivered in presence of gez. John A. Beywater gez. Dr. Wilhelm von Opel

Plaintiff's Exhibit 5

Ruesselsheim, October 5, 1931

I, the undersigned Geheime Kommerzienrat Dr.ing.h.c. Wilhelm von Opel, declare that my property and the property of my wife Marta, nee Bade, are community property. Shares numbered 1 to 600 of the Adam Opel Aktiengesell-schaft in Ruesselsheim, Main, having a par value of RM 6,000,000.00 (six million), are part of our community property. It is our common desire that these stocks remain with the male line of our family in order to preserve a personal connection between the bearers of the name of Opel and the work of our father Adam Opel.

In view of the premises I, with the consent of my wife, make a gift from our community property to my son Fritz von Opel of the shares owned by us and mentioned above, of the Adam Opel Aktiengesellschaft in Ruesselsheim, Main, Nos. 1 to 600, having a par value of RM 6,000,000.00 (six million). These stocks are deposited at present with the bank.

I, the undersigned Fritz von Opel, accept the gift.

I, Wilhelm von Opel, herewith transfer title to these shares to our son Fritz von Opel by assigning to him our claim for the delivery of these shares to us.

The usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereafter called the parents Opel, until the death of the survivor of them. However, 20% of all dividends and interest received will accrue to Fritz von Opel.

If the parents Opel should predecease Fritz von Opel, the above described gift shall be considered as an advancement and shall be deducted from his share in such property as might be inherited by him or his sister, Mrs. Elinor Sachs, nee von Opel, or in case of her prior death, by her issue.

For this purpose the value of the shares shall be fixed as the value at the time when the duty to account for the advancement arises.

If this value is higher than the present value, the higher value shall apply, if it is lower, then the lower value.

In the event that the parents Opel shall not have drawn in full or in part the income from the shares accruing to them by virtue of their usufruct, the advancement to Fritz von Opel shall be deemed to have increased by the income not drawn and he shall be accountable therefor.

If the shares should be sold or exchanged against other property the proceeds from such sale or the property taken in exchange shall be substituted for the shares, after the usufruct of the parents Opel has been safeguarded. All provisions stipulated above will then fully apply to such substituted property.

If Fritz von Opel predeceases his parents without leaving legitimate issue, the gift executed by this document will become void. The stocks or the property substituted therefor including the income accrued but not drawn will then revert to the parents Opel or the surviving parent.

sgd. FRITZ VON OPEL sgd. DR. WILHELM VON OPEL

I, the wife Marta von Opel, nee Bade, agree to the above agreement.

Gentlemen:

Referring to my communication dated April 11, 1929, addressed to the National City Bank, having to do with the deposit of 600 shares of the Capital Stock of the Adam Opel Aktiengesellschaft, I beg to advise you as follows:

Pursuant to the terms thereof, notice is hereby given of my intention to exercise the right to sell as follows:

On November 16, 1931	100 shares
November 17, 1931	100 shares
November 18, 1931	100 shares
November 19, 1931	100 shares
November 20, 1931	100 shares
November 21, 1931	100 shares

The price is 26,500.00 Reichsmarks a share. In lieu of Reichsmarks payment may be made at your option in dollars at the average of the high and low rate of exchange prevailing on the date of delivery.

Kindly acknowledge receipt and oblige,

Yours very truly,

(sgd.) WILHELM VON OPEL

Herrn

Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm v. Opel

Wiesbaden

Steubenstrasse 34.

Dear Herr Geheimrat:

Yesterday I had a long discussion with your son. I delivered to him a written summary of the agreement in question. Complying with your wishes I prepared today a draft of the agreement itself. I am sorry that I did not have more time at my disposal for a study of the rather complicated matter. But I hope that the idea which you suggested to me can be realized in a way which conforms with the law and follows the proposal drawn up by me. However, I should like to point out the following:

1. The procedure itself is lawful. It is not an illegal transfer of capital. There is nothing to prevent you from giving part of your property to your son who is living abroad (p. 2).

2. To the extent that you reserve to yourself the usufruct and receive an income from it you are subject to income tax in Germany now as before. But if the holding company, to which the Opel shares will be assigned does not distribute any dividend, no income tax will be payable by you.

My proposal is to have the holding company shares deposited for you. You will then be entitled to vote in the holding company, but only on such matters in which you have an actual interest. This would apply to the vote concerning the net profits; including those cases in which you might be compelled to draw, subsequently, the profits already transferred to reserve funds. On the other hand, the management of the holding company, including the adoption of other resolutions of the general meetings, will remain the responsibility of the actual shareholder, i. e., your son. Such an arrangement would, at the same time, stress the fact that this is not a fictitious transaction. It is your actual intent that the ownership pass to your son immediately, only the income is reserved to you.

3. In the event that you leave the net profits with the holding company your son would gain an advantage (p. 3) over your daughter. For this reason, I have provided in the contract that this would be increment, represented by the reserve funds of the holding company, is to be taken into account in settling the accounts between your two children; It seems also advisable for you expressly to confirm the provisions concerning the settlement between the children in your last will.

4. You are considering the possibility that your son might die before his parents without issue. To provide for this emergency, the gift is made subject to a condition subsequent. The donated property will then revert to the parents who made the gift, or to the parent who survives the son. This reversion of the property to the parents is tax exempt (section 18, number 12, of the Inheritance Tax Law). I even believe that in this case one might apply for the repayment of the gift tax which is payable now (see section 4 Reichsbewertungsgesetz—Reich Valuation Law—as amended May 22, 1931). Even in the case of gifts which are subject to such a condition subsequent a gift tax must be paid at first. But if such condition occurs, then the assessment is to be adjusted, upon application, to the actual value of the acquired property.

5. The following two examples may serve to illustrate what significance these provisions may have for you (p. 4) from the point of view of taxation. First, the value of the Opel shares may be less today than it will be at some future date. In such a case, the gift tax is more important than it would be if, upon your death, the Opel shares or the substituted assets had a higher value. Of course, everything depends on how the economic situation will develop in the future. You will effect a saving of income tax in so far as, at your son's request, one quarter of the proceeds of the donated shares will accrue to him. Furthermore, an income tax obligation will not arise if the holding company does not distribute the net profits. The assets remaining with that company are not subject to income tax in Germany. The Reichsfinanzhof (Reich Revenue Court) has refused to hold that an income tax obligation exists in cases of German shares which had been assigned to a foreign holding company. The court regretted to have to arrive at such a decision but admitted that the present laws would not permit taxing net profits which had not been distributed (Reich Finance Court, im "St.u.W." ("Steuern und Wirtschaft")—1930, No. 972; Reichsbewertungsgesetz, Reich assessment Law, section 58, number 5). According to this decision, no income tax is payable if the profits of the holding company (p. 5) are not distributed. But this is not absolutely certain. For this proposition is not based on a statute, but on a decision of the Reich Tax Court. This court may change its opinion under the pressure of particular economic conditions, or a new statute or emergency order may make such profits taxable. Present day legislation and the manner of its enforcement do not guarantee the present situation to continue.

Another question to be examined is whether or not the transaction is required to be reported pursuant to section 9 of the Emergency Order (Notverordnung) of August 23, 1931. This order requires German tax payers to report foreign participations whenever they own, jointly with not more than 4 other persons, more than 50% of a company which has its domicile abroad. It is, of course, true that your son is the party in interest. He owns the shares of the holding company. But you are the usufructuary of the shares. According to the wording of the order, the usufructuary cannot be regarded as a party in interest under the terms of section 9 quoted above. But here again I must repeat that we are not on absolutely firm ground in interpreting our tax laws (p. 6). Any person failing to report is liable to severe punishment (section 13). As long as an authoritative interpretation by the Reich Minister of Finance is [not]* available, caution is advisable here, too. Therefore it will be necessary to report the facts to the Finanzamt (Revenue Office).

I wish to add in conclusion that you will have to include the usufruct, assessed in accordance with the provisions of the law, in your property tax return.

But the same would apply if the contract were to provide not for a true usufruct, but instead for a purely personal claim to the payment of a corresponding share of the profits. This right also would be part of your property. It is to be evaluated in the same manner as the usufruct itself.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

(sgd.) Dr. Max Hachenburg

Plaintiff's Exhibit 8

[October 3, 1931]

GIFT AGREEMENT

SECTION 1.

Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his wife nee ....., residing in Wiesbaden, make a gift, from their community property, to their son Fritz von Opel, residing in Antwerp, of par value RM 6,000,000.00 shares of stock of the Adam Opel Aktiengesellschaft in Ruesselsheim. These shares are No. .....

The donee accepts this gift gratefully.

The parents execute this gift by transferring the title to the donated shares. The shares are, at the present time, deposited with General Motors in New York. The title is transferred by assigning the donor's claim to have the shares delivered to them. This claim is assigned herewith. General Motors will be advised of the assignment of this claim by the parties concerned.

The following further provisions apply to the gift:

SECTION 2

The donors reserve to themselves for life (p. 2) the usufruct in three quarters i. e., in par value RM 4,500,000.00 of the donated shares. The balance of RM 1,500,000.00 is exempt from the usufruct. The donors' usufruct expires at the death of the last parents.

Mr. Fritz von Opel is entitled and, upon demand of the donors obliged, to assign the shares to a holding company which he owns. In this case the parents will have the usufruct in 75 per cent of the shares which the holding company will be required to issue in exchange for the Opel shares. These shall be deposited in the name of the father, Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel. After his death these shares shall be considered as deposited for the wife of Geheimrat Wilhelm von Opel. Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and, in case he should predecease his wife, his widow may vote the deposited holding shares by virtue of the usufruct, whenever the vote involves the declaration of the net profits and/or a resolution with respect thereto, including resolutions on the distribution of reserve funds. The holding company shall acquire the Opel shares on condition only that it will show on its books as an open reserve the net profits derived from the Opel shares or from assets substituted at a later date.

The net profits of the holding company are subject to the donor's usufruct only in proportion as they are derived from the Opel shares assigned to the holding company or from its substituted assets (p. 3).

The donors guarantee to the donee that the yield from that quarter of the gift which is exempt from usufruct, will amount to at least RM ..... ff it falls below that amount, the donee is entitled to claim the yield of the usufruct for himself, up to the guaranteed amount. If even this yield does not cover the amount, the donors are obliged to pay the deficiency. If in any one of the following years the yield from that quarter which is exempt from usufruct exceeds the guaranteed amount, the excess will revert to the donors until the guaranty payments made by them have been offset. The aforesaid guaranty promise does not apply whenever appropriate net profits of the holding company are available which remain undistributed by virtue of a resolution passed at a meeting of the shareholders.

SECTION 3

The son Fritz must account to his sister Mrs. ..... at their parents' death for the gift made to him in article 1 by Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his wife.

If at the time when such obligation to account becomes effective the value of the Opel shares donated according to article 1 exceeds their value as of the time of the gift, then Fritz shall account for the (p. 4) excess amount. If the value is lower, his obligation is diminished accordingly. The same applies if other assets have been substituted for the Opel shares.

If the holding company has not distributed all or part of its profits, so that the usufructuaries did not draw the proceeds during their lifetime, these reserves together with the holding shares themselves will remain in the hands of the son Fritz von Opel to whom the gift was made. But his obligation to account to his sister Mrs. ..... increases by the amount of the reserves which the holding company accumulated from the proceeds of the Opel shares which it acquired or of the assets substituted for them.

SECTION 4.

If Mr. Fritz von Opel dies prior to his parents without leaving legitimate issue, the gift becomes null and void. This provision is made a condition subsequent of the gift. If the Opel shares which were donated to Mr. Fritz von Opel by his parents, were assigned to the holding company, the aforementioned condition shall apply to the holding shares which were substituted for the Opel shares. This also applies to that quarter of the gift which is not subject to the usufruct.

Plaintiff's Exhibit 9

Fundamental considerations

1. Father makes a gift to his son of a block of shares. The shares are assigned immediately. If they are not in the father's possession, the transfer is effected by assignment of the claim for delivery against the present holder. Gift tax becomes due at once unless an extension for payment is granted. Beside the donee, the donor is liable, since the donee has his domicile abroad.

2. When the parents die an accounting has to take place with regard to the gift between the two children, i.e. son and daughter. The moment the gift is made, the son must allow the value of the gift to be applied to his share of the estate. If at the time of the death of the parents no allowance is to be made for any increase in value. If a different arrangement is desired, it must be expressly provided that the value as of the death of the donor is to be taken into account in making the settlement. If the father does not avail himself of the usufruct discussed in figure 3 below, then the advancement will be increased by the amounts which the father did not draw.

3. The gift was made subject to a usufruct for life for the parents in three quarters of the gift. The proceeds accruing from the remaining (p. 2) one quarter are left to the son. The usufruct expires at the death of the surviving spouse.

Son is entitled to transfer the shares given to him to a holding company which is already existing and is owned by him. In this case, the parents' usufruct in the holding shares is substituted for the parents' usufruct in the donated shares. A claim to the usufruct can be asserted only to the extent to which the holding company has an income from the donated shares or from any other property that might take their place.

4. In order to secure the usufruct, the donated shares or the holding shares replacing them are deposited with a bank in the father's name. By virtue of his usufruct, the father is entitled to vote the shares in the case of such resolution of the holding company which dispose of the actual net profits. Father guarantees to his son that his 25% share of these profits will amount to at least RM

5. If the son dies, without children, before his parents, the gift reverts to the parents. The gift is made on condition that it is to be terminated if the son either does not* survive both his parents or dies before his parents without leaving legitimate issue.

Steubenstrasse 34

Dear Herr Geheimrat:

I wrote you on October 3.

Your son informed me that Dr. Faust is concerned about the problem whether or not an income tax may be payable under the provisions of Section 30, subsection 3 of the Income Tax Act (Einkommensteuergesetz) if your son sells the shares which you transferred to him by way of a gift. In the meantime I have thoroughly re-examined this question. I cannot deny that there is some foundation for Dr. Faust's concern. To be sure, it is impossible to understand a rule of law according to which a stockholder of a German corporation who is residing abroad should have to pay an income tax in Germany if he sells these shares profitably. Suppose, a Dutch Bank (p. 2) deals in German securities. It pays taxes in Holland on the profits realized from buying and reselling the securities. Nevertheless it would also be subject to taxation in Germany, because the shares sold were German. The absurdity of such a conclusion tends to support my interpretation. The provision of Section 30, subsection 3 of the Income Tax Act creates a special burden on property hold in Germany. To subject an alien to taxation of the income derived from business carried on in Germany presupposes (Section 3, Subsection 2, No. 2, Income Tax Law) the presence of a place of business or of a permanent agent in Germany. In the special case of the resale of a block of shares this is not possible (see Eber's Kommentar yum Koerperschafts-Steuer-Gesetz, Bemerkung 31 zu Par. 13—Eber's Commentary on the Corporation Tax Law, note 31 to Section 13). There are, however, commentators who take a contrary view, namely the view which Dr. Faust has in mind (Rehdanz-Selle, Die Besteuerung der Auslaender im Deutschen Reiche—Taxation of Foreigners in Germany—page 39). This author takes the view that the profits realized from an advance of prices, to which Section 30 of the Income Tax Law refers, also accrue to foreign nationals. This is a conclusion based on conceptual logic only. Since Section 30 states: "As business income is to be considered . . ." the conclusion is drawn that profit obtained from such sales are to be considered as business profits and that for this reason they are subject to the same taxes as those of a person doing business in Germany. I can thus understand why (p. 3) Dr. Faust raised this question. I still insist that no tax is payable for the reasons indicated above. I also believe that the Reichsfinanzhof (Reich Finance Court) will agree with this view, which is the only one that is economically justified. But you know, one can never predict, particularly in tax matters, what decision the authorities are going to make.

I believe, however, that the entire question is without practical importance in the present case. The special tax payable in the case of a sale of a block of shares is applicable only in the event that the seller owns personally or jointly with his nearest relatives, more than 25% of the capital stock. It is not necessary to sell 25%. It would be enough if the Opel family had retained more than 25% of their shares. But as far as I remember this is not at all the case. Thus, the whole question is without any practical importance.

Finally, the provision of Section 31 of the Income Tax Law must be considered. This article provides that the gift tax, which Mr. Fritz von Opel has to pay, is to be set off against the special income tax arising from the resale, provided that the shares are resold within the next 3 years.

Finally, I believe that upon the assignment of the shares to a holding company, as intended, no profit will be realized at all. If, later on, the holding company itself sells the Opel shares, this sale will not be considered a sale of the shares themselves. I do not believe that it is permissible to give the provision of Section 30, Subsection 3, of the Income Tax Law such a wide interpretation, all the more so, since, as I have shown in my letter of October 3, an income tax does not become payable in Germany as long as the profits remain with the holding company.

With best regards

Yours truly,

(sgd.) Dr. Max Hachenburg

P.S. I arranged with your son that if possible we should meet and talk the matter over, in the course of this week. Please, be good enough to advise me at your convenience which day and hour would suit you.

The above.

ORIGINS OF THE GIFT

In Germany I was not allowed to own interests in an automobile company either directly or indirectly. I had therefore made available abroad to my son, who blamed me for selling the firm, about francs 3,800,000.00, so as to give him a chance to participate in a foreign firm. But I reported this amount on September 9, 1931, in compliance with the foreign exchange control regulations of August 29, 1931. I informed my son thereof and informed him that the amount would probably have to be surrendered and that consequently he had no longer the possibility to invest in another firm. The amount in question was then actually surrendered.

A short time after I had thus informed my son, he came to me and proposed on that occasion that I should let him have my shares. That is how the idea of a gift originated.

At that time I told my son: Consult the attorney Mr. Hachenburg, who made our contracts, and find out if and in what form such an assignment is possible. If it is possible, I agree. But I am not going to pay for the consultation; you will have to pay all expenses yourself.

Attached hereto is the letter referred to from Mr. Hachenburg, attorney-at-law, to my son's secretariat. Gift executed in accordance with draft of Mr. Hachenburg, attorney-at-law.

Enclosure 5

By agreement dated October 5, 1931, I made my son Fritz von Opel a gift of Opel shares of a nominal value of RM 6,000,000.00 reserving to myself a right of usufruct on these stocks respectively the substitute values therefor. According to the unanimous opinion of all the parties concerned this right of usufruct was to be utilized only in case I should become financially dependent upon the receipts from this right of usufruct.

This right has not yet been asserted, nor can I tell whether and to what extent I may have to fall back on it. Therefore I do not believe that for the present this right of usufruct should be listed as an asset.

Therefore the value of the gift is 70% of RM 6,000,000.00, i.e. RM 4,200,000.00.

The value of the right of usufruct is 8.5 times (age of the youngest donor: 54 years) its one year value, i.e. of 80% of the whole usufruct.

But in the present preliminary tax assessment the value of the right of usufruct has been disregarded, because according to counsel's letter of July 1, 1932, to the Reich Minister of Finance, the General Motors shares given in exchange are not likely to yield any dividend.

The final assessment will be made as soon as an estimate is possible of the actual annual value of the donor's usufruct, i.e. of what average proceeds can be expected in the future from the 134768 General Motors shares which had been given in exchange for the gift.

Please submit appropriate records (yields of 1930, 1931, 1932, and estimated yield for subsequent years).

Subject: List E/S No. 67/1931 debit book No. 321/1931. Further preliminary tax assessment of February 13, 1933.

I hereby appeal against the further preliminary tax assessment of February 13, 1933, concerning the gift tax amounting to RM 262,000.00.

The Opel shares are valued therein, in accordance with a proposal of the Finanzamt Mainz/Land, at 70%. This proposal of the Finanzamt Mainz/Land is untenable; it conflicts with the legal opinion of the Darmstadt Chamber of Commerce, which the Finanzamt Mainz/Land itself had requested. Evidently the Finanzamt wants to base the valuation exclusively on the singularly fortunate conditions of the sale. That this is not permissible, is a long established principle of law. But, in addition, it must be remembered that this sale took place abroad and that therefore the sale cannot, as such, furnish a standard for the valuation of the shares in no event, however, without adjustment; for the valuation domestic conditions only can be taken into account. Finally I wish to point out that the Darmstadt Chamber of Commerce is going to amend shortly the opinion it rendered at the time.

In my opinion, a valuation which is so difficult and of so far reaching consequences for the individuals concerned should not be made without a minute and searching investigation of the facts, and should be based not simply on the conclusions reached so far. In view of the high amounts which are at stake for the taxpayer it is absolutely necessary to exhaust all possibilities which could in some way help to arrive an objective decision. Under no circumstances estimates should be used which are without reliable foundation and may result in unjustifiable disadvantage to the taxpayer.

For these reasons I request an extension, until further notice, for that portion of the gift tax which has not yet been paid, at any rate until such time as the supplementary opinion of the Chamber of Commerce will be available. I will try to have the Chamber of Commerce supply this opinion as quickly as possible.

In view of the fact that on the 25th instant a further instalment of RM 50,000.00 is due I wish to ask you to grant the extension applied for at your earliest convenience.

Yours very truly,

By deed dated October 5, 1931, I gave to my son Friedrich von Opel Opel shares of a nominal value of RM 6,000,000.00. What regards the value of the shares, I dare say that in view of today's quotation of the shares, the balance for which closed with a loss of about RM 2,288,224.34 for the business year 1929, with a loss of about RM 13,884,792.11 for the business year 1930, and which, in view of the monthly statements on hand until now, is likely to do no better in the business year 1931, a quotation of about 25-30% per share must be considered as very appropriate.

I am hereby reporting this gift in accordance with article 25 of the Inheritance Tax Act.

Mr. Fritz von Opel,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

We quote the following extract from the cable received from the Deutsche Bank & Disconto-Gesellschaft, Frankfurt on October 24, 1931:

"GEHEIMRAT DR. WILHELM VON OPEL RUESSELSHEIM INSTRUCTED US TO CABLE TO YOU THE FOLLOWING NEW POWER OF ATTORNEY — UNTIL YOU HEAR FROM ME TO THE CONTRARY YOU ARE HEREBY AUTHORIZED AND REQUESTED TO ACT UPON ANY AND ALL INSTRUCTIONS WHICH MAY BE GIVEN YOU FROM TIME TO TIME BY MY SON FRITZ VON OPEL REGARDING ANY AND ALL FUNDS OR OTHER PROPERTY AT ANY TIME WITH YOU FOR MY ACCOUNT AND TO HONOR EACH AND EVERY WITHDRAWAL HE MAY REQUEST THEREFROM — SIGNED DR. WILHELM VON OPEL."

Very truly yours,

Assistant Vice President.

TOM C. CLARK, Attorney General,
As Successor to the Alien Property Custodian, Defendant.

STIPULATION

IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED between the parties that if Dr. Joseph Henggeler, Attorney at Law, Lowenstrasse 1, Sihlporte, Zurich 1, Switzerland were called as a witness upon the trial of this action he would testify as set forth in his affidavit dated September 2, 1948, executed in Zurich, Switzerland, an original of which is attached hereto;

IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED that the photostatic copy of the confirmation of the Liechtenstein Government dated April 8, 1947, annexed to the affidavit hereinbefore referred to is a true and correct copy of the same and was delivered to Dr. Henggeler upon his demand;

IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED between the parties that Dr. Henggeler would testify that he knows that Mr. Fritz von Opel maintained a residence and home in St. Moritz, Switzerland since about 1933;

IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED between the parties that Dr. Henggeler would testify that he concluded many years ago that Fritz von Opel had established his residence and domicile in Switzerland;

IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED that Dr. Henggeler would testify that in his negotiations with the Swiss Tax Office he was advised by that Department of the Swiss Government that it had concluded that Fritz von Opel was a domiciliary of Switzerland subject to the tax imposed by Switzerland and that he knows of his own knowledge that Mr. Fritz von Opel has paid the assessed tax for many years;

IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED that no officers of the Swiss Tax Department ever took any position with him other than that Fritz von Opel since 1939 was a Liechtenstein citizen;

IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED that the testimony of Dr. Joseph Henggeler may be dispensed with upon the trial of this action, and that this stipulation and/or his affidavit and the photostatic copy of the confirmation of the Liechtenstein Government annexed thereto may be offered in evidence or used by either party in lieu of such testimony, without said stipulation, however, constituting any waiver by the defendant of its right to object to the admissibility of said testimony.

Affidavit

I, the undersigned Dr. Josef Henggeler, attorney at law, member of the bar of Zurich, with offices at Löwenstrasse 1; Zurich, Switzerland hereby make oath and say as follows:

I have been for more than 5 years legal adviser of Mr. Fritz von Opel in respect of his business affairs in Switzerland.

Mr. von Opel has during the years since the outbreak of the war repeatedly asked my advice with regard to obtaining the Swiss nationality. He explained to me that he and his wife wished to renounce their German nationality as they did not approve at all of the political development in Germany. He also stated that he did not have financial interests in Germany anymore and that the overwhelming part of his means was invested in the United States.

I had to point out to Mr. von Opel that in view of acquiring the Swiss nationality he was unable to comply with the legal requirements although having been domiciled in St. Moritz, Switzerland, for many years. For, according to the Swiss Federal Act on the acquisition of the Swiss citizenship of June 25, 1903 / June 26, 1920 article 2, the right to acquire the Swiss nationality will only be granted to an applicant who during the last 12 years has uninterruptedly resided in Switzerland for at least 6 years. Furthermore the applicant must have stayed in Switzerland two years without interruption before the date of the application. Mr. von Opel could not comply with these requirements as he had been periodically compelled to leave Switzerland for business matters especially for his affairs in the United States. At the same time I drew the attention of Mr. von Opel to the fact that he had the possibility to acquire the citizenship of the Principality of Liechtenstein and I also informed him that the Principality of Liechtenstein keeps very close relations with Switzerland, f.i. the two countries form a customs union, a treaty to that effect having been concluded between the two states on March 29, 1923. Switzerland has also been charged by the Principality of Liechtenstein with the diplomatic representation of its interests and with the protection of its citizens abroad. The citizens of the Principality of Liechtenstein may therefore call upon the Swiss diplomatic representatives or the Swiss consular service for help which is given to them in the same manner as to a Swiss citizen if the government of the Principality brings forward a corresponding proposition to the Swiss government.

After the outbreak of the war, Mr. von Opel came to consult me again in this matter and repeated to me that he did not approve at all of the political attitude of Germany. The war having broken out he wished to renounce his German nationality under any circumstances and he stated that he would never do any military service for Germany. He then also told me again that the greatest part of his property was invested in the United States and that he therefore felt compelled to leave as quickly as possible for the United States. On the one side he did not in the least want to go to the United States as a German citizen, on the other side he wished absolutely to leave for the United States.

I then told Mr. von Opel that there was no other possibility for him than to apply for the citizenship of the Principality of Liechtenstein and I advised him to undertake the necessary steps. Mr. von Opel agreed with me.

Therefore I got in touch with Dr. Ludwig Marxer, barrister at law in Vaduz, Liechtenstein, a former member of the government of the Principality. I have known Dr. Marxer for years as a perfectly trustworthy lawyer and I have always associated him with me in legal cases involving Liechtenstein law.

The naturalization took place in complete agreement with the law of Liechtenstein and was completed on November 21, 1939 as indicated on the annexed statement from the Liechtenstein Government dated April 8, 1947.

I remember clearly that Mr. von Opel was very satisfied after the naturalization. He mentioned to me that with the extinguishment of his German nationality he felt freed from a burden which had weighed heavily on his mind. He was very glad that, now a citizen of a free and democratic country, he could leave for the United States.

Confirmation

It is hereby certified that Mr. Fritz von Opel, born May 4, 1899, upon his application, on November 21, 1939, was made a citizen of the Liechtenstein State and thereby became a member of the community of Planken. It is the opinion of the Government that, pursuant to Section 25 of the Act of July 22, 1913 governing Citizenship in the Reich and the German States, Mr. von Opel lost German citizenship, since, at the time of naturalization and several years prior thereto, he resided abroad.

Gentlemen:

With reference to the letter addressed to you under date of April 11, 1929, signed by my father, Dr. Wilhelm v. Opel, in which letter you are instructed to deliver six hundred (600) shares of the capital stock of Adam Opel Aktiengesellschaft, of the par value of 10,000 Reichsmarks a share, to General Motors Corporation upon the receipt from General Motors Corporation of the prices for the stock stated in said letter, I now request that you deliver the six hundred (600) shares to General Motors Corporation free and clear, without receiving from General Motors Corporation the payments specified.

I request you to do this under the terms of the power of attorney from my father appointing me his attorney in regard to this matter, which power of attorney you have in your files.

Yours very truly,

MEMORANDUM November 17, 1931

Miss Cantrell
Remittance Department.

I recently gave you instructions to prepare principal statements of the Fritz von Opel Account in triplicate. Will you please note the following amended instructions:

> Statements of the principal account of Fritz von Opel's Main Account are to be prepared in duplicate only, originals going to Mr. Fritz von Opel and duplicates to Mr. Wilhelm von Opel. The triplicate copy of this statement will not be sent to Messrs. Bayer & Clauson, as I had previously instructed.

We have opened another account, however, called "Fritz von Opel Special Account, re: General Motors Stocks" and it is this account that I wish statements made up on in triplicate at the same time as all the other statements are made. Originals of this statement are to go to Mr. Fritz von Opel, duplicates to Mr. Wilhelm von Opel and triplicates to Messrs. Bayer & Clauson.

Please note that the instructions given apply only to the principal statements and do not affect instructions on the Income Statements which were previously given to you.

Gentlemen:

We hand you herewith a form duly executed setting forth the instructions by which you are to be guided in operating our custodian account with you.

We have already filed with you properly legalized documents showing the names of the officers authorized to sign against this account and a power of attorney issued in the favor of Mr. Fritz von Opel. We understand you wish further properly legalized documents showing the authority of the officers to delegate their powers as they have done in said power of attorney and these will be furnished you in due course. In the meantime we have requested Credit

STIPULATION

IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED between the parties that Mr. Adolf Gaeng, Wunderlistr. 8, Zurich 37, Switzerland, if called as a witness for the Plaintiff, would testify as follows:

1. That on October 19, 1948, he forwarded to the offices of Gallagher, Osherman, Connor and Butler, Bowen Building, Washington, D. C., all the existing books, files and papers of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, which were kept in the regular course of business and which cover the years January 1, 1937 through December 31, 1942, and that there are no other books of said corporation covering this period of time;

2. That these books, files and papers are more specifically identified by the descriptions contained in the attached memorandum which was an enclosure with his letter of October 19, 1948;

3. IT IS FURTHER STIPULATED between the parties that said books, files and papers described in the attached memorandum were received at the offices of Gallagher, Osherman, Connor and Butler, Bowen Building, Washington, D. Articles of Incorporation

of

Frima Verwaltungsanstalt

Etablissement de Gestion Frima

Frima Trust Establishement

1. There exists under the name of Frima Verwaltungsanstalt, Etablissement de Gestion Frima, Frima Trust Establishement with domicile in Vaduz, an establishment within the terms of Articles 534 et seq. of the Liechtenstein Civil Code for the purposes of managing the assets of the establishment and to use them in accordance with the Articles of Incorporation and for the purpose of conducting commercial transactions.

2. The capital of the establishment consists of Francs 20,000 which upon its incorporation are assigned to the establishment in cash. Further increments to the capital may be made at any time.

3. The establishment and its profits, if any, belong to the beneficiaries to be designated by the incorporator either generally or for any particular instance. The beneficiaries thus designated are authorized to reassign their rights to others. Designation of the original beneficiaries and their assignees may be made irrevocably or revocably.

4. The establishment shall be managed by a Board of Management which is composed of one to five individuals or corporate bodies. The Board of Management shall be designated by the incorporator. Subsequently, it shall be self perpetuating; successors may be appointed by the several members during their own tenure to become effective upon termination of their own offices.

5. Notwithstanding these provisions, the beneficiaries shall at any time have the right to appoint or discharge the members of the Board of Management. The appointments made pursuant to Article 4 shall therefore be valid only as long as the beneficiaries do not make contrary decisions. If there shall be several beneficiaries, a majority of them shall be required for discharging a member of the Board of Management. A decision may be arrived at by a meeting called for such purpose or by signing a proposal in writing to that effect circulated among the beneficiaries.

6. The Board of Management determines the manner in which the signature of the establishment are executed. Those authorized to sign add their own name to that of the style of the establishment.

The Board of Management may appoint an auditing agency.

7. The balance sheet shall be drawn up in accordance with established business principles. At the discretion of the Board of Management, a surplus may either be distributed among the beneficiaries or retained in some form, such as reserves.

8. Amendments of the present Articles of Incorporation shall be made only with the consent of the Board of Management and the beneficiaries. The beneficiaries are herewith designated as the supreme agency (organ) of the company.

9. Notices, if any, of the establishment shall be given by a registered letter to the beneficiaries; if a public notice shall be required, publication shall be made by one or two newspapers published in Liechtenstein.

TRANSDANUBIA BAUXIT R. T. Budapest
TRANSDANUBIA BAUXIT A. G. March 12, 1941

Dear Mr. von Opel:

In the following we would like to give you a short outline of the most recent happenings:

Up to August 1940 we could not begin deliveries for reasons beyond our control. The settlement of the Koranye matters took up a long time and after they had been finished we had no means of transportation at our disposal and we were unable to obtain mine workers on account of the general lack of workers. Finally, in August, we had overcome all difficulties and began deliveries. Immediately after the beginning of deliveries it was visible that the mineral taken from the Edgar mine was of excellent quality; that, however, by means of surface production only little mineral could be produced. As in the meantime considerable increase in wages, transportation fees, and supply prices had happened and as we saw that it was inevitable to go over to the more expensive deep mining, we tried urgently to get into contact with Giulini to obtain a change of prices and stipulations of quality. For a long time we did not receive any answer from Giulini but we continued delivery. We also continued some test drilling in the Edgar mine and through them we found, at depths of 21 to 23 meters, extensive mineral beds of excellent quality. We enclose the respective technical report, which also describes the chances of exportation.

At the end of October, Dr. Edgar Giulini, Director Frick, and an engineer of the firm came to Budapest. Dr. Timar was doing military service during the entire fall and for this reason Engineer Krausz negotiated with these gentlemen. He described to them the situation and explained to them that the Hungarian National Bank was not going to permit the exportation of bauxite under the originally stipulated conditions on account of the rise in prices which had taken place in the meantime. Giulini, in the beginning, did not want to agree to a change of conditions but, as the National Bank had made known to them that it would not permit exportation under the original conditions, they finally declared their readiness to negotiate new prices and terms. (Terms omitted.)

Thereafter, Giulinis inspected the mine, together with Engineer Krausz; they expressed their satisfaction about all they had seen and they were delighted about the quantity as well as the quality of the mineral to be expected. Already, during the course of the negotiations, we had told them that the beginning of deep mining made investments necessary and we asked them to put at our disposal amounts necessary for the investments, either in the form of an advance or in the form of a loan, because under the present circumstances it was difficult for us to turn to you. Upon our return from the mine to Budapest, Giulinis informed us that the German Foreign Funds Control would not permit either an advance or a loan and that for this reason they would report to you about the inspection and that they would request you to put up the capital necessary for the investments.

A short time thereafter, we were forced to stop production because it would have been necessary to begin deep mining, for which the necessary means were not and are not at our disposal. Since for half a year we can only communicate with you by means of wires and it appears that in this way we would not succeed in convincing you that the beginning of deep mining is absolutely necessary and the sole profitable solution, because exact scientific tests have shown beyond doubt that the mineral is there, and as the contract is in our hands as the prices can be raised with the assistance of the National Bank, according to market prices and the general situation, all requisites are there for considerable success of our enterprise. Had the necessary capital been at our disposal already three to four months ago we, to our best belief, could have already delivered considerable quantities. Instead, however, we passed the entire winter waiting; our general expenses remained unchanged; we had to carry the public fees undiminishedly, and for this reason it is self-evident that the future of our corporation without productive work can only result in continued heavy losses.

Based upon the telegraphic authorization from you, we began to negotiate with various parties for the purpose of selling or leasing the mine. Taken altogether, we can say about these negotiations the following:

A loan can only be obtained if the creditor, in addition to interest, is given a considerable share of the profits. We are faced with outright fantastic demands which make the solution absolutely not profitable. It is self-evident that the situation would be quite different if we could obtain a guarantee through your Swiss banking connection. In such a case we could obtain a loan at bank terms.

We also obtained an offer for sale in the amount of 280,000 to 300,000 pengo. All interested parties, however, were only inclined to purchase the interest of Transdanubia if Giulinis would be willing to give up their part. Giulinis were not disinclined to accept such a solution, but as the purchasers wished to have a general release in regard to lawsuits and public fees, Giulinis refused to accept these terms because, according to Dr. Ballays' information, their relation with Koranye is not settled. Therefore, only one solution is left—merely to lease the mine in agreement with Giulinis in such a way that the new lessee takes over the stipulated deliveries for Giulini and that they at the same time state to us that they would not raise against us any claims based upon our breaking of the delivery contract. We succeeded, finally, in finding a noble aristocrat who is willing to lease the mine, but he does not want to pay us more than 1.60 pengo per ton. This would be a very unfavorable solution because in the three years of the lease contract nearly no profit would be left, whereas the lessor in the meantime would take out and deliver from the Edgar mine considerable quantities.

Unfortunately, the prices of all supplies for deep mining have in recent times considerably risen so that, including the general expenses and public fees which accrued in the meantime, 55,000 to 60,000 pengos would be necessary for the beginning of the enterprise. This amount we figured based upon careful—even pessimistic—calculations and we believe that with this amount the production could be really put into such state that premiums would be guaranteed and that not only the invested amount, but in addition, considerable sums could be earned. (List of supplies follows.)

This is how matters stand. In our opinion, only one possible profitable and reasonable solution is existent—namely, by making the necessary investments for the beginning of deep mining and to start deliveries as soon as possible. It cannot be overlooked that we did not fulfill our delivery contract with Giulinis and although we have in this respect many excuses, we must nevertheless face the possibility that if further deliveries happen in the matter Giulinis will revoke the contract and start against us a lawsuit for damages as they are not obliged to share in our investments. Instead of productive work, we would have a long drawn-out and expensive lawsuit which, even if we won, would stop the production because we cannot hope to use the mines under Giulinis' consent during a lawsuit with them.

With the mining facilities all judicial matters are settled and the authorities during the last months were really very helpful in every respect. Also, production went along nicely, payments for the produced mineral were made without difficulties against documents and all hope was there that the enterprise would develop normally and even begin to bloom.

It would be really sad if we would be forced right now to leave the sure profits to third parties.

For this reason we beg you very much to revise your position and to make it possible to maintain the enterprise out of own means. From this letter and enclosures you will see that all conditions are fulfilled to meet the contracts and to let bloom the enterprise. Should you, however, in spite of the above, remain upon the stand taken, namely, not to put at our disposal the amounts necessary for the investments, in this case please permit that we, if worse comes to worst, enter into the above-mentioned lease agreement.

Time presses. The public fees must be paid and general expenses exist to a certain degree. On the other side, we had for months no income whatsoever. Every day which we delay production and delivery means a loss irrespective of the fact that we have no money at all at our disposal to bear the public fees for any length of time. For this reason we ask you to let us know your decision as soon as possible—a decision which we hope will be favorable for the enterprise.

With greatest respect,

THE DEED OF GIFT OF OCTOBER 5, 1931.

A critical evaluation of the provisions of the deed of gift leads me to distinguish three groups of agreements namely:

1. The gift;
2. The usufruct;
3. The advancement.

I.

The gift.

In the provisions relating to the gift—these are paragraphs 1 to 4, and 10—distinction must again be made between:

(a) the gift (paragraphs 1-4) and

(b) the "reversion" of the gift (paragraph 10).

Re (a): In making the gift, distinction must again be made between the in personam agreement (the gift promise) and the execution of the gift.

A written gift promise is void according to law. But the lack of formality of the gift promise is remedied by the proper execution of the gift. The deed of gift contains a so-called "cash gift", i.e. a gift in which the promise and the act of donation coincide. In this case the proper execution of the gift, i.e. in this case the transfer of the title is decisive for the validity of this act. The transfer of title is generally effected by "delivery of possession", to the donee the actual power of disposal. However, since the shares in question (p. 2) were deposited in a bank, the delivery was to be replaced, as provided by law specifically for such cases, by the assignment of the claim against the bank for delivery of the shares in accordance with the contract of deposit or bailment. This was done by the provision of paragraph 4 of the deed. Thus, what we have before us is a proper transfer of title, hence a perfectly valid gift.

Re (b): The last paragraph of the contract provides that under certain circumstances, the gift which was executed is to become "void", and that the shares or their substitutes including the unused income are to "revert" to the parents. It was evidently the intent of the contracting parties that these provisions should secure an automatic reversion of the property of the parents. But this effect could have been attained only if the title itself had been transferred conditionally, namely on the "condition subsequent" of the event contemplated in paragraph 10. Legal texts and the decisions, are unanimous in maintaining that the transfer of title on a condition subsequent is permitted and that it has the effect of an automatic reversion in the event that the condition should occur. It appears doubtful, however, whether the contract may be interpreted liberally to provide that it was the intent of the contradicting parties to make the transfer of the title dependent upon the condition subsequent of the event contemplated in paragraph 10. In my opinion a reasonable interpretation of the contract would lead to this conclusion. It must, however, be remembered that much will depend, in case of dispute, on whether the court takes a formalistic approach or not.

But the fact remains that the subject of the gift—the shares—have been sold, and that with the proceeds of this sale, other assets have been purchased. Paragraph 10 takes this fact into consideration (p. 3) by extending the "reversion" clause of the contract to the "substituted values including the unused income". This provision, however, is undoubtedly imperative to transfer title, since the law of personal and real property which is governed by the publicity principle, calls for unambiguous, clearly defined conditions, because the provisions of the law of real and personal property governing the transfer do not only the legal relations between the contracting parties, but also those of any third party. It must, therefore, be emphasized that the parents in no case reacquire directly the substituted values including the unused income, if the event discussed in paragraph 10 should occur.

An interpretation which takes due consideration of the intent of the contracting parties, must of necessity come to an interpretation of paragraph 10 (so-called supplementing interpretation) which would permit the parents in the case provided for in this paragraph to demand, that the substituted values including the unused income be transferred to them. It is to be noted, however, that the parents do not acquire the title automatically, but that they merely obtain a so-called in personam claim to the transfer of the title. Hence, they will not obtain the title until the property assets are assigned to them by special transfers in accordance with the law of personal and real property. It is, of course, a great difference whether the title will revert automatically, or whether there is merely a claim for transfer of title which represents an inferior legal position. An example from the law of bankruptcy may serve to illustrate the practical consequences. There the owner has a right in rem for the delivery of his property, the unsecured claimant, however, must be satisfied with receiving his mere pro rata share as an unsecured creditor.

II.

The usufruct.

The provision regarding the creation of the usufruct was intended to provide as a precaution (p. 4) for the parents. This in rem security has not been achieved, however, for the usufruct as stipulated, is not valid.

The creation of a valid usufruct, according to law, presupposes that the res in which the usufruct is to be created is "delivered" to the usufructuary, or, if the res is deposited with a third party, the actual "delivery" is substituted—as in the case of the transfer of title—by the assignment of the claim to have the res delivered on the strength of the deposit or bailment contract. While this has been taken account of in the deed of gift by the provision of paragraph 4, the inclusion of a corresponding clause regarding the creation of the usufruct has been overlooked. It should have therefore been stipulated that the son, for the purpose of creating the usufruct, in turn reassign to the parents, after the transfer of title, the claim to the delivery of the shares which had been assigned to him according to paragraph 4 (which was necessary in order to effect the transfer of the title). Only thus would a valid usufruct have been created. But more than that: even if a valid usufruct had been created, the in rem security thus achieved would have been lost by the sale of the shares. To be sure, the contracting parties have anticipated this case and tried to meet it in the contract by simply providing that the usufruct was to include the substituted assets as well. But this agreement is no doubt also invalid, because the requirement of defining it particularly the res in question which is essential in all transactions affecting title is lacking. Therefore in conclusion it must be stated that the parents have not achieved the intended position as usufructuaries.

Nevertheless, one might ask whether the contract may not be interpreted to imply that the parents have the right, at any rate (p. 5) to demand the subsequent establishment of a valid usufruct. In my opinion, such an interpretation would be entirely correct, since it takes due account of the intent of the contracting parties which was clearly expressed by the provisions of the contract.

It must, however, be noted that it makes a great difference whether the parents have the in rem security of a usufruct or only a so-called in personam claim to the creation of a usufruct. If the parents are usufructuaries they have immediate title to the income. If, on the other hand, they have only an in personam claim to the creation of a usufruct, then the income accrues directly to the son.

This legal situation is of great importance not only from the point of view of private law, but also of almost decisive consequences as regards the provisions of the foreign exchange law. If a valid usufruct was created, the parents have immediate title to the income and are, therefore, obliged to report and to deliver the foreign exchange which has automatically accrued to them. In this connection it must be remembered that the duty to convert foreign exchange cannot be rendered nugatory by a subsequent waiver by the parents of the automatically accrued income, for even a waiver is a "Transfer" within the meaning of the foreign exchange regulations, requiring a specific license. These results flowing from the provisions of the law concerning foreign exchange control were evidently not taken into consideration when the contract was concluded.

But since a valid usufruct has not been created and hence immediate title to the income does not accrue to the parents, no legal obligation to report and to deliver arises, under the provisions of the foreign exchange control law, for no foreign exchange accrues automatically. For this reason, no penalty should have been imposed for a violation of the provisions governing foreign exchange control with respect to the income from the usufruct, since (p. 6) no valid usufruct exists at all, and therefore a legal basis for conclusions grounded on foreign exchange control law is lacking. (As early as last year, on the occasion of the discussions on the foreign exchange case, the undersigned set forth these principles of private law, but was unable in the general excitement of those days, to get any attention to these legal considerations which require a rigid concentration of mind and are very difficult to understand for a layman; he therefore did not get a chance to present these arguments to the legal experts of the ministries). The mere in personam claim to the creation of a usufruct, the only thing that exists, is entirely irrelevant within the meaning of the foreign exchange law, since it does not constitute a claim within the terms of its provisions.

If it is thus established that the income accrues directly to the son, a further question is presented, regarding the existing rights during the period in which the parents do not insist on stipulating a usufruct with in rem validity. It must be assumed that by way of interpretation, one would arrive at the conclusion that the parents should have a claim arising from unjust enrichment on the ground that it was evidently the intention of the contracting parties that the parents were to get the income less 20%. This claim arising from unjust enrichment further includes a claim to information and to an accounting, for without this ancillary claim the parents would have no means of enforcing their claim for payment based on unjust enrichment.

III.

The Advancement.

The validity of the provisions pertaining hereto (paragraphs 6, 7, 8 and 9) is free from doubt since they merely establish in personam claims. It follows that the duty to account for the advancement, can validly include the substituted assets and the unused income (p. 7).

Now, these provisions stipulate that when the advancement is accounted for, the value of the shares or their substitutes including the income not used as of the date of the accounting for the advancement shall be used. This provision makes it necessary that in the event when the time for accounting has arrived, comprehensive information must be given and accounts rendered by the son; in addition, an evaluation or estimate with respect to the assets involved in the accounting must be made, which may prove very difficult.

This stipulation may be changed against the will of the son only by a testamentary act of the father which would encumber the son with an advancement in favor of the daughter. If the son consents, however, it can be changed simply by a supplementary agreement amending the deed of gift.

If it is to be the purpose of such an agreement to eliminate the difficulties which will arise in the event of an accounting, then it would be advisable to fix the value of the advancement in a definite account now. Difficulties would arise solely in connection with the usufruct problem. Things are simplified, however, if the parents waive the subsequent establishment of a valid usufruct. I presume that this will be the case, if for no other reason than the results flowing from the provisions the foreign exchange control law. If, thus a lien for the parents is eliminated, the question arises whether it would not be advisable to stipulate in personam obligations which establish a duty of the son to make contributions to his parents in the event of need. In my opinion, such an agreement would be rather ineffective as a practical means of securing such a claim. Moreover, it must be remembered, that the son is already required by law to support his parents i.e. by reason of the provisions of the law regarding the obligation of maintenance, which give the parents, in case of need, automatic claim against their son to maintain them in keeping with their social station (p. 8). Aside from this, the parents would, according to the provisions of law concerning gifts, have a legal claim to the return of the gift within ten years from the date of the gift, if they become unable to support themselves in keeping with their social station. In this connection it may be mentioned that the son may avert this claim for the return of the gift by paying for the maintenance of his parents in keeping with their social station.

If the value of the gift is fixed at a definite amount which is to be used as basis for the settlement, then the son would have to carry the economic risk. It would then be logical not to increase the advancement by the amount of the unused income from the usufruct, but rather to stipulate that the value at which the gift which is to be settled be reduced by the sum total of payments which may have been made by the son since the gift was made.

A draft of the proposed amendment of the deed of gift is attached.

An den Herrn
Praesidenten des Landesfinanzamts Wiesbaden, (Devisenstelle)

In the deed of gift of October 5, 1931, Geheimer Kommerzienrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his wife Marta, nee Bade, transferred to their son Fritz von Opel 6 million shares nominal value, of the firm of Adam Opel A. G. reserving to themselves the right of usufruct in these shares in case of need.

The undersigned, examined the deed of gift from the point of view of private law and has ascertained that a usufruct for the parents did not materialize because the provisions of article 1032 of the BGB (Code of Civil Law) have not been complied with.

The parties to the agreement intend to take action on the basis of this conclusion and to declare explicitly, in a supplement to be drawn up to the deed of gift, that the usufruct stipulations contained therein will be considered as void. By law such a declaration is not required, because it will not create any new rights, but simply declares the rights of all concerned as they already existed. However, in order to create a clear legal situation and to avoid controversies about hereditary rights, the undersigned has advised to declare once more formally, that the usufruct clause is considered void.

In the opinion of the undersigned the supplementary declaration will have no relevance to the foreign exchange regulations. However, in order to give the parties concerned a feeling of complete security, I have thought it advisable to submit the supplementary declaration to the Foreign Exchange Control Office for their information and approval.

In the interest of legal certainty I am therefore asking you on behalf of the parties concerned, to issue a certificate to the effect, that the intended supplementary declaration does not violate any foreign exchange regulations.

A draft of the supplementary declaration as well as a copy of the deed of gift are enclosed.

Supplementary declaration to the deed of gift of October 5, 1931.

I, the undersigned Geheime Kommerzienrat Dr. ing. h. c. Wilhelm von Opel, and my wife Marta, nee Bade, intended by the above mentioned gift agreement to reserve for ourselves an in rem guaranty in case of need and believed, therefore, to have acquired a right of usufruct subject to a condition precedent by way of the usufruct provisions. However, an examination of the deed of gift has shown that under the rules of private law, the in rem guaranty we intended to secure for ourselves in case of need was not achieved at all, since the provisions of the law of personal and real property governing the establishment of a usufruct were not complied with. For we neglected to conclude an agreement with our son to the effect that he reassign to us the claim of delivery of the shares to us, which claim we assigned to him for the purpose of having the title transferred to him. However, such an agreement would have been required to establish a valid right of usufruct. The legal examination has further shown that even if a valid right of usufruct had been established, it would have become void at any rate by the later sale of the shares.

In the meantime we have become convinced that a sufficient guaranty is afforded us by the legal provisions governing the obligation of support as well as by the legal provisions governing gifts, which provide that we have a claim against our son for the return of the shares in the event of our inability to support ourselves in accordance with our station in life.

In view of the foregoing we declare, also with a view to preclude any future dispute over the dispositions of our estates that we consider as void the provisions of the above mentioned deed of gift concerning the usufruct.

I, the undersigned Diplom-Ingenieur Fritz von Opel, have read the above and consent to its contents.

Re: Application of the undersigned to the Wiesbaden foreign exchange control office of October 8, 1935.

The gift agreement of October 5, 1935, starts by assigning title to the donated shares, with careful attention being given to all the details required in such cases by the law of property. It then goes on to say that the usufruct of the shares shall not be assigned.

The question might arise in this connection whether the parents have not simply retained title to the usufruct, and whether the transfer of title has not been confined to a limited portion of the property.

The possibility of such a legal arrangement touches fundamental principles of the system of real property. Such an arrangement cannot, however, be brought into accord with the principles of the present German Civil Code, since usufruct, is not a quantitative part of the property, but a right sui generis. This has been established by the decisions of the courts (cf. KGJ.—decisions of the Berlin Kammergericht, Supreme Court of Appeal) edited by Johow—51st volume, page 291, and 43rd volume, page 229). Copy of the decision in the 51st volume of the KGJ is enclosed herewith.

No usufruct of a mortgage for the mortgagee.

A mortgagee cannot establish a usufruct of his own mortgage for himself. If he wants to retain the usufruct for himself when assigning the mortgage, then this can only be done by the new mortgagee who has to establish a usufruct for his predecessor.

Civil code of August 18, 1896 (Reich Law Gazette page 195) articles 1018 etc., 1069, 1154; Act concerning the Registration of Real Estate (Grundbuchordnung) of March 24, 1897/May 20, 1898 (Reich Law Gazette 1898, page 754) articles 19, 26.

Decision of April 11, 1918 (1, X. 55/18), Amtsgericht and Landgericht (Lower court and superior court) of Stettin. On July 30, 1917, Mrs. J. assigned to her daughter, by a deed drawn up by a notary public, a mortgage loan claim of RM 100,000.00 which was registered in her name, bue reserved to herself the "usufruct" of this claim. In this deed she simultaneously consented to, and applied for, the registration of the assignment and of the "reserved usufruct" in the land register.

She also declared that, because of the reserved usufruct, the mortgage deed would remain in her possession, and that the agreement regarding the usufruct was to serve as substitute for the conveyance. The land registry office objected to this application by means of an interim decision. The complaint of by Mrs. J. was not successful. A further complaint on her part was refused.

Arguments.

The previous mortgagee has consented to, and applied for, the registration of the assignment of the mortgage to her daughter, and the reservation of the usufruct for herself. The document of July 30, 1917, furthermore contains the declaration of assignment of the former mortgagee, and her declaration that she reserves the usufruct to herself. The land registry office with the consent of the court of appeal demands, that the document be supplemented, arguing that a usufruct is an independent right, which would have to be established by the new mortgagee, because the former mortgagee could not conclude a contract with herself. This opinion is correct. A usufruct (articles 1030 through 1089, Civil Code) in its relation to the object or right encumbered by it is an independent right (p. 2) (KGJ—decisions of the Kammergericht*) (Supreme Court of Brandenburg) edited by Johow, vol. 43, page 229). Together with the real estate servitudes (articles 1018 to 1029) and the limited personal servitudes (articles 1090 through 1093) it belongs to those servitudes which are dealt with in book 3 section 5 of the Civil Code. The characteristics common to all servitudes are that the substance of the right is directed towards the use of a res of another person or the property of another person (cf. Turnau-Foerster, Liegenschaftsrecht (Real Estate Law) third edition, vol. 1 page 554; v. Staudinger, Civil Code, 7th and 8th editions, vol. 3 page 543; RGRaete—Commentary to the Civil Code by the Supreme Court Justice—second edition, article 1018, Note 1). According to these commentaries and in accordance with the principle that no person can conclude a contract with himself, the very concept of a servitude precludes the possibility that a person could establish a servitude for himself in his own res or his own right (cf. KGJ 20 page A 297; RGZ—Reichsgerichts-Entscheidungen in Zivilsachen (Supreme Court Decisions in Civil Matters) 47 page 208; Guethe, GBO—Grundbuchordnung, (Act concerning the Registration of Real Estate) third edition vol. 2 page 1755, "Rights in one's own Res". It follows that a mortgagee cannot establish for himself a usufruct of his own mortgage. The legal situation is the same in case the mortgagee, simultaneously with establishing the usufruct for himself, assigns the mortgage to another person. Because in this case as well he wishes to establish for himself the usufruct of the mortgage which he still owns, i.e. establish for himself the usufruct of a right of his own. According to the above argumentation this is inadmissible (same arguments in Oberneck, GBR—Grundbuchrecht—Commentary, Law concerning the Registration of Real Estate, 4th edition, 1, page 680). The assumption, however, that the mortgage is being assigned without the right of usufruct, and that the former mortgagee would remain the owner of the right of usufruct, is contradicted by the consideration that a usufruct is by no means a quantitative part of the mortgage but according to the Civil Code, an independent right (KGJ vol. 43 page 229). Therefore, the intended reservation of the usufruct can only be obtained if the new mortgagee establishes the usufruct in favor of the former mortgagee. Likewise, the new mortgagee is the only person affected by the establishment of the usufruct in the sense of article 19 GBO. In the face of this the complainant is wrong in citing the decision of the Kammergericht quoted in OLG (decisions of the Oberlandesgericht) 12 page 287, as well as Planck, Commentary to the Civil Code, third edition, 1158 Note 2, and Predari, GBO, second edition, article 61, note 3, because it cannot be admitted that in these decisions and commentaries opinions were expressed which would contradict the above stated views. In view of the special legal situation a different interpretation was placed on those cases only where it was not the former mortgagee who was to become the beneficiary of the usufruct, but in which simultaneously with the assignment the usufruct was to be established in favor of a third person (KGJ 40 page 277; see also 43 page 227). If in her second complaint the complainant alleges that according to the Civil Code a mortgage may be assigned under reservation of a right of usufruct, in the same way as according to Common Law, it could have been assigned deducto usufructu, then the question may be left open what the legal situation was according to Common Law. From the point of view of the law laid down in the Civil Code, which is the only law to be considered in the present case, the opinion of the lower courts alone can be recognized as correct.

To establish a usufruct of a bonded mortgage it is, according to articles 1069, 1154 of the Civil Code necessary that a declaration establishing it be made in writing and that the mortgage deed be delivered. The registration of the usufruct in the land register may take the place of the written declaration establishing it (article 1154, paragraph 2 Civil Code). In general, it is not for the judge in charge of the land register to examine whether or not the material prerequisites have been fulfilled. All he needs, therefore, apart from the presentation of the mortgage deed and, if necessary, the registration of the person establishing the usufruct is the approval of the registration by the person establishing it, whereby this approval, which has to be given in the form prescribed by article 29 GBO, is a matter of formal law (articles 19, 40, 42, 62 BGO; KGJ 40 page 277). In the present case of article 26 paragraph 2 GBO the material declaration concerning the establishment of the usufruct (p. 3) has already been granted recognition as a sufficient basis for the registration, in place of the approval of the registration (Decisions of the Supreme Court published in [the periodical] "Recht" 1912 No. 1007; commentaries of the GBO: article 26 by Guethe, third edition, Note 7, 15; Arnheim, second edition, note 13; Predari, second edition, note 3). In the present case, the mortgage deed has been submitted to the land registry office. The new mortgagee shall be registered in the land register before the usufruct is registered. Therfore, what is still needed is the approval of the registration by the new mortgagee, which has to be given in the form prescribed by article 29 GBO, or der declaration concerning the establishment of the usufruct, to be made in the same form. The interim order, sustained by the Landgericht, which demands a "supplement" must therefore, in the light of the argumentation attached to it, be understood to mean that one of these two documents (approval of registration, or declaration concerning the establishment of the usufruct) still has to be submitted. In view of the above explanations, this demand is justified that to that extent no further complaint may be sustained.

In reply to the decision of December 13, 1935, of the Regional Revenue Office, Kassel, Frankfort am Main branch, issued upon instructions from the Reich Office for Foreign Exchange Control, I beg to state the following:

I.

A. In the draft of the supplementary declaration and in the statements of the undersigned of October 8 and November 22, 1935, it was set forth that according to German law a valid usufruct had not been agreed upon.

Now, according to German law of conflicts the law of that country is applicable to the establishment of a usufruct in which the res in which the usufruct is to be created is physically located (lex rei sitae). Since the donated shares were deposited in the United States, the law of that country would have to be applied. However, the usufruct, as a legal institution, is unknown to American law.

But even assuming a valid usufruct as having been established, a waiver of the right of usufruct would not require a license under the terms of the foreign exchange control laws. There are no provisions in the foreign exchange laws which could be construed as a basis for the requirement of such a license. The usufruct as such is, in fact, outside the scope of the property rights to which the foreign exchange law applies (cf. article 6 paragraphs 1-5 and article 24 of the Foreign Exchange law). This is also justified by the nature of the matter because a usufruct, being an absolutely personal, inalienable and uninheritable right, is in direct contrast to the negotiable rights to which alone, according to its nature, the entire foreign exchange legislation and control can apply. The fact that monetary claims or any other of the rights enumerated in article 6 paragraphs 1-5 and article 24 of the Foreign Exchange law, might arise from a usufruct in favor of the beneficiary of the usufruct does not justify characterizing the usufruct, as such, as a right subject to foreign exchange laws (c.f. Hartenstein, appendix to article 14, page 140).

Now, there cannot be any doubt that a valid usufruct has not been agreed upon; for the requirement of publicity, indispensable for the validity of a usufruct, is lacking. However, by way of a liberal interpretation of the agreement, one might concede that the parents have an in personam claim to the subsequent establishment of a valid usufruct. But such an in personam claim would at any rate not be subject to foreign exchange legislation, because it does not result in an immediate accrual of the legal benefits as in case of the usufruct; it does not even represent a future claim to such benefits, but merely an expectancy which is remote, and not definable by law or economics (p. 2).

B. As regards the substance of the "usufruct", this right was meant by the interested parties, right from the start, to become effective only if and when they should become unable to maintain a standard of living in keeping with their social station. It is true that this conditional character of the usufruct was not made as clear in the deed of gift as would have been desirable, but the intention of the parties to the agreement was from the very beginning directed towards that end and has been manifested ever since by their actual conduct both before and after the conclusion of the agreement.

For an intelligent interpretation of the agreement, one must not overlook the fact that the assumption of an unconditional usufruct would presuppose that the parties themselves intended to frustrate the agreement in an almost absurd fashion. Furthermore the following observation is in point:

The fact that the parties themselves did not aim at a usufruct to become effective immediately upon conclusion of the agreement is shown by the provision of paragraph 8 of the deed of gift that the advancement will be increased by the income not withdrawn; they would, on the other hand, not have neglected to include in the agreement a provision regarding the re-assignment of the claim to the shares delivered, if the possibility that the usufruct should become effective immediately had at all entered their minds. Finally, the conditional character of the usufruct is clearly proved by the report made on October 27, 1933, in compliance with the Law concerning Treason to the People, this report reads as follows: "Conditional usufruct according to the provisions of the deed of gift of October 5, 1931."

II.

The facts are as follows:

As already reported to the branch office in Frankfurt am Main Mr. Fritz von Opel no longer owns the General Motors shares in question. In keeping with the tradition of his family, he invested his money in industrial enterprises. A specified list of the investments of Mr. Fritz von Opel was handed to the Reichsbankdirektorium at the conference of June 29, 1934. Reference may be made to this list. The enclosed complete statement of the attorney-at-law Mr. E. Meier of February 5, of this year shows the present status of Mr. Fritz von Opel's property and income.

III.

In the interests of legal certainty an authentic declaration of the applicable provisions of the foreign exchange control laws to the facts of the case is required. This certainty will be attained if the following determinations are made.

1. The parents have an in personam claim to the establishment of a usufruct subject to a condition precedent to become effective if and when they should become unable to maintain a standard of living in keeping with their social station

2. No foreign exchange license is needed to dispose of the claim mentioned under 1.

From a financial viewpoint, the parents are not in need of a subsequent establishment of a usufruct, subject to a condition precedent, to become effective in case of need, since they are sufficiently secured, by law, by the provisions concerning the obligation of maintenance, as well as the regulations governing gifts, which provide that a donor may claim from the donee the restitution of the gift, in case he becomes unable to maintain out of his own means a standard of living in keeping with his social station. For these reasons the parents do not intend to assert their claim, if such an in personam claim exists, to a subsequent establiishment of a usufruct, subject to a condition precedent, and to take steps against their son for its enforcement.

Should the National Office of Foreign Exchange Control intend to include in its decision a demand for another delivery of foreign exchange, the undersigned begs to point out now, that in view of the present financial position of Mr. Fritz von Opel only a very limited amount of foreign exchange could be delivered presently, since means for that purpose could not be made available without selling property assets at very great loss and since raising another loan would involve considerable difficulties and even considerable risks.

A copy of this letter was sent to the Branch office in Frankfort am Main.

Subject: Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel.

In the deed of gift of October 5, 1931, a copy of which is enclosed, Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his wife intended to reserve to themselves a security interest in the legal form of a right of usufruct, to become effective in the event that they themselves would at some time become financially distressed. All controlling parties were fully agreed when making the contract, that the usufruct was to be subject to a condition precedent and to become effective only in case the parents should become unable to maintain themselves in a standard of living in keeping with their social station. It is true that this conditional nature of the usufruct was not defined as precisely in the text of the deed of gift itself, as would have been desirable. But as mentioned already, the intention of the parties was directed to this and from the very beginning and this intention has been manifested by the actual conduct of the parties both during and after the conclusion of the agreement. The fact that contracting parties, when concluding the contract, in no way intended to create a usufruct to become effective immediately, appears from the provision of paragraph 8 of the deed of gift that the advancement was to be increased by the income not withdrawn. It is furthermore an indispensable prerequisite for the creation of a valid usufruct that the requirement of publicity as provided in section 1032 of the Civil Code has been fulfilled. The parties, however, would not have failed to agree on reassigning the claim to the deposited shares, a claim that had originally been assigned for the purpose of transferring title, if they had at all contemplated making the usufruct effective immediately.

Finally, upon an intelligent interpretation of the contract it ought to be considered that an assumption of an unconditional usufruct would presuppose that the contracting parties themselves intended to defeat in a perfectly nonsensical manner, the very purpose for which the contract was concluded. And ultimately, the conditional character of the usufruct is proven unmistakably by the report of Geheimrat Wilhelm von Opel of October 27, 1933, made in compliance with the Law concerning Treason to the People, which reads as follows: "Conditional usufruct according to deed of gift of October 5, 1931."

But even this right of usufruct subject to condition precedent, intended by the contracting parties has not materialized. In the first place, as mentioned above, the indispensable prerequisite of publicity as required by section 1032 of the Civil Code was disregarded, i.e. the creation of a valid usufruct would have required an explicit agreement regarding the re-assignment of the claims to the deposited shares in lieu of delivery. On the other hand, the fact was overlooked that, according to the German law of conflicts, with respect to real and personal property, the law of the country where the res is found governs the creation of rights in that res (lex rei sitae). The donated stock, however, was deposited with a New York bank, so that the provisions of American law should have been applied. However, the usufruct is an institution unknown to American law.

Now, if the contract were to be construed liberally, one might be inclined (p. 3) to concede to the parents a in personam claim to a subsequent establishment of a usufruct subject to a condition precedent. However, economically speaking the parents are not in need of such a subsequent establishment, in case of an emergency, of a usufruct subject to a condition precedent. Since the parents are sufficiently secured by law, by the provisions concerning the obligation of maintenance as well as the principles regarding gifts, which provide that a donor may claim from the donee the restitution of the gift in case he becomes unable to maintain from his own means a standard of living in keeping with his social station. For these reasons the parents do not intend to assert their in personam claim, if any such claim exists, to a subsequent establishment of a usufruct subject to a condition precedent or to take steps against their son in order to enforce it.

The remarks referring to the usufruct in the income and property tax return for 1934 of Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his wife were vague and not made by an expert. Moreover, any remarks referring to the usufruct are irrelevant as far as taxation of income is concerned, and any reference to the foreign exchange law aspect of the question is misleading, since so far Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his wife did not receive any income from the alleged usufruct. An explanation of these remarks is to be found in the fact that the foreign exchange law aspect of the question was being handled in a way which gave the parties concerned a certain legal uncertainty, which, in turn, induced them, as a precaution, to say rather more than was really necessary.

Therefore, as regards the property tax which would be the only one relevant in the case, I beg to point out that the in personam claim of the parents to the establishment of a right of usufruct, subject to a condition precedent, to become effective in case they would be unable to maintain a standard of living in keeping with their social station, does not represent any assets at the present time. This in personam claim is not subject to property taxation particularly since economically speaking, it is to all intents and purposes identical with the maintenance claim already existing by virtue of the law.

In case any further information should be desired in addition to the above explanations the undersigned would ask to be instructed accordingly.

Subject: Usufruct case von Opel.

Sir,

With reference to our conference of June 27 in the above matter I beg to inform you of the following:

I informed Mr. Fritz von Opel that you told me that your legal aides in charge of the usufruct case also denied that Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel had a monetary claim against Mr. Fritz von Opel and that, consequently, no legal obligation exists within the terms of the provisions of the foreign exchange law.

Furthermore I informed Mr. Fritz von Opel that, notwithstanding this legal situation, you are taking the view that for various reasons and because of the foreign exchange situation he is obliged to deliver foreign exchange.

Mr. Fritz von Opel stated in his reply that even after the legal situation had now been defined authoritatively he wished, now as before, to do his share in relieving the demand for foreign exchange, which is so particularly pressing at the present moment, by voluntarily offering foreign exchange, but that he would not be willing (p. 2) to recognize the existence of a special extra-legal obligation thereto.

I have now proposed to Mr. Fritz von Opel to do his share to ascertain in an unbiassed way his net income and his ability to pay, which in your opinion you could not do without. This could be done by giving a leading firm of chartered accountants to be designated by the Reichsbank (say Haskins & Sells, Price-Waterhouse, Deutche Treuhandgesellschaft) a chance to make a thorough audit.

As far as the scope of such an audit is concerned, I think its aim should be to ascertain whether the Overseas Finance Corporation, Zurich, 16 St. Peter Str. would have been in a position already in the past to pay to Mr. Fritz von Opel any dividends or interest, if its accounts had been correctly balanced and how much the Overseas could perhaps be expected to pay to him from their distributable net profits in the near future.

Should you wish to extend the audit to include the American companies which form part of the assets of the Overseas Finance Corporation, the Overseas will arrange, through its voting power in the meetings of the Board of Directors or of the stockholders, that the American company, charged by the Reichsbank with the audit, be enabled to carry out its audit.

Such an audit, it seems to me, would have to aim at ascertaining whether these companies accumulated any open or hidden reserves in excess of those amounts which are considered customary in their branch of business, whether their business situation is such, as to justify using part of their funds to pay a dividend (p. 3) to the Overseas Finance Corporation and, if this is the case, how the balance sheet of the Overseas Finance Corporation would be affected by such payments.

Heil Hitler!

Sincerely yours

(sgd.) Dr. Gros

175. German Foreign Currency Regulations Shall Be Disregarded By The Swiss Courts.

The A.-G. fur Versicherungswerte in Zurich made a loan of R. M. 6000 to the Rheinischen Grundstucks-Handelsge-sellschaft m.B.H. on April 15, 1931 for three years with 6% interest. On December 30, 1933 the claim has been assigned by the A.-G. für Versicherungswerte to the A.-G. fur Immobilienwerte in Zurich. The assignee notified the assignment to the defendant on April 12, 1934 and ordered her to pay back the loan on April 15, 1934. The Defendant referred in its answer of April 23rd to the German Foreign Currency Regulation and asked plaintiff to agree that payment should be made on an account of blocked credit marks Kredit-Sperrmark-Konto. The plaintiff refused this proposition in his letter of May 4, 1934. Plaintiff, A.-G. fur Immobilienwerte brought a lawsuit for upholding the attachment of defendant's property and a claim has been upheld by the Commercial Court of Zurich. The Swiss Federal Supreme Court confirmed the decision with the following arguments:

1. The court below declared in correspondence with the parties that German law is applicable for the loan and for the assignment. The debtor had his domicile in Germany and the transaction was made in marks. So it is in fact to be assumed that the parties in making a loan contract considered the applicability of German law or at least they would have considered the applicability of German law if they had thought to fix the applicable law. (See for instance, BGE 54 II 316 E. 2 = Pr 17 Nr 185; 60 II 300 f. E. 2 = Pr 23 Nr. 147). This is confirmed by the position taken by the parties in the process—the plaintiff has taken the position of the creditor—. On the other hand under the precedence of the Federal Supreme Court the validity of the assignment is controlled by the same law that controls the assigned claim. That mean in this case also the German law (BGE 18 S. 522; 23 I 142; 39 II 76 f. E. 4 = Pr 2 Nr. 92; 41 II 134 E. 1 = Pr. 4 Nr. 88). From that would follow that the case cannot be considered by the Swiss Federal Supreme Court (Articles 56 and 57 Statute on Federal Procedure).[1] But the general applicability of the German law doesn't decide without further adieu if the Swiss Judge has really to apply this law. The question, if that is the case, is a problem of Swiss conflicts of law and has to be considered by the Swiss Federal Supreme Court (BGE 56 II 180 = Pr 19 Nr. 100).

2. From the beginning there is no discussion about the applicability of the rules of the German Civil Code because the defendant does not deny that under Section 607 of the German Civil it has become, by accepting the loan, the debtor of the A.-G. fur Versicherungswerte for an amount of R.M. 6000 and that the assignment of the claim to the plaintiff has been made in a correct way under Section 398 of the German Civil Code.

The defendant opposes to the claim indeed by reference to the German Foreign Currency Regulations and it says

a) that without a license of the German Devisenbewirtschaftungsstelle the assignment is void, and

b) that the performance of her duty as stipulated previously in the loan contract has become impossible and that therefore the duty to perform has been extinguished to this extent (§ 275 German Civil Code).

So the question mentioned before-hand arises, if the German Foreign Currency Regulations can be applied by a Swiss Judge; if the applicability of the German Foreign Currency Regulations is upheld the case is decided immediately for lack of a right to claim of the plaintiff, because the assignments were void under §15 of the German Foreign 1 These provisions limit the jurisdiction of the Swiss Federal Supreme Court to the application of Swiss Federal law. The Swiss Federal Supreme Court cannot investigate if foreign law has been applied in the correct way (By the Interpretor).

Currency law. That is the decision of the lower court and the Federal Supreme Court is bound by it (Federal Procedure Act, Sec. 57). On the other hand if the applicability is denied the judgment of the lower court has to be confirmed without further adieu.

3. The lower court denied the applicability of the German Foreign Currency Statute in the first line, because this statute belongs to the public law and because public law of foreign state should be disregarded by a Swiss Judge. It must not be decided if that is correct, because in all events the applicability is excluded for the other reasons given by the plaintiff. The prohibition of payments of the German Foreign Currency law and the other restrictions about claims are interferences with creditor rights in order to spoil them (spoliativen Eingriff in die Glaubigerrechte) and these prohibitions are contrary to the basic velocity of the Swiss Regulation Order. From this follows that the German Foreign Currency Regulation cannot be taken into consideration by a Swiss Judge either directly insofar as has been the contents of a claim, nor indirectly insofar as they make the performance impossible. The Federal Supreme Court has already decided in this way, in his judgment of September 18, 1934, in the case Nathan-Institut A.-G. c. Schweiz, Bank fur Kapitalanlagen entschieden (BGE 60 II 310 = Pr 23 Nr. 147) and we can refer to the arguments given there.

4. The defendant must agree itself that its position is prejudiced to a large extent by Swiss case law and by the judgment named above. The defendant asks basically just for reconsideration of the rules as laid down in that judgment, by making reference to some specific circumstances of the case at bar, by referring to the Article 164 of the Swiss Code of Obligation and the Decision of the Swiss Federal Supreme Court in BGE 42 II 380 ff = Pr 5 Nr. 127 and 43 II 230 ff. E. 4 = Pr 6 Nr. 118, by referring to the clearing agreement made between Switzerland and Germany to the Swiss Foreign Currency Regulations and finally to decisions of the German Supreme Court and the Austrian Supreme Court.

a) As to the special circumstances of the case the defendant alleges that the plaintiff got the claim in a moment when the German Foreign Currency Regulations were yet in force for a long time, and defendant says furthermore that the plaintiff undoubtedly just paid the exchange rate for blocked marks which is 30-to-40%, but both allegations have nothing to do with the problem if the German Foreign Currency Regulations are in contradiction with the Swiss Public Order. In fact the defendant intends to allege that the plaintiff acts against good faith if it asks for payment of the full debt (that really was a problem of the Swiss Public Order but it works in the contrary discussion in favor of the defendant). This objective is immaterial. The plaintiff got the claim by the assignment with all its rights, and it can claim these rights in full without becoming liable for abuse of rights. It is not up to the debtor to investigate under what circumstances and for what price the assignee acquired the claim.

b) The defendant referred to Article 164 of the Swiss Code of Obligations to show the invalidity of the assignment. It says that "the statute", namely the German Foreign Currency Regulations, stands against the assignment but that is just a petitio principii that presupposes that the Swiss Judge has to apply the German Foreign Currency Regulations and that must be denied for the reasons given above.

The defendant is also wrong with his reference to BGE 42 II 380 ff. = Pr 5 Nr. 127 and 43 II 230 ff. = Pr 6 Nr. 118.

In these cases dealing with the sale of eggs and wheat the Swiss Federal Supreme Court assumed that there was impossibility of performance because of the German and Austrian export prohibitions during the (First) World War. But these cases differ from the case at bar just in the decisive point whereas the direct or indirect applicability of the German Foreign Currency Regulations undoubtedly are against the Swiss Public Order. It was obvious that restrictions as to the export of merchandise of countries in war do not come under this rule.

c) Defendant alleged that Switzerland recognized that the German Foreign Currency Regulations is not in conflict with the Swiss Public Order because Switzerland made a clearing agreement with Germany and established for itself foreign currency regulations but the court below shows quite correctly that Switzerland entered the clearing agreement because it was forced to do so by the German Foreign Currency Regulations. Switzerland had to try to mitigate the disasterous consequences of the German Foreign Currency Regulations by counter-measures and by treaties. By entering the clearing agreement and by establishing foreign currency regulations for itself—regulations that after all are just based on this agreement—Switzerland never declared that the German Foreign Currency Regulations were corresponding to the basic concepts of Swiss law. They tried indeed only to protect the Swiss standpoint as well as possible against the interferences of the German law.

d) The German Supreme Court stated in a judgment of January 29, 1935 (s. Juristische Wochenschrift 1935 S. Nr. 2) that under the rules of good faith a foreign creditor could not refuse to accept payments on a blocked account instead of performance and the Austrian Supreme Court decided accordingly in Decision of September 25, 1934 (s.

"Die Rechtsprechung", 16. Jahrgang S. 206 Nr. 253) in favor of a Hungarian debtor in respect to the foreign currency regulations of his country.

The decision of foreign courts cannot be decisive for the establishment of the meaning of the Swiss Public Order by a Swiss court besides the fact that these cases are in contradiction with earlier decisions of courts of the same states. This point shows clearly the national aspect in deciding this kind of cases. Furthermore the two decisions have been criticized by the editors of the law reviews that published these decisions, especially the editor of the "Rechtsprechung" said that the decision of the highest Austrian court was "completely wrong."

5. Under these circumstances the Federal Supreme Court has no reason to go away from the rules laid down in the previous decision 60 II 294 ff. = Pr. 23 Nr. 147.

As to the impossibility of performance it may be said furthermore that the defendant seems to have assets in Switzerland because the plaintiff attached them and so the defendant can fulfill its obligations. In this case there is obviously no impossibility of performance. There is just a problem if under the rules of good faith the defendant can be asked to pay back the loan because the German Foreign Currency statute (paragraph 42, fig. 3) provides heavy penalties for a debtor who makes payments without a license. But this problem is out of consideration because the defendant doesn't pay by its free volition but opposes to the payment so that plaintiff has to meet the payment by way of coercion; to-wit, by judgment of court.

Dear Mr. Markham:

My letter of explanation has, I understand, just been forwarded to you. The enclosure further reveals the serious situation which confronts Spur. Platt's Oilgram (enclosed) is the oil industry's chief news service, and has long been absolutely depended upon as reliable.

The indicated military demand, or anything near it, will certainly eliminate "A" and "B" coupons. It will incidentally close down the Spur Company. If we are to protect ourselves by arranging credits, action must be taken at once. I don't see how it could be done later.

The conversion of the A. P. C. stock into first mortgage bonds would certainly strengthen your position and would enable the American stockholders to save themselves.

We will be grateful if a decision can be arrived at upon this matter.

MINUTES OF SPECIAL MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF SPUR DISTRIBUTING CO., INC.

NOVEMBER 9, 1944.

Pursuant to call by the President and written notice as required by the By-Laws, the Board of Directors of Spur Distributing Co., Inc. met in special meeting at the office of the Company at Eighth Avenue and Bradford Avenue, Nashville, Tennessee, on Thursday, November 9, 1944, at 2:00 o'clock P.M. The following directors were present in person:

J. Mason Houghland
Paul M. Davis
H. D. Hines
Cecil Sims

J. Mason Houghland presided at the meeting as Chairman, and H. D. Hines acted as Secretary.

The written notice of the meeting was read by the Secretary and was ordered filed in the minute book immediately following the minutes of the meeting.

The President, J. Mason Houghland, stated to the Directors that the meeting had been called because the Company faces a most serious emergency growing out of the recent action of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A.G. in instituting suit in the United States District Court at Washington, D. C., on October 25, 1944, the legal effect of which was to restrain and postpone the sale of the 73,000 shares of the Company's stock previously seized by the Alien Property Custodian on June 4, 1942, and advertised to be sold at public auction at 12:00 o'clock noon on Friday, October 27, 1944, at 120 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

It was the opinion of the directors that since the beginning of the war with Germany and the seizure of the above stock by the Alien Property Custodian as property belonging to an enemy alien, and the wide publicity given thereto, the Company had suffered great embarrassment and its activities had been impaired due to the general belief of the public that the Company was owned and controlled by German interests and the natural disinclination of American customers to do business with an enemy owned institution. The President pointed out to the directors that while all companies engaged in the marketing of gasoline and oil at retail had suffered considerably due to the emergency restrictions required by the war, the records of the Company disclose that Spur Distributing Co. has suffered more in proportion than its competitors due largely to the fact of the shadow of German ownership. He pointed out that by careful and painstaking investigation the Alien Property Custodian had finally established beyond the question of a doubt that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., while a Swiss corporation, held the stock for the beneficial ownership of the von Opel family, all of whom were German nationals and most of whom reside in Germany and have actively aided the German war efforts in the production of aircraft, tanks and rockets, it being commonly understood that the von Opels were the real inventors of the rocket principle for military use.

Notwithstanding these facts the Company had hoped to endure the situation and to carry on its business under these handicaps as best it could with the hope that the contemplated action of the Alien Property Custodian, in offering the stock for sale at public auction, would bring about its purchase and ownership by American interests and thereby prevent any further embarrassment to the Company except for that naturally to be expected from the limitations of war restrictions.

However, in view of the fact that the contemplated sale was not permitted to take place and the very evident fact that Uebersee has decided to test out its rights by court litigation, the President stated he was advised that a final determination of the title to the stock and the consequent right of the Alien Property Custodian to sell and dispose of it might not reasonably be expected in less than two to three years due to the fact that the pending suit would undoubtedly be litigated and tried on its merits in the District Court, appealed to the Court of Appeals and then to the Supreme Court of the United States. Mr. Houghland stated he was informed that similar litigations arising during the first World War lasted for periods ranging anywhere from two to ten years, and that under these circumstances it now appeared that the Company was faced with doing business under the positive assertion in court of the foreign ownership of the majority of its stock and that in his opinion it was vital to its continued existence that the Board of Directors consider some immediate plan for relief.

In the general discussion that followed Mr. Hines pointed out the fact that out of the 250 retail stations operated by the Company only 39 stations were owned outright and that the remaining stations were under lease; that these leases were expiring continually and that the average life of the outstanding leases of these stations was approximately 2–7/10 years. He stated that the Company was having great difficulty in obtaining renewals of these leases due to the fact that the Competitors had urged upon the owners that they should not continue to lease their property to a company which was considered to be owned and controlled by German interests. Mr. Hines stated that from a practical standpoint it was difficult, if not impossible, to offset the effect of such arguments and that in his opinion unless prompt action was taken the company faced a gradual disintegration so far as the future renewals of leases was concerned.

Mr. Houghland recommended that the directors consider the advisability of attempting to purchase outright as many of the leased properties as possible as one means of offsetting the difficulty of the Company in obtaining renewals. But Mr. Davis pointed out that this would require a large investment at a small return and would seriously deplete the cash resources of the Company.

Mr. Houghland suggested that it might be advisable for the Company to issue and sell additional stock in order to provide funds for acquisition and expansion purposes.

Mr. Sims suggested that the Alien Property Custodian might consider any sale of additional stock at less than book value as detrimental to his holdings and that consideration should be given to the position of the Alien Property Custodian. Mr. Sims further pointed out that of course a sale of additional stock at book value would be beneficial to the holdings of the Alien Property Custodian as well as to all other stockholders and that in his opinion, if additional stock was to be sold, every effort should be made to sell it at not less than book value if it was possible to do so.

Mr. Hines stated that while he agreed that the issuance and sale of additional common stock would be beneficial to the Company and would tend to preserve the value of the Company's outstanding stock, he questioned whether or not under present circumstances such stock could be readily sold for a sum equal to book value particularly in view of the fact that recently the stock had been sold at a price which was approximately one-half of book value.

Mr. Houghland stated that while he recognized the difficulties which would be encountered in disposing of additional stock at book value he felt that the effort should be made even though it might develop after investigation that it would be impossible to find a purchaser at this price.

RESOLVED by the Board of Directors that it is the unanimous opinion of the Directors that the future welfare of the corporation requires the issuance and sale of additional stock in such amount and for such consideration as may hereafter be determined by the Board of Directors, but that such stock should be sold for cash and for not less than book value, and J. Mason Houghland, as President of the Company, is authorized and directed to take up negotiations, for the issuance and sale of such stock and to submit the best proposition obtained back to the Board of Directors for final action.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned.

J. Mason Houghland presided at the meeting as Chairman, and H. D. Hines acted as Secretary.

The Secretary read the notice of the special meeting, which was as follows:

NOTICE OF SPECIAL MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF SPUR DISTRIBUTING CO., INC.

You are hereby notified that a special meeting of the Board of Directors of Spur Distributing Co., Inc., will be held at the offices of the Company, at Eighth Avenue and Bradford Avenue, Nashville, Tennessee, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., on the 2nd day of December, 1944, for the following purposes:

(1) To consider and act upon the issuance and sale of Twenty Thousand (20,000) shares of Common Stock for cash at not less than book value with options to purchase an additional Fifty Thousand (50,000) shares of Common Stock for the same consideration, for the purpose of securing additional working capital for the corporation.

(2) To consider and act upon the discontinuance of the services of the corporate Transfer Agent and the corporate Registrar, and amending Article V of the By-Laws by repealing such provisions thereof as require the stock of the corporation to be transferred by a Transfer Agent and registered by a Registrar, so as to permit the corporation, in the interest of economy, to perform such services on its own behalf.

(3) For the transaction of any other business which may lawfully come before said meeting.

This the 25th day of November, 1944.

With reference to Agenda on Directors (meeting scheduled December Second, pursuant to authority vested in me you are advised that no action in respect to issuing stock will become effective without approval of Custodian and possibly the Court. You are further requested to read this telegram at the meeting and forward to this office copy of minutes of Directors' Meeting.

James E. Markham, Alien Property Custodian

Mr. Houghland stated to the directors that pursuant to the instructions of the Board, as set out in the minutes of the special meeting held on November 9, 1944, he had carried on certain negotiations relating to the issuance and sale of additional shares of the Company's stock for the purpose of securing additional working capital for the corporation and that the best proposition which he had been able to obtain was from Equitable Securities Corporation, of Nashville, Tennessee, which proposed to purchase 20,000 shares of the Company's Common Stock at book value as of October 31, 1944, which was $13.37 per share, provided the Company granted an option to Equitable Securities Corporation to purchase all or any part of an additional 50,000 shares of the Common Stock at the same price, such option to continue through December 31, 1949. The President stated that the terms and conditions of such proposed purchase had been set out in a written contract and the same was read and is as follows:

THIS AGREEMENT, entered into on this 2nd, day of December, 1944, by and between SPUR DISTRIBUTING CO., INC., a Delaware corporation with its principal office in Davidson County, Tennessee, hereinafter called "Seller", and EQUITABLE SECURITIES CORPORATION, a Tennessee corporation with its principal office in Nashville, Tennessee, hereinafter called "Buyer".

WITNESSETH:

WHEREAS, the Seller represents that it is validly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, and is authorized to issue Four Hundred Thousand (400,000) shares of Common Stock without par value, of which there is presently outstanding and issued a total of One Hundred Forty Thousand (140,000) shares, One Thousand (1,000) of which outstanding shares are held by the Seller as Treasury Stock; and

WHEREAS, the Seller represents that its balance sheet annexed hereto, marked Exhibit "A" and made a part hereof, clearly sets forth its financial position as of the 31st day of October, 1944, and that there has been no material change in the position of the Seller's business and assets since said date; and

WHEREAS, the Seller desires to secure additional working capital through the sale of additional stock;

NOW THEREFORE, in consideration of the premises and the mutual covenants and undertakings herein set out, the parties hereto agree, as follows:

FIRST: Seller agrees that it will issue and sell, and the Buyer agrees that it will purchase and pay for, Twenty Thousand (20,000) shares of Common Stock of the Seller for a consideration of Thirteen Dollars and Thirty-seven Cents ($13.37) per share, representing the book value of said stock as of the 31st day of October, 1944. Said shares of stock shall be issued to the Buyer or in the name of its nominee and shall be delivered to the Buyer upon payment of the purchase price to the Seller.

SECOND: In consideration of the foregoing purchase of said Twenty Thousand (20,000) shares of Seller's Common Stock, Seller hereby grants to the Buyer an option to purchase all or any part of an additional Fifty Thousand (50,000) shares of the Seller's Common Stock at the price of Thirteen Dollars and Thirty-seven Cents ($13.37) per share, which option shall continue for a period of five (5) years and one month from the date hereof and shall terminate at midnight on the 31st day of December, 1949. Seller further agrees that it will upon demand of the Buyer deliver to the Buyer non-negotiable option warrants in such denominations as the Buyer may request, to evidence the option herein granted; such option warrants to be in form satisfactory to Seller and Buyer.

THIRD: Seller hereby agrees that it will forthwith deposit with THE AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK OF NASHVILLE, as Escrow Depository, in street delivery form, certificates for Fifty Thousand (50,000) shares of its Common Stock, said certificates to be in such number and in such amounts of stock as may be designated by the Buyer, with written instructions to said Escrow Depository in form satisfactory to the Buyer instructing and directing the said Escrow Depository to deliver to the Buyer during the option period any or all of said shares of stock upon the payment to the said Escrow Depository for Seller's account the aforesaid consideration of Thirteen Dollars and Thirty-Seven Cents ($13.37) per share.

In the event the Buyer shall fail to exercise its option to purchase with respect to all or any part of said shares of stock, said Escrow Depository shall, upon the termination of the option period, return such shares of stock as then remain in its hands to the Seller.

FOURTH: The Seller covenants that so long as the option granted to the Buyer is outstanding it will not declare any stock dividends, issue to its stockholders or others any rights to subscribe for shares of its stock, or change its capitalization without the consent of Buyer.

FIFTH: Seller agrees that during the option period for the purchase of additional stock by the Buyer as hereinbefore set out, no additional stock will be issued and sold by the Seller without first giving to the Buyer a thirty-day option to purchase its proportionate part of said new issue of stock, computed on the basis of both the stock herein purchased and optioned, upon the SIXTH: Seller agrees to furnish a statement to Buyer certifying that the stock hereinabove described has not been offered to other purchasers, and Buyer agrees to furnish Seller with a statement certifying that it is purchasing said shares of stock for investment and not for resale or for the purpose of offering the same generally to the public. Seller further agrees to furnish to Buyer written opinion of Seller's attorneys, Messrs. Bass, Berry & Sims, of Nashville, Tennessee, certifying that said proposed issue, sale and option of said stock as herein set out is legal and authorized and that the terms, provisions and conditions of this contract have been legally adopted and approved by Seller through proper corporate action.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have set their respective hands and seals hereunto through their duly authorized officers, on the day and year first above written.

The proposal as set out in the foregoing contract was discussed by all of the directors present at great length and in detail, and after such discussion it was unanimously:

RESOLVED, that the corporation issue and sell 20,000 shares of its Common Stock to Equitable Securities Corporation, of Nashville, Tennessee, for the consideration of $13.37 per share, for the purpose of securing additional working capital for the corporation, with the option of purchasing all or any part of an additional 50,000 shares of the Common Stock for the same consideration in accordance with the terms, provisions and conditions set out and contained in the proposed written contract, said additional 50,000 shares of the Common Stock to be issued in street form and deposited with The American National Bank of Nashville as Escrow Depository, subject to the exercise of the purchase option as set out in said contract; and

RESOLVED, that said offer of purchase made by Equitable Securities Corporation as set out in said contract, and all of the terms, provisions and conditions thereof, be and the same hereby is accepted and approved, and the President and Secretary of the corporation are authorized to execute said contract on behalf of the corporation and to take any and all steps as may be necessary and required to fully carry out the terms and provisions thereof.

The President then presented to the directors the option warrant required to be executed by the Company in the contract and the same was read to the directors, and on motion was unanimously approved and was ordered to be spread upon the minutes of the meeting, and was as follows:

1941

for

Subscription to Capital Stock

of

SPUR DISTRIBUTING CO., INC.

Incorporated under the Laws of the State of Delaware.

This is to certify that the Bearer hereof is entitled to subscribe, in accordance with the provisions herein contained and subject to the limitation hereinafter set forth, to Fifty Thousand (50,000) Shares, or any part thereof, of the Common Capital Stock of SPUR DISTRIBUTING CO., INC. as constituted on the date of subscription at Thirteen Dollars and Thirty-Seven Cents ($13.37) per share at any time after the date hereof and on or before December 31, 1949. This Warrant, if not exercised, shall be void after December 31, 1949.

Such subscription may be exercised only by the surrender of this Warrant with the form of subscription which appears on the reverse hereof duly filled out and signed at the principal office of The American National Bank of Nashville, Escrow Depository, in Nashville, Tennessee, together with cash or current funds in payment of such subscription.

The title to this Warrant and all rights and interests represented hereby may be transferred and assigned by delivery merely in the same manner as a negotiable instrument payable to Bearer and the Company and its agents may treat the Bearer hereof as the rightful owner for all purposes, without inquiry as to the sources of title, provided however such transfer shall be subject to the terms and provisions of that certain agreement between the Company and Equitable Securities Corporation dated December 2nd, 1944, and hereinafter referred to.

This Warrant is isued by the Company pursuant to an agreement dated December 2, 1944, between the Company and Equitable Securities Corporation, a copy of which agreement is on file in the principal office of the Company at Nashville, Tennessee, and may be inspected by the Bearer of this Warrant. The Company covenants that so long as this Warrant is outstanding it will not declare any stock dividends, issue to its stockholders or others any rights to subscribe to shares of its stock, or change its capitalization without the consent of Equitable Securities Corporation. No additional stock will be issued and sold by the Company prior to January 1, 1950, without first giving Bearer a thirty (30) day option to purchase all or any part of a proportionate part of the proposed new issue of stock computed on the basis of the stock then outstanding and the stock purchasable under this Warrant, upon the same prices, terms and conditions upon which such proposed stock is to be offered and sold.

As and when purchases of stock shall be made, the amount of which purchase shall be endorsed hereon by a suitable legend signed by an authorized officer or agent of the Company. This Warrant may be surrendered to the Company to be exchanged for similar Warrants in different denominations but for the same aggregate number of shares issuable thereunder as of the time of exchange.

This is the 2nd day of December, 1944.

President

The President then called the directors' attention to the fact that as presently constituted the By-Laws of the Company under Article V contain provisions authorizing the directors to appoint transfer agents and registrars for the Company in the City of New York and elsewhere for the transfer and registration of the stock of the Company. He pointed out that pursuant to this authority the Company had previously appointed Chemical Bank & Trust Company as Transfer Agent and Bank of New York and Trust Company as Registrar in the City of New York and that such action required the corporation to pay a State transfer tax in addition to the Federal transfer tax on all shares of the Company's stock which were transferred by this means and also involved additional payments for the services of the Transfer Agent and the Registrar. The President stated that it had been suggested in the interest of economy that the corporation should discontinue the services of the Transfer Agent and the Registrar and should hereafter cause its stock to be issued direct by its officers at the home office of the Company in Nashville, Tennessee, thereby saving the New York transfer tax and the amount paid to the Transfer Agent and Registrar for their services. After a discussion of the matter it was unanimously:

RESOLVED, that Section 4 of Article V of the By-Laws of the corporation be and same hereby is repealed; and further

RESOLVED, that the services of Chemical Bank & Trust Company as Transfer Agent, and the services of Bank of New York & Trust Company as Registrar, in the City of New York be and the same are hereby discontinued, and the Secretary is instructed to notify said Transfer Agent and Registrar accordingly and to request them to return to the Company all certificates of stock, stock registers and other records of the Company, and to express to them the appreciation of the corporation for the services rendered to the corporation.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned.

Plaintiff's Exhibit 177

OFFICIAL RECORD OF LIECHTENSTEIN STATUTES, YEAR 1934, NUMBER 1, JANUARY 10, 1934

STATUTE

About the Acquisition and the Loss of State Citizenship

I give my consent to the following Resolution of the Parliament made in Its Session of November 14, 1933:

#1

Generalities

The acquisition and the loss of State Citizenship will be governed in the future—besides by treaties—exclusively by the provisions of this Statute.

#2

Every state citizen must be a citizen of a municipality of the principality of Liechtenstein except the members of the princely house.

#3

Acquisition of State Citizenship

State citizenship can be acquired (a) by birth or legitimization (b) by marriage (c) by naturalization.

#4

(a) By birth

Legitimate children of Liechtenstein state citizens get their state citizenship by birth. Illegitimate children of Liechtenstein citizens will be held like legitimate children if they have to be regarded as legitimates because the restriction as to marriage has been cancelled or if there is faultless ignorance of one of the spouses or if they have become legitimized by subsequent marriage or by the favor of the Prince. (Para. 160-162 of the General Civil Code).

Illegitimate children have the Liechtenstein state citizenship as long as the mother has the Liechtenstein state citizenship and as long as the mother does not lose the Liechtenstein citizenship by subsequent marriage with the father of the illegitimate child so that the child becomes legitimized by subsequent marriage. If a foreign mother of an illegitimate child marries its alleged Liechtenstein father, the child is recognized as a Liechtenstein citizen only if paternity is proved.

#5

(b) By marriage

A foreign female gets the Liechtenstein state citizenship by marriage with a citizen without special act of naturalization, reserved P. 28 of the Municipality Statute of May 24, 1864 (Official Record of Liechtenstein Statutes #4).

Similarly the wife of a foreigner to whom state citizenship is granted acquires state citizenship if the marriage has not been divorced or separated by Court or declared invalid.

#6

(c) By Naturalization

The state citizenship may be granted to foreigners only:

a) If they have their full legal capacity under the law of the state of their nationality; if they lack legal capacity it can be replaced by the consent of the father or the guardian.

b) If they prove that they will be accepted as a citizen in a municipality of Liechtenstein in case the government grants the state-citizenship.

c) If they prove that they will lose their previous citizenship by acquiring Liechtenstein citizenship; but if under the law of the state of their origin, they keep their previous citizenship even if they acquire a new citizenship, the government may waive this requirement. The princely government may dispense with the proof for dismissal from the previous citizenship, but in these cases a person will not get diplomatic protection by Liechtenstein authorities in so far as the relation to the state of previous nationality is concerned.

d) If they have had their permanent residence in the territory of the principality of Liechtenstein for at least three years. But this condition has not to be fulfilled under extraordinary circumstances that ask for special consideration.

#7

The application for granting state citizenship has to be addressed to the State Executive with the following enclosures:

a) The birth certificate of the applicant and eventually of his wife, certificate of marriage, the death certificate of pre-deceased spouse, the birth certificate of legitimate minor children. Instead of these documents, a family certificate can be filed if it is drawn by competent authority and includes the necessary information in a notarized form;

b) The original or certified copy of a final judgment if the applicant has been divorced or separated by court or if his marriage has been declared invalid.

c) A passport, a citizenship certificate or a similar certificate drawn by a competent authority about the citizenship of the applicant and the members of his family;

d) The proof of permanent residence within the principality of Liechtenstein;

e) Certificate of good reputation issued by the competent authority of the place of residence. The certificate has to include also a statement about the wife and the minor children of the applicant if they have passed 14 years. If these children live within another community a special certificate of good behaviour has to be filed for them;

f) Statements about the property and income by banking statements, tax assessments, etc.;

g) By applicants who do not have their permanent residence within the country: a statement that they made an agreement about their tax duty with the Treasury Department after the Tax Commission of the future home municipality has been heard;

h) An original or certified copy of the nobility certificate if the applicant intends to keep his own nobility or asks for its recognition;

i) Certificate about religious denomination.

#8

The recognition of nobility does not give any privilege.

#9

If the application is not signed by the applicant himself but by an attorney, the attorney has to show a recognized power of attorney.

#10

Naturalization fees

The applicant has to make a payment for the grant of the state citizenship. This payment is at least half of the purchase price (Einkaufsentgelt) that the applicant had to pay to a Liechtenstein municipality for the right to be admitted in the community of citizens (Aufnahme in den Heimatverband); the amount will be fixed by the princely executive. The princely executive can reduce the amount of the payment under special circumstances. A reasonable special payment will be fixed for the continuation and recognition of the nobility rights of the applicant. These payments have to be made to the princely treasury before the certificate of state citizenship is delivered.

#11

Before state citizenship is granted, the relations of the applicant to his previous national state and his personal and family conditions have to be investigated. Naturalization is excluded if these relations and conditions are so that naturalization may bring any disadvantages to the state.

#12

After the Government has examined the application, including the enclosures, and gets satisfactory information about the applicant, it has to bring the application before the Parliament. If the Parliament consents to the application, the executive has to ask the Prince to grant the state citizenship; the Prince has exclusive right to grant State citizenship except in the case of paragraph 15.

Nobody has a claim that state citizenship should be granted to him.

#13

The fact that through the grant of state citizenship also a municipal citizenship is acquired, does not give any claim for the use and the profits out of the estate of the municipality.

#14

It is within the jurisdiction of the executive or an authority empowered by him to administer the citizenship oath after the state citizenship has been granted. The citizenship oath has only to be taken by male persons of full age.

#15

Re-Admission

The executive is empowered to re-admit gratuitously persons in their previous municipal and state citizenship with the consent of the citizen meeting of the municipality where these persons were citizens previously if they have domicile in the country or if they have been forced by special circumstances to renounce their state citizenship provided they make application for it within ten years after they return to Liechtenstein. Paragraph 7 (a)-(f) and paragraph 13 are applicable accordingly.

Honorary Citizenship

If foreigners have special merits for promoting the cultural or economic interest of the state or a municipality especially by increasing opportunities for gainful employment for the population or if they have contributed in a special way to the increase of the income of the state or municipality, the prince may upon a suggestion of the princely executive grant the honorary state citizenship without a municipal citizenship; similarly a municipality may grant municipal honorary citizenship with the consent of the prince and the executive without granting a state citizenship.

#17

Loss of State Citizenship

The state citizenship is lost:

a) By express or tacit waiver;

b) By marriage;

c) By withdrawal.

#18

a) By express waiver

Male and female state citizens can waive their state citizenship if

a) They are of full capacity under the laws of the country whose nationality they possess or try to acquire, and

b) If they prove that they acquired or have been promised the state citizenship of another state for themselves and eventually for their wife and their minor legitimate children.

The application has to include official certificates about the birth and the sex of the minor legitimate children. Persons that have a guardian or curator must file the application by their legal representative.

The certificate stating the loss of citizenship has to be issued by the princely executive.

If married citizens waive their citizenship the waiver is applicable also to the wife and to the legitimate minor children.

#19

b) By tácit waiver

Any person who has acquired citizenship in another state under the statutes of that state and lets pass thirty years from the day of its acquisition without renewing his citizenship certificate waives silently his state citizenship. The waiver includes also the citizenship of the wife, the children and the descendants.

#20

c) By marriage

The wife loses her previous state citizenship by marriage with a foreigner.

d) By withdrawal

The princely executive can withdraw the state citizenship granted to a foreigner within five years since the acquisition if it is found that the conditions for naturalization as prescribed by the statute were not fulfilled. However, the state citizenship can be withdrawn at any time if it was acquired in a fraudulent way.

The fees paid under paragraph 10 of the statute will not be paid back.

#22

The municipal citizenship is lost together with the loss of state citizenship.

#23

Final Provisions

This statute supersedes the statute of March 28, 1864 L.G.Bl. #3, the statute of July 27, 1920 L.G.Bl. #9 and paragraph 72 of the Final Provisions of the Code on Persons and Corporations of January 20, 1926 L.G. Bl. #4.

#24

This statute is not declared urgent and becomes effective on the day of its publication.

THEODORE HOFFACKER & CO.

56 Pine Street
New York

August 22, 1933.

Mr. Fritz von Opel,
56 Pine Street,
New York City.

Dear Fritz:

Re: Spur Distributing Company

The operations of the Spur Company for the first three months of the year were unsatisfactory from the profit point of view. The situation, however, changed for the better during the months of May, June and July, resulting in a net profit for the seven months period to July 31st of $73,293.80, to which July contributed $38,263.59. The exceptionally good showing in July is due to the rise in gasoline prices from which the Company benefited substantially. The balance sheet position is excellent, showing total current assets of $447,909, against current liabilities of $133,902; cash alone accounted for $299,231. The July report is attached.

Regarding our relationship with Mr. Houghland, would say that it appears greatly improved; still I cannot really say that Mr. Houghland's loyalty is all it should be. He seems to harbor within him a grudge against John Cole and apparently does not like to be watched too closely. As you know, I placed our own man in the Company as Assistant Treasurer, and Mr. Houghland appears not to be any too friendly with him. Under all circumstances, we must be prepared to meet any issue precipitated by him. I have not been in Nashville since last Fall, however, believe it is advisable that you and I go there during your present sojourn in the United States.

Re: Oil Refineries, Inc.

The operations of Oil Refineries, Inc. are very satisfactory. Profits are currently running at the rate of $17,000 per month, after all charges. I felt it necessary to curb Mr. Crittenden in investing too much of the earnings in additional plant and equipment, as you will see from the attached copy of a letter sent to him. I do feel that his plant should by now be in such condition that profits can be retained in cash, and I will see to it that no new plant installations are made without my personal approval.

Re: Oil Production, Inc.

We have been negotiating for several months with one interest for about 8,000,000 barrels oil reserves, have, however, not yet been able to come to a definite agreement as to price and terms. After the consummation of this deal, our program will have been completed. I expect to receive from the Company a statement of its present condition, having written for it about ten days ago.

Re: Harvard Brewing Company

I visited the Harvard Brewing Company together with Walter Blumenthal the first time, end of May. At that time it occurred to me that Mr. Lange was overwhelmed with work and unable to keep abreast of the task. I expressed my apprehensions to Mr. Blumenthal and received from him the assurance that Mr. Lange is a very capable man and in his opinion fully able to cope with the problems. Still I insisted on having our auditors go to the plant in order to install an accounting system. The auditors reported to me that Mr. Lange could not come to speedy decisions. About the middle of June, I again visited the plant and was not at all satisfied with the way things were done. I was then informed that the Company would commence making delivery of beer on July 8th. Expecting disappointment, I went to Lowell on July 8th. By July 10th failure was admitted by the then management, so I stayed right there taking things in my own hand. After straightening out the worst problems, I arranged for a directors' meeting on July 15th, at which time I was elected Chairman of the Board of the Massachusetts Corporation and in this office the Company's chief executive officer. I returned to New York for a week to straighten out my own office matters, and immediately left for Lowell once more to organize the Company's personnel, to lay down business policies to be pursued, and to take complete charge of the operations. Attached you will find my Organization Plan which was ratified by the Directors of the Company on August 11th. You will also find attached statement of the first three months' operations showing an operating profit of $9,043.68, and a surplus, after all charges, of $2,212.96. I prepared a budget and plan of performance, with which operations since August 1st are in line. My budget plan indicates an annual net profit of $660,000, and an attainable net profit of $1,350,000. As you will see from the July statement, the Company can break even with only 25,000 barrels sales per annum based upon present prices. If you consider that the rated capacity after reconditioning of the plant is completed, is 520,000 barrels, you will agree that all elements for a remarkable money maker are available.

In view of these factors and my full conviction of prohibition repeal being a foregoing conclusion before December 6, 1933, I contracted to purchase 100,000 shares of Harvard Treasury Stock at $2.50 per share. First payment has been made on August 21st in the amount of $100,000.

The Company is now fully financed and will have enough money to recondition the brewery to its full capacity, and to finance its current operations with ease. When fully equipped, the Company will have acquired its plant at a cost of less than $2.50 per barrel installed capacity compared with a cost of $8.50 for the industry as a whole.

I desire to mention here that a cash offer was made for the plant in the condition of four weeks ago of $2,000,000, which is equivalent to $5.00 per share of the stock then outstanding. This offer was turned down in view of the fact that the property, when fully operating, should be worth conservatively $6,000,000. Your proportion of this value would be 31% or $1,860,000 for a total investment of $320,000.

I do believe that beginning October, 1934, the Company can pay dividends at the rate of 60¢ per share, while earning at the rate of $1.50 per share. I shall use all my personal effort to realize this goal.

Faithfully yours,

/s/ Ted

Defendant's Exhibit 1

September 9, 1931

To the Revenue Office (Finanzamt)
Wiesbaden

My son, Fritz von Opel, who for some time has been living abroad and is no longer a resident of Germany, has an option to purchase shares of the Overseas Finance Company Ltd.

In the option contract my son assumed certain obligations. These obligations, particularly those to pay the purchase price of about sfrs. 375,000.00, and to grant a credit of sfrs. 3,500,000.00 were guaranteed by myself. Apart from this I myself am not interested in the company in any way. Therefore I do not consider the investment subject to the obligations to report in accordance with the emergency decree of August 23, 1931.

It is only as a matter of precaution that I am hereby reporting the facts. In my property tax return no mention is made of the matter, since according to my opinion no investment has been made and since the guaranty obligation was not entered into on my part until after January 1, 1931.

Very sincerely yours,

Defendant's Exhibit 2

(Enclosure attached to the report of Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm v. Opel, Wiesbaden, of September 9, 1931.)

Application for release and reasons therefore:

The amount serves to secure a guaranty obligation. My son Fritz v. Opel, Antwerp, has concluded an option contract with Adler & Co., Zuerich, on shares of the Oversea Finance Corporation. In this connection he is obliged, upon exercise of the option or delivery of the shares to grant a credit of sfrs. 3,500,000.00, in addition to the price of the shares, which will amount to another sfrs. 375,000.00 approximately. This contract was guaranteed by myself. There is no doubt that the option will be exercised, respectively that the party to the contract will make use of his contractual rights. I am considering myself bound by the contract and therefore will not be authorized to dispose of the amount deposited with the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt in Zuerich, even after the period of the time deposit will have expired.

The company, whose shares my son acquires, is to utilize several patents and participations, particularly patents issued to my son himself. From this transaction my son expects advantages which in turn will be beneficial to German economy.

I assumed the guaranty obligation because I wanted to contribute to the efforts of my son to create for himself a vocation corresponding to his tastes and capabilities. Through persistent work my son has developed some new technical ideas and inventions. As a result he owns several German and foreign patent-rights which doubtlessly seem to offer prospects. The problem now is to exploit these inventions and patent-rights commercially and to acquire additional and supplementary patent-rights etc., for which purpose considerable capital is needed.

For your information there is enclosed copy of a letter containing a confirmation of the agreements by the party to the contract.

Dear Sirs,

Since up to the present time I have not heard from my son with regard to the exercising of his option and since

I am convinced that in view of the extremely difficult foreign exchange situation he will renounce the right to exercise his option, I am eager to approach you with the request that you too, renounce the right to exercise your option.

Although, in fulfilment of the promise given to my son, I have undertaken the guaranty for his governments towards you and for this purpose made available at the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt in Zuerich the sum of sfrs. 3,500,000.00—which fact will show you that I faithfully undertook to keep my promise—an entirely new situation has arisen in Germany due to the emergency legislation, which makes it absolutely impossible for me to dispose freely of the amount of foreign exchange in question. This is incontestably a case of force majeur, so that even in case you should exercise the option yourselves, you would, therefore, not be able to enforce the payment I guaranteed you, since in that case I would make myself liable to punishment in my country, and since, moreover, it is doubtful if my government will allow me to continue to retain the amount held in readiness in foreign exchange.

However, since under no circumstances do I want to get into an unpleasant controversy with you and since I am firmly convinced that you will fully appreciate the embarrassing situation in which I find myself, you will not consider it unreasonable that I am asking you to confirm to me by return mail that you, too, are ready definitely to renounce the right to exercise the option which was granted to you.

I wish to add, that I shall naturally be willing as I was before, to undertake to its full extent the guaranty I gave as soon as circumstances improve and I regain the right to dispose freely of my accounts.

Asking you again not to regard my request to renounce your right of option as resulting from bad faith, but as brought about by the pressure of circumstances I am

We beg to inform you that Mr. Fritz von Opel, of Braschaed near Antwerp, represented by Dr. Eugen Meier, attorney-at-law, of Liestal, has, on account of an alleged claim against you, obtained a preliminary attachment by summary proceedings before a one-judge-court, whereupon the Betreibungsamt ((collecting office)) Zuerich I, attached your account with us up to an amount of

Fr. 3,500,000.00.

As of December 22 we have transferred this amount to a newly opened preliminary attachment account. No information has been given to the Betreibungsamt.

We assume you will take the necessary steps yourself to safeguard your interests, and remain

Herrn Geheimrat Wilhelm von Opel,

We received your letter of October 28, of this year and are referring to the conversation we had with Mr. Fritz von Opel on the 28th inst.

As we explained to Mr. Fritz von Opel in detail, it is quite impossible for us to renounce our seller's option to the shares of Overseas Finance Corporation, since we were absolutely convinced that the deal would go through in one way or another, and in expectation thereof had entered into commitment to various parties. Moreover, the time limit stipulated for the exercise of our option does not expire until December 31 of this year and we regret to be unable to make any definite declaration at the present moment.

Please be convinced that we fully appreciate the difficult position in which you find yourself, but on the other hand we hope that you too will understand that, owing to the prevailing circumstances which we explained in detail to Mr. von Opel, we cannot comply with the request expressed in your above mentioned letter.

We must rather depend entirely upon Mr. Fritz von Opel for the fulfilment of the agreement; he is the only other party to our contract and the difficulties referred to in your letter do not apply to him.

We beg to remain

TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This suit was commenced by the service of an equity subpoena and the bill of complaint on the defendants on June 15, 1935. The parties to this suit are and always have been as follows: The plaintiff, Uebersee Finanz-Korporation Aktien Gesellschaft. The defendants, Walter T. Rosen, Harry B. Lake, Paul M. Rosenthal, Henry March; and Edward E. Thalmann and Alexander B. Siegel, as Trustees of the Estate of Ernest Thalmann, deceased; and Virginia M. Rosenthal, Paul M. Rosenthal, John Rosenthal, Sidney Bachrach, and Frederick M. Heimerdinger, as Executors of the Estate of Moritz Rosenthal, deceased; co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., and Federal Reserve Bank of New York. The bill of complaint was filed June 15, 1935. The motion of the defendant Federal Reserve Bank of New York to dismiss the bill was filed June 18, 1935. That motion and the plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction were disposed of by Honorable Francis G. Caffey, United States District Judge. The order denying the plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction was entered July 16, 1935. The order dismissing the bill as to the defendant Federal Reserve Bank of New York was entered July 15, 1935. The appeal was taken July 20, 1935, and allowed on July 22, 1935.

BILL OF COMPLAINT

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Southern District of New York.

Ueberseee Finanz-Korporation Artien Gesellschaft, Plaintiff,

—against—

Walter T. Rosen, Harry B. Lake, Paul M. Rosenthal, Henry March, and Edward E. Thalmann and Alexander B. Siegel, as Trustees of the Estate of Ernest Thalmann, Deceased; and Virginia M. Rosenthal, Paul M. Rosenthal, John Rosenthal, Sidney Bacharach, and Frederick M. Heimerdinger, as Executors of the Estate of Moritz Rosenthal, Deceased; Co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., and Federal Reserve Bank of New York, Defendants.

To the Honorable the Judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York Sitting in Equity:

The plaintiff above named brings this, its bill of complaint, against the above named defendants, and respectfully shows unto this Honorable Court, upon information and belief, as follows:

1. The plaintiff is and at all times since 1922 was a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the Confederation of Switzerland, and is therefore a citizen and resident of Switzerland. It has not and never has had any place of business or agency therefor in the United States, and it does not and has never carried on business therein.

2. The defendants Walter T. Rosen, Harry B. Lake, Paul M. Rosenthal and Henry March are all citizens of the United States and of the State of New York and actual residents of the City and County of New York, except the defendant Rosen, who is an actual resident of the County of Westchester. The defendants Virginia M. Rosenthal, Paul M. Rosenthal, John Rosenthal, Sidney Bachrach and Frederick M. Heimerdinger are the Executors of Moritz Rosenthal, deceased, who was a citizen of the United States and of the State of New York and an actual resident of the City of New York and County of Bronx at the time of his demise. On information and belief, the Surrogate's Court in Bronx County heretofore duly admitted to probate the will of said Moritz Rosenthal as his last will and testament and appointed the defendants Virginia M. Rosenthal, Paul M. Rosenthal, John Rosenthal, Sidney Bachrach and Frederick M. Heimerdinger as executors of the goods and chattels of said decedent, and they thereupon duly qualified as such, and have ever since been acting as such. The defendants Edward E. Thalmann and Alexander B. Siegel are citizens of the United States; the defendant Edward E. Thalmann is a citizen and resident of the State of California, and the defendant Alexander B. Siegel is a citizen of the State of New York and a resident of the County of New York; said defendants Thalmann and Siegel are the Trustees of the Estate of Ernest Thalmann, deceased, who, at the time of his death, was a citizen of the United States and of the State of New York, and an actual resident of the State and County of New York. The will of said Ernest Thalmann, deceased, was heretofore admitted to probate in the Surrogate's Court in New York County, and said Edward E. Thalmann and Alexander B. Siegel, being so named Trustees in said will, thereafter duly qualified as such, and have ever since been acting as such Trustees.

At all the times hereinafter mentioned and now all defendants other than the defendant Federal Reserve Bank of New York were copartners doing business as such under the firm name and style of Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. in the city and county of New York.

3. The defendant Federal Reserve Bank of New York is and at all the times hereinafter mentioned was a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the United States, with its place of business and residence in the city and county of New York.

4. On or about February 27, 1933, the plaintiff duly acquired for use in its business gold coins of the United States known as "double eagles" of a face amount of $1,250,000. On or about March 2, 1933, the plaintiff delivered to the defendants other than the defendant bank the said gold coins in bags, to be stored by said individual defendants as warehousemen for account of the plaintiff, and to be returned forthwith on demand; and the said individual defendants then and there received the same, promised and agreed to hold the said bags of coin on said terms, and to return the same to the plaintiff on demand. Since March 2, 1933, the said bags of gold coins have been and remained in the care, custody, possession and control of the said individual defendants as aforesaid, and they still are and remain in their care, custody, possession and control.

5. On June 14, 1935, the plaintiff duly demanded of said individual defendants the return and possession of said bags of gold coins, but the said individual defendants wholly failed and refused to return the same.

6. The said individual defendants threaten, and if not restrained by this Court will, forthwith turn over all of the said bags of gold coins to the defendant bank for account of the Treasurer of the United States. The individual defendants claim that they are obligated to do so pursuant to the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. If that course be pursued, the defendant bank will not hold the said gold coins for the plaintiff, but solely for the Treasurer of the United States; and it is the professed intention of said defendant bank and said Treasurer to pay to the plaintiff for said gold coins not more than the dollar face amount of said gold coins, notwithstanding the fact that it is the purpose and intent of said Treasurer to utilize said coins so as to realize therefrom a sum in excess of $2,100,000.

7. The said gold coins have a value in Switzerland and in countries other than the United States, in which the plaintiff has investments or does business, in excess of two million one hundred thousand dollars. The said gold coins were acquired by the plaintiff in contemplation of that larger value and for use in its business at least to that extent; and the plaintiff's plans for business development and its business commitments were made accordingly. If the plaintiff be not now permitted to have and use the said gold coins, it will suffer large loss of profits and large damage in its business, the exact amount whereof however cannot be ascertained or measured, in that it will not be able to carry out its said plans, nor to fufill its said commitments, nor to earn large profits and avoid large loss. The individual defendants have had notice of and been cognizant of all the foregoing at all times since March 2, 1933.

8. The plaintiff, not being a person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, is not and cannot be required by law to surrender the said gold coins to the Treasurer of the United States or to the defendant bank for his account. Heretofore the plaintiff made application to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for a license to transport said gold coins from the possession of the individual defendants to the defendant Federal Reserve Bank to be by it credited to the account of Banque Nationale Suisse, the Central Bank of the Confederation of Switzerland for the plaintiff's account, but said application was thereafter arbitrarily and illegally denied. The plaintiff is entitled under the law to have the defendant Federal Reserve Bank hold said gold coins when delivered to it, for the plaintiff's account, or the account of said Banque Nationale Suisse, or otherwise made available for its uses and purposes to the fullest extent possible either here or abroad.

9. The defendant bank intends and threatens, if it receives said gold coins, to transfer the same to the Treasury of the United States and thus to place the same out of reach of the plaintiff, and it does not intend to receive or hold any of said gold coins for the account of the plaintiff or for the account of said Banque Nationale Suisse.

10. The plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law. The remedy of damages in conversion would not be adequate, because it would award to the plaintiff only the value of said gold coins in New York City, and thus deprive the plaintiff of the said larger foreign value thereof, in contemplation of which the said gold coins were acquired by it for its business purposes as aforesaid, and which larger value it requires in order to realize large profits, avoid large damage and fulfill its commitments. The remedy of replevin is not practically available to the plaintiff, because it cannot give a bond in twice the value of the gold coin, as is required by law in order to seize and replevy the gold coins in time to prevent the said individual defendants from surrendering the same to the defendant bank.

11. This is a suit of a civil nature and presents a controversy between an alien corporation and citizen and citizens of the United States. The matter in controversy exceeds the sum of $3,000 in value, exclusive of interest and costs. This suit is brought in good faith and is not a collusive one to confer on a court of the United States jurisdiction of a case of which such court would not otherwise have jurisdiction.

WHEREFORE the plaintiff prays that the Court direct the said individual defendants to turn over to the plaintiff or its designee the said gold coins forthwith; or, if the same have heretofore passed into the control of the defendant bank, that the Court direct the said defendant bank to turn over to the plaintiff or its designee the said gold coins forthwith; that the plaintiff have such other and further relief in the premises as to the Court may seem just and that it recover of the defendants the costs and disbursements of this action.

The plaintiff further prays that it be granted a restraining order and preliminary injunction, pending the final hearing and decision of this cause, whereby the said defendants, their agents, servants, officers, and employees, and each and every of them, be enjoined and restrained from transferring, delivering, paying over or otherwise disposing of, the aforesaid bags of gold coins to any person, firm, body or corporation other than the plaintiff until the further order of this Court.

And the plaintiff further prays that a writ of subpoena issue herein directed to the above named defendants and each and every of them, commanding them on a day certain to appear and answer this bill of complaint, but not under oath, an answer under oath being hereby waived.

I am the attorney for the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation Aktien Gesellschaft, the plaintiff herein, which is a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the Confederation of Switzerland. The foregoing bill of complaint is true to my knowledge, except as to those matters therein stated to be alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters I believe it to be true. The reason why this verification is not made by the plaintiff is that it is a foreign corporation and none of its officers or agents is within the United States or the County of New York in which County I have my office. The grounds of my belief as to all the matters in the foregoing complaint not stated upon knowledge are documents in my possession

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

E. 80-319.

UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT,

Plaintiff,

—against—

WALTER T. ROSEN, HARRY B. LAKE, PAUL M. ROSENTHAL, HENRY MARCH; and EDWARD E. THALMANN and ALEXANDER B. SIEGEL, as Trustees of the Estate of Ernest Thalmann, Deceased; and VIRGINIA M. ROSENTHAL, PAUL M. ROSENTHAL, JOHN ROSENTHAL, SIDNEY BACHARACH, and FREDERICK M. HEIMERDINGER, as Executors of the Estate of Moritz Rosenthal, Deceased; Co-partners doing business as LADENBURG, THALMANN & Co., and FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF NEW YORK, Defendants.

On the annexed verified bill of complaint, and the annexed affidavit of Isidor J. Kresel, sworn to June 15th, 1935, it is ORDERED that the defendants herein, or their attorneys, show cause at a Stated Term of this Court for the hearing of motions, to be held in Room 235 of the Old Post Office Building, Park Row, in the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, on the 18th day of June, 1935, at the opening of Court on said day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, why an order should not be made enjoining and restraining the defendants, their agents, officers, servants and employees, and each of them, during the pendency of this action and until the further order of this Court, from transferring, delivering, paying over, or otherwise disposing of, the plaintiff's bags of gold coins in said bill of complaint mentioned, to any person, firm, body or corporation other than the plaintiff; and why the plaintiff should not have such other or further relief in the premises as may be just; and, in the meanwhile, the individual defendants and said firm Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., are and each of them is hereby restrained and stayed from transferring, delivering, paying over, said bags of gold coins to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York or to any one other than the plaintiff until the entry and service of an order on this application.

Service of this order, and the papers on which it is made, on the defendants or their attorneys on or before June 17th, 1935, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, shall be sufficient.

Dated, New York City, June 15, 1935.

ISIDOR J. KRESEL, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am the attorney for the above named plaintiff, I make this affidavit in reply to the opposing affidavit of Friedrich Wille herein, sworn to June 18, 1935, and filed by the defendant firm.

2. In said opposing affidavit it is suggested that the facts may reveal that the plaintiff is doing business in the United States, and thus that it is subject to lawful requisition of the gold under the Act of Congress of March 9, 1933, and the orders made thereunder. That subject was heretofore considered in the Department of the Treasury and the plaintiff's then attorneys, Messrs. Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, submitted thereon the following affidavits, to wit:

(1) Affidavit of Eugen Meier, president of the plaintiff, sworn to May 28, 1935;

(2) Affidavit of Manfred Wronker-Flatow, sworn to June 6, 1935;

(3) Affidavit of Friedrich Wille, sworn to June 6, 1935;

(4) Affidavit of Theodore Hoffacker, sworn to June 6, 1935;

AFFIDAVIT OF EUGEN MEIER, DATED MAY 28, 1935.

IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY, OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

In the Matter

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION, AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding gold held for its account in the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK }
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

EUGEN MEIER, being duly sworn says:

1. I am a Swiss citizen and reside in the City of Liestal, Confederation of Switzerland. I am and have been since 1907 an attorney at law and member of the Bar of Basle. I am and have been since about the year 1924 (with the exception of one year about 1931) a member of the Board of Directors of Adler & Co. A. G., a banking corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Confederation of Switzerland and having its office and place of business at 16 Peterstrasse, City of Zurich, Confederation of Switzerland. I now am and have been for some years President of Adler & Co. A. G.

2. In April or May, 1932, I was elected President of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. at a stockholders meeting thereof held at the office of the corporation 82 Bahnhofstrasse, Zurich, Switzerland. I have since continued and still am President of said corporation.

Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. is a banking corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Confederation of Switzerland and having its office and place of business originally at 82 Bahnhofstrasse, Zurich, but since early in 1932 at the office of Adler & Co A. G., 16 Peterstrasse, Zurich. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. was organized in 1922 and entered on June 3, 1922, in the Register of Commerce of the Canton of Zurich, Switzerland. By entry in such Register of Commerce said corporation became a legal entity, pursuant to Article 52 of the Swiss Civil Code, reading as follows:

> "Associations of persons organized into corporations, and institutions devoted to a special purpose and independent, receive the right of personality, by entry in the Commercial Register. Public corporations and institutions, societies not for profit, religious foundations and family foundations require no such entry. Associations or institutions for immoral or unlawful purposes cannot acquire legal personality."

Attached hereto marked Exhibit A is a true copy of the original German text of the statute or charter of said corporation. Attached hereto marked Exhibit B is a true copy of the original German text of the certificate of registration of said corporation in the said Register of Commerce.

3. The Board of Directors of said corporation consists of three members. These members are and have been since about the time of my election as President in 1932 Dr. Hans Frankenberg, a banker and Austrian citizen, and Dr. Joseph Henggeler, a lawyer and Swiss citizen, in addition to myself. Dr. Frankenberg and Dr. Henggeler both reside in Zurich. Dr. Frankenberg is and has been since 1932 in effect managing director of said corporation, conducting substantially all its affairs subject to the advise and consent of the other two directors. Of the two signatures required for valid corporate action, that of Dr. Frankenberg is almost always one.

Dr. Frankenberg is and has been since about the year 1931 managing director of Adler & Co. A. G. In conformity with general business custom in Switzerland and with the proposed new Swiss banking legislation, I as President of Adler & Co. A. G. had no part in the direct management of its affairs, which were in the hands of Dr. Frankenberg as managing director.

4. As is shown by Exhibit A, the capital stock of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. is divided into 100 shares of 5,000 Swiss francs par value. I am the owner of one of these shares. To my knowledge Dr. Henggeler and Dr. Frankenberg have each, as required by the charter, deposited one share of said stock with Adler & Co. A. G. in their respective names, but I do not know whether they own additional shares of stock. All the said 100 shares are bearer shares, and may under Swiss law be transferred or alienated without any record thereof on the books of the corporation. Article 614 of the Swiss Code of Obligations makes express provision for the creation of bearer shares in the following terms:

> "Shares of stock may be bearer or registered shares; they cannot be divided."

The holder of a bearer share by virtue of his possession is presumptively the owner, as is provided by Article 846 of the same Code:

> "Every holder of a security payable to bearer is deemed to have the right to demand payment thereof."

It has always been my understanding that Mr. Fritz von Opel, a German citizen and resident of St. Moritz, Switzerland, either owned personally or held for members of his family a substantial number of shares of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., but I have no personal knowledge on the subject. On May 14, 1935, I heard Mr. Fritz von Opel say that he was the owner of substantially all the stock of said corporation, subject to the right of usufruct reserved in his father, Wilhelm von Opel. However, at the last stockholders meeting of the corporation on March 28, 1935, I was informed by Dr. Frankenberg that the shares of the corporation owned by Mr. Fritz von Opel had been pledged by him with Adler & Co. A. G. I have no personal knowledge regarding this pledge.

To the best of my knowledge and belief, none of the shares of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. is owned by a resident or citizen of the United States, and no resident or citizen of the United States has any interest in any of the shares of said corporation.

5. The Swiss Code, as interpreted by the courts, provides that the number of stockholders does not affect the separate entity and juridical existence of a Swiss corporation, and that the acquisition of all the shares in a single ownership leaves such entity and such existence unimpaired.

6. Stockholders meetings of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. are held regularly once a year at the office thereof in Zurich. The time of these meetings is in the first half of the year, usually in the spring. None of such meetings, so far as I know, has been attended by Mr. Fritz von Opel. As President I have presided at these meetings during and after 1933. Attached hereto marked Exhibits C to P inclusive are photostatic copies of the minutes of the organization and stockholders meetings of said corporation since 1922, so far as the same are available; I am informed that the minutes for the 1922 and 1923 stockholders meetings cannot be located.

The statement in the minutes for May 6, 1932, Exhibit L, that Mr. Fritz von Opel held 497 shares and that the corporation had 500 shares is erroneous since the corporation has only 100 shares and Dr. Frankenberg, Dr. Henggeler, and I are owners of at least three.

7. In Swiss law property charged with a usufruct is regarded as composed of two rights in rem (droits reels dingliches recht), the one consisting of the usufruct belonging to the usufructuary and the other consisting of the naked property in the thing belonging to the preprietor. In Swiss law, a division of ownership in the thing is effected if the ownership of the usufruct is separate from the naked title. The right of usufruct is defined by the Swiss Civil Code §§745 and following.

8. To my knowledge Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. has never done any business in the United States or in any country outside the Confederation of Switzerland. I does not have and has never had any general agent or representative in the United States, although the Board of Directors of the corporation has from time to time issued powers of attorney to Mr. Fritz von Opel, and he has been in the United States for short periods during the existence of one or more of these powers. The Board of Directors of the corporation has never entrusted Mr. Fritz von Opel any part of the management of the corporation. On the contrary the corporation has insisted at all times on maintaining the form and substance of corporate independence with respect to Mr. Fritz von Opel and Mr. Wilhelm von Opel. Mr. Fritz von Opel does not now possess and has not since July, 1934, possessed any power of attorney on behalf of the corporation. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. therefore submits that it is an independent foreign corporate entity not doing business in and not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; that it is the sole owner of the gold held in its name and for its account by Messrs. Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., No. 25 Broad Street, New York, N. Y.; and that its pending application with the Treasury Department on form TG-18 for leave to transfer said gold to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York for account of the Banque Nationale Suisse should be granted.

WHEREFORE it is respectfully prayed that reconsideration be accorded by the Treasury Department to the application of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. heretofore filed on or about May 9, 1934, for the above purpose, and that said application be granted.

AFFIDAVIT OF MANFRED WRONKER-FLATOW, DATED JUNE 6, 1935.

IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY, OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

In the Matter

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding gold held for its account in the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

MANFRED WRONKER-FLATOW, being duly sworn, says:

I now reside at 15 Central Park West, New York, N. Y., and was formerly an attorney and counselor at law in Germany. I received my legal education at Munich, Geneva, and Berlin, and obtained a law degree from Berlin University in 1911. From 1911 on I was in the Prussian court service, and became a member of the Berlin Bar in 1920. As a member of the Berlin Bar I was the legal adviser of the American Chamber of Commerce in Germany and of other important American interests in Germany, including National City Bank, the Dupont interests, Eastman Kodak Company and General Motors Corporations.

In 1928 I drafted on behalf of General Motors Corporation the contracts for the acquisition by them of control of the Adam Opel Motor Works at Ruesselsheim-am-Main. When the option for this acquisition was carried out by General Motors Corporation, I drafted the remaining papers in the transaction, including the escrow agreement, Exhibit Q to the affidavit of Fritz von Opel herein.

In 1929 I became a member of the Board of Supervision (Aufsichtstrat)) and general counsel of Adam Opel A. G., the corporation which became the successor of Adam Opel Motor Works in 1928. In 1930 I resigned from the Board of Supervision and became a member of the Board of Management (Vorstand) of Adam Opel A. G., giving up my independent legal practice.

In September and October, 1931, I advised Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his son Fritz von Opel in the preparation and execution of a deed of gift from the former to the latter, of which a copy is attached to the affidavit of Mr. Fritz von Opel herein marked Exhibit R. I participated in the conversations which led up to the execution of these documents. In these conversations it was stated by Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and Mr. Fritz von Opel that the securities covered in the deed of gift or the proceeds of these securities should be transferred to a corporation for the purpose of protecting the interests therein created by the deed of gift. The clauses in the deed of gift relative to the usufruct reserved to the parents of Fritz von Opel were particularly insisted on by Dr. Wilhelm von Opel, who said that he attached the greatest importance to this restriction on and reservation from the gift. As drawn by me the deed of gift, Exhibit R, was drawn for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the parties so expressed.

In German law the right of usufruct (niessbrauch) was and is recognized to be a separate estate in the thing and to be a real right or right in rem (dingliches recht) in the thing. By virtue of this concept of German law and the deed of gift itself Dr. Wilhelm von Opel and his wife retained an independent property right in the securities described in the deed of gifts and in any and all proceeds thereof, which independent property right gave the parents certain definite rights and powers under German law with reference to said securities and their proceeds. The rights and powers thus reserved to the parents by virtue of their usufruct include the right to be consulted with reference to and to prevent (if so disposed) the sale of the securities or their proceeds by Mr. Fritz von Opel; the right to have provisions for the safeguard of their usufruct inserted in any agreement of pledge Mr. Fritz von Opel might make with reference to the securities or their proceeds; and the right in general to invoke the jurisdiction of the courts on the question whether or not any funds, proceeds of said securities, are invested in a manner such as to safeguard the right of usufruct and carry out in a reasonable manner the intention of the parties as expressed in their agreement creating the same. In addition by virtue of this right of usufruct the parents can at any time have the securities or their proceeds put under the joint control of themselves as usufructuaries and Mr. Fritz von Opel as holder of legal title.

The right of usufruct was derived by German law from the Roman law, and is governed by the following among other provisions of the German Civil Code, drafted in 1896 and promulgated in 1900, which is still the law of Germany:

> "§1030. The thing may be encumbered in such a manner that the person in whose favor the thing is encumbered has the right to draw the fruits of the thing (niessbrauch [usufruct]).

§1036. The usufructuary is entitled to the possession of the thing. In exercising the right of usufruct he must maintain the existing economic function of the thing and adhere to the rules of orderly management [ordungsmaessiger wirtschaft].

§1068. A right may also be the object of a usufruct.

§1081. Whenever a bearer security or instrument drawn to order, endorsed in blank, is the object of a usufruct, then in such case the usufructuary and the holder of legal title [eigentuemer] jointly have the right of possession of the instrument and of the renewal certificate appurtenant thereto [i.e. certificate entitling holder to new sheaf of dividend or interest coupons (§805)]. The usufructuary is entitled to the possession of the interest, dividends or profit participation coupon pertaining to the instrument.

§1082. On request of the usufructuary or of the holder of legal title [eigentuemer], the instrument together with the renewal certificate is to be deposited with a depositary with the stipulation that the release of the instrument may only be requested jointly by the usufructuary and the holder of legal title [eigentuemer]. The usufructuary may also request the deposit of the instrument with the Reichsbank.

§1083. Both the usufructuary and the holder of legal title [eigentuemer] in the instrument are obligated to each other to cooperate in the collection of any capital falling due and in the acquisition of new interest, dividend or profit participation coupons, as well as in all other measures which are necessary in the orderly administration of an estate."

I am informed that with part of the proceeds of the securities described in the deed of gift Exhibit R Mr. Fritz von Opel purchased shares of a Swiss corporation, Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. If this be the fact, I am of opinion that under German law the above-described rights and obligations based on the reserved usufruct would attach to the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation shares in the same manner as if these shares had been described in the deed of gift itself.

I am informed that with part of the proceeds of the securities described in the deed of gift Exhibit R there was purchased a quantity of gold now situated in the United States. On this assumption of fact, I am of opinion that under German law the above-described rights and obligations based on the reserved usufruct would attach to this gold in the same manner as if the gold had been described in the deed of gift.

I have no personal knowledge regarding the gold held for account of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. in New York.

2. So far as I know Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. have never had and have not now a resident agent or representative or an office in the United States. Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. have at no time been the agent or representative of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. in the United States or otherwise, but have acted at all times solely as their bankers.

3. In due course of mail Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. received a letter signed on behalf of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. by Dr. E. Meier and Dr. Frankenberg and dated at Zurich July 17, 1934. This letter, which is in the German language, reads in translation as follows:

"We refer to our two letters of April 5th and August 17th, 1933, in which we have forwarded to you powers of attorney for Mr. Fritz von Opel, and request you to take note that all these powers are to be considered as void and therefore without object."

IN THE

OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION ARTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding gold held for its account in the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

THEODORE HOFFACKER, being duly sworn, says:

I am a resident of New York State, having my home at Briarcliff Manor, New York, and doing business under the name of Theodore Hoffacker & Co., 56 Pine Street, Borough of Manhattan, New York, N. Y.

The following is an account of my relationship with Mr. Fritz von Opel and the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G.:

I first became acquainted with Mr. Fritz von Opel in October, 1931, when he was introduced to me at my office by Mr. Werner von Clemm. At that time Mr. von Opel asked me to advise him regarding his investments in the United States. I entered into a written agreement with Mr. von Opel, dated October 30, 1931 (a true copy of which is attached as Exhibit V to the affidavit of Fritz von Opel filed herein), whereby Mr. von Opel gave me discretion to deal with certain blocks of General Motors Corporation common stock owned by him. After dealing with these securities in accordance with the terms of the agreement, Mr. von Opel cancelled the agreement on or about January 8, 1932.

From time to time thereafter I transmitted to City Bank Farmers Trust Company instructions from Mr. von Opel regarding cash and securities held for his account by that bank.

In June, 1932, Mr. von Opel transferred the bulk of his investments in the United States to the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. Thereafter I continued to act as investment counsel to him in his personal capacity and as attorney-in-fact to the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. I transmitted instructions regarding the Uebersee accounts from Mr. von Opel as attorney-in-fact to the City Bank Farmers Trust Company, and these were always confirmed either by Mr. von Opel, as attorney-in-fact, or by the corporation itself in Zurich.

From time to time limited powers of attorney were issued to me to vote the proxies of certain stock held by the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., chiefly Harvard Brewing Co., Spur Distributing Co., Oil Refineries, Inc., and Oil Production, Inc.

I continued to act in my capacity as investment counsel as aforesaid after the bulk of the holdings of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. were transferred to Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. from the City Bank Farmers Trust Company, in the early part of 1933.

I have no personal knowledge regarding the purchase of gold in the United States in February, 1933, by Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. except that I was informed by cable from Mr. Fritz von Opel in Europe after the purchase of the gold that it had been made.

At no time was I ever an agent or representative of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. Any dealings in regard to investments now held by it were conducted by me, solely in my capacity as investment counsel to and solely with Mr. Fritz von Opel.

AFFIDAVIT OF FRITZ VON OPEL, DATED JUNE 7, 1935.

IN THE DEPARTMENT OF TREASURY, OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

In the Matter

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding gold held for its account in the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK }
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

FRITZ VON OPEL, being duly sworn, says:

1. I am a German citizen by birth, but left Germany in 1929, and have since resided outside of Germany. I now reside in St. Moritz, Switzerland. I am a mechanical engineer by profession, having received a degree as engineer from the Darmstadt Hochschule in 1922 or 1923.

2. From 1923 or 1924, after leaving the university, I was employed as mechanical engineer in the Adam Opel Motor Works at Ruesselsheim-am-Main, Germany. The Adam Opel Motor Works was a family enterprise organized as a partnership and engaged in the manufacture of motor cars at Ruesselsheim, with various branches in Germany. The factory had originally been founded by my grandfather, Adam Opel, in 1862 for the manufacture of sewing machines, bicycles, etc.

In 1928 the Adam Opel Motor Works was reorganized as a corporation under the title Adam Opel Aktien Gesellschaft with the former partners as shareholders. The capitalization of the new company was 60,000,000 Reichsmarks divided into 6,000 shares of a par value of 10,000 Reichsmarks each. In 1928 also I became general manager of the corporation.

3. Pursuant to negotiations which began at the end of 1928 and were consummated in March or April, 1929, the stockholders of Adam Opel A. G. sold to General Motors Corporation 80% of the stock of Adam Opel A. G. Of the remaining 20%, one-half, or 10%, was retained by my father, Wilhelm von Opel, and the balance, or 10%, by my uncle, Dr. Fritz Opel.

Under date of April 11, 1929, my father, Wilhelm von Opel, entered into a separate escrow agreement with General Motors Corporation whereby he deposited his said 10% of stock of Adam Opel A. G. having a par value of 6,000,000 Reichsmarks with the National City Bank of New York. A true copy of this agreement is attached hereto marked Exhibit Q. It provided in substance for the retention of the stock certificates by National City Bank until April 1, 1934, and for an option either to General Motors Corporation to buy or to my father to sell after March 31, 1931, at graduated prices varying between 23,000 Reichsmarks and 30,000 Reichsmarks per share. I did not know of the existence of this particular agreement until October, 1931, as hereinafter stated.

4. Toward the end of the year 1929 I went to America for the purpose of familiarizing myself with American manufacturing methods, and worked as an employee for General Motors Corporation (Chevrolet Division) in their Detroit, Toledo, Saginaw and Flint plants from January to December, 1930. At the end of this period I was transferred to the employ of General Motors Export Corporation and went to their Antwerp factory where I was employed for the first three-quarters of the year 1931.

5. In the fall of 1931 my father asked me to come to Germany to discuss with him my further employment in the Opel motor works which was now being controlled and operated by General Motors Corporation. I went to Russelsheim, and after discussion refused the post offered to me, which was inferior to my former position of general manager. In consequence of this decision my father with the consent of my mother executed under date of October 5, 1931, a deed of gift to me of his 10% of the stock of Adam Opel A. G. having a par value of 6,000,000 Reichsmarks. This document was drawn by Dr. Wronker-Flatow, general counsel to Adam Opel A. G., as legal adviser to both my father and myself in the matter. A true copy of this deed of gift is hereto attached marked Exhibit R. In substance it provided that naked title only to the shares was transferred to me, that the usufruct or interest for life of the shares remained with my father and mother and the survivor of them, that my title in the shares was likewise charged with the interest of my sister and her issue in the event of the death of my parents before my death, that the gift should be null and void in the event of my death without issue, during the life of my parents or either of them, and that this allocation of property rights in the shares should attach to their proceeds in whatsoever form. The latter provision is as follows:

> "In the event that these shares should be sold or exchanged for other securities, then the proceeds of such sale or the securities received in exchange are to take the place of said shares, subject to the rights of usufruct of the parents Opel."

This deed of gift, Exhibit R, was likewise executed by me and thereby accepted in accordance with its terms. Before accepting the deed, however, I protested to my father against the insertion of the restriction, the reservation of usufruct, etc., which left with me a mere legal title plus 20% of the dividends and interest. My father, however, insisted upon these terms. In connection with the execution and delivery of this deed of gift my father received an oral stipulation from me which was not included in the document, to the effect that these shares or their proceeds would be transferred by me immediately to a corporation whose shares would be distributed or held so as to safeguard the various interests in the stock or its proceeds set forth in the deed of gift.

Prior to the drafting and execution of the deed of gift, Exhibit R, I had no knowledge of the existence of the escrow agreement, Exhibit Q, relative to these 600 shares of Adam Opel A. G. Upon seeing the escrow agreement, however, I was alarmed to observe that it called for payment under either option in Reichsmarks; I feared a fall in Reichsmarks, having in mind the banking collapse in Austria, the Hoover moratorium, the banking troubles in Germany, and the suspension of gold payments by Great Britain which had taken place during the summer and autumn of 1931. I therefore told my father that I would go to New York immediately for the purpose of negotiating a change in this escrow agreement so as to put it on a gold basis. For that purpose he gave me under date of October 6, 1931, a power of attorney, executed before the American Consul at Frankfort-am-Main, of which a true copy is hereto attached marked Exhibit S.

6. Within the next few days I left for New York. Upon arriving in New York in October, 1931, I entered into negotiations with John Thomas Smith, vice president and general counsel of General Motors Corporation, in New York, for a modification of the escrow agreement, Exhibit Q, so as to place the Reichsmarks payable thereunder on a gold or gold equivalent basis. I received no definite answer on this proposal, but after several days I was told by Mr. Smith that my father had agreed by cable with Mr. Sloan, president of General Motors Corporation, to modify the escrow agreement so that the price of 300 shares of Opel Motor Works stock, that is one-half the total number, should be payable in Reichsmarks on a gold or gold equivalent basis. On receiving this news from Mr. Smith, I considered the matter for a while and then told Mr. Smith that I did not agree and would call for payment under the escrow agreement in the exercise of my rights as attorney-in-fact. I then cabled my father stating in substance what I had done, giving my reasons, and adding that I would discuss the matter with him on my return to Germany.

On or about October 17, 1931, I gave written notice to General Motors Corporation of my election to deliver to it the shares described in the escrow agreement, Exhibit Q, at the price therein stated, which on that date was 26,500 Reichsmarks a share, representing a total price of 15,900,000 Reichsmarks. A true copy of this notice is hereto attached marked Exhibit S-1. I also filed with the National City Bank of New York the power of attorney from my father, Exhibit S, and under date of October 19, 1931, sent National City Bank a letter instructing them to deliver the shares to General Motors Corporation, of which letter a true copy is attached hereto and marked Exhibit T. The stock certificates were accordingly delivered to and receipted for by General Motors Corporation on October 20, 1931.

Since under the escrow agreement General Motors Corporation was entitled to defer payment until 30 days after receipt of my notice of intention to exercise the option, I agreed to take in part payment at once 47,625 shares of common stock of General Motors Corporation at an agreed price of $24 per share, making a total of $1,143,000 on the purchase price. The balance of the purchase price was to be paid by General Motors Corporation in dollars in New York at the average rate of exchange in New York for marks over a period of six days commencing on November 17, 1931.

Pursuant to this arrangement there was paid in by General Motors Corporation to my father's account with the National City Bank of New York the following amounts as of the following respective value dates, according to the transcript of said account furnished me by National City Bank:

Value Date	Credit
November 17, 1931	$ 432,116.49
November 18	431,843.23
November 19	432,480.84
November 20	432,845.19
November 21	432,936.27
November 24	432,526.62
Total	$2,594,748.64

The aggregate purchase price so paid by General Motors Corporation for the 600 shares of stock of Adam Opel A. G. described in the escrow agreement, Exhibit Q, was therefore $3,737,748.64, or an average rate of exchange of $0.23508 to the mark for the 15,900,000 Reichsmarks constituting the purchase price under the agreement.

7. Pursuant to my instructions, immediately after the receipt of the above amounts from time to time by the National City Bank of New York to the credit of Wilhelm von Opel, the same amounts were paid by the National City Bank of New York to the credit of an account entitled "Main Account as Custodian, Fritz von Opel, Principal A/C" with City Bank Farmers Trust Company, then at 22 William Street, New York, New York. This account was opened by me on November 16, 1931, for the special and sole purpose of receiving the proceeds of the said Adam Opel A. G. stock. The 47,625 shares of General Motors Corporation common stock were likewise delivered to the National City Bank of New York either for my or for my father's account and were transferred upon my instructions to a custody account with City Bank Farmers Trust Company.

For the purpose of dealings in General Motors Corporation stock City Bank Farmers Trust Company set up on November 17, 1931, an account entitled "Special Account re General Motors Corporation stock as Custodian, Fritz von Opel, Principal A. C." In directing the transfer to be made by the National City Bank of New York I used the power of attorney given by my father, Exhibit S, which was supplemented for this purpose by a special power arranged by cable by my father in Germany.

In connection with the receipt of these payments and with these transfers and in accordance with the conversation above described with my father, it was my purpose to transfer the entire amount of cash and securities as soon as possible to a corporation the stock of which, like the original cost and securities themselves, would be held subject to the terms of the deed of gift, Exhibit R. For this purpose I had in mind Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., an option on which was pending as hereinafter described. I asked Mr. H. D. Sammis, vice-president of City Bank Farmers Trust Company, what papers would be necessary for this operation, and he handed me a form of corporate power of attorney on which he wrote the date October 28, 1931, and which was subsequently filled out and executed under date of January 15, 1932, by Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. A true copy is attached hereto marked Exhibit U.

I left New York early in November, 1931. Before leaving New York I took the advice of various investment bankers regarding the manner of investing the above described cash and securities. I was introduced to Theodore Hoffacker about the end of October, 1931, by our mutual acquaintance, Werner von Clemm, customer's man of Burden Cole & Co. With Mr. Hoffacker I made an arrangement in writing dated October 30, 1931, of which a true copy is hereto attached marked Exhibit V, for dealing in General Motors Corporation common stock. Early in January, 1932, I cancelled the written agreement, Exhibit V, by cable.

During November and December, 1931, substantially all the cash in my accounts with the City Bank Farmers Trust Company was invested in high-grade American securities upon cable instructions from me to City Bank Farmers Trust Company.

8. On leaving New York in November, 1931, I went directly to Ruesselsheim, where I described to my father what I had done. This conversation took place before the receipt of the first payment in New York from General Motors Corporation as above described. I explained to my father the reasons which in my view made it advisable to call for payment under the escrow agreement immediately, particularly the importance of having the investment represented by such agreement in more or less liquid form available for conversion into stable forms of value which would protect the investment against the destructive effects of monetary inflation. After discussion, my father said that he agreed with this view and my decision.

At this time I had an option to purchase all or substantially all of the stock of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., a corporation organized under the laws of Switzerland in 1922 and having its head office in Zurich. This option had been acquired in the following manner. In April, 1931, when I was employed in Antwerp as aforesaid, I learned through Dr. Frankenberg, an old acquaintance of my father's then employed in Zurich as general manager of a banking corporation known as Adler & Co., A. G., that the owners of the stock of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. would be willing to sell it to me. I wished to acquire the stock of this or some other company for the purpose of transferring to the corporation several scores of patents upon inventions which I had made or acquired. I therefore entered into negotiations with Dr. Frankenberg as general manager of Adler & Co. A. G. for the acquisition of this stock which had a par value of 500,000 Swiss francs, with 250,000 Swiss francs paid in. These negotiations were conducted orally in Zurich and by correspondence, and resulted in the execution of a contract between me and Adler & Co. A. G. on or about April 27, 1931. No copy of this contract is available to me in New York. My recollection of this contract is that I was given thereby an option to buy, and Adler & Co. A. G. an option to sell, all or substantially all the 100 shares of 5,000 Swiss francs par value each, the option to be exercised not later than December 31, 1931, and the price to include a premium varying according to which party exercised the option. I dealt only with Adler & Co. A. G. and did not know who were the original owners and the sellers of the shares. The shares in question were bearer shares, which is a type very common in Europe, and which did not require registration of their owners' names in any record of the corporation.

Toward the end of December, 1931, the option conferred by the agreement of April 27, 1931, was exercised, and I became the purchaser of 97 out of the 100 shares issued and outstanding of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. stock at a price stated in Swiss francs somewhat above the amount paid in on the shares.

This purchase price was paid by me in the following manner:

On December 1, 1931, I transferred to the Swiss Credit Anstalt, Zurich, Switzerland, the sum of $20,000 from my account with City B[illegible] Farmers Trust Company, as is shown by the debit on that date on the transcript of my account, this money being part of the proceeds received from General Motors Corporation in the above-described transaction. Upon my return to Switzerland and a few days before February 24, 1932, I drew a bearer check on the account thus created with the Swiss Credit Anstalt in the amount of 59,500 Swiss francs, being the equivalent of $11,604, which check was to the order of bearer and which I delivered to Dr. Frankenberg for transmission to the original owners and sellers of the stock of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. in part payment of the purchase price. The debit representing payment of this check appears on my account with Swiss Credit Anstalt under date of February 24, 1932.

About March, 1932, I orally instructed Dr. Frankenberg, as managing director of Adler & Co. A. G., to pay to the original owners and sellers of the Uebersee stock the balance of the purchase price, namely 250,000 Swiss francs. This payment was made by Adler & Co. A. G. on April 2, 1932. The 250,000 Swiss francs involved represented only the one-half of the capital stock theretofore paid in. Before leaving for New York in April, 1932, as hereinafter stated, I also asked Dr. Frankenberg, as managing director of Adler & Co. A. G., to pay in the balance of the capital stock, amounting to 250,000 Swiss francs. This payment was made under date of May 24, 1932, according to the books of Adler & Co. A. G. This latter payment is noted in the minutes of the stockholders' meeting of the company held on June 1, 1932, Exhibit M to the affidavit of Dr. Eugen Meier filed herein.

Both of these transfers (the payment of the balance of the purchase price as well as the payment in of additional capital), so made by Adler & Co. A. G., upon my instructions, were charged to my personal account with Adler & Co. A. G.

Subsequently in August and November, 1932 these charges were cancelled by counterbalancing book entries pending a new capital issue of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. as hereinafter mentioned. The only cash payment made by me for the stock of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. was the payment of $11,604 made on February 24, 1932, as above described. The entire purchase price of the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. stock sold to me in December, 1931, was paid out of the proceeds of the deed of gift from my father, Exhibit R hereto. I am positive that no other funds whatsoever were used by me in payment for these shares, and in fact upon leaving Europe in October, 1931, to go to New York, and subsequently, I had no cash at my disposal in any substantial amount except the proceeds of the said deed of gift.

9. In or shortly before January, 1932, my father left Germany on a world cruise. Before his departure about Christmas time 1931 I had a conversation with him in Ruesselsheim with regard to the above described securities with City Bank Farmers Trust Company. I said to him, and he agreed, that, if the option were exercised on the stock of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., it might not be necessary to form a new corporation but that the Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. might serve as the holding company originally contemplated between us. My father asked me to be sure that the details were so arranged as to protect his and the other interests in the proceeds of the deed of gift, Exhibit R, and suggested that Dr. Frankenberg should become managing director of the holding company. The option having been exercised in the manner above-described, I went to Zurich and obtained from Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. under date of January 13, 1932, a power of attorney authorizing me to sign for the corporation, employing the form furnished me as above stated by Mr. Sammis. A true copy of this power of attorney is hereto attached marked Exhibit U. At the same time I had a conference with Dr. Frankenberg in which I asked him if he would be willing to serve as a member of the board and managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. He stated that he would do so. I said that I was going to New York in the near future for the purpose of turning over the securities held for my account at City Bank Farmers Trust Company to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. Dr. Frankenberg said that in such event the corporation should cause new capital stock to be issued in my name and delivered to me up to a par value in Swiss francs equal to the value of the securities so turned over by me. He said, however, that the exact form of the issue would have to be reserved for further consideration, when we knew the exact amount of property turned over and the question of corporate taxes, etc., could be determined. The amount of new capital which we discussed was 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 Swiss francs. It was for this reason that he suggested to me the advisability of paying in at once the 250,000 Swiss francs of capital stock authorized but not issued.

10. Toward the end of April, 1932, I received a cablegram from my father asking me to meet him in New York, where he would stop on the world cruise, for the purpose of discussing with General Motors Corporation certain technical questions connected with the management and operation of the Opel motor works plant by General Motors. I arrived in New York on May 5, 1932, and had conferences with my father and the officials of General Motors Corporation on the subject of the plant in Germany and of their desire to interest us or other German concerns as minority stockholders in their German subsidiary. I also called at City Bank Farmers Trust Company soon after May 5th and informed the Trust Company that I wished to transfer to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. the cash and securities which the Trust Company held for my account. The officer of the Trust Company with whom I talked said that for this purpose a new power of attorney would be required and I cabled to

Dr. Frankenberg for such a new power. At the end of May, 1932, I received from Dr. Frankenberg a further power of attorney dated May 9, 1932, of which a true copy is attached marked Exhibit W. On the basis of this power of attorney I wrote City Bank Farmers Trust Company on May 31, 1932, directing it to open an account in the name of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. and to transfer to it all the cash and securities then held by it in my main principal and income account, with the exception of 47,625 shares of General Motors Corporation stock which was to remain in my account subject to my further instructions. A true copy of this letter is hereto attached and marked Exhibit X. In reply I received a letter from City Bank Farmers Trust Company dated June 6, 1932, enumerating the securities so transferred, of which a true copy is hereto attached and marked Exhibit Y. The total par value of these securities was $2,339,000. Cash was transferred in addition to the amount of $236,955.46 principal and $2,160.00 income.

The 47,625 shares of General Motors Corporation common stock, above mentioned, were withheld from the transfer to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. in order that they might be traded in pursuant to my above-described arrangement with Mr. Hoffacker. They were so traded in during 1932 and 1933, under an oral arrangement between me and Mr. Hoffacker renewing the terms of the written agreement, Exhibit V hereto. They were ultimately converted into other securities, the certificates for which were forwarded to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. at Zurich.

At the time of this transfer I directed City Bank Farmers Trust Company, as attorney-in-fact of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., to credit 20% of income collected by the Trust Company for account of the corporation, to my personal account. This advice was to conform with the provision in the deed of gift, Exhibit R, giving me 20% of dividends and interest.

11. I left New York on or about June 5, 1932, and returned to Switzerland. Thereafter I kept in touch by cablegram with Mr. Hoffacker with regard to the investments of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. in the United States. I also frequently consulted with Dr. Frankenberg as managing director of the corporation regarding its investments, especially the corporation's investment in the stock of Spur Distributing Company, Inc., amounting to $440,871.44.

Spur Distributing Company, Inc., was a Delaware corporation operating a gasoline distributing system. Uebersee began to purchase the stock of Spur about June, 1932, and ultimately acquired the control. Spur had no refinery and no supply of crude oil of its own. In the summer of 1932, and after my return to Europe I discussed with Dr. Frankenberg my concern over the future gasoline supply of the company. I feared increasing pressure of the larger companies against smaller competitors like Spur Distributing Company, Inc., and decided in concert with Dr. Frankenberg to take steps toward supplementing the gasoline distributing system of Spur with oil reserves and a refinery so as to constitute an independent unit and protect Spur for a period of some fifteen years. For this purpose, acting as attorney-in-fact of Uebersee, by cable instructions to City Bank Farmers Trust Company from Zurich and elsewhere in Europe I caused United States Government and public utility bonds of Uebersee to be sold and the proceeds credited to its account in New York, as follows:

Date	Credit
September 9, 1932	$ 110,722.50
October 11	507,500.00
	205,000.00
October 13	255,843.75
November 14	14,758.70
	128,973.00
	6,785.60
	38,973.75
	2,202.60

Date	Credit
November 16	31,565.80
	21,538.10
	3,216.40
	1,791.30
Total	$1,328,871.50

Early in November I arrived in New York for the purpose of acquiring the additional units in connection with the Spur system. Soon after arriving I found that my fears with regard to the basis of operation of the Spur Distributing Company, Inc., were confirmed by a letter which Crittenden Engineering Company addressed to Mr. Hoffacker under date of November 17, 1932, which referred to studies beginning in September and contained the following:

> "A careful analysis of Spur's 1931 operations showed an attractive profit; approximately ¾¢ per gallon of marketing throughout. The trend of the 1932 operations over the first nine months showed a sharply declining profit margin. This margin depends almost solely on the ability of the management to purchase quality gasoline below market quotations. The existence of low priced gasoline during ten months of 1931 was the result of chaotic conditions in several crude producing fields which were relatively stabilized in November, 1931. The trend in wholesale gasoline prices has been upwards, amounting to ½¢ per gallon higher for the first nine months of 1932 than the average of 1931."

For the purpose of meeting this situation I made a proposal on November 17, 1932, to Mr. Clifford M. Leonard to invest $1,000,000 in installments beginning December 1, 1932, and ending September 1, 1933, in stock of a proposed new corporation which with Spur Distributing Company, Inc., would form a completely integrated oil unit. The proposed new corporation was to have an authorized capitalization of 1,000,000 shares; my proposed commitment of $1,000,000 involved the purchase of one-fifth of the authorized capital stock; and in addition I proposed to take options for the purchase of capital stock in the amount of a further $2,500,000, part of this purchase price to be paid for the stock of Spur Distributing Company, Inc.

These negotiations continued for several months or until about March, 1933, when for various reasons they failed to materialize. Instead two corporations were organized under Louisiana law, in the early part of 1933, one called Oil Refineries, Inc., and the other Oil Production, Inc., Mr. Leonard participating in the management. In these corporations Uebersee during 1933 invested an aggregate of $756,000. Dr. Frankenberg and I intended on behalf of Uebersee greatly to increase its investments in these oil companies and would have increased them were it not for the impounding of the company's gold in the United States in March, 1933, as hereinafter described. Over and above the monies actually invested by Uebersee in Oil Production, Inc., and Oil Refineries, Inc., there were recommended for purchase by engineering counsel oil leases and acreage up to the amount of $6,000,000, which has since greatly increased in value. This purchase could have been made with a present cash expenditure of $1,500,000.

In addition upon my arrival in New York in November, 1932, I made a proposal to General Motors Corporation to repurchase stock of Adam Opel A. G. up to an amount varying between 6,000,000 and 12,000,000 Reichmarks, which proposal, if accepted, I intended to transfer to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. After some negotiation, however, this proposal was declined by General Motors Corporation in the summer of 1933.

It was by reason of these pending investments on behalf of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. that Dr. Frankenberg and I caused the liquidation of bonds held for its account as above-described.

I returned to Switzerland in December, 1932. I went to Zurich and discussed with Dr. Frankenberg as managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. the investments which I had made and was contemplating for the corporation and he approved of them.

12. The beginning of the banking holiday in the United States in February, 1933, made me fearful that the funds of Uebersee which had been put in liquid form for the express purpose of making the investments above enumerated, would be tied up indefinitely through a closing of the banks. With the very large commitments on hand and in view, I did not want Uebersee to become involved in an illiquid position. I discussed the situation with Dr. Frankenberg both by telephone and face to face, and was told by him to convert the cash holdings of the corporation into gold or foreign exchange. I therefore cabled City Bank Farmers Trust Company on February 26, 1933, as follows:

> "Please purchase for account Ueberseeische One Million Two Hundred Fifty Thousand Dollars gold and place in safekeeping stop Notify me by cable"

I received from the Trust Company under date of February 27, 1933, the following acknowledgment:

> "Have placed order to purchase one million two hundred fifty thousand dollars gold stop Can not extend facilities for holding said gold in custodian account. Stop Please advise disposition to be made of said metal immediately."

The Trust Company's file copy of this cablegram is entitled "Ueberseeische Finanz-Korporation Ltd. Custodian A/C number 16875".

The transcript of account of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. with the Trust Company shows a charge of $1,250,000 on February 27, 1933, for the purchase of gold coin. In reply to the Trust Company's cablegram I on behalf of Uebersee instructed it to deliver the gold to Ladenberg Thalmann & Co., 25 Broad Street, New York, New York for account of Uebersee. This transfer to Ladenberg Thalmann & Co. was made at the suggestion of Dr. Frankenberg. For some years before 1928 Uebersee had had an active account with Ladenberg Thalmann & Co., in New York.

In January and March, 1933, further bonds were sold by City Bank Farmers Trust Company by my orders for account of Uebersee as follows:

January 13, 1933	$ 4,850.55
	1,184.20
March 2	74,531.25
	150,911.25
March 14	124,710.00
	24,906.25
	19,757.13
	12,821.25
Total	$413,671.88

In March, 1933, through Ladenberg Thalmann & Co. Uebersee made sales of bonds as follows:

March 2, 1933	$156,211.61
	97,258.67
	75,748.96
	25,312.15
March 3	110,696.66
	15,057.50
	13,033.58
	1,013.83
	20,060.46
Total	$514,393.42

These sales also were made for the purpose of placing Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. in funds with which to fulfill the investment program above described. With the closing of the American banks on March 14, 1933, the $1,250,000 of gold was no longer available to the corporation. Acting for Uebersee I ordered $600,000 to be transferred to the Swiss Credit Anstalt in Zurich for its account by City Bank Farmers Trust Company on March 16, 1933. Uebersee on and after September 18, 1933, sold 3,000,000 Swiss francs, as appears from the affidavit of Friedrich Wille herein verified July 27, 1934, and used the proceeds, $910,296.90, together with other monies for the purpose of the investments for which the gold had been accumulated.

13. On or about April 24, 1933, I came to the United States for about 10 days (sailing again on May 3, 1933) in the hope of getting a definite reply from General Motors Corporation in response to the above-described proposal for the purchase of Adam Opel A. G. stock. While in New York I requested Ladenberg Thalmann & Co. to apply for a license in the name of Uebersee to export the $1,250,000 of gold held by them. By reason of the refusal of the export license I was forced to curtail the oil program above described to approximately one-third, so that Uebersee was able through Oil Production, Inc., to purchase oil reserves amounting to only about 4,540,000 barrels instead of the 15,000,000 barrels contemplated, despite the large expenditures already incurred for geological surveys, title searches, etc.

14. On August 24, 1933, I again visited the United States as pilot of one of the two official German balloons entered by Germany in the Gordon Bennett cup races at Chicago. I was accompanied to the United States by Dr. Wronker-Flatow, who was one of the managing staff of the Opel Works and who came, among other things, for the purpose of obtaining a definite answer to my above-described proposal for the acquisition of Opel shares.

I discussed with Ladenberg Thalmann & Co. during this visit the situation of the gold held in this country for account of the corporation by them and the investments of the corporation. My authority to deal with them on behalf of the corporation was a power of attorney dated May 17, 1933, and signed by Dr. Meier and Dr. Frankenberg, which I believe was forwarded to Ladenberg Thalmann & Co. by mail and of which a true copy is attached hereto marked Exhibit Z.

15. The 97 bearer shares of Uebersee which I acquired in the manner above stated are now on deposit in a vault in my name, No. 1917, with the Swiss Credit Anstalt in Zurich, Switzerland, the key to which is in the possession of Dr. Frankenberg. This key is held by Dr. Frankenberg as agent and representative of my father, Wilhelm von Opel, for the purpose of safeguarding his usufruct. In addition I have an oral agreement with Dr. Frankenberg as managing director of Adler & Co. A. G. by which these shares are to secure any existing or future indebtedness on my part to Adler & Co. A. G. This arrangement was made in connection with a credit opened to me by Adler & Co. A. G. up to 1,500,000 Swiss francs, principally for the purpose of fulfilling a joint obligation of my father and myself to the German Reichsbank.

16. I am married, but have no children.

17. My father Wilhelm von Opel and my mother Marta von Opel are still living. Both are citizens and residents of Germany. Neither has been in the United States since June, 1932, when they landed at New York on the world cruise above referred to. My sister, Mrs. Elinor Sachs, is also still living. She is likewise a citizen and resident of Germany. To the best of my recollection she has not been in the United States since 1927 or 1928. The settlement with my said sister contemplated in the deed of gift Exhibit R has not yet been made.

18. At no time, to the best of my knowledge or belief, has Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. been engaged in business in the United States, nor is it now so engaged. At no time has it had an agent or representative in the United States, except for the transient visits made by me as attorney-in-fact for the corporation as described in this affidavit. The corporation has not now and never has had an office or branch in the United States.

AFFIDAVIT OF THEODORE HOFFACKER, DATED JUNE 12, 1935.

IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding Gold held for its Account in the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK }
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

THEODORE HOFFACKER, being duly sworn, says:

I am engaged in business as an investment banker and industrial manager, and made an affidavit herein on June 6, 1935. Subsequently I have been informed by Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Reed, attorneys for the above-named Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., that the desirability of further information has been suggested by the Treasury with respect to (a) any and all understandings between myself and Mr. Fritz von Opel or Uebersee as to compensation to me for advice with regard to investments, etc., and (b) the corporations in which Uebersee has invested in the United States, their mode of management, etc.

(a) As regards any understanding with Uebersee or Mr. Fritz von Opel concerning compensation for investment advice, etc., I have never had any communication, oral or written, with Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., directly or indirectly with respect to compensation from Uebersee to me or the rendering of investment advice by me to Uebersee. My only communications, written or oral, regarding investment advice to be furnished by me or compensation to be received by me therefor, with any one connected with Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., were communications to and from Mr. Fritz von Opel. The only written communication on that subject between us was the letter agreement dated October 30, 1931, of which a copy is attached to Mr. von Opel's affidavit of June 7, 1935, herein, marked Exhibit V. This agreement was cancelled pursuant to its terms by Mr. von Opel by cable early in January, 1932. Subsequently, however, upon Mr. von Opel's arrival in New York in May, 1932, we had a conversation in which it was agreed that trading should continue in the General Motors Corporation common stock described in Exhibit V under the same terms. My oral communications with Mr. Fritz von Opel on this subject were all had during his visits to New York in 1931 and 1932 during the periods specified in his said affidavit. The conversations on this subject between us in 1931 are summed up in and represented by the written agreement Exhibit V. The conversations between us on this subject in 1932 consisted in an oral agreement by Mr. von Opel that I should continue to trade on his behalf in the General Motors Corporation common stock account referred to in his affidavit, and a statement by him that with respect to any other investments which he purchased on my advice he would compensate me to the extent of 20% of any profit as measured by the difference between the purchase price and the ultimate selling price.

In none of these conversations did Mr. von Opel say that he was acting as attorney-in-fact for Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., and I did not understand in any way or form that he was purporting to bind Uebersee by the statements above described. I knew that Uebersee was not the owner of General Motors Corporation common stock which we discussed, and I now understand that at the time of our first conversations in October and November, 1931, Mr. von Opel did not own any stock of Uebersee. At the time of Mr. von Opel's visit in 1932 I knew that he had some interest in Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., but I had no knowledge concerning this corporation, and I only learned incidentally through participating in a conversation in which City Bank Farmers Trust asked Mr. von Opel to supplement a previous power of attorney, that he then had a power of attorney for Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. I always dealt with Mr. Fritz von Opel as a principal, and never as a representative of any company.

Beginning in May and early June, 1932, I discussed with Mr. Fritz von Opel investments to be made in this country. These discussions eventuated after some time in orders given me by Mr. von Opel either orally when he was in New York or by cable or letter from Zurich or elsewhere in Europe to purchase stock or obligations of Spur Distributing Co. Inc., Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware), Oil Production Inc., and Oil Refineries Inc. When deliveries were made on these purchases, payments for the stock or obligations were made by Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. through their bankers City Bank Farmers Trust Company or Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. In this way I knew as a practical matter that orders which Mr. von Opel gave me were being paid for by Uebersee and could have deduced that he was delivering such orders as attorney-in-fact for Uebersee, but the fact of the matter is that I dealt with him as a principal and looked to him for performance on such orders. I do not consider that I acted in any way as an attorney-in-fact or agent for Uebersee in accepting and executing the orders so transmitted to me by Mr. von Opel which resulted in the investments above described.

The foregoing is as full a statement as I am able to make regarding this subject. I have never had a settlement with Mr. von Opel on the profits with respect to investments which Mr. von Opel made on my advice and transferred to Uebersee in the manner above described, for the reason that none of these securities have been sold and my original recommendation to Mr. von Opel was to make these investments on a long-term basis. However, if asked whether my oral agreement with Mr. von Opel above described respecting a 20% share in profits realized on investments made on my advice applied to the investments in Spur Distributing Co. Inc. and other stock which were so taken over by Uebersee, I should reply that from a legal point of view I recognize I have no claim to a share in such profits as Uebersee might ultimately realize upon a resale of such securities. As above stated, my only arrangement was with Mr. von Opel personally.

I have received compensation as officer of the various companies in which Uebersee so invested, namely as President of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts), as Vice-President of Spur Distributing Co. Inc., as President of Oil Production Inc., and as President of Oil Refineries Inc. As President of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts) (which is wholly owned, as hereinafter stated, by Harvard Brewing Co. [Delaware]), I receive a salary of $1,000 per month, and I also have a share in the management fund, which varies according to the profits of the company but in which my share this year should approximate $5,000. As Vice-President of Spur Distributing Co., Inc., I receive $100 a month. As President of Oil Refineries, Inc., which is managed under management contract by Crittenden Engineering Co., as hereinafter explained, I receive $500 per month. As President of Oil Production

Inc., which is managed under similar management contract by Crittenden Engineering Co., I receive $250 a month. In addition, as director of these respective companies as hereinafter stated I receive director's fees aggregating about $2,000 a year.

(b) The course of the investments made by Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. in American corporations and the method of their management to the present time are as follows, according to my knowledge as refreshed by reference to the corporate records and telegrams from the various corporate offices:

1. My first connection with Spur Distributing Co., Inc., a Delaware corporation, occurred in May, 1932, when I was informed that the New York Stock Exchange firm of Burden Cole & Co. were selling a large block of Spur Distributing Co., Inc., by reason of the financial difficulties of the firm. In October, 1931, Mr. Fritz von Opel had informed me that he had previously purchased for his personal account 4,000 shares of this stock. I recommended to him in May, 1932, to buy the stock offered by Burden Cole & Co., and he made an offer of $5 per share for at least 50,000 shares of stock. This stock was delivered to City Bank Farmers Trust Company for account of Uebersee in various instalments beginning June 30, 1932, and paid for out of such account.

The certificate of incorporation of Spur Distributing Co., Inc., shows that it was incorporated in Delaware on April 19, 1928. For the corporate records regarding Spur Distributing Co., Inc., I telegraphed to H. D. Hines, Secretary and Treasurer of the company at Nashville, Tennessee, and under date of June 10, 1935, received the following telegraphic reply:

> "I, H. D. Hines, Secretary and Treasurer of the Spur Distributing Company do hereby certify to the following statements as true according to the records of the company stop 1, the original incorporators of the Spur Distributing Company were Joseph B. Thomas, J. M. Houghland and Alan Fox stop 2. the following are the names of all the directors of the Spur Distributing Company just preceeding change in control of its capital stock in July nineteen thirty-two J. M. Houghland, Joseph B. Thomas, J. N. Cole, William Burden, H. D. Hines stop at a special meeting of directors held on July twenty first nineteen thirty two the by-laws were amended so as to provide for an increase in the number of directors from five to seven. In addition to the above five directors, Theodore Hoffacker and Werner C. von Clemm were elected to the directorate stop at the annual stockholders meeting held on April eighteenth nineteen thirty-three the following directors were elected for the ensuing year, J. Goepel, Werner C. von Clemm, Theodore Hoffacker stop at the annual meeting of stockholders held on April third nineteen thirty four the by-laws were amended reducing the directorate from seven to five members. The directors elected at this meeting for the ensuing year were: J. M. Houghland, Joseph B. Thomas, Theodore Hoffacker, Werner C. von Clemm, Herbert W. Goepel stop there was no change in the directorate for the year nineteen thirty-five, all previous members being re-elected by the stockholders at the annual meeting held April second nineteen thirty five stop 3, the books and records of the company are kept by H. D. Hines, Secretary and Treasurer of the company at Nashville, Tennessee. stop 4. the following extract is from the minutes of meeting of board of directors held April third nineteen thirty four stop 'the chair announced the first order of business was the election of officers

Thomas the compensation of the foregoing officers was fixed effective January first nineteen thirty five as follows. J. M. Houghland, eighteen thousand dollars, Joseph B. Thomas, twelve hundred dolllars, Theodore Hoffacker twelve hundred dollars, H. D. Hines seventy eight hundred dollars, A. E. Peterson thirty three hundred dollars stop 5. the controlling block of stock of the Spur Distributing Company seventy one thousand nine hundred thirty eight shares has been voted by Mr. Theodore Hoffacker at stockholders meeting held on April eighteenth nineteen thirty three and April three nineteen thirty four and April second nineteen thirty five stop.'"

Spur Distributing Co., Inc., has 140,000 shares of no par capital stock outstanding out of 400,000 shares authorized. It is my understanding that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., owns 75,589 shares; that J. M. Houghland, President, owns 24,000 shares; that Joseph B. Thomas, Vice-President, owns 25,000 shares; and that interests connected with Werner C. von Clemm own 8,000 shares.

There exists and existed at the time of my first knowledge of the company a voting trust under which there are deposited 63,501 shares of stock. The voting trustees at the time of my first acquaintance with the company were Mr. Houghland, Mr. Thomas and Mr. John N. Cole. On or about July 31, 1932, I was elected a voting trustee to replace Mr. Cole. From time to time I have voted at stockholders meetings of the company stock owned by Uebersee under proxies signed sometimes by Mr. Fritz von Opel as attorney-in-fact for Uebersee and sometimes by Hans Frankenberg and Adolph Gaeng as nominees for Uebersee.

My nominal compensation from Spur Distributing Co., Inc., is due to the fact that my duties as Vice-President do not require much of my time. The company is managed by J. M. Houghland, the President, under a management contract dated January 1, 1933, providing in substance for a salary to him of $1,500 per month and an interest of 5% in the profits of the company plus an additional 5% interest until $200,000 has accrued thereunder. Under this management agreement Mr. Houghland received compensation in the amount of $31,706.56 during 1933 and in the amount of $36,104.27 during 1934. His compensation prior to the management contract was $18,000 a year.

To my knowledge neither Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., nor any director or representative thereof, nor Mr. Fritz von Opel has ever attempted to participate in the management of the company or purported to give directions with reference thereto. The company's corporate records are in charge of Mr. H. D. Hines, Secretary and Treasurer, and are kept at the offices of the company at Nashville, Tennessee. Its books of account are in charge of Mr. Alver Peterson, Assistant Treasurer, under Mr. Hines, and are kept at the offices in Nashville, Tennessee.

The directors of the company since the beginning of my acquaintance with it have been J. M. Houghland, Joseph B. Thomas, Werner C. von Clemm, John N. Cole (resigned April, 1933), Herbert W. Goepel (elected April, 1933), and myself. Approximately eight meetings of the directors have been held since July, 1932, some in New York and some in Nashville, Tennessee. I have attended them all. Regular stockholders meetings have been held annually in New York, primarily because the smaller stockholders were located here.

2. Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) was incorporated in the State of Delaware on December 3, 1932, according to the statement made by the company in its listing application No. 584 to the New York Curb Exchange. According to the same statement Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts) was incorporated in the State of Massachusetts in October, 1932, with 1,000 shares of common stock of no par value; it acquired in December, 1932, the plant of the former Harvard Brewing Co. in Lowell, Massachusetts; and in Uebersee against payment in cash and against an exchange of stock 94,000 further shares of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware). The purchase price of part of this stock has not been paid to Union de Placements et de Participations, and the stock is retained by Union as collateral for the debt of Uebersee.

From September 18, 1933, to August 16, 1934, A. C. O. Inc., sold to Uebersee a total of 113,960 shares of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) for a total consideration of $460,810. A. C. O. Inc., is a Delaware corporation organized in November, 1932, of which I was and am President and the principal stockholder of which was and is Amalgamated Patents, S. A., a Luxemburg corporation. I understand that Mr. Fritz von Opel has an interest in Amalgamated Patents, S. A., but that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., has not now and has never had any interest of stock ownership in either A. C. O. Inc., or Amalgamated Patents, S. A., directly or indirectly.

On December 7, 1932, I was elected a director and Vice-President of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware), and on July 31, 1933, I was elected Chairman of the Board of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts).

Director meetings of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) are held approximately monthly in the office of Hallgarten & Co., New York, and those of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts) are held approximately monthly at Lowell, Massachusetts. The books and records of each company are in the custody of their respective Secretaries, in the case of the former at the company's office in New York, and in the case of the latter in the company's office in Lowell, Massachusetts. Annual stockholders meetings are held regularly, in the case of the former company at the office of Hallgarten & Co., in New York and in the case of the latter company at Lowell, Massachusetts.

I became President of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts) on June 1, 1934. In addition to my participation in the management fund of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts), as above described, there also participate six other officers.

I personally own shares of stock of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware), and am registered as owner in respect of a further 76,100 shares which are owned principally by A. C. O. Inc., and Union de Placements et de Participations, S. A., and some of which may be owned by Uebersee but are held by A. C. O. Inc., as collateral for the debt above described on the sale of such stock.

To the best of my knowledge neither Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., nor any director or representative thereof, nor Mr. Fritz von Opel has at any time assumed to direct or to influence the management of either Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) or Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts). With respect to this question I addressed a telegram of inquiry to Arthur C. Sullivan, Clerk of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts) and received under date of June 10, 1935, the following reply addressed to Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Reed:

> "Fritz von Opel elected director Harvard Brewing Co Massachusetts corporation December Nineteen Thirty Three stop Has attended one meeting of directors on May Twenty Seven Nineteen Thirty Five stop Fritz von Opel has never directly or indirectly at any time exercised any control over or been connected with management of Harvard Brewing Co Massachusetts as director officer or otherwise stop Mr. von Opel has to my knowledge at no time exercised any control over or in any way been connected with the manager of Harvard Brewing Co Massachusetts stop The Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. unknown to me as in any way being connected with Harvard Brewing Co Massachusetts and has at no time exercised control over or been in any way connected with management of Harvard Brewing Co Massachusetts"

I also refer to letter of Hugh Sudall, Secretary of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) dated June 11, 1935, and addressed to Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Read and to the attached statement of Mr. Sudall.

Attached hereto marked Exhibit A-1 is a certificate by Mr. Sullivan as Clerk of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts) with respect to Mr. von Opel's connection with the corporation. Attached hereto marked Exhibit B-1 are two certificates of Mr. Sullivan as such Clerk with respect to my connection with the corporation, and the organization and operation thereof.

3. I am President of Oil Refineries Inc., a Louisiana corporation organized by Amalgamated Patents, S. A. The following information with regard to Oil Refineries Inc., is furnished me from the corporate records in a telegram from H. T. McGown, Secretary of the corporation, at Shreveport, Louisiana, dated June 11, 1935:

"Replying your request reference Oil Refineries Incorporated stop Corporation was organized March Twenty fourth nineteen thirty three by M. J. Grogan, H. H. McMurphy, Byron A. Irwin, D. J. After having organized the corporation, Amalgamated Patents, S. A., sold its outstanding 1,000 shares of stock to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., for $10,000 on April 27, 1933, and a $200,000 Five-Year Mortgage 6% Note on May 31, 1933, for $200,000.

Regular directors meetings have been held principally at Shreveport, Louisiana, but sometimes in New York. Stockholders meetings have been regularly held in Shreveport, Louisiana. The place of business of the corporation is in Shreveport, Louisiana, where its books and corporate records are kept.

The company is managed under a management contract dated April 18, 1933, by Crittenden Engineering Co., a Delaware corporation, for a compensation which amounted to $20,516.28 for the year ending February 28, 1934, and to $14,400 for the year ending February 28, 1935.

To my knowledge neither Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., nor any director or representative thereof, nor Mr. Fritz von Opel has at any time assumed to direct or influence the management of the company. On this subject I telegraphed M. J. Grogan, Vice-President of the company, and received through Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Reed the following reply dated June 11, 1935:

"Retel the management of Oil Refineries Inc. has not at any time been interfered with by Uebersee Finanz Korp AG and we have never received any communication of any kind from them and the same is true from Mr Fritz von Opel whom we have only met once and who is not a director or officer of our company."

4. I am also President of Oil Production Inc., a Louisiana corporation, and was likewise organized by Amalgamated Patents, S. A. The facts of record with respect to this corporation are contained in a telegram addressed to me from Shreveport, Louisiana, from Mr. H. T. McGowan as Secretary under date of June 10, 1935, as follows:

"Replying your request reference Oil Production Incorporated stop Corporation was organized April twenty ninth nineteen thirty three by H. T. McGowan, B. P. Crittenden, M. J. Grogan, Byron A. The entire outstanding capital stock of Oil Production, Inc., was purchased by Amalgamated Patents, S. A., and by A. C. O. Inc., 190 shares being purchased by the former company on May 23, 1933, for $19,000 and 1610 shares by A. C. O. Inc., on September 21, 1933, for $161,000. The reference to me as "agent" in the above-quoted telegram from Mr. McGown refers to me as agent for Amalgamated Patents, S. A., and for A. C. O. Inc., respectively with regard to the shares so subscribed by them. All these shares are still retained by these companies except for 200 shares which were redeemed on October 11, 1934.

The outstanding bonds of Oil Production Inc., in the amount of $451,000 (reduced from $523,000 through redemption on October 24, 1934) are all owned by Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., which purchased them on various dates beginning July 7, 1933, from A. C. O. Inc. These bonds, which A. C. O. Inc., sold to Uebersee at 100, were purchased by it from Oil Production Inc., for 70.

The place of business of Oil Production Inc., is Shreveport, Louisiana. Its corporate books and records have been kept, and its directors and stockholders meetings conducted in a manner substantially similar to those of Oil Refineries Inc., as above stated.

As in the case of Oil Refineries Inc., neither Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., nor any director or representative thereof, nor Mr. Fritz von Opel has influenced, nor sought to influence the management of the company. On this subject I quote a telegram received by me from Mr. Grogan as Vice-President of Oil Production Inc., through Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Reed dated June 11, 1935, as follows:

> "Retel the management of Oil Production Inc has not at any time been interfered with by Uebersee Finanz Korp AG and we have never received any communication of any kind from them and the same is true of Mr Fritz von Opel whom we have only met once and who is not a director or officer of our company"

Oil Production Inc., like Oil Refineries Inc., is managed under a contract dated January 13, 1934, by Crittenden Engineering Co. The compensation paid to Crittenden Engineering Co., under this contract was $3,414.33 for the period ended February 28, 1934, and $23,029.05 for the period ended February 28, 1935.

(c) In consequence of my knowledge of these companies I state categorically that they function independently of any external control and with complete and entire regard to due corporate forms despite the interest that Uebersee has in them as herein stated, and that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., is not doing business in any form in the United States through the agency or by the means of these companies. Nor is Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., engaged in business in the United States in any way or form through any other company or any agent to the best of my knowledge and belief.

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding Gold held for its Account in the United States.

STATE OF NEW YORK }
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

FRITZ VON OPEL, being duly sworn, says:

I made an affidavit herein verified June 7, 1935. I have read the affidavit herein of Mr. Theodore Hoffacker verified June 12, 1935, and state that the same is a correct statement of my recollection with regard to the conversations between us and other acts performed by me as set forth by Mr. Hoffacker.

To my knowledge Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. and I myself have never sought in any way to influence or dominate the activities of Spur Distributing Co., Inc., or Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) or Harvard Brewing Co.

(Massachusetts) or Oil Production Inc., or Oil Refineries Inc., except in so far as Uebersee might lawfully control the operations of those companies in its capacity as stockholder. The operation of those companies has been at all times independent and separate from the operation of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G.

Investments of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. outside the United States exist in Switzerland to the extent of several hundred thousand francs, in Africa where assets are held by an English company in which Uebersee owns stock representing an investment by Uebersee of about 120,000 English shillings, and in Germany, where formerly Uebersee owned bonds to the value of several hundred thousand German marks. My knowledge on this subject has been obtained from conversations with Dr. Frankenberg and from examining the records of Uebersee in Zurich.

By-Laws of Uebersee Finanz Korporation A. G.
Overseas Finance Corporation Ltd.

A. Firm, Name, Domicile, Purpose

Paragraph 1.

Under the firm name "Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A.G." "Overseas Finance-Corporation Ltd." there exists based on these By-Laws a joint stock company, with domicile at Zurich.

Paragraph 2.

Purpose of the Corporation is the transaction of foreign Banking and Commercial business, as well as any kind of Banking and Commercial business, and the acquisition and administration of participations. The Corporation may conclude any and all legal transactions which it may consider as conducive to the achievement of the purpose of the Corporation; it is also entitled to acquire and dispose of real estate.

Paragraph 3.

The duration of the life of the corporation is indefinite.

B. Capital of the Corporation

Paragraph 4.

The capital of the Corporation amounts to Fr. 500,000, consisting of 100 bearer shares with numbers 1-100 at Fr. 5,000. par value. The subscribers to the stock are liable only for the payment of 50 per cent of the par value, in accordance with O. R. Section 636, paragraph 3.

Paragraph 5.

The amount of the payment will be fixed by the general meeting.

The latter is also authorized to increase or reduce the stock capital in conformity with the capital requirements, and also to convert the bearer shares into shares registered in a name, as well as to amortize the stock in accordance with O. R. Section 628, paragraph 1. It is furthermore authorized to issue bonds.

C. Organization

The organs of the Corporation are:

I. The general meeting.

II. The Board of Directors.

III. The Comptroller.

I. General Meeting

Paragraph 6.

The functions of the general meeting are essentially the following:

1. Adoption of the annual accounts, the balance sheet and the report of the directors, as well as of the Comptroller's report; resolution as to the application of the net earnings and release of the directors.

2. Election of the President and members of the Board of Directors, also of the Comptroller and any special delegates, if any, in accordance with O. R. Section 650.

3. Resolutions on motions of the Board of Directors, also on motions of individual stockholders.

4. Alterations of the By-Laws.

5. Dissolution of the Corporation.

6. Resolutions as per paragraph 5.

Paragraph 7.

The regular general meeting takes place within four months after the conclusion of the fiscal year.

Special general meetings are called, in the discretion of the Board of Directors, or within two weeks if requested by one or more stockholders representing at least one-tenth of the stock capital. Such request to be made by such stockholders or their representatives in written form stating the purpose thereof. If all stockholders are represented, a special general meeting may be held at any time.

Paragraph 8.

The annual accounts and the Comptroller's report are open to the inspection of the stockholders in the office of the Corporation for ten days preceding the regular general meeting.

Paragraph 9.

The President of the Board of Directors or in his absence another member of the Board of Directors will preside at the general meeting.

The Chairman is entitled to vote and has the casting vote.

Paragraph 10.

Each represented share of stock is entitled to ten votes. No stockholder may assemble in his own hand more than a fifth part of the votes represented.

Paragraph 11.

The general meeting passes its resolutions and executes its elections by absolute majority of the votes represented; it is competent to pass resolutions if at least one-fourth of all shares of stock is validly represented.

There are excepted resolutions in reference to Lit. 4, 5 and 6 of paragraph 6. For such resolutions a two-thirds majority of the entire stock capital is required.

In the event of a regularly called general meeting not being competent to pass resolutions, the Board of Directors is required to call a second general meeting within eight days, which will then be authorized to vote with absolute majority on the matters before the first general meeting irrespective of the number of shares of stock represented.

Paragraph 12.

Divisions will be made by open or secret vote as decided by the majority of those present.

Paragraph 13.

Motions of stockholders have to be delivered to the Board of Directors at least fourteen days before the meeting and the Board of Directors has to present the same to the meeting. The meeting may decide as to the time at which such motions will be dealt with. If all stockholders are represented, motions which have been made at the meeting itself may also be voted on.

Paragraph 14.

The call for all general meetings has to be issued at least ten days previously.

II. The Board of Directors

Paragraph 15.

The Board of Directors consists of one to five members. The number of the members will be decided by the general meeting.

Members of the Board of Directors must be stockholders and have to deposit with the Corporation at least one share of stock.

Paragraph 16.

The term of office is one year. The retiring members are subject to re-election. Should any substitutes become necessary, the elections for same will take place at the next general meeting.

Paragraph 17.

The Board of Directors undertakes all those functions which are not expressly reserved for the general meeting either by law or the Corporation's By-Laws.

The Board of Directors may delegate a part of its functions to one or more of its members, or to third parties who need not be members of the Corporation.

In particular it is the duty of the Board of Directors to

1. Exercise supervision of the entire conduct of the business.

2. To appoint and release managers and agents (powers of attorney).

3. Acquire real estate.

4. Prepare all business to be placed before the general meeting.

5. Effectuate the resolutions of the general meeting.

Paragraph 18.

The meetings of the Board of Directors are called by the President. It is competent for resolutions, if at least two members, or the President alone, are present. The party presiding at such meetings has the casting vote.

III. The Comptroller

Paragraph 19.

The general meeting entrusts one or more Comptrollers who need not be members of the Corporation with the task of submitting to the general meeting a report on the balance sheet and the accounts presented by the Board of Directors. The audit of the balance sheet and of the profit and loss account is to be made in accordance with the provisions of the law of obligations (obligationenrecht).

D. Annual Accounts and Division of Net Earnings

Paragraph 20.

The books are to be closed on December 31st. Inventory and balance sheet are to be made as of that date.

Balance sheet as well as profit and loss account, are to be rendered in accordance with the provisions of O. R. Section 656 and subsequent ones.

Paragraph 21.

The division of earnings will be undertaken by the general meeting on motion of the Board of Directors, provided, however, that such division may only be made after ten per cent have been transferred to reserve account.

E. Dissolution of the Corporation

Paragraph 22.

The dissolution of the Corporation takes place in accordance with legal requirements.

F. Announcements

Paragraph 23.

The publications of the Corporation will be announced in the Schweizerische Handelsamtsblatt (Swiss official bulletin of Commerce). Non-local stockholders may designate a special representative to whom a special announcement is to be sent by registered mail.

Zurich, May 24, 1922.

Minutes of the 9th Regular General Meeting of UEBERSEE FINANZ KORPORATION, A. G. ZURICH
Saturday, March 14, 1931, at 10 A. M. at the office of Dr. Martin Bloch, Bahnhofstrasse 82, Zurich I.

Present on their own behalf and as proxy of stockholders:

Dr. Martin Bloch, Attorney-at-Law, Zurich I,
Mr. Adolf Gaeng, Certified Accountant, Zurich 6.

Mr. Martin Bloch took the chair, and took note, that all stockholders were present or represented. Dr. Martin Bloch further took note that the notice for the general meeting had been issued in accordance with the provision of the by-laws, and that the meeting was competent to pass resolutions regarding the subjects on the agenda.

Subject No. 1.—Presentation of the annual report, and of the balance sheet for the year 1930.

Dr. Bloch states that the annual report and accounts have been open to inspection by stockholders in his office during the period provided for in the by-laws. He said that due to the low level of stock prices a large loss had occurred in the business year just expired, and that the business year 1930 closed with a loss of Frcs. 18,680.23, which changed the gain carried forward from January 1, 1930 of Frcs. 3,614.50 to a loss of Frcs. 15,065.73 carried forward per January 1, 1931.

Subject No. 2—Report of the Comptroller.

Dr. Martin Bloch read to the meeting the written report of the Comptroller of March 2, 1931. The comptroller moved that the balance sheet and profit and loss statement as of December 31, 1930, be adopted, and those responsible be released from their responsibilities.

Subject No. 3—Release of Board of Directors and Comptroller.

In compliance with the motion of the comptroller the balance sheet and profit and loss statement as of December 31, 1930, was unanimously adopted and declared final; also the report of the comptroller of March 2, 1931, was adopted.

The Board of Directors and Comptroller were released with an unanimous vote of thanks.

Subject No. 4—Election of the Board of Directors and of the Comptroller.

There were elected as director for a new term:
Dr. Martin Bloch, Attorney at Law, Zurich I, and as Comptroller:
Mr. Adolf Gaeng, Certified Accountant, Zurich 6.

General Remarks: In the resolutions and elections under Subjects No. 3 and 4 the stockholders present or their proxies have refrained from voting, as far as their own person was in question.
Close of the meeting 10:30.

Chairman and acting Secretary
(signed) Dr. Martin Bloch.

Minutes of the Tenth Regular General Meeting of

UEBERSEE FINANZ KORPORATION, A. G., ZURICH held on Friday, May 6th, 1932, at 9 o'clock in the forenoon at the domicile of the Corporation, Bahnhofstrasse 82, Zurich 1.

Present: Dr. Martin Bloch, attorney-at-law, director, Zurich 1,
Mr. Adolf Gäng, comptroller, Zurich 6,
Dr. Hanns Frankenberg, Banker, Zurich 1,
Dr. Jós. Henggeler, attorney-at-law, Zurich 1,
Dr. Hugo Wyler, as acting secretary

Dr. Martin Bloch presided as chairman, and took note that all stockholders were present or represented, viz:

Mr. Fritz von Opel, represented by Dr. Hanns Frankenberg, Zurich, by virtue of written proxy of

Apr. 29 1932	497 shares
Dr. Martin Bloch	2 "
Dr. Hanns Frankenberg	1 "
Total	500 shares

The voting power of Dr. Frankenberg was reduced to 100 votes.

On inquiry by Dr. Martin Bloch all stockholders present and by proxy acknowledged the notice issued as in order and binding. The meeting was, therefore, competent for resolutions on the subjects on the agenda. Dr. Hugo Wyler was appointed acting secretary, Dr. Henggeler as teller of votes.

AGENDA

1. Presentation of annual report and of annual balance sheet and profit and loss account for the year 1931.
2. Report of the comptroller.
3. Release of Board of Directors and comptroller.
4. Election of Board of Directors and comptroller.
5. Various subjects.

Subject No. 1—Presentation of annual report and annual balance sheet and profit and loss account for the year 1931

Dr. Martin Bloch reported, that in the year 1931 the continuing depression caused a further loss of Frs. 6,789.38 composed of general expenses, interest and taxes. The total loss, therefore, amounted to Frs. 21,855.11 which was carried forward to new account as of January 1, 1932.

Subject No. 2—Report of the Comptroller

Dr. Hugo Wyler read to the meeting the written report of the comptroller of April 2, 1932. The comptroller moved that the balance sheet and profit and loss account as of Dec. 31, 1931 be adopted, and those responsible be released.

Subject No. 3—Release of Board of Directors and Comptroller

In compliance with the motion of the comptroller, the balance sheet and profit and loss account as of Dec. 31, 1931 was unanimously adopted and declared final; also the comptroller's report of April 2, 1931 was adopted.

The Board of Directors and the comptroller were in separate, unanimous, votes released with thanks. Dr. Martin Bloch was also released for the period from Jan. 1, 1932 to May 6, 1932. It was duly noted that Dr. Martin Bloch took no part in these votes.

Subject No. 4—Election of Board of Directors and Comptroller

Dr. Martin Bloch handed in his resignation as a director of the Corporation. The general meeting gave him a vote of thanks for his many years' activity on behalf of the corporation. Thereupon there were elected as members of the Board of Directors:

Dr. Eugen Meier von Stäfa, attorney-at-law, Liestal, as Pres.,
Dr. Hanns Frankenberg, Banker, of Austrian Citizenship, Zurich 7,
Dr. Josef Henggeler, attorney-at-law, of Unterägeri, Höngg.

The members of the Board of Directors to sign for the Corporation, any two jointly.

The domicile of the Corporation was removed to St. Peterstrasse 16.

There was elected as comptroller
Mr. Adolf Gäng, certified accountant, Zurich 6.

Subject No. 5—Various

Dr. Frankenberg made the motion to pay in the remaining 50% of the stock capital. According to paragraph 4 of the by-laws there were, therefore, Frs. 250,000 to pay in.
There was unanimously resolved:

1. to pay in the stock capital—of which heretofore 50% had been paid in, in full.

2. to authorize the Board of Directors to call up the outstanding 50% in accordance with the legal provisions of the Swiss Law of Obligations.

The meeting was adjourned at 9:15 o'clock.

Ueberseé Finanz Korporation, A. G., Zurich held on June 1, 1932

Dr. Hanns Frankenberg, representing the President of the Board of Directors, took note of the regular notice issued, and ascertained representation of the entire stock capital.

Dr. J. Henggeler was appointed as acting Secretary.
The only subject on the agenda was:

Establishment of the fact that the stock capital had been paid-in in full.

The chairman of the meeting established the fact, that according to a receipt of Adler & Co., A. G., in favor of the Corporation, the amount of Frs. 250,000, was paid into the said bank in satisfaction of the remaining 50% of the stock capital. The receipt referred to of Adler & Co., A. G., was presented and annexed in the original to the minutes.

The Corporation, supported thereby, established the fact of the full payment of the stock capital, and authorized and directed the Board of Directors, to notify the Register of Commerce, Zurich, of this resolution.

These resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Dr. Eugen Meier, attorney-at-law, Liestal, President of the Board of Directors,

Dr. Hanns Frankenberg, Banker, Zurich 1, member of the Board of Directors,
Mr. Adolf Gäng, certified accountant, Zurich 6.

The chairman took note that all stockholders were present or represented. The stock was presented for control. No stockholder was enabled to represent more than 20 votes.

The stockholders declared that the notice of call for the general meeting was issued in accordance with the by-laws and recognized by them as such.

The annual balance sheet and profit and loss account, and the comptroller's report were open to inspection by stockholders in the office of the Corporation on and after June 20th, in compliance with paragraph 8 of the by-laws.

Dr. Hanns Frankenberg was appointed acting secretary.

Mr. Adolf Gäng as teller of votes.

AGENDA

1. Presentation of annual report and of annual balance sheet and profit and loss account for the year 1932,

2. Report of Comptroller,

3. Release of the Board of Directors and Comptroller,

4. Election of the Board of Directors and Comptroller,

5. Various

1. Presentation of annual report and of annual balance sheet and profit and loss account for the year 1932.

There was written off from the holdings of Vermag, A. G. stock, due to losses in that company, 40%=Frs. 40,000—Profits made elsewhere were not sufficient to offset this loss.

2. Report of Comptroller:

The same reads:

"As Comptroller of Overseas Finance Corporation Ltd., Zurich, I hereby confirm that the accounts for the business year 1932 (Jan. 1. to December 31, 1932) were kept in proper order and that the balance sheet and profit and loss account as of December 31, 1932 were drawn up correctly.

There were vouchers for all entries, and the cash balance of Frcs. 1.250.—as of December 31, 1932, respectively as of to-day, is at hand in currency. Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss account comply with the regulations of the O. R. (Unable to ascertain what this means—The Translator) and show for the year 1932 a loss of Frcs. 3,197.39, which was carried forward to new accoun., thereby increasing the loss carried forward from the previous year of Frcs. 21,855.11 to Frcs. 25.052.50 as of January 1, 1933.

I recommend adoption of the accounts with release of those responsible.

Yours very truly

(signed) ADOLF GAENG".

3. Release of the Board of Directors and Comptroller.

The meeting unanimously resolved the adoption of the accounts and of the report of the Comptroller. Following this the Board of Directors and the Comptroller were given their release in separate votes which in each case were not participated in by those concerned.

4. Election of Board of Directors and Comptroller.

There were re-elected for a further term of one year:

to the Board of Directors:

Dr. Hanns Frankenberg, Banker, Zurich 1,

4. Various

(a) The President called attention to the fact, that according to the tenor of paragraph 2 of the By-Laws, the corporation must be placed under the banking law. To avoid this, the By-Laws would have to be changed, and in view of the status of the gold matter in the U.S.A., a change of By-Laws should, at the present moment, be abstained from.

//: Application to the Banking Commission was to be made by the end of April with the declaration that as a matter of fact no banking business was transacted, and the acceptance of deposits from the public was not solicited. Furthermore a conformable change of the By-Laws was intended to be made shortly.

(b) Remuneration of the members of the Board of Directors was agreed upon at frs. 1,000. each, to be charged to expense account.

MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF APPLICATION FOR LICENSE

IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,

OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding Gold held for its Account in the United States.

STATEMENT.

Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A.-G., a corporation under Swiss law, having its office and place of business in Zurich, originally applied on Form TG-18 on or about May 9, 1934, for a license to transfer gold coin held for its account by Ladenburg Thalmann & Co., New York, to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, to be held in custody for the Banque Nationale Suisse. The application was made on Form TG-18 and was verified by the President of Zurich in April, 1934.*

After the making of this application, the matter remained under consideration of the Treasury for about a year. At the request of Federal Reserve Bank of New York some additional information was supplied on July 27, 1934, in the form of an affidavit verified by Friedrich Wille on that date regarding the nature and extent of the business done by Uebersee with Ladenburg Thalmann & Co., and in the form of a letter by Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. with attached documents on October 16, 1934. It appears also that the Treasury conferred with Mr. Theodore Hoffacker of Theodore Hoffacker & Co., New York, investment bankers, in Washington on July 19, 1934, and with Dr. Eugen Meier, President of the company, in Washington on April 29, 1935.

On May 4, 1935, the Treasury addressed a letter to the corporation denying its application and requiring delivery of the gold.

Thereupon on May 6, 1935, Dr. Meier as President of the corporation retained us to represent it with reference to the application, and a hearing was accorded us by the general counsel for the Treasury on May 15, 1935, at which we set forth briefly the facts with respect to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. and its assets as we had learned them from Dr. Meier and from Mr. Fritz von Opel,

* We do not have available to us a conformed copy of the application giving the exact date.

the controlling stockholder*. Pursuant to permission kindly granted by the Treasury, we have communicated by cable with Zurich for the documents immediately available, and have assembled and are submitting in affidavit form these documents and the relevant facts bearing on the acquisition by the corporation of the gold here involved.

The present application concerns gold coins of the United States to the amount of $1,250,000 held for the account of the applicant corporation by Ladenburg Thalmann & Co., 25 Broad Street, New York, N. Y. It is our understanding that, if the application on Form TG-18 be granted, the gold coins will be exchanged against bullion and the bullion transferred to the account of the Banque Nationale Suisse with Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

It is our belief that the underlying facts, here presented for the first time, fully support the claim of the corporation to title in the gold and to immunity from the American jurisdiction, and justify and require the granting of the application heretofore submitted in its behalf.

Supplementary Papers herewith Submitted.

The papers herewith submitted, on which this memorandum is based, are the following:

1. Affidavit of Dr. Eugen Meier, President of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., verified May 28, 1935.

2. Affidavit of Fritz von Opel, controlling stockholder, verified June 7, 1935.

3. Affidavit of Dr. Manfred Wronker-Flatow, former general counsel to Adam Opel A. G., verified June 6, 1935.

* Mr. von Opel came to New York at our request from Jamaica, British West Indies, where he was spending a vacation on May 13, 1935, for the purpose of giving us information about the background and recent history of the company.

4. Affidavit of Friedrich Wille, chief accountant of Ladenburg Thalmann & Co., verified June 6, 1935.

5. Affidavit of Theodore Hoffacker, investment banker, verified June 6, 1935.

As exhibits to these affidavits there are submitted various documents bearing on the corporate history of Uebersee and on the history of its assets, notably the deed of gift from Wilhelm von Opel to Fritz von Opel dated October 5, 1931, Exhibit R.

ESSENTIAL QUESTION INVOLVED.

The essential question involved in this application, as we understand it, is whether the owner of the gold is subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

The Act of March 9, 1933, amending subdivision (b) of Section 5 of the Trading with the Enemy Act of October 6, 1917, 40 Stat. 411, empowers the President to > "prohibit * * * hoarding of gold or silver coin or bullion or currency by any person within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof * * *"

The same conception of jurisdiction in personam runs through the remainder of the Act of March 9, 1933, including the amendment to Section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act which empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to require > "any or all individuals, partnerships, associations and corporations" to pay and deliver any or all gold coin, etc., owned by such individuals, partnerships, associations and corporations.

In strict conformity with the jurisdictional limitations thus recognized, the executive order of the Secretary of the Treasury dated December 28, 1933, referring to the amendment of the Federal Reserve Act by the Act of March 9, 1933, requires

> "every person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States forthwith to pay and deliver to the Treasurer of the United States all gold coin, gold bullion and gold certificates situated in the United States, owned by such person."

The jurisdictional restriction laid down in the Anti-Hoarding Act was pointed out on May 25, 1933, when the Attorney General, in rendering his opinion to the Secretary of the Treasury, said:

> "The Executive Order [of April 5, 1933] theretofore operates in personam, not in rem, upon the persons designated in the order rather than upon the gold required to be delivered by the order. * * * The order * * * is plainly applicable to all persons, corporations, partnerships, and associations who are present within the Continent of the United States * * *"

There is every reason to suppose that the legislation and the Executive Orders governing this application were drawn advisedly so as to exclude from their scope gold within the United States owned by persons not subject to the jurisdiction for the double purpose no doubt of respecting the restraints commonly accepted by civilized powers* and of avoiding the claims to compensation of

---

* Holmes, J., in Direction der Disconto-Gesellschaft v. U. S. Steel Corporation, 267 U. S. 22, 28: "Taking the United States in this connection to mean the total powers of the Central and the State Governments, no doubt theoretically it could draw a line of fire around its boundaries and recognize nothing concerning the corporation or any interest in it that happened outside. But it prefers to consider itself civilized and to act accordingly."

non-resident alien owners whose national currency had not undergone devaluation.

POSITION OF THE TREASURY AND POSITION OF APPLICANT.

We assume that the Treasury, in originally denying the application, had come to the conclusion from its own investigations that the owner of the gold could not be held to be exempt from the jurisdiction of the United States, either because Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. had subjected itself to the jurisdiction by performing acts or employing agents within the United States which constituted a technical doing of business here, or because Fritz von Opel as the controlling stockholder was to be deemed the real owner of the gold and had subjected himself to the jurisdiction by transient visits here after May 1, 1933.

From the most thorough investigation of the facts which we have been able to make since our retainer on May 6th, we feel that neither of these conclusions is true, and that a fair construction of the applicable legislation and Executive Orders would require that the gold be treated as exempt from the jurisdiction and the application be granted. In particular we wish to point out in the following discussion:

1. That Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. is a real corporate entity, with a record of a small but substantial business as investment banker from its incorporation in Switzerland in 1922.

2. That the office and place of business of the corporation has always been in Zurich, Switzerland, and at no time has it had a resident agent or representative in the United States.

3. That it has never "done business" in the United States in the sense required by the authorities for a finding of its presence here.

4. That Fritz von Opel, after he became the controlling stockholder in or about January, 1932, has respected the corporate forms in the operation of the company's business.

5. That the present assets of the corporation in the United States, including the gold here involved, are the proceeds of a transaction in Opel Motors Works stock by virtue of which a separate estate in rem, designated a usufruct under German law, was reserved to the father and mother of Fritz von Opel, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel.

6. That this right of usufruct attaches to the shares of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. and to the gold here involved.

7. That Wilhelm and Marta von Opel have not subjected themselves to the jurisdiction of the United States.

8. That the reservation to them of the usufruct in the shares of the corporation and in the gold is under German law a reservation of the beneficial use and enjoyment such as to prevent Fritz von Opel from being the "owner" of either the shares or the gold within the meaning of the statute and the Executive Orders.

SUMMARY OF FACTS.

For the consideration of the legal principles involved it may be appropriate to summarize here the facts which are set forth more at large in the affidavits and the exhibits thereto.

Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. was organized in 1922 as an investment company under the law of the Confederation of Switzerland, and was entered on June 3, 1922, on the Commercial Register of the Canton of Zurich, thereby becoming a juridical person in Swiss law. It had an authorized capital of 500,000 Swiss francs, divided into 100 bearer shares of 5,000 francs par value each, of which 250,000 Swiss francs were paid in upon organization. The charter (Maier Exhibit B) provided for a board of one to five directors to be elected by the stockholders. In practice one director managed the corporation.

So far as we know, and so far as is disclosed by the minutes of stockholders meetings, attached to Dr. Meier's affidavit as Exhibits C to P, the von Opel family had nothing to do with Uebersee during the first nine years of its existence; and the affidavit of Fritz von Opel shows that the von Opel connection with Uebersee began on April 27, 1931, when he negotiated with Adler & Co. A. G., Swiss banking corporation, a contract giving him an option to buy and Adler & Co. A. G. an option to sell all or substantially all the stock of Uebersee.

During this first period of its existence prior to the connection of the von Opels with it, Uebersee maintained (1923-28) on account in New York with the firm of Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. in New York, which seems to have been active and substantial, as set forth in the second affidavit of Friedrich Wille herewith submitted. Mr. Wille, having had charge of the books of account of Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. since 1920, was familiar with the account at the time.

At the time Fritz von Opel acquired an interest in Uebersee, namely April, 1931, he was in the employ of General Motors Export Corporation at Antwerp. He was a mechanical engineer, and had previously, during the period 1923-29, been employed in the family business, an important German automobile plant at Ruesselsheim-am-Main, Hesse, Germany, first known as Adam Opel Motor Works and incorporated in 1928 as Adam Opel A. G. Fritz von Opel became general manager of the corporation in 1928. The vital importance of Adam Opel A. G. to the present application is that the gold here involved is part of the proceeds of a transaction in the shares of that company, which transaction by a deed of gift executed on October 5, 1931, made the shares and their proceeds into a von Opel family trust and which it was contemplated would be and was in fact over into Uebersee.

By a transaction negotiated in 1928 and consummated in 1929, General Motors Corporation acquired all the outstanding stock of Adam Opel A. G. amounting to 6,000 shares of 10,000 Reichsmarks par value each. By a separate transaction in the form of an escrow agreement dated April 11, 1929 (von Opel, Exhibit Q), Wilhelm von Opel (father of Fritz von Opel) and General Motors Corporation made the National City Bank of New York an escrow agent with respect to 600 shares of Adam Opel A. G. stock belonging to Wilhelm von Opel, and agreed that General Motors Corporation was to have an option thereon to sell, and Wilhelm von Opel an option to buy up to April 1, 1934, at a graduated price in Reichsmarks varying from 23,000 to 30,000 Reichsmarks a share according to the party exercising the option and the date of its exercise.

Some plan apparently being afoot to keep the von Opels interested in the management of their former Ruesselsheim plant under General Motors ownership, Fritz von Opel went to the United States at the end of 1929 and remained approximately a year in the employ of General Motors Corporation (Chevrolet Division) at various plants, where he obtained some practical acquaintance with American manufacturing methods. At the end of 1930 he returned to Europe and went into the employ of General Motors Export Corporation at Antwerp, where he remained until September or October, 1931. It was during this period (April 27, 1931) that he entered into the option-agreement with Adler & Co. A. G. for the acquisition of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. (von Opel, pp. 9-10). These negotiations were had with Dr. Frankenberg, an old acquaintance of Wilhelm von Opel, who was then living in Zurich and was general manager of Adler & Co. A. G. Fritz von Opel's idea in contracting in April, 1931, for the acquisition of this stock was to use the company for the purpose of developing and marketing patents which he held (von Opel p. 9). He did not at that time have in mind transferring to Uebersee any Adam Opel A. G. shares or proceeds thereof, because he had as yet no knowledge even of the existence of the escrow agremnt, Exhibit Q (von Opel pp. 2-4), although he did know about the general transactions between General Motors Corporation and the von Opel family.

In the fall of 1931, after some discussion of the possible future of Fritz von Opel in the Opel Motor Works under General Motors Corporation ownership, his parents gave him by deed of gift dated October 5, 1931 (von Opel Exhibit R) the 10% of Adam Opel A. G. stock having a par value of 6,000,000 Reichsmarks covered by the escrow agreement Exhibit Q. It was then that Fritz von Opel learned the terms of the escrow agreement.

This deed of gift Exhibit R was drawn by Dr. Manfred Wronker-Flatow, then general counsel to Adam Opel A. G., now residing in New York City. Its execution is described by Dr. Wronker-Flatow in his affidavit (p. 2) as well as by Fritz von Opel (pp. 3-4). As the deed of gift is fundamental to an understanding of the present rights in the gold involved on this application, we set it out in full (Exhibit R):

"Russelsheim, Oct. 5, 1931.

"I, the undersigned Geheimer Kommerzienra Dr. ing. e.h. Wilhelm von Opel live with my wife Marta, née Bade, under community property agreement. Included in this property are shares of stock Nos. 1 to 600 of the Adam Opel Stock Co. in Russelsheim o/Main of the par value of R.M. 6,000,000 (six million). It is our common desire that these shares remain in posession of the male line of descent of our family, so that the bearers of the name of Opel may remain in living connection with the work of our father Adam Opel.

Accordingly, I, with the consent of my wife, do hereby give out of our common property to our son Fritz von Opel the aforementioned shares of stock of the Adam Opel Stock Co. in Russelsheim on/Main Nos. 1 to 600 of the par value of R.M. 6,000,000 (six million). These shares are at present lodged with the bank.

I, the co-signor Fritz von Opel, do hereby accept this gift.

I, Wilhelm von Opel, hereby transfer ownership of these shares of stock to our son Fritz von Opel by relinquishment of our claim to the delivery of these shares.

The usufruct of these shares is not transferred to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereinafter referred to as the parents Opel until the death of the survivor of them. However, twenty per cent, of all dividends and interest accruing from these shares are to go to Fritz von Opel.

In the event that the parents Opel should die before Fritz von Opel, the latter must effect a settlement of the aforesaid gift with his sister, Mr. Elinor Sachs, née von Opel, or, in case she should predecease him, with her issue.

For the purpose of this settlement, the shares of stock are to be valued at the market price of the time of the settlement. Should the market value be higher than the present value, the higher value is to be used, if lower, then the lower value.

In case the parents Opel should not have drawn the income from these shares, under their usufruct rights, or not have drawn the entire amount of this income, then the settlement to be made by Fritz von Opel is to be increased by the amount of the income not drawn.

In the event that these shares should be sold or exchanged for other securities, then the proceeds of such sale or the securities received in exchange are to take the place of the said shares, subject to the rights and safeguarding of usufruct of the parents Opel.

In the event that Fritz von Opel should predecease his parents without leaving legitimate issue, then the gift effected by these presents shall become null and void. The aforesaid shares or their exchange value, plus the unused income accrued therefrom, shall then revert to the parents Opel or to the survivor of them.

(Signed) Dr. Wilhelm von Opel

(Signed) Fritz von Opel

I, the wife, Marta von Opel, née Bade, do hereby consent to the above agreement.

(Signed) Marta von Opel, née Bade"

By this instrument Wilhelm von Opel transferred to Fritz von Opel legal title to the 6,000,000 Reichsmarks par value Adam Opel A. G. stock, but did not transfer the usufruct in the stock; directed Fritz von Opel to effect a settlement with his sister on certain contingencies; and provided that the rights of the parents von Opel as usufructuaries should attach to the proceeds upon any sale or exchange of the stock. Under German law as explained by Dr. Wronker-Flatow, and under Swiss law, as explained by Dr. Meier, the right of usufruct constitutes a right in rem, and the retention of the usufruct by the grantors under the deed of gift effected a partition of ownership such that Fritz von Opel, although holder of legal title, was deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the gift during the lifetime of his parents. The only income which during their lifetime he was to receive was a grant out of the reserved usufruct of 20% of dividends and interest on the shares or their proceeds. The reservation of the usufruct was particularly insisted upon by Wilhelm von Opel, as a condition of the gift (Wronker-Flatow p. 2, von Opel p. 4).

Fritz von Opel agreed orally to transfer the shares so given him or their proceeds to a corporation whose stock would be held in such a manner as to safeguard the interests created by the deed of gift. The option contract with reference to the Uebersee stock had not yet been exercised either by him or by Adler & Co. A. G. In order to avert a loss on the Adam Opel A. G. shares through depreciation of the mark, Fritz von Opel went to New York in October, 1931, and endeavored to negotiate a change in the escrow agreement Exhibit Q so that the Reichsmarks payable thereunder might be paid on a gold or gold equivalent basis. This effort failed. Thereupon, using a power of attorney from his father, Fritz von Opel exercised the option provided by the escrow agreement by written notice to General Motors Corporation dated October 17, 1931 (Exhibit S-1), caused the shares of Adam Opel A. G. to be delivered to General Motors Corporation, and received in an account in his name with City Bank Farmers Trust Company in New York the purchase price of the shares, partly in cash and partly in General Motors Corporation common stock. The General Motors Corporation common stock to the number of 47,625 shares was credited on the purchase price at $24 per share making a total of $1,143,000; while the balance of $2,594,748.64 computed at the average cable rate of exchange between marks and dollars in New York was paid in cash from November 17th to November 24, 1931, to the credit (ultimately) of Fritz von Opel's account at City Bank Farmers Trust Company. Inasmuch as the escrow agreement called for 26,500 Reichsmarks a share at the time the option was exercised (Exhibit Q, Item 5), the total purchase price paid by General Motors Corporation to Wilhelm and Fritz von Opel for the 600 shares of Adam Opel A. G. was R.M. 15,900,000. The dollar values aggregating $3,737,748.64 accepted in satisfaction of this mark obligation give a rate of exchange of $0.23508 to the mark (von Opel pp. 6-7).*

On October 28, 1931, Fritz von Opel received from City Bank Farmers Trust Company a form of authorization for corporate signatures, having then in mind the transfer of the entire amount of cash and securities realized under the escrow agreement to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. (von Opel p. 8). He left New York early in November, 1931, and reached Russelsheim before the first payment (November 17, 1931) from General Motors Corporation was due. He discussed with Wilhelm von Opel the decision that had been made in New York and argued for the desirability > "of having the investment represented by such [escrow] agreement in more or less liquid form for conversion into stable forms of value which would protect the investment against the destructive effects of a monetary inflation."

At that time, of course, Fritz von Opel anticipated devaluation of the mark, not of the dollar. His father had been willing to retain the escrow agreement with modifications, including a lengthening of the term to five years, and to accept a gold conversion value for the Reichsmarks up to 50% only. Fritz von Opel convinced him, however, that the immediate conversion of the escrow agreement into cash was preferable for the reason stated; and it was this underlying policy of endeavoring to protect themselves against the consequences of monetary inflation which, manifested as far back as October, 1931, influenced Fritz von Opel in February, 1933 (together with contemplated commitments for the investment program of Uebersee) to convert a large proportion of the American holdings of Uebersee into gold. It must be remembered that, had the von Opels waited until April 1, 1934, to exercise the option conferred by the escrow agreement Exhibit Q, they would not only have realized a higher price per share in Reichsmarks but have received payment in a currency which, nominally at least, has retained its old relationship to the dollar.

* This gave the von Opels a mark equivalent for their dollar investment of more than 4 marks to the dollar. The cable rate of exchange in New York for marks on June 6, 1935, was 40.63. This increased valuation of the marks, reflecting the devaluation of the dollar, allows the von Opels only 2.5 marks to the dollar on such of the American assets as are realized on a dollar for dollar basis.

After the return of Fritz von Opel to Europe the option on Uebersee stock, which would have expired December 31, 1931, was exercised, and he became the owner of 97 out of the 100 shares, 3 shares being retained by or reserved for the three directors. On these shares only 250,000 Swiss francs had ben paid in. Through a credit with Alder & Co. A. G., Fritz von Opel arranged for the payment of the 50,000 Swiss francs theretofore paid in, as the purchase price, and a further 250,000 Swiss francs as the balance of the capital (von Opel pp. 11-12); but the only cash payment made by him in exchange for the Uebersee stock was 59,500 Swiss francs or $11,604, charged to his account with the Swiss Credit Anstalt, Zurich, on February 24, 1932, out of the proceeds of a remittance which Fritz von Opel made from his City Bank Farmers Trust Company account on December 1, 1931 (pp. 10-11). In other words, the entire cash consideration for the Uebersee stock was paid by Mr. von Opel out of the proceeds of the escrow agreement Exhibit Q, so that the shares of Uebersee thus acquired became as proceeds of the Opel stock subject to the terms of the deed of gift Exhibit R.

Upon the purchase of this Uebersee stock, Fritz von Opel agreed with his father (pp. 12-13) that this company should become a vehicle for the holding and investment of the proceeds of the Opel stock, and at Wilhelm von Opel's request Dr. Frankenberg, managing director of Adler & Co. A. G., was made managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. (von Opel p. 13; see Exhibit L, minutes of May 6, 1932). Fritz von Opel stated to Dr. Frankenberg his intention of going to New York for the purpose of turning over the securities held for his account there to Uebersee, and they discused an increase of capital stock of the company to be issued against this transfer.

On the occasion of business for which his father called him to New York in May, 1932, in connection with General Motors Corporation, Fritz von Opel transferred to the account of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. with City Bank Farmers Trust Company out of his own account securities having a total par value of $2,339,000 and cash amounting to $239,115.46 (von Opel p. 15). This transfer took place about June 1, 1932, as is evidenced by correspondence (von Opel Exhibits X and Y). The 47,625 shares of General Motors Corporation common stock were retained for the purposes of current trading, were converted into other securities, which were ultimately forwarded to Uebersee at Zurich, and do not figure upon this application.

* In fact we understand that a further $100,000 out of the proceeds of the Opel stock subsequently transferred (June, 1932) to the account of Uebersee in New York was earmarked by Fritz von Opel for capital account and thus constituted the basis for the book entries in Zurich whereby the Swiss franc equivalent or Sw. Fr. 515,517 was passed to the discharge of von Opel's debt to Adler & Co. A. G.; but, as this was merely a matter of bookkeeping, it is not detailed in the affidavit of Fritz von Opel, and is here mentioned merely to emphasize that the entire consideration for the Uebersee stock was paid out of the proceeds of the Opel stock, as Mr. von Opel says (p. 12).

The cash and securities so transferred to Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. upon the books of City Farmers Trust Company constituted the entire or practically the entire proceeds of the Opel stock previously sold by Fritz von Opel to General Motors Corporation in accordance with the escrow agreement Exhibit Q. The cash received on that sale had in the interim been invested in securities. For the purpose of the transfer Mr. von Opel had first a power of attorney from Uebersee signed by Dr. Martin Bloch, then secretary of the company, on January 15, 1932 (von Opel p. 13, Exhibit U), and subsequently a power of attorney signed by Dr. Henggeler and Dr. Frankenberg as directors on May 9, 1932 (Exhibit W).

Fritz von Opel left New York for Europe on June 5, 1932. He retained his power of attorney on behalf of Uebersee, and kept in touch by cable with Theodore Hoffacker in New York with regard to investments to be made of the funds of the company, on which subject he also consulted with Dr. Frankenberg frequently (von Opel p. 16). Mr. Hoffacker he had met in October, 1931, and had entered into a written arrangement with him for trading in the 47,625 shares of General Motors Corporation stock (von Opel Exhibit V). Mr. Hoffacker had no relationship with Uebersee, however, except through Fritz von Opel, to whom he acted as investment counsel for von Opel's personal investments and for such as he made as attorney-in-fact for Uebersee (Hoffacker pp. 2-3).

Beginning in June or July, 1932, the funds of Uebersee were invested in two different fields. The first was brewing, represented by the company's purchase of the stock of Harvard Brewing Company.* The second field of investment was oil. This investment began with the acquisition of the stock of Spur Distributing Company, Inc., a Delaware corporation operating a gasoline distributing system (von Opel, p. 16). Engineering studies indicated that Spur would require support in the form of crude oil reserves and a refinery and Fritz von Opel as attorney in fact for Uebersee directed the sale of a substantial quantity of its bonds held in New York for the purpose of accumulating funds for additional oil purchases (von Opel pp. 16-17). Von Opel in his affidavit details the investments which he had under consideration during a visit to New York in November, 1932, and which contemplated expenditures of $1,000,000 in stock of a new company, of $1,500,000 (present cash outlay) for oil acreage, and of a possible 6,000,000 Reichsmarks for Adam Opel A. G. stock (von Opel pp. 17-19).

For these purposes Uebersee had accumulated cash by sales of its bonds in New York amounting to some $1,300,000 (von Opel p. 17). The banking holiday in Michigan in February, 1933, and the spread of moratoria thereafter, made Fritz von Opel frankly fearful that the funds of Uebersee in New York would be tied up indefinitely through a closing of banks. Fritz von Opel was told by Dr. Frankenberg to convert the cash holdings of the company into gold or foreign exchange. On February 26, 1933, he cabled City Bank Farmers Trust Company to purchase for account of Uebersee $1,250,000 in gold. This gold was purchased, and on March 3, 1933, transferred to Ladenburg Thalmann & Co., with which Uebersee had originally had its acount.

The gold being immobilized by the closing of the bank and the subsequent gold legislation, Uebersee acting through Fritz von Opel sold some $900,000 additional bonds in New York in March, 1933 (von Opel pp. 20-21), transferred part of this money to Switzerland on March 16, 1933, and in September, 1933, purchased dollars for the purpose of the investments for which the gold had been accumulated.

This is the present position, the gold being still held by Ladenburg Thalmann & Co.

The 97 bearer shares of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. held by Fritz von Opel are on deposit with a bank in Zurich, Switzerland, under the control of Dr. Frankenberg as agent for Wilhelm von Opel, for the purpose of safeguarding the usufruct reserved in the deed of gift Exhibit R (von Opel pp. 22-23). These shares are also pledged with Adler & Co. A. G. for an obligation in which Wilhelm von Opel is interested (p. 23).

Fritz von Opel's parents and his sister, whose rights in the Uebersee stock and through such stock in such of the company's assets as are proceeds of the Opel stock, are all living, are citizens and residents of Germany, and have not been in the United States since June, 1932, at latest (von Opel p. 23).

Application for Export License.

Prior to the present application Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. on May 22, 1933, formally applied on behalf of Uebersee for a license to export the gold here involved. This application was denied by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Acheson, by letter dated July 6, 1933, pointing out that Uebersee had not brought itself within the terms of the Executive Order of April 20, 1933; that the Treasury assumed that the owners of the gold were not subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and that upon this assumption

> "they are not required by said Executive Order to deliver the gold owned by them even though it may be situated within the United States."

POINT I.

UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION A. G. AS OWNER OF THE GOLD IS NOT PRESENT WITHIN THE JURISDICTION THROUGH AN AGENT OR THROUGH DOING BUSINESS OR OTHERWISE.

POINT II.

THIS IS NOT A CASE FOR DISREGARD OF THE CORPORATE ENTITY BY REASON OF DOMINANCE OF A SOLE STOCKHOLDER.

POINT III.

INDEPENDENTLY OF ANY QUESTION AS TO THE CORPORATE ENTITY NO "OWNER" OF THE GOLD HERE INVOLVED IS SUBJECT TO THE JURISDICTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

For the reasons stated, we feel confident that any court would hold that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. as owner of the gold here involved,* not only has not subjected

---

* We have not separately discussed the question whether the corporation does own the gold. We do not believe there can be any question about the fact. It will be noted that the gold was purchased for Uebersee's account by City Bank Farmers Trust Company acting upon orders of Fritz von Opel as attorney-in-fact, cabled from Europe on February 26, 1933, and that it is now held for Uebersee's account by Ladenburg Thalmann & Co. The assets out of which the gold was purchased were made the property of Uebersee by the unilateral transfer effected on the books of City Bank Farmers Trust Company on Instructions of von Opel on June 1, 1932 (von Opel, pp. 14-15, Exhibits X and Y). The absence of any corporate obligation or evidence of indebtedness in exchange for the transfer is due to the fact that von Opel and Frankenberg contemplated a new stock issue (von Opel p. 13). (Action to this end has presumably been stayed by the difficulty about the gold; compare Exhibit P, minutes of April 11, 1933.) We are informed by Bayer and Clausen, accountants who have prepared Uebersee's income tax returns in this country for the years 1932 and following, that they based their return for 1932 upon figures supplied by City Bank Farmers Trust Company which were based upon Uebersee's ownership of the securities and cash transferred on June 1, 1932.

itself to the jurisdiction of the United States, but in its capacity as owner of the gold is entirely independent and distant from Fritz von Opel as stockholder. Fritz von Opel has been present in the United States at intervals since May 1, 1933, but the corporation has not.

Nevertheless the present application does not necessarily turn on the recognition of Uebersee's independent juridical existence, clear as we believe that to be. Ignoring the corporation for the moment and looking solely at the individuals interested in the gold, we find that Fritz von Opel is not an "owner" of the gold within the meaning of the Act of March 9, 1933, and the subsequent Executive Orders, because of the oustanding beneficial interest in Wilhelm and Marta von Opel who have not subjected themselves to the jurisdiction of the United States (von Opel, p. 23). The beneficial interest reserved to the parents von Opel constitutes what is known in German law as usufruct. As expressed in the deed of gift, Ex. K:

> "The usufruct of these shares is not transferred to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereinafter referred to as the parents Opel, until the death of the survivor of them. However, 20% of all dividends and interest accruing from these shares are to go to Fritz von Opel.
>
> . . . . . .
>
> "In the event that these shares should be sold or exchanged for other securities, then the proceeds of such sale or the securities received in exchange are to take the place of the said shares, subject to the rights of usufruct of the parents Opel."

While the estate of usufruct is not known to our law, it is firmly established in German and Swiss law which derive it from the Roman law. Usufruct is mentioned in

Gaius, Book II, Section 14. In the sixth century the codifiers of Justinian erected it into a separate title of the Institutes, Book II, Title IV:

> "Usufruct is the right of using and taking the fruits of property not one's own, without impairing the substance of that property; * * * Usufruct is thus a right detached from the aggregate of rights involved in ownership, and this separation can be effected in very many ways; for instance, if one man gives another a usufruct by legacy, the legatee has the usufruct, while the heir has merely the bare ownership [nudam proprietatem]; and, conversely, if a man gives a legacy of an estate, reserving the usufruct, the usufruct belongs to the heir, while only the bare ownership is vested in the legatee. Similarly, he can give to one man a legacy of the usufruct, to another one of the estate, subject to the other's usufruct."

Thus usufruct on the Continent of Europe has been from ancient times a right in rem, which, when separated from the naked title or "bare ownership", divested the title holder of the right of use and enjoyment. In Roman law the usufructuary could even transfer the usufruct by gift or sale, and the transferee took a right in rem which could be enforced by the praetor's edict.

In Swiss and in German law this conception seems to have been fully realized. Dr. Meier, a member of the Swiss Bar, says:

> "In Swiss law property charged with a usufruct is regarded as composed of two rights in rem (droits reels dingliches recht), the one consisting of the usufruct belonging to the usufructuary and the other consisting of the naked property in the thing belonging to the proprietor. In Swiss law, a division of ownership in the thing is effected if the ownership of the usufruct is separate from the naked title. The right of usufruct is defined by the Swiss Civil Code §§745 and following."

Dr. Wronker-Flatow, a member of the German Bar and the draftsman of the deed of gift which created the usufruct describes fully the concept in German law (pp. 2-4), and quotes the relevant provisions of the German Civil Code. Section 1036 provides that the usufructuary is entitled to possession:

"§1036. The usufructuary is entitled to the possession of the thing. In exercising the right of usufruct he must maintain the existing economic function of the thing and adhere to the rules of orderly management [ordnungsmaessiger wirtschaft]."

Sections 1081-1083 define the respective rights and duties of the usufruct and the holder of legal title, and show that where a bearer security or instrument drawn to order is the subject of a usufruct, the usufructuary and the title holder have particular obligations of cooperation; the usufructuary is entitled to possession of the interest dividend or profit participation coupon and may even require the instrument to be deposited with the Reichsbank. Usufruct is defined as the right to draw the fruits of the object (§1030) i. e., the right of beneficial use and enjoyment.

Dr. Wronker-Flatow also expresses the opinion, under the German law and the terms of the deed of gift Exhibit R, that if with the proceeds of the Opel stock Fritz von Opel purchased the Uebersee stock, the rights of usufruct would attach to that stock in the same manner as if it were described in the deed itself. On the assumption that with proceeds of the Opel stock there was directly purchased the gold here involved, Dr. Wronker Flatow expresses the opinion that under German law the right of usufruct would attach to the gold in the same manner as if the gold had been described in the deed of gift.

Hence even if the corporate entity were in this case to be merged with the principal stockholder, and the gold to be regarded as held by the corporation (for whom it was purchased on February 27, 1933) for Mr. Fritz von Opel, the fact that it was purchased with funds which were proceeds of the Opel stock described in the deed of gift, would cause the reserved usufruct to attach directly to the gold. This means, of course, that the entire beneficial enjoyment of the gold would inhere in Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, non-resident aliens not subject to the jurisdiction, while (the Uebersee apart) only a naked legal title analogous to trust or custody would remain in Fritz von Opel.*

Under these circumstances, we would suggest that the gold here involved falls within the opinion rendered by the Attorney-General to the Secretary of the Treasury under date of May 25, 1933. Pointing out that the Executive Order of April 5, 1933, is applicable by its terms only to the "owners" of gold, the Attorney-General says:

> "Such language does not include a bare custodian, and accordingly those who within the continental United States hold gold in custody for non-resident alien owners are not required to comply with its terms by surrendering the gold thus held.
> For like reasons I am of the opinion that those who hold gold in trust for non-resident alien owners are not required to comply with the terms of the Order The word 'owner' is a comprehensive term and its precise meaning varies according to the context in which it is used and the subject matter involved. Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 82; Glover v. United States, 164 U. S. 294, 297; Coombs v. People, 198 Ill. 586, 588; Guild v. Prentis, 83 Vt. 212, 214, 215. No doubt the literal meaning of the word is broad enough to include a trustee or one who holds merely a bare legal title (see Board of Hudson River Regulating District v. Fonda J. & G. R. Co., 249 N. Y. 445; People v. Village of Lombard, 319 Ill. 56), but ordinarily the word 'owner' is used to indicate a person in whom an interest is vested for his own benefit, or one who has dominion over and the right to enjoyment of the thing in question. As the Supreme Court said in Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 82, supra, the word 'implies something more that a bare legal title.' (See United States v. Ninety-nine Diamonds, 139 Fed. 961, 971 (C. C. A. 8th); In re Fidham's Estate, 96 Vt. 308, 317-318; In re Smithfield City, 70 Utah 564, 567-568; Chicago v. Sullivan Machinery Co., 269 Ill. 58, 69-70; Stone v. New England Box Co., 216 Mass. 8, 10-11, see also Restatement of the law of Trusts, tentative draft No. 1, section 2(d). In this sense of the word 'owners' the Executive Order would have no application to one who merely holds the bare title to gold in trust for another.

The use throughout the Order of the words 'own', 'ownership', 'owner', and 'belonging', seems clearly to negative an intention that the Order should be applicable to a mere holder, possessor, or custodian of gold, or to one who holds only the bare legal title to gold without any right of enjoyment thereof."

The authorities cited by the Attorney General for this conclusion fully support him. Thus the Supreme Court says in Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 82:

"Although the word owner has a variety of meanings and may, under certain circumstances, include an equitable as well as a legal ownership, or even a right of present use and possession, it implies something more than a bare legal title * * *."

Looked at in its substance, therefore, and without regard for the intervention in 1932 of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G., the transaction which underlay the acquisition of the gold involved reserved the beneficial use and enjoyment of the assets out of which the gold was purchased to persons who have been continuously and still are exempt from the jurisdiction, and we submit that it would be in accordance with the letter as well as the spirit of the law and the intention of Congress to avoid interference with genuine foreign interests, for the Treasury to find that the owners of the gold are not affected by the Act of March 9, 1933, and the subsequent Executive Orders.

Conclusion.

We have assembled as carefully as possible in the available time the facts bearing upon the ownership of the gold covered by this application, and have discussed as fully as possible the question which we surmised have been in the mind of the Treasury with respect to that ownership. As a result of our investigation we are convinced that the present case genuinely falls outside the jurisdiction of the United States according to the enlightened manner in which that jurisdiction has been asserted by the Congress and the Executive.

If, however, matters remain which seem to the Treasury to deserve inquiry or demand explanation, we should be glad to co-operate in either respect or in both. The applicant rests this application only on the facts, and we feel that it is entitled under the law and the facts to have the application granted.

The fact, of course, cannot be ignored that, in view of the devaluation of the dollar, the result of the granting of the application may be represented as being, and may appear to the Treasury to be, a profit to the corporation as measured in dollars. A moment's thought will show how deceptive any such representation or such appearance would be. The books of the corporation are kept in Swiss francs, not in dollars. The investment now owned by the corporation was originally computed in Reichsmarks, not in dollars. Ever since the execution of the deed of gift on October 5, 1931, it has been the candid endeavor of the von Opels to reduce the cash the consideration called for by the escrow agreement, Exhibit Q, and translate that cash into stable values which would at least maintain the gold value of the Reichsmark at the termination of the escrow agreement on April 1, 1934.

Whether we look at the transaction from the standpoint of Uebersee's accountancy in Swiss francs, or from the standpoint of the original investment of Reichsmarks, or from the standpoint of April 1, 1934, and the gold value of the Reichsmark on that date, it is equally plain that the granting of the application does not represent a profit. That it would produce an increment of dollars is beside the point, for it shows only that the dollar has been depreciated. In the currency of origin (Germany) and in the currency of adoption (Switzerland) the granting of the application is absolutely necessary to avoid a loss.

We do not believe that anything in the history of the transaction, as frankly detailed in Fritz von Opel's affidavit suggests that any American public interest would be injured by the granting of the application to which the applicant is in law entitled.

The application should be granted, and Uebersee Finanz-Korporation A. G. authorized to deliver the gold coins to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York for exchange against gold bullion to an equivalent amount and to surrender the bullion to the Federal Reserve Bank for the account of the Banque Nationale Suisse.

SUPPLEMENTAL MEMORANDUM
IN THE
DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

of

The Application of UEBERSEE FINANZ KORPORATION AKTIEN GESELLSCHAFT, regarding Gold held for its Account in the United States.

STATEMENT.

At our informal conference at the Treasury on June 8th, when there were submitted the five affidavits discussed in our memorandum of that date, the suggestion was made that the Treasury would be interested in the relationship of Theodore Hoffacker to Uebersee (if any) and to Fritz von Opel, and likewise the extent of Uebersee's interest in and the nature of its connection with domestic corporations doing business in the United States.

As these questions were not fully covered in our original papers, we have taken the liberty of obtaining, and submit herewith, the further affidavits of Theodore Hoffacker, verified June 12, 1935, and of Fritz von Opel verified on the same date, together with a letter from the Secretary of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) dated June 11th with attached statement of facts of record regarding the corporation.

1. Summary of Additional Facts Shown.

Without reviewing in any detail the additional facts set forth in these papers, for which we would rather refer to the affidavits themselves, we may summarize them for the purpose of discussion as follows:

(a) The only contractual relationship which Mr. Hoffacker has ever had was with Fritz von Opel. It was partly written and partly oral. In so far as written, it is contained in the letter agreement dated October 30, 1931, of which a copy was attached to von Opel's affidavit first submitted as Exhibit V. This agreement, it will be noted, related only to trading in 47,625 shares of General Motors Corporation common stock which never belonged to Uebersee.

In so far as oral, the agreement between Mr. Hoffacker and Mr. von Opel is set forth fully at pages 2-3, and was to the effect that Mr. Hoffacker would have 20% of any profit ultimately realized by Mr. von Opel upon the sale of securities purchased on his advice. Mr. Hoffacker dealt with Mr. von Opel personally, and this agreement does not apply to any securities purchased by Uebersee.

Mr. Hoffacker as investment counsel did not deal with Uebersee directly or indirectly. He learned that Mr. von Opel had a power of attorney for Uebersee in 1932, but he learned this fact quite collaterally. He dealt with Mr. von Opel as a principal and never as the representative of any company.

The compensation which Mr. Hoffacker has received for services rendered by him as investment counsel to Mr. von Opel has been limited to his 20% of the profit on the trading in the 47,625 shares of General Motors Corporation stock, which was substantial.* The absence of any compensation to Mr. Hoffacker in respect of investments on which he advised Mr. von Opel and which Uebersee (rather than Mr. von Opel) made, is counterbalanced for Mr. Hoffacker by the emoluments he received as officer of the companies in which Uebersee has so invested. These emoluments are stated by him at page 5 of his affidavit, and amount according to our computation to something like $29,200 annually.

(b) Uebersee holds some interest in four American corporations. These are Spur Distributing Co., Inc., a Delaware corporation; Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware), a Delaware corporation; Oil Production, Inc., a Louisiana corporation, and Oil Refineries, Inc., a Louisiana corporation.

(c) In Spur, Uebersee owns 75,589 out of 140,000 shares of stock outstanding. In Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware), it owns about 300,000 shares out of 525,605 outstanding. Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) owns all the capital stock of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts) which operates a brewery at Lowell, Massachusetts. Uebersee owns all the outstanding stock of Oil Refineries, Inc., together with a $200,000 mortgage note on its property. It owns none of the oustanding stock of Oil Production, Inc.,

* We are informed that Mr. Hoffacker's participation in this profit amounted to more than $80,000.

but does own the outstanding bonds of that company in the amount of $541,000.

(d) Mr. Hoffacker is Vice-President of Spur Distributing Co., Inc., and a director thereof. He is a director and Vice-President of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) and President of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts). He is President of both Oil Production, Inc., and Oil Refineries, Inc., and a director of each. Mr. Fritz von Opel's only connection with any of these companies is as a director of Harvard Brewing Co. (Massachusetts), to which post he was elected on December 13, 1933.

(e) No officer or director or stockholder of Uebersee (other than Mr. von Opel as aforesaid) has any connection with these four American companies. The affairs of Spur are conducted under a management contract by J. M. Houghland, the President. Oil Production, Inc., and Oil Refineries, Inc., are managed by Crattendon Engineering Company under management contracts. Mr. Hoffacker's affidavit, quoting telegrams from the officers of the respective companies, is emphatic to the effect that neither Uebersee as a corporation, nor Fritz von Opel personally has sought to dominate or has influenced the conduct of corporate affairs.

(f) Each of these four American corporations has its independent place of business, its regular directors' and stockholders' meetings, its corporate records kept under the custody of appropriate officers, and in all respects preserves its independence as a corporation.

Defendants.

A motion on behalf of plaintiff for an injunction pendente lite restraining the individual defendants above named, co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., their agents, officers and employees, during the pendency of this action, and until the further order of this Court, from transferring, delivering, paying over or otherwise disposing of plaintiff's bags of United States gold coins mentioned in the bill of complaint herein, to any person, firm, body or corporation other than the plaintiff, and for other and further relief, having come on to be heard on the 18th day of June, 1935, pursuant to an order to show cause made herein on the 15th day of June, 1935, and upon reading and filing said order to show cause made herein on June 15, 1935, the affidavit of Isidor J. Kresel, sworn to the 15th day of June, 1935, and the bill of complaint herein, verified the 15th day of June, 1935, and the affidavit of Isidor J. Kresel, sworn to the 20th day of June, 1935, together with the documents therein referred to and identified, and the affidavit of Isidor J. Kresel, sworn to June 24, 1935, in support of said motion, and the affidavits of Friedrich Wille, sworn to the 18th day of June, 1935, and the 21st day of June, 1935, respectively, in opposition thereto, and after hearing Isidor J. Kresel, Esq., solicitor for the plaintiff (Isidor J. Kresel, Esq., and Bernard Hershkopf, Esq., of counsel), for said motion, and Messrs. Van Vorst, Siegel & Smith, solicitors for the individual defendants, co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co. (Arthur B. Brenner, Esq., of counsel), in opposition thereto, and due deliberation having been had,

Now, on motion of Van Vorst, Siegel & Smith, solicitors for the individual defendants, co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., it is hereby Ordered that plaintiff's said motion for an injunction pendente lite be and the same hereby is in all respects denied;

Further Ordered that the stay contained in the order to show cause made herein on the 15th day of June, 1935, restraining and staying the individual defendants, co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., from transferring, delivering or paying over said bags of United States gold coins to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York or to any one other than the plaintiff, be and the same hereby is continued for the period of ten (10) days after service upon the plaintiff's solicitor of a copy of this order, with notice of entry thereof;

FURTHER ORDERED that if during said period of ten (10) days the plaintiff shall take an appeal from this order to the Circuit Court of Appeals and shall give bond with good and sufficient sureties in the sum of $5,000.00, conditioned on the payment to said individual defendants, co-partners doing business at Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., of their costs and damages arising from this application for a preliminary injunction and all proceedings consequent thereto in the event that plaintiff's said appeal should be dismissed or that this order, denying plaintiff's motion for an injunction pendente lite, should be affirmed or that said stay hereby continued should be reversed or vacated, said stay shall continue until the entry and service of the order of the Circuit Court of Appeals upon said apeal, otherwise said stay shall cease at the end of said period of ten (10) days;

FURTHER ORDERED that anything herein to the contrary notwithstanding, said individual defendants, co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., have, and are hereby granted, leave to apply either to the Circuit Court of Appeals or to a Circuit Judge for a modification or vacation of said stay, or for further security or for any other appropriate relief in respect of said stay.

French, duly verified the 17th day of June, 1935, in support of said motion for an order to dismiss bill of complaint herein, and proof of due service of said notice of motion upon plaintiff and upon the individual defendants above named, co-partners doing business as Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., by the written admissions of their respective attorneys; and, after hearing Isidor J. Kresel, Esq., solicitor for the plaintiff (Isidor J. Kresel, Esq., and Bernard Hershkopf, Esq., of counsel), in support of said motion for an injunction pendente lite, and Walter S. Logan, Esq., solicitor for defendant Federal Reserve Bank of New York (Felix T. Davis, Esq., of counsel), in opposition thereto and in support of said motion for an order dismissing the bill of complaint herein, and due deliberation having been had,

NOW, on motion of WALTER S. LOGAN, solicitor for defendant, Federal Reserve Bank of New York, it is hereby ORDERED:

1. That the bill of complaint herein be, and the same hereby is, dismissed with respect to defendant, Federal Reserve Bank of New York;

2. That the title of this suit be, and the same hereby is, amended to exclude the name of said Federal Reserve Bank of New York as a party defendant herein.

Dated, New York, New York, July 15th, 1935.

FRANCIS G. CAFFEY,
United States District Judge.

From the papers before me it appears to be undisputed that the plaintiff purchased the gold here involved in February, 1933; that the individual defendants held, and since March 2, 1933, have held, this gold as warehousemen for the plaintiff; that the Secretary of the Treasury has refused to issue a license, which the plaintiff sought, for exportation of the gold or for its delivery to the defendant bank to be held in custody for a Swiss bank, designated by the plaintiff; and that the Secretary has directed the individual defendants to turn over the gold to the defendant bank to be held for account of the Treasurer of the United States.

For the sake of argument it will be assumed, though it is not decided, that the plaintiff is, and during the whole period has been, a non-resident alien who is not subject to or within the terms of the Emergency Banking Act approved March 9, 1933 (48 Stat. 1), or any of the executive orders or regulations thereunder.

Upon the recited facts, some actual and others assumed, the sole questions arising, or raised by the plaintiff, are (1) whether the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, approved January 30, 1934 (48 Stat. 337), applies to the gold and (2), if so, whether, in an aspect mentioned below, the statute is constitutional.

In contradistinction to the 1933 Act, which was confined to persons, the later statute operates in rem. In the first sentence of Section 3 of the Gold Reserve Act it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, shall by regulations prescribe the conditions under which "gold" may be held or exported and in the second sentence, that "gold in any form" may be exported or held in custody (except for the Government) "only to the extent permitted by, and subject to the conditions prescribed in, or pursuant to, such regulations." Section 4 provides that "any gold" withheld, exported or "held in custody, in violation of this Act or of any regulations issued hereunder, or licenses issued pursuant thereto, shall be forfeited to the United States."

It strikes me that the language of the two sections is so clear that there is no escape from construing it to cover the gold in suit. The first sentence of Section 3 deals with "gold". The word is not qualified. It must, therefore, mean all gold. The second sentence deals with "gold in any form" and Section 4, with "any gold." So also both sections unambiguously and explicitly deal with holding such gold in custody. I cannot conceive phraseology which would more plainly embrace the gold with which we are now concerned. That this is true is further confirmed by the last sentence of Section 3. As I read that sentence, it indicates beyond peradventure Congressional intent to include within the previous sentences of the section all gold whatsoever situate within continental United States.

The plaintiff urges that every statute is presumed to be prospective and that the 1934 Act would be given retrospective effect if it were construed to cover gold acquired previous to the passage of that statute. I dissent from this view. I cannot accept it partly because, whatever the presumption, the language employed is both comprehensive and peremptory and partly because a discrimination between parcels of gold so as to subdivide it into classes, separated as of the date of passage of the Act, would create a loophole which would defeat the manifest purpose (save as expressly exempted or provided to be exempted) to carry into the Treasury all gold whatsoever physically within or coming into the United States. No interpretation should be adopted which would frustrate this obvious design of Congress. The use of the expression "held in custody" would have been inapposite if the object had been to relieve from the influence of the statute gold acquired previous to its enactment.

In the light of Norman v. B. & O. R. Co., 294 U. S. 240, and Nortz v. United States, 294 U. S. 317, the authority to Congress to provide, as it has provided in the sections of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 already referred to, for complete commandeering of the entire stock of gold within the territorial limits of the United States seems to me settled. As I see the problem, it is so definitely settled that it would be supererogation for me to discuss it.

The two cases last cited are but the most recent in a long series of decisions by the Supreme Court which have established the plenary nature of the power of Congress with respect to gold when legislating about the money system. It extends to all gold in the country, regardless of who is the owner; regardless of whether the owner be alien or citizen, resident or non-resident; regardless of when ownership has begun or shall begin.

The claim by the plaintiff with respect to the validity of the statute, as I understand it, is reduced to the single insistence that the portion of Section 3 which undertakes to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations is an attempt to delegate legislative power, within the prohibition declared in such decisions as Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan, 293 U. S. 388, and Schechter Poultry Corporation v. United States, 55 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837.

The regulations which the Secretary is directed to issue are required to "prescribe the conditions under which gold may be acquired and held, * * * or * * * exported, * * *: (a) for industrial, professional, or artistic use; (b) by the Federal Reserve banks for the purpose of settling international balances; and, (c) for such other purposes as in his judgment are not inconsistent with the purposes of this Act." As I further understand, the plaintiff concedes that clauses (a) and (b) just quoted do not infringe the Constitution; the sole contention being that the vice asserted is exclusively in and exclusively inheres to clause (c).

If, however, regulations resting only on clause (c) be invalid, as I see it, the consequence would be merely that the Secretary would be deprived of opportunity, in his discretion, to make a regulation under which the plaintiff could lawfully be permitted to have gold held in custody for its account or could lawfully export it. I think that it is only upon the hypothesis that clause (c) does confer on the Secretary valid power to make a regulation which would grant the plaintiff leave, or under which, on request, leave might be granted to the plaintiff, to have the gold held in custody for it or to export it that violation of the second sentence of Section 3 or forfeiture under Section 4 could be avoided if the individual defendants should continue to hold the gold for the plaintiff's account or if the plaintiff should proceed with its exportation. There is no occasion, therefore, to pass on the validity of clause (c). If it were treated as void, that would merely spell defeat for the plaintiff; that would merely rob the Secretary of authority,—in conditions outside of clause (a) or (b),—to adopt a regulation legalizing custodial holding of gold for the account of any private owner.

Again, Section 16 creates an affirmative presumption that if any separable provision of the statute be held invalid, the remaining provisions of the Act shall not be affected (Compare Hill v. Wallace, 259 U. S. 44; Utah Power & L. Co. v. Pfost, 286 U. S. 165; Champlin Rfg. Co. v. Commission, 286 U. S. 210). On their face, clauses (a) and (b) of Section 3 are wholly separable from clause (c). The three clauses are in no sense dependent on each other. It would be entirely rational and practical for the Secretary to determine that no regulation whatever was or is needed under clause (c). I do not think, therefore, there is any warrant whatever for a court attributing to Congress the purpose, if clause (c) should fail, that either clause (a) or clause (b) or any other provision of the statute should thereupon cease to have effect. To hold otherwise would nullify the specific announcement in Section 16 that "If any provision of this Act, * * * is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, * * * shall not be affected thereby."

Upon the grounds stated I feel that, if we ignore the Emergency Banking Act, as well as executive orders and regulations thereunder, the Gold Reserve Act itself stands squarely in the way of an award to the plaintiff of the relief it seeks.

The individual defendants ask the court to take possession of the gold pending further proceedings. The court is not equipped to care for such property. Indeed, I know of no provision of law under which, in the circumstances, the Clerk can be compelled to take it in hand or the court by other means to receive it. While I recognize the embarrassment of the individual defendants, because of the conflicting demands on them, I have been unable to contrive a fair method for their relief at this stage.

The defendant bank moves that the bill be dismissed as against it. If I be right in what has been said above, then such dismissal must follow.

Numerous other points were brought forward at the oral argument and have been repeated in the briefs. In view, however, of the conclusion I have reached, I do not think it worth while, or even appropriate, to go into these additional matters.

Accordingly, the motion for an injunction pendente lite will be denied and the bank's motion to dismiss the bill will be granted.

It is clear that if I be in error, serious and perhaps irremediable injury may be suffered by the plaintiff. Under Section 129 of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. A., sec. 227) an appeal by the plaintiff to the Circuit Court of Appeals will lie from the refusal of an injunction. I should be willing that the stay contained in the order to show cause of June 15, 1935, continue for ten days after service on the plaintiff's solicitor of the order hereon; also that if during that ten days' period the plaintiff take an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals and give bond in an amount to be prescribed in the order, the stay continue until after disposition of the appeal, provided that, in the meanwhile, the individual defendants have leave to apply either to the Circuit Court of Appeals or to a Circuit Judge for a modification or vacation of such stay. Counsel may be heard by memoranda on settlement of the order as to the amount of the bond.

Settle order on three days' notice.

Dated, July 9, 1935.

FRANCIS G. CAFFEY,
United States District Judge.

An den

Frankfurt a.M.

Answering your letter of the 29th of last month I am enclosing herewith

1. copy of the agreement with the firm of Adler & Co. Zuerich. A certified copy of the agreement is already in your hands. My representative will personally show you the original.

2. Copy of a telegram showing that the option was exercised. This original, too, will be shown by my representative.

These documents who that my son Fritz von Opel is obliged to take over the sfrs. 300,000.00 shares of the Overseas Finance Corporation Ltd. at the rate of 105 1/2% and to make available through me a loan of sfrs. 3,500,000.00.

With the letter of October 28, 1931, copy of which is enclosed, I myself had asked the firm of Adler & Co. to release me from my obligation to place the loan at the disposal of my son. However, according to the letter of November 30, 1931, copy of which is also enclosed, the firm of Adler & Co. insists upon its right, so that I too am compelled to keep available for the loan the expected amount of sfrs. 3,500,000.00, and the price of the shares. The originals of these two letters will also be shown to you by my representative.

Since the other contracting party will under any circumstances compel my son to fulfill his obligations under the contract, my son has also taken measures for the purpose of safeguarding his claim with a view to cover himself, as the enclosed copy of a letter will show.

Incidentally, I myself believe that the projected enterprise of my son will succeed and may be of great importance to German economy. I am again enclosing a list of the patents owned by my son, which since many of them are foreign patents, are to be exploited by this company.

Furthermore, I am enclosing for your inspection abstracts of my current account which show that I kept the money ready for my son as early as March 1930, in the beginning of the negotiations, for reasons which my representative will explain to you personally.

I am asking again to approve my application of December 22, 1931.

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir,

I am referring to the conference you had some days ago with Dr. Faust and beg to hand you enclosed the records you requested:

1.) the acknowledgment by my son of the letter of Messrs. Adler & Co. Zuerich, dated April 15, 1931.

2.) the letter of Messrs. Adler & Co., by which this firm exercises its right of option.

To 1 and 2: Since my son is away at present on a trip he could not send the original letters and procured copies for this purpose, but with an accompanying letter by Messrs. Adler & Co., which I am enclosing in the original.

3.) the affidavit you desired.

I beg to inform you also, that I remitted the free amount of about sfrs. 354,834.90 to the account of the directorate of the Reichsbank (Reichsbankdirektorium) Berlin, with the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt in Zuerich. I have informed the directorate of the Reichsbank Berlin accordingly.

Yours very truly,

January 13, 1932

I hereby declare in lieu of oath:

When the Adam Opel Aktiengesellschaft was sold to General Motors, I promised my son, who at the time was sole Director of the company, to place funds at his disposal to enable him to set himself up in business, in case he should not wish to return to the management of Ruesselsheim after a two years' study with the General Motors Works.

In order to enable my son to exploit his domestic and foreign patents, I repeatedly, and also in the spring of 1931, promised him the funds he required for his purposes by referring to any credit balance with the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt in Zuerich.

However, by letter of January 13 you informed me that an unused amount of about sfrs. 354,634.90

Dear Sir,

I regret that I have been unable until today to answer your letters of January 25 and February 2, since I have been away on business for several days.

As Dr. Faust informed you personally at the time, Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel is on a trip round the world since the middle of January. For this reason your letters remained unanswered for several days.

With regard to the matter itself I beg to inform you as follows:

The remittance of the amount of sfrs. 336,771.50 is due to the fact, that this amount corresponds to that part of the credit balance of Geheimrat von Opel which was not affected by the attachment. Geheimrat von Opel had given instructions to remit this amount to the Reichsbankdirektorium shortly before he left.

Mr. Fritz von Opel decided to do without the sfrs. 316,500.00, since this amount was advanced to him by a Dutch syndicate in return for the depositing of the shares. As I was told by Mr. von Opel, he informed you at one of the conversations he had with you of his intention to enlist the financial aid of a foreign group interested in the exploitation of his patents, which he succeeded in accomplishing as stated above.

Trusting that the above information will be of use to you, I am

Yours sincerely,

We received your letter of the 21st instant and beg to reply that according to our advice of October 22, 1931, the amount in question of sfrs. 3,500,000.00 had to be regarded as blocked on behalf of the Reichsbank. By letter of December 2, 1931, we again pointed out the situation and informed you that you could only dispose of the amount with our permission. Under these circumstances the attachment of the amount by a third party ought to have been reported to us immediately. Therefore, we are very much surprised to get this belated information only today. We now wish to clear up the whole matter as quickly as possible and would ask you to submit to us the order of attachment and all papers concerning the expiration of the term of the credit of which so far we had no knowledge either.

We are expecting your reply by April 4 of this year.

Defendant's Exhibit 21

April 5, 1932

An die
Reichsbankstelle Wiesbaden,

Wiesbaden.

Referring to the conversation of today's date between your official in charge and Mr. Fritz von Opel, I beg to send you enclosed our chronologically arranged list of the correspondence with the Foreign Exchange Control Office, Frankfurt a/M, and with the Reichsbank. As you might gather from it Geheimrat Dr. Wilhelm von Opel has kept the Foreign Exchange Control Office, Frankfurt, Main, and/or the Reichsbank posted on the matter, because we assumed the matter to come under the jurisdiction of these authorities. All the more so, since we had been referred by Frankfurt to the Reich Ministry of Economics, Berlin, for personal discussions in the matter. Our assumption had been especialy confirmed by the fact, that the director of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control, Frankfurt, Main, was Reichsbankdirektor Goller; this led us to believe that our entire correspondence was also submitted to the Reichsbank.

On September 9, 1931, notice was given to the Deutsche Bank and Disconto Gesellschaft, Frankfurt, Main, accompanied by an application for release and reasons therefore (cf. enclosure 1).

On the same day a similar notice was sent to the registration office Berlin (cf. enclosure 2).

2/

On September 17, 1931 the Deutsche Bank and Diskonto Gesellschaft, Frankfurt, Main requested supplementary records for the Reichsbankhauptstelle (Main Office of the Reichsbank) (cf. enclosure 3).

3/

On October 26, 1931 Director May of the Deutsche Bank and Disconto Gesellschaft, Frankfurt, Main informed us by telephone that he had forwarded the new supplementary application for release to the Reichsbank, and that the latter had forwarded the matter to Berlin for decision (cf. enclosure 4).

4/

On October 28, 1931 Geheimrat von Opel, after consulting Reichsbankdirektor Goller, wrote to the firm of Adler & Co., suggesting to them to waive their right to exercise the option (cf. enclosure 5).

5/

On November 30, 1931 — Adler & Co. refused, although Mr. Fritz von Opel made a personal call in Zuerich for the purpose of terminating the contract.

In the last paragraph of the letter, Adler & Co. indicated that they would hold Mr. Fritz von Opel exclusively responsible for the fulfilment of the contract (cf. enclosure 6).

On December 2, 1931 — Mr. Fritz von Opel, therefore, had prepared a warrant of attachment in order to be himself secured in case the option was exercised by Adler & Co. (copy of this warrant of attachment of December 2, 1931, is already in your hands).

On December 17, 1931 — Adler & Co. exercised the option (cf. enclosure 7).

On December 22, 1931 — the already prepared warrant of attachment was executed (copy of this warrant of attachment of December 22, 1931, is already in your hands).

On December 24, 1931 — the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt advised us of the blocking of the account (cf. enclosure 8).

This letter, along with other records requested by the Office of Foreign Exchange Control, Frankfurt on Main was handed to said office on January 5, 1932.

As you may see from the above selection of our correspondence with the Reichsbank or the Office of Foreign Exchange Control, Frankfurt, Main we kept both agencies well informed on all developments and were therefore justified in assuming that you, too, had been shown the files, all the more so, since Reichsbankdirektor Goller notified us on December 1, 1931, that "it would be advisable to leave matters pending for the time being" and "that he had informed the Reichsbank Branch Office Wiesbaden accordingly" (cf. enclosure 9).

I would ask you therefore to kindly excuse the oversight, and I shall be glad to furnish any further information you may desire.

Yours truly,

Dr. Wilhelm von Opel

Considerations of a personal nature concerning the gift

My principal purpose in making the gift was to head off threatened increase of the later inheritance tax. Well informed quarters claimed to know of increases contemplated like those once decreed by Erzberger, practically amounting to confiscation in the case of large fortunes) (see the financial situation of the Reich in 1931!)

In the second place it was comforting to me to know that in case of bolshevism etc. I would have a chance to retire to my son Fritz, who would then have been in a financial position to support me by virtue of the gift.

My death Father,

In Berlin I discussed "usufruct" for two days, in Zuerich "usufruct" for one day. I learned there to my surprise that you got in touch with Dr. Frankenberg from Budapest with regard to the same matter. I am sorry that you should concern yourself with these things even on the eve of a wedding, and I wish to assure you that you may leave those things to me with a good conscience; they are number 1 on my schedule.

When you will be here, I shall tell you all the details. The thing is much more involved than you imagine. There can be no complications, however, since no profits have accrued, let alone been distributed. So you may enjoy Budapest night-life with a wholly carefree mind. This only to restore your ease of mind.

With cordial greetings, also to mama and the Edelsheims

RUESSELSHEIM, Main

My dear Fritz,

I received your two telegrams. As a precaution
1 and 2/ I am sending you enclosed one copy each thereof with the request to confirm their text. At the same time, I am sending you for your information some written statements I made, viz.:

3/ Origins of the gift,

4/ personal considerations concerning the gift,

5/ reasons for the sale,

6/ option agreement.

In the meantime the matter of uncle Fritz, which you know of, caused me a good deal of annoyance. I spoke in detail about it to Margot and I hope she told you all about it.

Margot probably also informed you that my passport was taken away when I arrived in Berlin. I got it back a few days later, so that I could make my trip to the Baltic cities and to Russia. I will tell you more about this trip later; I am not in the mood for it now.

Now, after my return, the matter starts all over again. They evidently always try to construe a connection between our gift and what uncle Fritz did, although no such connection exists. I was interrogated on September 19; I am enclos-
[7/] ing copy of the minutes of this interrogation. As you will see from it (see p. 5) I undertook to submit the following documents:

1. original of the option agreement with the entire correspondence;

2. correspondence concerning the negotiations regarding the gold clause;

3. correspondence with you and the attorneys concerning the negotiations regarding the gift contract;

4. documentary evidence of the settlements with General Motors on the basis of the option agreement;

(p. 2)

5. statements regarding the purchase of the securities;

6. bank statements of the credit balances.

re 1:

Dr. Fleischer told me that the documents requested from General Motors are said to be on the way. Nevertheless, please inquire at the office of the General Motors.

re 2:

There must be some telegrams from us at General Motors regarding this matter. At any rate some sent from London by Mr. Mooney to Mr. Sloan or Mr. Smith. It may be that the telephone conversations we had concerning the gold clause were noted in the General Motors files, although I don't know how such things are handled in America.

re 3:

8/ I asked Dr. Hachenburg by telephone already yesterday to send me immediately a copy of his draft of the contract. I just got the enclosed draft of the contract from Hachenburg.

Dr. Faust already handed the original of Dr. Hachenburg's letter to the Fahndungsstelle (Search Office). I am going to supplement the record of my interrogation regarding this matter since I did not know that when I was questioned.

But let me know once more how things were done at the time. As I said above, I have asked Dr. Hachenburg to send me a copy of that letter, which, as Dr. Faust claims, is dated October 3, 1931. Dr. Faust claims also that there was some talk in this letter not only of a holding company but also of a gift, and that, as far as he remembers, even the draft of a gift contract was attached to it. He said also that Hachenburg had subsequently sent this letter to Ruesselsheim—following a discussion he had with you. The gentlemen believe we had consulted other attorneys as well; the minutes will show you what I remember of the matter.

re 4:

The Adam Opel A. G. has asked General Motors to send their documents concerning the settlement which was made with them on the basis of the option agreement. Take a look there at the documents they are going to send. But send me your own documents, too, which you got from the bank. The gentlemen are surprised to learn that the bank handed you the things without any further written instructions (p. 3) from me. Or did I give you power of attorney? You left in such a hurry at the time because we were afraid of a devaluation of the mark, and wanted to prevent enormous losses.

re 5:

Actually, this point is already covered by item 4. The gentlemen want to have the original communications to you, because they believe that the whole matter had gone through my hands.

re 6:

The gentlemen believe that you did not exchange the shares immediately, but at some later date, so that you would have had a credit balance at the bank.

As far as I can see, the present problem is this: The authorities charged with the investigation presume that brother Fritz and I had had an understanding of the whole transaction beforehand and had done everything by mutual consent.

In the case of brother Fritz they presume in particular that the contract he made with Hans was fictitious. They then assumed that I had done the same thing. They endeavor to prove this especially by alleging that the negotiations with America after the gift was made were not conducted by you and in your name and account, but by me.

I was provoked at the sarcastic tone in which the gentlemen questioned my promise to submit the originals of the desired documents. I would therefore appreciate your assistance and ask you to send me the documents as soon as possible; they will bear me out in what I have said, and I want to get the matter out of my head. So, please, send me, if possible, all the originals, without exception. We have got nothing to conceal and it will only be to our advantage to put all our cards on the table.

Maybe the letter of which you notified me by your cable of the 17th contains already some of the desired details. If you did not enclose the originals, please send them now; for they will be required here in every case.

With cordial greetings to Margot and yourself,

Your

(sgd.) Father

I, the undersigned attorney Manfred Wronker-Flatow, acknowledge having received from Geheimrat Dr. ing. h. c. Wilhelm von Opel a loan of 20,000.00 Dollars. Interest thereon is to be paid at the end of each period at the Reichsbank discount rate current at that time beginning on April 1, 1935; for the first time on July 1, 1935. Repayment is to be made by 10 annual instalments of $2,000.00 each (two thousand Dollars United States currency) beginning on April 1, 1936; first instalment payable on April 1, 1936; for the consecutive years likewise on April 1. As collateral serve the life insurance policies which I have taken out in favor of my wife with the Iduna Life Insurance and with the French Life Insurance L. Urbaine in the amount of RM 40,000.00 respectively Francs 125,000.00, which will become payable, except in case of death, in the years 1947 respectively 1948. My wife Alexandra Wronker-Flatow, nee Manzel, recognizes by her signature this agreement as also binding for herself.

Dear Geheimrat,

First of all I have to apologize for my long silence. I was never before aware how difficult it is to write letters in which one is compelled to admit being unable for the moment to live up to obligations previously incurred.

You, dear Geheimrat, know that I incurred these obligations under circumstances which seemed to guarantee that I would be able to meet them. In spite of the most successful pioneer work (p. 2) for G.M. and the Opel firm, I have been deprived without any fault on my part of the very foundations of an arrangement, when things took a turn which no sensible and intelligent man could have been expected to take into consideration. Now after fifty years of most strenuous work and of great success I find myself with my wife in a more and more exhausting struggle to earn a living and enough money to support and educate our six children.

To be forced in such times to write about repaying sums of money which are entirely out of proportion to my present situation is paralyzing to such a degree that one postpones it again and again hoping to be able to write something positive. The delay has become unduly long, and I am sincerely grateful to you (p. 3) for not having doubted my good will to pay my debt in spite of my long silence which would have been incomprehensible under normal conditions.

In the last three years full of work and worry, which are now behind us, I hope to have laid the foundation of an organization which in 1937 ought to yield enough to enable me to start redeeming my debt. I am confident to be in a position to submit to you positive proposals in 1937, probably during the next six months and would be very grateful to you for having patience until then in view of the prevailing circumstances which were brought about through [illegible] fault of my own.

Please rest assured that although everything I had built up (p. 4) in decades has been destroyed, and in spite of all obstacles and all difficulties which often seem insurmountable, my intention remains unshaken to meet liabilities which I incurred in good faith.

Since my health has so far withstood all the hard physical and mental trials and tribulations and the constant climatic and other changes, I have not given up hope that there will still be a way out of all this darkness.

My wife joins me in sending you our kindest regards and compliments, which we beg to convey to Mrs. von Opel, too.

With our best wishes for your personal welfare.

Yours very truly,

Defendant's Exhibit 30

June 2, 1932

Dr. Manfred Wronker-Flatow,
Adam Opel A.G.,
Russelsheim a/M.,
Germany.

Dear Doctor:

In connection with the tax situation, I have had several interviews with Fritz von Opel and his father, the Geheimrat. According to the Geheimrat, he never received my cable of October 30, 1931, accepting his proposition to retain one-half interest in his stock against a guarantee for its then substantial value payable in gold. You will recall that this matter was the subject of a long discussion between you and Mr. Mooney on the one hand, and the Geheimrat on the other, during the time that Fritz von Opel was negotiating with me in New York.

At the time young Fritz was very violently opposed to his father's proposition; in fact, this opposition was one of the reasons why he wanted to return to lay them before his father in person. When we arrived in Russelsheim and the matter was discussed, I was led to believe that young Fritz had dissuaded his father from going ahead with the proposition to retain one-half interest. Upon learning this position, I cabled New York that the payments for the stock would be made in accordance with the notice served on us by young Fritz when he arrived in New York.

The inexplicable thing about the whole transaction is that the Geheimrat now claims that he never knew that his proposition was acceptable to us, or that in fact it had been accepted by us. In other words, not only does he claim that he never received the cable accepting the proposition, but inferentially it follows that young Fritz never told his father that the proposition was acceptable to us or that I had dispatched the cable of acceptance. Of course he was familiar with our position and with the fact that we telegraphed acceptance.

In the meantime the tax situation has arisen. How much effect this has on the Geheimrat's recollection of the transaction, I can not do more than guess. I gathered from his statement the other day, though, that he would have very much preferred to have had the transaction proceed along the lines of his offer to retain one-half of his Opel Stock. I told him so far as we were concerned, we would be willing to go back to that basis on the assumption that a mistake had been made. Such a procedure would put both parties back where they were, and doubtless would give the seller a good tax defense; but the difficulty there is that this would involve the repayment of the money paid by General Motors. So this was deemed an insuperable objection on their part.

They had proposals whereby the real transaction of purchase and sale would be screened by nominal agreements which would be nothing but mere paper transactions. For example, it was proposed that we should sell back the interest acquired. This would enable the Opels to take the position that they were the legal owners of the stock. In their judgment this would help them considerably with the German tax authorities. Simultaneously they would give us agreements to sell us the stock at any time for a return of the consideration to be paid by them; but as the consideration was not a real consideration, the whole transaction would be a mere cover and sham to which we could not be a party. In other words, we can not go through the form of selling the shares, and at the same time, as a matter of fact, own them.

It's a pity that this phase of the tax liability was not more thoroughly canvassed at the time that the stock was put to us last fall. At that time young Fritz seemed to be entirely sure of his ground, and of course so far as we were concerned, we had no option except to purchase upon demand in accordance with the terms of the contract. Having so purchased, there is no alternative for us except to treat it for what it really is. The only exception would be in the event of a real transaction by which we were to become divested of our ownership in a real, as distinguished from a fictitious way.

In regard to the matter of arbitration, I have sent to the Geheimrat today at his hotel, the draft of contract as proposed by you. In all probability as he is sailing on the 6th, he will want to consult with his German counsel. In any event, I would suggest that upon his arrival in Germany you take the matter up and have it brought to a final conclusion.

Very truly yours,

General Counsel.

TRANSLATION (Excerpt)

Executive Order of the Reich President Concerning Foreign Exchange Control of August 1, 1931

[Reichsgesetzblatt 1931, I, pages 421-1425]

(1) Foreign currency and claims payable in foreign currency may be acquired for German currency only by or through the Reichsbank and may be transferred only by or through the Reichsbank.

(2) Such acquisition requires a license in writing of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control. A license shall be granted where the foreign currency or the claims payable in foreign currency are intended to be used for the payment of interest or for recurring amortization payments on long-term credits.

(3) The Reichsbank may grant to other banks the right to acquire or transfer foreign currency or claims payable in foreign currency either for the account of the Reichsbank or for their own account. Para. (2) shall apply where a party acquires foreign exchange or claims payable in foreign currency from or through such a bank, except where the purchaser is itself such a bank and acts within the authority granted to it by the Reichsbank.

(4) The term "acquisition" shall include acquisition by way of execution.

Foreign currency or claims payable in foreign currency which have been acquired otherwise than in accordance with section 2 may be transferred only under a license in writing of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control, except where such assets are sold to the Reichsbank or one of the banks provided for in section 2, para. (3).

(4) Foreign securities not listed on a German stock exchange may not be acquired for a consideration except under a license in writing of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control. Foreign securities not listed on a German stock exchange may be transferred only under a license in writing of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control, except where the securities are sold to the Reichsbank or one of the banks provided for in section 2, para. (3).

§4

Foreign securities not listed on a German stock exchange may be acquired for a consideration only under a license in writing of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control. Foreign securities not listed on a German stock exchange may be transferred only under a license in writing of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control, except where such securities are sold to the Reichsbank or one of the banks contemplated by section 2, para. (3).

1. "Currency" for the purposes of this Order shall mean species of money (coins, paper money, bank notes and the like), foreign payments [Auszahlungen], remittances [Anweisungen], checks and bills of exchange.

2. "Claims payable in foreign currency" for the purposes of this Order shall mean claims which entitle the creditor to payment in a specific foreign currency. The term "claims payable in foreign currency" shall not include foreign securities as well as claims in foreign currency arising from contracts of insurance made before July 15, 1931.

3. "Foreign securities" for the purposes of this Order shall mean securities issued by a person or entity that is domiciled or has its place of management in a foreign country or in the Saar Territory.

4. "Precious metals" for the purposes of this Order shall mean gold and silver, platinum and platinum metals in the forms customary in the trade with such metals.

§12

Any transactions which violate any of the provisions of sections 3 to 11 are void.

§15

(1) The Government of the Reich may order that foreign currency, claims payable in foreign currency and foreign securities not listed on a German stock exchange and acquired after July 12, 1931, shall, within a period to be determined, be reported or tendered and, upon demand, sold and transferred to the Reichsbank in accordance with its general business conditions. Section 2, para. (3), first sentence, shall apply.

(2) In issuing such an order the Government of the Reich may in its discretion designate the categories of persons to whom the Order shall apply. The duties which shall be imposed by such an order upon the owner of a reportable asset shall also be complied with by anyone who holds such an asset as belonging to him or who, through a fiduciary or a business corporation or partnership or in some other manner, exercises the power to transfer such asset. Anyone required to comply with the duties of a taxpayer under the rules of the Reich Revenue Code, especially sections 103 et seq., is also required to comply with the duties as defined by such an order of the Government of the Reich. The Government of the Reich, may, moreover, designate the assets to which such an order shall apply, according to currency, minimum value of individual holdings, or other criteria which it may deem appropriate.

(1) Any person who deliberately

1. in violation of section 2 acquires or alienates foreign currency or claims payable in foreign currency against German currency;

2. in violation of section 2 acts as an intermediary in the acquisition of alienation, for German currency, of foreign currency or of claims payable in foreign currency;

3. violates any of the provisions of sections 3, 4, 6, 7;

4. sells or acquires foreign currency or claims payable in foreign currency at a price higher than the price permitted under sections 9 and 10, or acts as an intermediary in such a transaction;

5. enters into future transactions concerning foreign currency or claims payable in foreign currency or precious metals in exchange for German currency, or acts as an intermediary in such a transaction;

6. fails to comply in due time and/or due form with an order issued by the Government of the Reich under section 15 shall be punished by imprisonment or, in especially serious cases, imprisonment with hard labor not exceeding 10 years, as well as a fine not exceeding the tenfold value of the currency, the claims payable in foreign currency, the securities or the precious metals with regard to which the punishable act was committed.

(2) Where any of the acts defined in para. (1) was committed negligently, a fine only shall be imposed. In case the fine is not collectible, imprisonment shall be ordered.

(3) The punishment defined in para. (1) shall also be imposed on anyone who deliberately abets or encourages another to do an act punishable under section 1, or who offers to do such an act for another.

(4) In addition to the fine, the assets with regard to which the punishable act was committed may be confiscated on behalf of the Reich, even if they do not belong to the principal or an accessory. Confiscation shall not take place if the person affected thereby proves that he neither knew nor was in a position to know that such act was punishable and, in addition, that he derived no advantage from that punishable act. Where confiscation proves to be not feasible, the court may then order the confiscation of the equivalent in money. In determining the value of foreign currency and the claims payable in foreign currency, the average rate of exchange, computed according to the provisions of this Order, as of the date of the prohibited act, shall be used. In order to secure payment of the fine or collection of the forfeited assets, the property of the accused may be seized either in part or in its entirety.

Defendant's Exhibit 32

The District Court Wiesbade, 22 of May 1948

Present: Gegenwartig: Justizinspekter Gocke,
als Rechtspfleger

No one appeared before the Judge at the date determined for the opening of the last will of the couple Wilhelm von Opel and Marta geb. Bade, Wiesbaden.

The Death Certificate showing that the testator died on May 2, 1948 is to be found in the files. Miss E. Esklony already submitted before an envelope showing on the outside the following statement:

"Our last will—now valid—November 20, 1938."

It was established that the envelope was not mutilated. The envelope was opened and the joint will of the couple including three codicils taken out of the envelope. The last will including the three codicils was declared opened with the exception of a certain part designated by red parenthesis. The will is dated Wiesbaden, November 20, 1938. It begins with the following words:

"Unter Aufhebung" and ends with the words:

"Tochter angeordnet"

The codicils are dated Wiesbaden May 9, 1942, February 26, 1945 and December 10, 1946. They begin with the words:

a) Da unser Sohn

b) Jn §7

c) Die verhonderten

They end with the words:

a) Mainzer Strasse No. 55

b) kummerte

c) ausser Kraft gesetzt

Opened Wiesbaden, May 22, 1948, District Court 4a.

JOINT WILL

In abandoning all previous last wills, we provide the following after making this statement: We married under the law of "Katzenellenbogener Landrecht", which by the provisions of the german's civil code have been transformed into "community of the earned property". For the purpose of clarifying the condition of our property we state the following:

1. — — —

2. Both spouse did not bring any property into the community.

3. Therefore all of our property is to be considered as community property.

I, the husband, appoint as my preliminary heirs (contingent on death of preliminary heirs);

1. Our son Fritz 1/2

2. Our daughter Elinor 1/2

§2.

We appoint as heirs, succeeding our daughter Elinor, her issue and if she shouldn't have any issue our son Fritz and substituting him his issue.

Our son Fritz shall be a preliminary heir (contingent heir) free from any limitation as far as he can be free under Section 2136 of the Civil Code.

The heirs succeeding our son Fritz under this appointment, shall take Fritz' place only if our son Fritz should not provide otherwise by will. We assume that our son, if he should die without children, will give one-half of his property to an endowment to be designated by him.

§3.

The estate of each of us shall remain undivided for a period of ten years after the death of the surviving spouse.

If my wife should die before I die, I shall act as an executor of her will and administer her estate with the right to appoint our son Fritz as co-executor. After my death, our son Fritz, shall administer my estate as well as the estate of my wife. He might appoint a co-executor or designate a successor or appoint someone else in his place as executor until such time as he recalls such appointment. If I should die before my wife, the community property shall remain undivided and shall be administered by our son Fritz until the death of my wife. For this purpose our son Fritz was given power of attorney to be considered irrevocable which becomes effective at the moment of the date of my death (the husband's death). The power of attorney does not authorize any disposition of the real property in Wiesbaden, Steubenstrasse 34 and Schwalbach "Sonnenhof".

If our daughter Elinor should exercise her eventual right to claim a compulsory share she or her issue are to be credited with the amount of 500,000 Reichsmark, plus 5% interest given to her as endowment at her wedding. This amount is to be included in her share of the estate or in her compulsory share. The same rule applies in regard to the current gifts given to our daughter Elinor up to this time. Our son Fritz or his issue is to be credited with a gift of six-million par value shares of the Adam Opel A.G. given to him by gift contract of October 5, 1931. This gift is to be included in his share of inheritance in accordance with the provisions included in the gift contract referring to the equalization in case of distribution of our estate. However, in agreement with our son Fritz there shall be the following supplement: If the property given to our son Fritz as a gift should be put into a holding company, the valuation of the gift shall be determined by the tax balance sheet of the holding corporation. However, the value should not exceed ten-million Reichsmark.

This gift shall, however, not be added to the estate for the purpose of supplementing claims for compulsory shares in the estate.

The income of the estate of my wife shall go to me (the husband) as long as I live. The proceeds of my estate during the lifetime of my wife shall go—50% to my daughter Elinor and 50% to my son Fritz. After the death of both of us the net proceeds of both estates shall be divided as follows: 50% to my daughter Elinor and 50% to my son Fritz. Because of the behavior of our daughter Elinor to us and because of her way of living not being approved by us, we determine that the net proceeds to be actually paid to her shall not exceed per annum, 30,000 RM. However, this limitation shall be stricken if our daughter during the lifetime of both of us, should permanently renounce her present surrounding and should for this reason acquire pardon of both of us. After the death of our daughter her issue has a right to claim the payment of an amount sufficient for their livelihood and education in accordance with their social standing. In finding the needs of the issue of our daughter Elinor, their own property and their claim against persons obliged to take care of them are to be considered.

In the distribution of the estates, payments made before such distribution are to be accounted for.

If one of our children should reject his share in the estate, the other child shall substitute him. If one of our children, at the death of one of us, should demand her compulsory share, such child shall only get the compulsory share from the estate of the other spouse. The same rule shall apply for the issue of our children in the case our children shall pre-decease us. If bankruptcy proceedings should be started over the estate of one of our children or if the share of one of our children in the estate should be levied by a creditor or otherwise vested, such child shall be given only the compulsory share in both estates.

§7.

I, the husband, hereby provide for the following legacies on behalf of employees working in our house in Wiesbaden at the time of my death or working at the same time in my office in Russelsheim:

1. The house servants shall be given 150 Reichsmark for each year for which they are employed in our house.

2. The chauffeur and the office personnel shall be given one month's salary for each year they worked with me—each beginning year should be considered as a full year. However, no person shall obtain more than 10,000 Reichsmark.

§8.

We, the couple, hereby establish the following endowments which become effective at the death of the husband:

1. The amount of 100,000 Reichsmark should be used for the purpose of establishment of an endowment under the name "Wilhelm von Opel endowment", in favor of employees working at least 50 years with Adam Opel, A.G. The interest of the endowment capital shall be used for the purpose to take care of the cost of two annual trips of the employees, 50 years with the firm, and one social meeting of them in Russelsheim. The remaining part of the interest shall be used for the purpose of supporting employees longer than 50 years with the firm provided they are in distress. The endowment is to be administered by the management of Adam Opel, A.G. The management shall take care of the establishment of the endowment.

2. The amount of 750,000 RM (however not more than 5% of our community property) shall be given to an endowment called "Wilhelm von Opel Hospital". The endowment shall be used for the purpose of building a hospital in Russelsheim. This endowment, however, is given with the contingency that, at the time of my death, the plant at Russelsheim continues to operate under the style "Adam Opel". Furthermore the endowment is given under the contingency that the municipality of Russelsheim and the firm Adam Opel, A.G. guarantee the maintenance of the hospital. Firm and municipality shall jointly administer the endowment; however, the consent of our son Fritz is to be called for before important questions are to be decided. If the establishment of a hospital appears to be unadvisable, our son is authorized to designate the endowment for another purpose but it is understood that the endowment shall be used for the building of a house in Russelsheim appearing under the name "Wilhelm von Opel". If a building worthy of the memory of the founder and of permanent cultural significance cannot be established, the endowment shall be recalled. Furthermore the endowment is to be recalled if I should establish a hospital or another building for similar purpose during my lifetime.

I, the husband, retain the right to distribute by codicil a further amount of 100,000 RM.

This will stated above shall be also my will.

We desire to mention that we do not deprive our daughter Elinor of any share in our estate in spite of her letters written in the spring of this year. In these letters she very seriously harmed us, wherefore we would have been entitled to deprive her of any share in pursuant to the statutory provisions of Section 2333 BGB. If our daughter Elinor would not have failed so completely, we would have provided in favor of her for even more far-reaching equalization for the gifts made to our son.

CODICIL

Opened by the District Court 4a, Wiesbaden, May 22, 1948.

Since our son Fritz is at present abroad we would like to provide for the case that he might be temporarily prohibited to actually perform the tasks of an executor entrusted to him. The supplement of joint will is as follows:

We appoint as further executors:

Herrn Alwin Steffan, geboren am 30 Juni 1891,
Bankier Frankfurt a. Main, Neue Mainzerstrasse Nr. 55

CODICIL

In §7 of our Will of November 20, 1938, legacies are provided. This provision is hereby changed as far as the legacy on behalf of our Chauffeur Berg is concerned. In finding the amount to be paid to him, the period of his military service shall not be included because he did not take any interest in us or in our interests during his several furloughs.

CODICIL

Opened by the District Court, Division 4a,
Wiesbaden, December 10, 1946

Changed and distressed conditions compel us to our sorrow to strike the endowments provided for by paragraphs 8 and 9.

8. Provides for the endowment on behalf of employees of Adam von Opel A.G. in Russelsheim who stayed there longer than 50 years and the stablishment of a hospital in Russelsheim.

9. Refers to our joint legacy of 100,000 RM, to be given by each of us.

This provision is hereby stricken.

Baron Fritz von Opel,

Dear Baron,

The city council of St. Moritz maintains a very unsympathetic attitude towards the request of the 18th inst. of which you know, in contrast to the assurances previously given when your name was not stated. This becomes evident in their letter of the 21st inst. copy of which is enclosed and answer of which was delayed because of the holidays. The reason for this attitude on the part of the city is apparently that the gentlemen of the city council entertain much too great an illusion in regard to tax opportunities of the city as they are well aware of your financial situation and the size of the estate inhabited by you.

For the time being I replied as per enclosure; I kept it non-committal. I will contact mayor Natter by telephone. Especially the point that you are staying in St. Moritz only a relatively short time each year while the taxes are paid for the entire year, should be stressed. It will also be necessary to make a definite arrangement regarding the tax payments. Unless this is done, a request for residence permit seems to be useless since you would merely be continuously subjected to new taxation attempts.

Personally I hold the opinion that the matter should not fail on your part because of tax payment of a few hundred francs more or less, since a residence permit in connection with permanently rented real estate entails great advantages. In the event, however, that the city council should persist in its views in every respect, I would advise you to drop the request. Should you still desire to have a Swiss residence, application for such can be made at much more favorable conditions and at smaller tax rates in other cities, as for instance on the Lake of Geneva. The provision that you or your wife would have to spend some weeks every year in a hotel at that residence, should be fulfilled without great difficulty. I shall transmit copy of this letter and of the letter of the city council to Dr. Frankenberg for his information.

With best regards,

yours respectfully,

Dr. J. Henggeler

Copy

Copy of letter of November 10, 1945.

My dear father:

I hope that you will soon be interrogated by the American authorities regarding the usufruct matter. In America it is customary that counsel is present during such negotiations. You must insist on this, particularly since you were not present during the negotiations of Dr. Gros with the Reichsbank. We have learned from personal experience, although we speak English fluently, how difficult it is to express oneself correctly in a foreign language as far as legal matters are concerned, or even to understand questions and their true meaning correctly. Moreover, the worries and the hardships of recent years have certainly not improved your nerves, and it will not be easy for you to concentrate under stress and excitement.

I am therefore making the following very important suggestions:

1. Draw up in cooperation with Dr. Gros a detailed memorandum on the usufruct matter. Attach to this memorandum authenticated copies of all affidavits and other documents for which I asked you in my letter of October 18. Submit this memorandum and the documents to the authorities who are interrogating you.

2. Your English is very poor, which may lead to grave misunderstandings and result in the most serious consequences. I quote as an example the interview which you are alleged to have granted to an American reporter, and which has caused the most unpleasant sensation in American and French newspapers.

Don't be sensitive on this point and admit frankly that you don't speak English fluently, and request at the beginning of the interrogation that all questions be put to you in German and that you may answer them in German only.

3. It is not customary in America to have the transcript signed by the interrogated. It is therefore very easily possible that through misunderstandings and mistakes in translation an incorrect transcript is made. Don't, therefore, go into lengthy speeches and explanations, but have the thoroughly prepared memorandum in German at hand, which covers all questions and to which you can always refer in the interrogations.

4. It is the accepted custom in America to bring along legal counsel to negotiations of this kind. I would urgently advise you to take Dr. Gros along, particularly since you did not take part in his negotiations in Berlin regarding the usufruct matter. In America nobody ever takes a step in such matters as these without legal counsel. It would be very foolish if you did otherwise.

You may consider the above arguments as far-fetched, but the matter is too important to be left to chance. There is no equivalent in English law for the German "Niessbrauch". The English term "usufruct" (an abbreviation of the Latin "usufructum") denotes something entirely different, viz. a right "in rem". In German law, however, a "Niessbrauch" must be created, and even such a right once created, may be destroyed by "confusion and accession". All that remains is not a right "in rem" but a right "in personam". From the wrong translation or interpretation of this one word, the most serious difficulties have resulted in my case. You can avoid the risk of such wrong translations or interpretations only by keeping strictly to a memorandum written in German.

Enough for today. With cordial greetings for you and Mama,

Yours

sgd. FRITZ

Dear Sir,

We confirm the discussions which we conducted with you in matters concerning the Overseas Finance Corporation Limited, and repeat in the following the agreements concluded between yourself and our firm, acting at the same time as representatives of the Overseas Finance Corporation Ltd.

We hereby grant to you the right to buy from us on or before November 15, 1931, par value sfrs. 300,000.00 shares of the Overseas Finance Corporation Ltd.—viz. 60% of the stock capital—at the rate of 125%, if upon exercising this option you open a credit in the amount of sfrs. 3,500,000.00, for 2 years, in favor of said corpration. This credit is to be used for the acquisition of various patents and participations; in particular, it is also intended to be used for financing the commercial exploitation of patents in your own possession.

Interest on this credit is to be paid to you at the current lending rate of the Schweizerische Nationalbank. Moreover, Overseas Finance Corporation Ltd. assumes the obligation to allow you for the entire term of the credit a share of 25% of its net profits before distributing a dividend to its shareholders.

On the other hand, we have agreed that we are entitled to tender to you, on or before December 31, 1931, the above mentioned shares of the Overseas Finance Corporation of sfrs. 300,000.00 par value at the rate of 105½%. In this case, too, you will assume the obligation to grant to the Corporation a credit of sfrs. 3,500,000.00 but for one year only. The credit is to be used in the same way as stipulated above, however, excluding the additional participation in the net profits as agreed upon for the first alternative.

If and when you exercise your right of option, respectively when we exercise our seller's option on the shares you will be entitled to 2 seats on the board of management of the Overseas Finance Corporation Ltd., while at least one seat must be reserved to represent the minority. You further assume the obligation to make available to us your advice and assistance as circumstances may require.

You promised us to furnish a declaration of guaranty by your father, Geheimrat Wilhelm von Opel, for the fulfillment of your obligations resulting from this agreement.

Anticipating your confirmation we remain,

The Devisenbewirtschaftungsstelle (Office of Foreign Exchange Control) issues licenses for the acquisition of foreign exchange, if proof is submitted that the proposed business trip is justified from an economic point of view. We are therefore not in a position to allow you to keep the small amounts of foreign exchange mentioned in item 2 of your return and request you to deliver the same to us without delay, with the exception of silver coins.

A transfer on your part, of your credit-balance No. 1 of sfrs. 9,364.90 to your son, who is living abroad is possible only with the permission of the Devisenbewirtschaftungsstelle (Office of Foreign Exchange Control) Frankfurt/Main. Your application for release can be approved by us only if you produce a license issued by that Office and then only in an amount required for about 10 days.

Regarding the bank balance of

in Zurich which you also reported we wish to state that use of that sum for the purchase of shares of the Overseas Finance Corporation and for a loan to said company is also only possible if permission of the Devisenbewirtschaftungsstelle (Office of Foreign Funds Control) Frankfurt/Main is obtained.

We are returning the documents you sent us and leave it to you to contact the Devisenbewirtschaftungsstelle Frankfurt/Main immediately and submit their decision to us. We will then reply to your application for release.

MEMORANDUM

It is—and always was—our wish to cooperate to the fullest extent with the authorities regarding the investigation of Mrs. von Opel and myself, this in spite of the most severe handicap, namely the fact that we are not only not accused of anything, neither in detail nor in general, but are simply left guessing as to what part of our lives led the authorities to a misinterpretation.

As we feel not only innocent but, in fact, more antinazi than most Americans who lack any personal experiences, our wish to contribute whatever we can to an investigation is very natural: we are convinced that the deeper and the more thoroughly the authorities look into our personal lives and activities, the sooner they will realize that we always have been and always will be on the side of justice and decency.

Every American is, down to his very core, American. This country—at least for the last three or four generations—was spared any internal strife, it was not shaken in its foundations by wars, revolutions and counter-revolutions, by separatist movements or by devastating inflation such as threw the culture-bearing German middle-class into the gutter.

This country—through its whole history—followed a straightforward course towards liberty of the individual and towards the improvement of its economic standards: it always was easy for Americans to be American, for the simple reason that the nation as a whole and the single individual always had—at least in the basic concepts—identical aims.

The natural easiness with which an American can identify himself with his government causes every American, quite subconsciously, to assume that natives of all other nations too have the same inborn relation to their governments. They overlook the fact that government "by the people for the people" is strictly limited to American shores, and that in other nations, at least minority groups are in constant basic discord with their government.

This inborn patriotism of every American makes it difficult for him to understand "unpatriotic" people, more so in case of Germans, who are, as a race,—rightly or wrongly—known to be nationalistic. An American can hardly understand why a German speaks or acts against his nation, and is inclined to believe that such a person is not speaking the truth but merely wants to cover his true feelings for some sinister purpose.

The average American is not aware of the fact that most of the leading thinkers of Germany in one way or the other were vehemently outspoken against their nation. Goethe, who is considered the greatest German who ever lived, wrote: "Germany is naught, but the individual German is much—although they like to believe the opposite. The German will have to be, like the Jews, uprooted and dispersed the world over, before all the good which is in them and which would work towards the well-being of all nations can be brought out . . ." Fichte, the most nationalistic of German philosophers, said: "If you find yourself in discord with your nation, follow but your conscience and give up your nation." I could go on for hours with similar quotations. Suffice it to state that every single German of true greatness analysed and branded certain shortcomings of the German mentality, and scores of them, through the centuries, lived in forced or voluntary exile.

We both claim to be "patriotic" in the best sense of the word, not in the blind sense of "right or wrong, it is my country", but ready to give our lives—even in a fight against her temporary rulers—if ever Germany could be raised again to her former cultural lever: a culture which deteriorated through the gain of political power and which, through the former Kaiser's persistent efforts, and Hitler's, the successful painter's, leadership has arrived at the zero-point of a vacuum which nobody ever dreamed attainable.

We are "patriotic" insofar as we believe that the Germans—as all other members of the Caucasian race—possess abilities which should be put to work for the benefit of the whole world, their artistic talens, their manual skill, their industriousness.

We are, however, "unpatriotic" in our belief that other trends of the Germans (to name a few: their lust for power, their "discipline" which readily falls prey to all—good or bad—orders, their belief in their own superiority) should, through the hard way of defeat and the slow way of education, be once and for all eliminated.

We both are "patriotic" insofar as my wife adores German music and I adore German literature and its 16th century paintings; we are, however, "unpatriotic" enough to realize that all nations and all races contributed their part to the component culture of the Occident. With one word, we endeavor to be impartial and—inopportune as it may look in a period full of shortsighted nationalism—we tried and still try to be true "citizens of the world", critical of all narrow-mindedness and ready to accept from all nations or races any contribution towards the common good of mankind.

* * * * *

We are not accused of anything and therefore are not in a position to focus our "defense" at any definitive point. As we are sure, however, that we always respect this country and its institutions and that nothing we said or did can be deemed inimical, or even to the smallest degree disloyal, we always believed that the whole action against us must be based either on willful defamation by some interested person or on correct but misinterpreted facts.

As the FBI assured me that the former is not the case ("We don't pay attention to mothers-in-law, neighbors or business partners"), we have been left guessing as to what part of our life could be so wrongly interpreted. We finally found but one explanation: that we became suspects on account of our life abroad.

For this reason I take the liberty to cover, in the following pages, six points which I consider important, namely:

1.) Why did I come to the United States in 1940?

2.) Why did I become a citizen of Liechtenstein?

3.) Who have been our friends and acquaintances abroad?

4.) Our trips to Germany.

5.) Can I be an agent of Hitler?

6.) Can we be Nazi sympathizers?

Should the authorities want to have any additional point covered, or to have additional questions regarding the above points answered, we shall most gladly oblige; we have nothing to hide, but can only gain by thoroughness.

* * * * *

Part I

Why did I come to the United States in 1940?

I am fully aware of the fact that every person who has come to the United States after the outbreak of the European war is suspected to have come here for illegal purposes, but I hope that by fully explaining the four motives of my trip in 1940 I shall help the authorities to understand its reasonableness.

1.) It was a routine trip.

As the immigration authorities already know, I came here several times between 1924 and 1928, together with my father and my uncle, mainly to study modern machine tools and to buy millions of dollars worth of equipment for our factory. In 1929 and 1930 I spent here a full year in behalf of the General Motors Corporation to study manufacturing methods.

In 1931 I came over for negotiations with General Motors and sold them all of my German Opel Corporation stock for American dollars which Overseas Finance Corporation, a Swiss company which I control, upon my advice, immediately invested in this country in the form of fully or partly owned American corporations.

These corporations, all run by Americans, required a certain amount of control and, having been a director in five or more corporations, I came over between 1932 and 1938 on regular yearly trips. The trip scheduled for spring and summer in 1939 had to be postponed until 1940, as I was suffering from a compound leg fracture which kept me on crutches all through 1939.

2.) It was an emergency trip, necessitated by the financial difficulties of the Hurricane Petroleum Corporation (Shreveport, Louisiana) in which Overseas Finance Corporation had invested over one million dollars.

Hurricane Petroleum refined in three refineries close to 20,000 barrels of crude per day, but after the Madison trial of the big oil corporations the gasoline prices declined and the majority of independent refineries got into difficulties. All through the fall of 1939 and the spring of 1940 Overseas Finance Corporation poured all available funds into the Hurricane Corporation, and the main purpose of my trip in 1940 was to look into the Hurricane situation and arrange if possible some additional financing.

The negotiations, however, were resultless and in the summer of 1940 the corporation went into bankruptcy which—as I had personally guaranteed the biggest outstanding accounts—caused a total loss of about $700,000.00.

3.) We had planned a trip thrgugh the USA and Canada.

In the spring of 1940, on reports of the co-directors, I still thought that—as Hurricane was basically sound—a permanent bank loan would help it out of the temporary crisis. I believed that I could easily arrange in New York for additional funds within a few weeks and would then be free to take my wife and her friend, Mrs. Annemarie Clarac-Schwarzenbach, for an extended trip through the United States, Canada, and, time permitting, Alaska.

As I wanted to spare my wife a month of New York heat, we had arranged that she should follow me from Switzerland a month later and we had intended to leave New York immediately upon her arrival.

Mrs. Schwarzenbach (who died in November, 1942) was a well known Swiss writer (married to a French diplomat) who had traveled extensively in the United States, India, Iran, Irak, and Russia. She had lived in a neighboring village in Switzerland and was our house guest there and here for more than a year. By her publications she was known to be most ardently anti-fascistic and she was for this reason persona non grata in Germany and deported from there by the Nazis. She worked mainly for the "Basler National Zeitung", the leading paper in the Swiss fight against Nazism.

For our contemplated trip Mrs. Schwarzenbach had entered into contracts with the "Basler National Zeitung" and other papers. We had several discussions with the Swiss General Consul, Mr. Naef, and the Canadian Ministry in Washington. Photography being my hobby, I had taken all my equipment along and had promised to act as photographer and cameraman.

The trip, however, could not take place, as my negotiations in the Hurricane matter had failed and I had to remain in permanent reach of my offices. For this reason the three of us spent the summer in the little village of Siasconset, Nantucket Island, Massachusetts, where I had rented a small cottage of Mrs. Jerome Zerbe, the mother-in-law of Mr. Roy Larsen, president of the "Life" magazine.

4.) My personal safety.

The fourth and most compelling reason for my trip to the United States was my personal safety. At the time the European war was declared, every German of fighting age living in Switzerland was called to the colors. The order was several days later rescinded but I had not gone and was afraid that it had become known in Germany and that sooner or later I would be called again.

As a youth I have served in the first World War and was distinguished for bravery. I was, however, not willing to serve a second time in a cause I could not believe in, nor in any cause led by a Hitler. I knew that the refusal to return to Germany for service would establish me as a "refractaer", an offense which in wartime carries a death sentence.

As the Nazi army seemed stalled in front of the Maginot Line, it was feared in Switzerland that Hitler might choose to occupy part of Switzerland for the purpose of outflanking the French fortifications. Mrs. von Opel particularly was rather nervous and scared, being afraid that in the run of an occupation the Nazis might get hold of me and punish me for my refusal to serve, or my other "crime", the change of citizenship. Regarding the latter, the Nazi doctrine (in sharpest contrast to the American principle recognizing the right of expatriation) regards a German eternally bound to its nation, no individual has the right to decide his own fate, and whoever chooses to emigrate for personal reasons is considered a "traitor to his nation". The American view is set forth in Revised Statutes, Section 1999:

> "Right of expatriation.—Whereas the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and whereas in the recognition of this principle this Government has freely received emigrants from all nations, and invested them with the rights of citizenship; and whereas it is claimed that such American citizens, with their descendants, are subjects of foreign states, owing allegiance to the governments thereof; and whereas it is necessary to the maintenance of public peace that this claim of foreign allegiance should be promptly and finally disavowed; Therefore any declaration, instruction, opinion, order, or decision of any officer of the United States which denies, restricts, impairs or questions the right of expatriation, is declared inconsistent with the fundamental principles of the Republic."

This fear of Mrs. von Opel (I at that time felt rather downcast and resigned on account of my injury) was intensified by the following incident: the world champion figure skaters, the Germans Herber-Bayer (whom I had known for years, as they daily had practiced on the rink in front of our house) had telephoned the manager of the St. Moritz Stadion regarding an ice show and had asked him to find out whether I could accommodate them for a few days as, on account of the war, they could not obtain enough Swiss funds. Having my affirmative answer, the manager wired them that they could stay with us at any time. However, they did not arrive, and weeks later Mrs. von Opel heard that they had strict orders from the Nazis not to see me any more on account of the fact that I harbored in my house refugees and exiled people and that—after England and France were in a state of war with Germany—I nevertheless continued to have English, French, Belgian, and other "enemy" guests.

May I add that the above-mentioned reasons for my stay in the United States, namely the liquidation of Hurricane and my fear of political persecution, were already mentioned, in October, 1940, in my application for an extension of my visa.

* * * * *

Part II

Why did I become a citizen of Liechtenstein?

When I had left Germany in 1929, I was general manager of the Opel Corporation and in possession of a still valid contract by my family which gave me an income of around $50,000.00 yearly. It was the wish of General Motors, the new owner, that I should study their operations inside and outside the United States for several years and that I then should return to the management of the Opel Corporation.

However, when the time for my return came at the end of 1931, I refused. I owned at that time 10% of the outstanding stock of the Opel Corporation, a company which, before and after the acquisition by General Motors, netted twenty million marks a year, 10% of which would have given me had I chosen to return to Germany, a very considerable income. I did not, however, believe in Germany's economic stability or its political future, and for this reason I exchanged my German holdings for American ones and did not return, but took up residence in Switzerland.

My attempts to immigrate to the United States

Already at this time I thought of changing my citizenship. As the Swiss regulations require a very long residence in Switzerland, I could not become Swiss, but I could become American through immigration. I discussed this matter in the early thirties with a New York lawyer, whose name I do not recall at present but whom I can locate if necessary. He suggested that I should go to Canada, ask there for an immigration visa, and then immigrate from there to the United States. This suggestion I followed: in the summer of 1932 or 1933 I traveled by railroad to Canada, but was stopped at the border and not permitted into Canada because my American visa was good for one entry only, which already had taken place, and the Canadians did not want to take the chance that, in case my immigration visa should be refused, I could not be sent back to the United States. I returned to New York without result and paid half of the agreed fee to the lawyer ($200.00).

Shortly after this time the persecution of the German Jews began and the immigration quota was filled for years in advance. Nevertheless, in 1936, through recommendation of General Motors, I succeeded in obtaining my papers for immigration from the American General Consulate in Zuerich, Switzerland. However, when I was about to sail for New York, I received a cable from a business associate warning me against entering American soil. The reason was that a former Wall Street broker by the name of Cole had started a suit against me in the amount of $500,000.00, and for obvious reasons I was advised not to establish legal residence in the United States before the suit was settled. I canceled my trip to New York and arranged instead a meeting with my associates and my lawyer, Kresel, in Montreal, Canada. (There too I was served a summons, but without legal consequences. The whole suit, a typical example of a nuisance suit, was, about a year later, settled for around $15,000.00).

Not having been able to immigrate as planned, my papers expired, and it was thereafter hopeless to apply for admission, as the rising persecution of the German Jews caused delays of years, the more so on account of a regulation which does not permit that visitors' visas are given to people who applied for an immigration visa. Had I applied for an immigration visa in 1937 I would have been barred from the necessary visits to the United States for a number of years. This situation still existed in 1940. In the spring of 1941 Mrs. von Opel immigrated from Cuba. I did not join her, being afraid that—pre-examination not yet possible and my papers not complete—I might get delayed in Cuba, as other people did, for an indefinite period.

As I considered it impossible in 1938 to obtain a new quota number for immigration within a reasonable length of time, but wanting more than ever to drop my German citizenship, I discussed the matter with different people and learned that, in all but two countries (Panama and Haiti), naturalization could be obtained only after years of residence. One friend, Dr. Frankenberg, had become a citizen of Haiti, another friend, the exiled German writer Remarque, a citizen of Panama. We, however, hesitated to become subjects of such remote countries, the language of which we could not speak.

I then discussed the matter with my lawyer, Dr. Henggeler, in Zurich, who told me that Switzerland could not waive its requirement of long term residence but if I should become a citizen of Liechtenstein I would be represented by Switzerland just the same. He said he was going to discuss the matter with the Liechtenstein government. This discussion took place in 1938 or early 1939, in any case long before the outbreak of the European war.

I learned from Dr. Henggeler that Liechtenstein upon the request of Switzerland was about to strictly limit naturalization but that we, who were known to the Swiss for so many years, would still be admitted if we applied immediately. I immediately filed my application through Dr. Henggeler but expressed the wish that it should not yet be put before parliament for voting but kept pending for the time being. This being agreed upon, I had reasonable time to obtain, if possible, the proper consent of the German military authorities releasing me once and for all from military duty.

I tried in three different ways to obtain this release:

1.) Dr. David Gros, attorney-at-law in Berlin, discussed the matter with the army officials in charge, but the release was denied.

2.) After the outbreak of the European war in September 1939, the matter became burning. I was—still being German—geographically trapped in Switzerland and, should the Nazis invade the country, bound to be persecuted. (See Part I #4, "My personal safety".)

Mrs. von Opel became panic-stricken and she urged me to leave no stone unturned and insisted that I at least make a try to get the assistance of the Diplomatic Service. (In the eight years I had lived in Switzerland I had never met one single member of the German Diplomatic Service and I had seen but once, in passport matters, the Davos Consul.) Much against my better judgment, I yielded to my wife's pleading and discussed the matter with one of the secretaries of the German Ministry in Bern, Switzerland, Mr. von Bibra, either in September or October of 1939. As events subsequently proved, I should have followed my own judgment, because my negotiations with Mr. von Bibra led to such misunderstanding and misinterpretation by the British Intelligence as well as by the Swiss Alien Police. Fortunately enough, my two or three telephone conversations with Mr. von Bibra, as well as Mrs. von Opel's more frequent talks with Mrs. and Mr. von Bibra, had all been recorded and could easily be explained. I assume that it was for this reason that the British detained me temporarily in Gibraltar, but after eight days I was released, after my English friends and the Swiss Foreign Office had intervened (my immediate release took place in spite of the fact that technically my change of citizenship took place after the outbreak of war between England and Germany).

A few days after the outbreak of the war (the first days of September, 1939), I wrote a letter to the German Embassy at Bern from Zurich where we were staying with Dr. Frankenberg, and was given an appointment by telephone with Mr. von Bibra, the Secretary. A day or two later, Mrs. von Opel and I drove to Bern to keep our appointment. At first Mr. von Bibra was very curt with us because, as he told us later, he had been advised by the Consul at Davos that Mrs. von Opel was non-Aryan. Upon questioning her about her family, he learned— to his seeming delight—that Mrs. von Opel's aunt was the beloved "Aunty Enting" of whom his young wife frequently spoke, both families having been farm neighbors and the closest of friends in Mrs. von Bibra's childhood. (Indeed, later when the von Bibras came to St. Moritz, they had a happy reunion with "Aunty Enting" at our home.) He asked us if we would take dinner at his home and we, thinking to make the most of his seeming good will, accepted. He telephoned his wife, and we spent an agreeable evening, Mrs. von Opel talking "Aunt Enting" to Mrs. von Bibra, and I presenting my problem to Mr. von Bibra.

I explained to him that I had left Germany ten years before; that my interests were all abroad; that I wasn't a Nazi, as he well knew; and that, as my accident had permanently crippled me, my release from the army would not matter anyhow. I told him frankly that I had applied for Liechtenstein citizenship and was planning to emigrate to America, but that for reasons which were fairly obvious I wanted to obtain the proper release from military service, which meant to me assurance of my and my father's safety.

In the course of the evening two things became clear: that Mrs. von Bibra felt very much attached to Mrs. von Opel, and that Mr. von Bibra, who was known as a cold-hearted official, could act very understandingly when confronted with the problems of a man whom, though of other opinion, he at least could respect. He promised to be helpful and he really tried his best, but to no avail; he could not get the release for me.

(May I add that my negotiations with Mr. von Bibra were mentioned in a letter written in December, 1941, addressed to the Maritime Commission and FBI.)

3.) I at last asked a Berlin banker, Dr. Pilder, whom I had met by chance in Zuerich and who was known to have good "connections" in official circles (to use American slang, he was known as a "fixer"), whether he could arrange the matter. He replied after some time that I could get the release if in exchange I would transfer one million dollars back to Germany (apparently to be put in the army's "war chest"). Many deals of similar or even more corrupt kind were going on at that time—in a country which never before knew such things—(especially the extortion of money for exit permits of Jewish refugees), but I was neither willing to become a sucker nor did I see fit to suddenly reverse a financial policy of nine years' standing by exchanging a million dollars for a blocked account of doomed paper marks.

I underwent the above endeavors for two reasons. I knew that, according to the German citizenship law, I would automatically lose my German citizenship through the mere petition for another citizenship (to-wit, page 72 of Department of State Publication 1864, Government Printing Office). However, every German-born up to the age of 50 or 60 is a member of the army reserve and the law provides that these "reservists" in cases of emigration or change of citizenship have to obtain the consent of the military authorities. This consent—whether given or refused—has, of course, no bearing on the validity of the naturalization, but any offense of this regulation throws the offender open to prosecution by the German military authorities. I did not feel too safe in Switzerland after war was declared. All lines of retreat to the United States were either cut off or German-controlled, and there was even a chance of an invasion of Switzerland. A consent, which is nothing but a permanent release from the service in the army, would have safeguarded me personally.

The second reason was that I wanted to spare my father any avoidable embarrassment. His own and his brother's extremely severe punishment in 1935, the sentencing of my sister, in absentia, to a prison term in 1937 or 1938, and finally the additional losses he had suffered through the manipulations of a trusted banker, not to speak of repeated threats by the Nazis (he was ordered to the Governor's, a former mail clerk's, office just for this purpose on Christmas Eve, 1938, at the holiest hour of the year)—these and other events had already done so much damage to his health (he was seventy years of age) that I wanted to spare him any new excitement. I was sure that the Nazis would not harm him bodily, but I felt that even "a war of nerves" was already too much for him. As much as I hate crooked ways, I must admit that I was ready to bribe, either by paying cash or even by giving a "good time" to any official, if I thus could arrange the "consent" and safeguard my father and myself. I am convinced that any other responsible person in my place, having to deal with Nazis, would not have acted differently.

After the above described efforts for my release had failed, I immediately asked the Parliament of Liechtenstein to act upon my pending application, if possible in a secret session. I wanted to avoid any publicity before I had left Switzerland and had passed through Italy.

My naturalization in Liechtenstein became generally known through newspaper and radio reports about my detention in Gibraltar (April, 1940). At what prior time my naturalization was reported to the German ministry I do not know. I am, however, certain that no report reached Berlin before I had left Switzerland and was out of the reach of the Italian agents of the Gestapo.

This was due to the generosity of Mr. von Bibra who had risked his career by delaying the report. He did it—and both of us shall always consider it a very gentlemanlike act—upon the fervent pleading of Mrs. von Opel who was haunted by the fear that I would get arrested by the Gestapo either in Italy or Spain. This unselfish act (he had everything to lose and nothing to gain by it) was never mentioned between him and me but I felt, when I left Europe, I should tell him that I was aware of and deeply appreciated his fairness. When I said goodbye to him over the telephone I felt it was a goodbye forever, spoken to a man who—had not a Hitler broken the world apart and distorted the human souls—would have been an asset to his country. (When I said he risked his career I meant it literally: Mrs. von Opel received last year a letter from a friend mentioning that Mr. von Bibra got severely reprimanded for having "helped us without the consent of his superiors".)

It always seemed strange to us that a diplomat of the "Third Reich" acted in such a manner. We—for years—searched our souls for an explanation, not for the purpose of analyzing this single incident but to find the key to the heart of the German aristocracy. True that he was deeply fond of Mrs. von Opel and her idealistic outlook on life, true that he liked her sense of humor with which she bridged even the unbridgeable. But above all, though he never admitted it with a single gesture, I am convinced that subconsciously he realized that ours was the side of the fence on which he also belonged—though for different reasons—and in helping us he did for others what he himself would have liked to do.

He, as a member of one of the oldest aristocratic families (nobilitated by Charlemagne in the 8th century and still living in the same thousand years old castle), felt, I guess, the instinctive inborn antagonism of a nobleman towards a Hitler, of not only low but dubious parentage, of a gentleman (at least in the sphere of his private life) towards a crook, the mental reserve of an educated man towards the cheap generalities of a rabble-rouser, and last but not least, the antagonism of the frustrated and disinherited ones towards the man in power.

The reactionary class in Germany (largely represented among diplomats, high officers and landowners) will never be able to find an excuse for its Frankenstein act (creating the monster Hitler for opportunistic reasons); but nevertheless it is upon the awakening of their dormant hatred for Hitler that the chance of the world for a short war is resting. The German revolution will be carried out but not started by the enslaved working classes: the first shot will be fired by a member of the above-described reactionary class and at the exact moment when this class realizes that the hope for final victory has definitely gone. It seems that Hitler tries to forestall such a development by replacing leading officers and diplomats by the dozen, even if he has but inexperienced party men to replace the experts, this dilemma being the grip of fate which ultimately is going to strangle Hitler.

* * * * *

The moral reasons for my change of citizenship I have already touched upon. The practical reasons were fourfold, one as urgent as the other:

1.) Economical reasons.

When I had decided not to return to Germany in 1932, I immediately felt that I should arrange my citizenship. The reason was that I did not feel safe economically as a subject of Germany. In one case already a retroactive law had been issued (summer, 1931) which tried to force emigrated people and emigrated capital back into Germany. I deemed it wiser to safeguard myself against such developments and I tried, naturally, (in 1932 and 1936) to immigrate to the United States, the country to which I was bound mentally and economically.

2.) Political reasons.

Politically the reasons were not less urgent. I felt that by surrendering my citizenship and becoming a citizen of another country I would be spared any contact with Nazi officials in passport matters and I would be protected against all undue demands.

There is no better witness for this state of affairs than the Department of State, which, in a publication on fifth column activities, writes as follows:

"Now to be a German citizen and to be known to the Nazis is to be in power of the Nazis. So long as you do not surrender your nationality, the Buttings (id est, a resident Nazi leader in a foreign country) are able to coerce or blackmail or bribe you into doing their bidding. They can break you or they can induct you into the Party—exactly as these vest-pocket Robespierres choose. That you happen to reside outside Germany makes no difference. You are their man . . ."

How true this statement is I learned for myself when my passport had expired and I was refused an extension by the German Consul in Davos, Switzerland. Only after a "voluntary" donation for "welfare" work was a new passport issued to me.

A similar incident happened to my wife. She was told by the same consul that—on account of her Jewish sounding name—he would not extend her passport unless she would bring an "Ariernachweis", a document showing that the parents as well as the grandparents of the applicant are non-Jewish but fullblooded "Aryans". This document can only be obtained from some office affiliated with the Nazi party (Rasseamt: i.e., office of racial documents). This requirement was one of the many means to investigate people and to keep track of the Germans in foreign countries. Mrs. von Opel, who was not willing to apply for such a rigamarole, was facing the fact that, beginning February, 1940, she would be without a proper passport.

3.) Only as a citizen of a neutral country could I pass the British blockade.

As explained in Part I, I had to go to the United States for personal and business reasons. There were but two ways open: I could either travel through France and take a Portuguese steamer, or I could take an Italian steamer and travel past Gibraltar. No German citizen could use either way, because France and England were at war with Germany and permitted passage only to Jewish refugees with a "J" passport or other identification by Jewish organizations. This made it imperative for me to become a citizen of a neutral country.

In spite of my naturalization in Liechtenstein, I was detained by the British authorities in Gibraltar, but immediately released after the Swiss Foreign Office and our friends in England had intervened in London and my political status as well as my status as a Liechtenstein citizen had been clearly established. My release took place even though I had become a subject of Liechtenstein after the declaration of war between England and Germany.

4.) Visas to the United States were not Obtainable on German passports.

We were informed that the American General Consul in Zuerich, Switzerland, refused to issue visas on German passports. I do not know, however, whether he acted this way under general instructions from the Department of State; but the fact is that numerous people could not obtain visas on regular German passports. Even after we personally had received our visas as Liechtenstein citizens, we were refused the visa for my wife's only living relative, an aged aunt, who had lived in Italy for fifteen years but who still was a German citizen.

PART III

Who are our friends abroad?
Are Nazis among them?

In our hearing we were asked whether we know any "Nazis". We both have lived in Germany close to thirty years, and it is natural that Mrs. von Opel during her former connection with the stage met many people, particularly artists, as well as that I met hundreds of businessmen, the majority of them being our suppliers or dealers. However, since we had left Germany in 1929, we met only a very limited number of people and particularly few Germans. I do not mix easily with people. I loathe society and its shallow doings. I hate big parties or public places. I do not even possess a tailcoat or even a starched collar, the requisites of a social life. In addition, my hearing is hereditarily impaired insofar as I am unable to perceive a conversation in noisy surroundings. I am not a hermit but, being able to visit with the greatest minds of all times through the medium of their writing or art and meeting them in such way in their very best and concentrated form, I believe—and I always acted accordingly—that gatherings of human beings should be limited to the sole purpose of creative discussions.

If it were not for Mrs. von Opel, who takes a lively interest in human beings, particularly in artists (a friend called her once a "collector of crackpots"), I would hardly know anybody except business associates or sportsmen. For this reason it happens that every single person named below (with the exception of the banker, Dr. Frankenberg, and Ernst Udet) was first known to Mrs. von Opel and without exception invited to our house by her.

I have no friends at all in Germany and even Mrs. von Opel had but six people she had any amount of contact with: a former actress who is now an interior decorator

(she decorated our house in St. Moritz), her dress designer, and his wife, a well-known musician and his Jewish wife, and her best friend, a writer and philosopher. None of these people is either a party member or a sympathizer of the Nazis, but, as everybody else, they have to keep their mouths shut; in their few letters to Mrs. von Opel they could only by the help of hidden meanings hint their dislike of the happenings of the political scene.

The names of these people I omit, as they are apparently of no interest. However, in the hearing we were asked about three people who at some time or the other were in the limelight. They are:

1.) In 1921 I met in motorcycle races as competitor the former war ace, Ernst Udet. As he had the same hobbies as I: racing, flying and skiing, I saw him occasionally at competitions.

After I had left Germany in 1929, I saw him again in St. Moritz, where he made additional shots for a movie he and Leni Riefenstahl had begun in Greenland. He took me for a mountain flight, dropping me on skiis on one of the neighboring mountains, and I invited him as a house-guest twice between 1931 and 1934. He at that time made a lot of money through his movies and stunt flying, and he was for all purposes an amiable kind of carefree bohemian.

Around 1935 the German air corps offered him the position of Inspector-General. To our all surprise he accepted, but he soon regretted it. He was not allowed to fly any more but was forced to sit in an office and do paper work which he hated. To make matters worse, he felt trapped as a tool of a system which was in contradiction to his very nature.

About Udet's feelings towards Nazism there is no better witness than Martha Dodd, daughter of the American Ambassador to Germany, who writes about him enthusiastically in her book, "Through Embassy Eyes" (pages 261-266). She speaks there about "his love for everything American", his "international spirit", and concludes: "Though he never admitted it, I thought Udet was miserable the last two years (1936-1937) in Germany."

That is exactly right. His personal freedom was gone, his whole life was censored, and he could not even dare to be seen in public with many of his former friends nor to invite them to his own flat as always before. Once more, however, in 1938, he wanted to see us and he arranged a dinner among the four of us in his girl friend's apartment. We shall never forget this evening. He seemed rather depressed and so, to cheer him up, we spoke to him about the many humorous adventures we had together, addressing him by his old former nickname, "Wolkenvogel" (Bird of the Clouds), and he, the general, the war ace, the daredevil, he began to cry like a child, suffering a complete nervous breakdown. He knew he could trust us, and we never again heard such an outcry against Nazism, such a revolt of a liberty-loving individual against a merciless system which had put him in chains. We were sad when we parted. We felt that he was doomed. And when a year ago the news did come about his accidental death, we did not believe it. We know for sure that he ended by suicide, his only way out of a dead-end street.

2.) We both knew superficially, for about fifteen years, the dancer and actress, Leni Riefenstahl. Most of her movies were made in Switzerland where she used to live the better part of the year, particularly in wintertime. She always had three or four of the best Australian or Swiss skiers around her, and in my capacity as organizer of ski races for the international St. Moritz Sport and Skiing Club I invited this group twice to compete in our events. As these skiers are notoriously broke, it is a habit with all clubs and at all places to arrange with club-members or local people for their lodging. Twice, in the years between 1934 and 1938, Miss Riefenstahl and two or three of her friends have been our houseguests, both times for the duration of international competitions, that is less than a week.

Miss Riefenstahl was not a party member, and she was not at all interested in politics. She was, however, an ardent admirer of Hitler's personality, to whom she looked up as a kind of deity. Many people consider her as an opportunist because she has made a small fortune by the direction of the movie of the Olympic Games. We do not share this view. We consider her as the purest example of a fanatic whose belief knows no reasoning. There was no chance to argue with her. Hitler was always right by the power of "divine intuition," even if we mortals could not fathom his genious. That he did not see the vices and crimes committed by his closest associates was due to the fact that "he is so pure and innocent." The reports about cruelties in concentration camps could only be lies for the simple reason that "Hitler in his sence of justice would not allow it."

Miss Riefenstahl was a case of prepossession, not even rare among women. The British girl, Unity Midford, is another example, and we met even an American (the lady mentioned in Mr. O'Connor's affidavit) who was to the same extent in the spell of Hitler.

Apart from this peculiar frame of mind, we both liked her. We would not call her a friend, both being on the stiff "Sie" term with her, but she was without doubt a gifted artist, a beautiful woman, and, above all, as crazy and daring in skiing as I. She was the only woman, expert and courageous enough, to blindly follow me whatever difficult track I chose. She was in the best sense of the word, a "good sport," and we thought of one another: too bad that such a nice person must harbor such crazy views, but time and events will certainly bring out a cure.

In the summer of 1936, apparently in exchange for our hospitality, Miss Riefenstahl asked Mrs. von Opel whether she would care to stop on her way to St. Moritz in Nuremberg for a day or two. Miss Riefenstahl was there to make some additional shots for the movie on the Olympic Games at the occasion of sporting events which took place in connection with the yearly party gathering. Mrs. von Opel did not want to go, but I convinced her that it was worthwhile to study this famous mass meeting which year after year had attracted hundreds of diplomats and distinguished foreigners. For a private person it was impossible to be admitted, but under Miss Riefenstahl's guidance there was a first-class chance to watch from close quarters all the bigwigs and their antics.

Mrs. von Opel went there for two days. The first evening while Miss Riefenstahl and Mrs. von Opel, together with a cameraman, were taking their supper in the large dining-room of the hotel "Deutsches Haus," Hitler and a dozen of his men had theirs at a corner table reserved for them. After a while Hitler saw Miss Riefenstahl and his officer-in-charge came over and said, wanting to be funny: "By order of the Fuehrer you are arrested." He conveyed both of them to Hitler's table where Miss Riefenstahl introduced Mrs. von Opel. Hitler had apparently mistaken her for an actress friend of Miss Riefenstahl, and upon hearing the name Opel and seeing her lipstick and red fingernails he turned abruptly around and did not speak to her at all. (Even more significant for the warrior manners of the Third Reich is the fact that Mrs. von Opel was not allowed to drink the wine and water she had ordered. "At the Fuehrer's table there is no alcohol permitted," and that, with the exception of Hitler himself, nobody got up from his seat when the ladies arrived.)

Shortly thereafter it became clear why Miss Riefenstahl had been particularly interested to see Mrs. von Opel. She was terribly in love with an American Olympic champion and, not being able to write English fluently enough, she asked Mrs. von Opel to compose a love-letter. From time to time it has been rumored that Miss Riefenstahl was

"Hitler's girlfriend". The same questionable honor has been conferred upon Unity Midford. Aside from whatever doubts there may be as to the Fuehrer's predilection for women, Miss Riefenstahl would have followed her Olympic hero here at a moment's notice had he seen fit to encourage her.

3.) Dr. Rudolf Diels was an official of the former Prussian government, in charge of the state police. Being an expert in police matters, he was continued in service for one more year. Mrs. von Opel met him in 1933. He was at that time the most intimate friend of Martha Dodd, the American Ambassador's daughter, who writes about him extensively in her book, "Through Embassy Eyes". She says there: "the third most unusual German I met with any degree of friendly intimacy"; she calls him an "opportunist", and concludes: "I am also equally convinced that he was and is no more of a Nazi than many of the others who give lip service to Nazism for their personal and political reasons". Be that as it may, the chief of the German police got rather drunk when Mrs. von Opel met him for the first time, and it really was "unusual" that he immediately began to abuse—to Mrs. von Opel's surprise and delight—the whole Nazi system, particularly its "big shots". Nervously shaking, he confessed that he had not known what he was up against when he "joined the gang", that he could not stand it any more; and that he wanted to quit if he could only find a way out.

Such open outbursts must have happened quite frequently. Miss Dodd describes several of them. She writes: "he became more neurotic and full of obsessions than anyone I knew in Germany . . . he felt he was constantly facing the muzzle of a gun", and at other places she says: "he was like a frightened rabbit . . . in fear of imminent assassination . . . because he knew too much." I venture to say it was less his knowledge than the fact that he could not hold it which got him into trouble. It was almost a miracle that he escaped the bloodpurge and, though one must take whatever he says with a grain of salt, I am inclined to believe that only his connections with the American Embassy helped him through the crisis.

(When Mrs. von Opel visited Miss Dodd in 1941 in her country home in Connecticut, she was not at all pleased to be reminded of this and similar happenings, having married in the meantime the rather pinkish Mr. Stern.)

Dr. Diels was dismissed several months before the bloodpurge and given an administrative position, first in Cologne, later in Hanover. He subsequently resigned and returned to private employment in the industry.

He is not at all a friend, not even a close acquaintance of us. We are not on "Du" (thou) terms with him, as used among friends, but on the conventional "Sie", I even addressing him as "Doctor Diels" which is rather formal among social equals. He came to our house, the first and only time, in the winter of 1936. He had come to Switzerland for his vacation, and asked Mrs. von Opel by telephone whether he could come to see us. He had bought a rare kind of falcon and wanted her to take care of the bird for a few days. (It is this falcon the FBI took so much interest in). He himself arrived three or four days later and spent less than a week with us. Our houseguests at the same time were the Spanish tennis star and skier, Lily Alvarez, and the Belgian Countess de Changy with her two children. I saw Dr. Diels only once more for any length of time, when he came for a couple of days to the Isle of Sylt to train a young hawk. He was not our guest, but Mrs. von Opel kept his hawk for about a week.

(For the sake of completeness, I should not forget to mention that I know two or three of the really leading Nazis, namely, Minister of Justice Kerrl, Secretary of Justice Freissler, and Secretary of State Koerner. These gentlemen conducted the procedure against my father and uncle and cross-examined me as a witness. Neither of them I saw again after the "shakedown" in 1935. As to my feelings for them, I can only say I hope to be present when they are strung to their lampposts.)

* * * * * *

After having discussed our Nazi "friends", I believe that for the sake of fair judgment I should be allowed to point out who, in fact, our friends are, people who knew us numerous years from Europe, people who lived with us for years and who were in daily contact with us.

1.) During the last years Dr. Hanns Frankenberg became our most intimate friend. He was born in Austria of Jewish parentage and is now a citizen of Haiti. He was my business associate for the last ten or twelve years, and since the outbreak of the European war we practically lived together. He sailed over together with Mrs. von Opel and Mrs. Schwarzenbach, and there were few days in Switzerland or in this country when we did not see each other, telephone, or at least correspond. He is a man of extreme culture with a rare sense of humor and fond of all things we like. Does it seem feasible that this man who knows me and my family since twenty years, who knows my business, my hobbies, my talents and my weaknesses almost better than I do, that he has not a clear picture about me and my views? Would he befriend a man with barbarian concepts, a man who is not fair and liberal as he himself?

2.) Another friend from abroad is Erich Maria Remarque, author of "All Quiet on the Western Front". He, the first German writer attacked by the Nazis and subsequently expatriated, would he seek our company and live with us for months at a time if he did not consider us congenial? Would we, in turn, if we sympathized with Nazi views, harbor an exiled enemy of them?

3.) The anti-fascistic writer, Annemarie Clarac-Schwarzenbach, I have already mentioned in Part I. Suffice it to say that she, a person of the utmost sensitiveness, certainly would not have borne for years the atmosphere of even faint fascism.

4.) The novelist, Hermann Kesser, delegate of Switzerland to the P.E.N. Club conference at the World's Fair, knows Mrs. von Opel closely since 1923 and me since 1929. He, another liberal writer, distinguished by none less than President Masaryk of Czechoslavakia, was our house-guest in St. Moritz and over here. I venture to say that Dr. Kesser in his capacity as psychologist should certainly possess a more than average insight into his friends.

5.) Mrs. von Opel's very close friend, the friendship inspired through their mutual love for dogs and horses, is Mrs. Alice Barschall, a British subject of Jewish parentage, born in India and now living in London. Mrs. Barschall, once very rich, lost her fortune and was running a riding academy in Berlin. Her friends were exclusively British and American people, mostly diplomats, among them the now Egyptian Ambassador in London, Machat Pacha.

6.) There is Prince Friedrich von Preussen, grandson of the former Emperor Wilhelm II. He spent the decisive years of his life, winter for winter, in St. Moritz in our house. We freed him from his prejudice, we taught him to see the shortcomings of his family and the reactionary circle around them and, above all, he learned to understand the utter stupidity of nationalistic concepts. He was to both of us like a younger brother, and he had and still has the same feelings towards us.

He once told us that his father wanted him to enter the German diplomatic service under Ribbentrop. We told him bluntly that we considered his father's flirting with the Nazis as disgraceful and undignified and that he as a decent person should not—by becoming a German diplomat—join hands with "criminals". In a letter, seized by the FBI but never used in our favor, he reminded us of this discussion and how happy he now is (after the beginning of the war) that he has followed our advice and not joined "those criminals".

We had further advised him to go to England and enter into a business career. He did so. About his feelings and his character, I need not say more than that he, the Prussian prince, remained in England after being called to the colors and, after a short internment in Canada, voluntarily returned to England as a war worker on a farm. It was a hard decision for a patriotic Prussian prince to make. He wrote us that he was feeling happy again after he had learned that we both understood and agreed with his action.

7.) The writer and publisher, Armin Robinson and his wife became our close friends during the last years. He is Hungarian and partly Jewish; she is German. They do not only know us and most of our friends abroad, they also have been our houseguests in Siasconset and Palm Beach.

We pay the highest tribute to Mr. Robinson's friendship and courage. He remained with us through all the trying months of our detention in Miami. We are proud to have a friend, alien in this country as we are, who has the courage to stick to his convictions and not to let down his friends in whose integrity he believes.

I remember when Mrs. von Opel discussed with him in Palm Beach—a few nights before our arrest—the detrimental effect of the Nazi ideology on the basic Christian principles (she calls such talks her "soap box speeches"). I guess it was this discussion which made Mr. Robinson conceive the marvellous idea of his book and movie, "Hitler and the Ten Comandments", which he is at present preparing under the sponsorship of the Office of War Information.

PART IV

Our trips to Germany

At our hearing we already stated that we both have been on visits in Germany after we had left in 1929. Not many details were asked, but I feel that a thorough discussion may be helpful.

As Mrs. von Opel and I went there for different reasons, I have to discuss our trips separately. One reason, however, we had in common: we were both strangely attracted by the rising monster Nazism, which kept us spellbound, half in fright, half in curiosity. From the first minute our judgment of Hitler had not to be altered: we knew he was the ruin of everything dear to us. The Austrian pied-piper's march through Germany and "the nation of poets and thinkers" falling in line behind him will for all time be regarded as one of the strangest mental phenomenons. This—our experience gathered inside of Germany (and, strange to say, topped by our Seagoville experiences)—gives us such an insight into the powers which motivate Nazism that we hope for an opportunity to put our knowledge to work in a broad scale attack of this mental disease.

a) Mrs. von Opel's trips.

We had left in Germany a bank account of so-called "Auswanderer-Mark" (emigrant marks), a blocked account which was not transferable into foreign currency and practically worthless. However, as the democratic government wanted to stimulate visits by foreigners, there was a provision that such funds could be freely used inside the country.

At different occasions, mainly while I was in the United States on business, Mrs. von Opel went to Berlin to do her shopping, especially for clothes, which she thus could acquire very cheaply. She also went there for medical treatment of a leg fracture and several times for a vacation on the Island of Sylt which she likes very much. (An article in "Fortune" in 1940 said, correctly, that we wanted to settle on Nantucket Island because it is so much like Sylt.)

b) Mr. von Opel's trips.

All my trips (with the exception of the treatment of a dislocated shoulder and a compound leg fracture) were prompted by my father and mainly by business troubles he had run into.

Since my marriage in 1929, my father is the only member of my family with whom we are on good terms. After the sale of our factory to General Motors he felt very unhappy. He was a genius in mechanics and manufacturing, a go-getter type of businessman who had known nothing but his work. All of a sudden he found himself retired to a life he was not used to and—widely inexperienced in the tricks of banking and investing—he fell prey to all kinds of people whom he considered his friends. It was a heartbreaking experience for me to see a man whom I considered one of the best brains in his profession caught in the nets of the cheapest tricksters.

In 1931 he had given me the fair half of his fortune and I felt obliged to assist him in the defense of his own interests in a world, quickly changing, he did not understand any more. The former law and order was gone, and he felt puzzled by political and economic ideas he had no use for. He did not see clearly that the Germany he had cherished was gone for good, and though he felt on himself the blows of unlawfulness and distorted justice, he steadfastly believed that all of a sudden the nightmare would make room for the rebirth of a decent Germany.

I assisted him mainly in the following matters:

1.) Before Hitler had come to power my father, who at all times was the target of inventors, had the idea to finance inventors and to make their inventions ready for sale on an international basis. I had agreed to assist him, particularly in arranging the sales of patent rights in foreign countries. My father soon discovered that it was no fun at all to deal with inventors and moreover, after Hitler had come to power, the restrictions got such that any cooperation on an international basis became impossible. Furthermore, one of the key men, the chemist, Dr. Eduard Holzapfel, who had worked on the development of a cure for hookworm disease, wanted to immigrate to the United States. For this reason, in 1934 or 1935 the small organization was discontinued and all the inventors —among them, myself—regained their rights. Those rights I still hold, mainly several patents in automatic traffic control.

2.) The worst trouble my father ran into was, one year after the Nazis had come into power, the claim, unsustained by any law or regulation, that he, by giving me half his fortune, had broken certain restrictions regarding foreign currency. I already mentioned this matter which lasted from the summer of 1934 to the summer of 1935. My father's and his brother's position was legally unattackable, but they were told they would not be tried before the bench but before a newly-formed "people's court" for "economic treason". Thus they were forced to surrender to a fine of eight million marks (about three million dollars). I was the chief witness for my father and was repeatedly cross-examined by different authorities.

3.) Another trouble was that my father had made several large deals with a banker by the name of Deku whom he fully trusted. I disliked this man thoroughly but I could not convince my father that he was a crook. It nearly came to a complete break-up between my father and me. He was ready to sign a contract which would have completely ruined him financially when I intervened and had the banker arrested. I was the principal witness for the prosecution. The banker was convicted of numerous charges of theft, embezzlement and forgery and was sentenced to three and a half years of hard labor. My father's losses amounted to more than four million marks.

4.) In connection with the above conviction of the banker, his bank, the Union Bank A. G., went in bankruptcy. Other creditors claimed that my father had unnecessarily brought about the bankruptcy and was liable for damages. He was sued to the tune of several million marks, mainly by the City of Dresden. When I heard of it last, in 1941, the matter was still unsettled.

5.) On my insistent advice that nothing but real estate would survive a possible war and the collapse of the Nazi "economics", my father had acquired a large forest. While the transfer of the property was pending, a quite unusual "twister" destroyed about one-eighth of the timber. On my advice, my father sued for damages and I assisted the lawyers, who were quite inexperienced in forestry matters, in establishing the claim. The defendant appealed already twice and in 1940 I was cross-examined by the defendant's lawyers in New York.

The lawyer of my father is Dr. Daniel Gros in Berlin. Whenever possible I had him come to St. Moritz for our conferences, but I also conferred with him in Berlin, on the Isle of Sylt, and on the damaged estate of my father.

After Hitler had come to power, new regulations came out with regard to the establishment of residence in Germany. This was extremely important for all people who had foreign holdings because, according to the German "foreign currency" restrictions, everybody residing in Germany, Germans or foreign nationals alike, had to surrender their foreign holdings. According to the new regulation, the mere "intention to establish a residence" (for instance, the renting of other than furnished rooms, hiring of servants, the regular reception of mail or any prolonged stay at all) was considered sufficient "evidence of residence" to force a foreign resident into submission.

Having emigrated in 1929, I was considered a "Devisen-Auslaender" (unrestricted resident of a foreign country), which meant an invaluable asset. (Even the retroactive law of 1931 had not caught up with my date of emigration.) If the Nazis could construe me a resident under the rubber-band regulations (offenses were punishable by death), I would have been forced to surrender all my American investments. For this reason I was most careful to limit my stays in Germany after 1934 to the utmost.

* * * * *

PART V

Can I be an agent of Hitler?

I do not believe that anybody who has even superficially studied the foregoing pages will still be inclined to believe that people of our standards, our mode of life, our interests, and—not to forget—our independence, mentally and economically, offer the material spies or agents are made of.

However, there is a tendency to accept certain theories to the very detriment even of those refugees who have already suffered most from Hitler. Against the preposterous wholesale assumption that all those who have relatives left in Germany are likely to act for Hitler in one or the other sinister capacity, there is no better way than to look at each single case individually.

My own life is a living denial of this assertion: not only by, in 1929, my marrying against the wishes of my family the most liberal-minded person, by emigrating from Germany in the same year, by settling in a neutral country, by choosing my friends exclusively among outspoken anti-Nazis, not only that the Nazis issued a warrant of arrest against me, not only that they fined my family three million dollars, not only that I invested all I had in this very country, not only that wherever we went, awake or dreaming, we criticized and condemned the Nazis, not only that I worked constructively in this country's industry for ten years, that I put up a defense plant and offered several valuable inventions of mine to this Government—no, far more: that I never said or did a single thing to help the Nazis or to harm this country.

What can a person who is not accused of anything, but merely suspected (in a case where even this suspicion cannot be based on any evidence and runs counter to all logic and reasoning)—what can such a person do to destroy such a suspicion?

1.) Would it help to analyze the matter from the philosophical viewpoint? Would it help to show that my wife and her family, and I and my family, always have been liberal? Would it help to show that not one independent man in this world, with the same background and the same training in science that I had, ever succumbed to Nazi doctrines, to their pseudo-science, their surrogate for ethics and their blasphemies?

I am rather proud of the fact that I was right in my judgment of human character when I stated, as early as 1928 or 1929, that out of Hitler's ugly and maniacal face nothing could come for Germany but the destruction of all moral and spiritual values.

2.) I believe it is better to approach the matter from a more materialistic point of view: Every agent in the world expects some reward for his endeavors. What could be the reward in my case?

a) Money? As I was independent and as I earned more than I needed, it seems safe to assume that no financial compensation could ever have tempted me.

b) Position? Nor could the promise of position ever have tempted me. I could have returned to Germany into highly paid positions in industry. I refused to return. My independence is my most cherished property.

I could have joined Hitler in 1928 or 1929 at a time when his cause—at least on the surface—looked patriotic and idealistic, at a time when I had my own economic interests to defend in Germany, at a time when, through my position in industry and my popularity, I would have been an invaluable asset to Hitler who would have readily given me any position just for my asking.

Does it look reasonable that I should join him belatedly, after his hands had become bloody with murder and after he had completely destroyed whatever was dear to me in Germany? What in the world could have caused me to give up my personal security and the work of my choosing to become one of the agents of Hitler, whose heads, inside and outside of Germany, are in constant danger?

c) Fame and adventure? Could fame and the lust for adventure tempt me? When I was young all the fame anybody could wish was showered upon me. Years of daredeviltry had established me as a sports hero, but I was not yet twenty-seven years old when I began to realize the emptiness of the public's hero worship. In spite of many triumphs still to harvest, I retired from the arena of sports and devoted myself entirely to industrial work.

Would I consider, fifteen years later, the sullen activities of an agent as adventurous? It might look so to some, but to me, who had risked my life in hundreds of races and dozens of silly stunts, it could only look dreary.

And the fame? Could Mr. Hitler's patting me on the shoulder compensate me for the loss of esteem of all my friends?

d) Coercion? Could the fact that my parents still live in Germany be used by the Nazis to force me to cooperate with Hitler?

It is a widespread belief that the Nazis use hostages for the purpose of forcing their relatives into subversive activities. I am convinced—plausible as it may sound in a movie thriller—that this theory is not at all borne out by the facts. The Nazis have an ample supply of genuine followers, educated and trained in blind obedience to Hitler, who would gladly undertake any daring task. The Nazis have no need to employ unwilling tools where they have volunteers in abundance; tools they never could be sure of.

In my own case, I firmly believe that since the war began my father is safer than before. It would not help the Nazis in their proclaimed "war-time unity" to harm an old and widely known man who is well liked by some twenty or thirty thousand workmen. The Nazis too have to consider the feelings of such a large body of people and it was obviously for this reason that they reversed the treatment of my father: they, all of a sudden, upon the occasion of his seventieth birthday, gave to him, the ransacked "economic traitor", some kind of a medal.

* * * * *

PART VI

Are we Nazi sympathizers?

If Americans would be asked: what have you done five, ten, or fifteen years ago to show your displeasure with Hitler and his methods, I believe most of them would be at a loss to point out one single instance. It is the same with many people in Europe: the average human being does not display political feelings. This is left to politicians and political writers. The case of people who have relatives living under Hitler's heel is still more difficult.

Why should they—for no useful purpose—endanger their relatives?

In spite of my own and my father's precarious position, we are fortunate enough to be able to claim that we talked and acted against Hitler, not on this safe side of the ocean only but even inside Germany where it was risky. There is, of course, no chance to get statements out of Germany, but, fortunately for us, several people who used to live in Germany do now live in England or over here, and will certainly testify to the facts and incidents described below.

* * * * *

1.) No member of the large Opel family since the foundation of the German Reich in 1871 was

a) a professional soldier or officer

b) a government official in any capacity whatever

c) engaged in politics or

d) a member of any political party (with the exception of my father who was a "passive" (contributing) member of Stresemann's, the "great liberals" German People Party.)

2.) I did not become an officer but, upon my father's wish, remained a non-commissioned officer in World War I, which was for a man of college education very unusual.

3.) It was not less unusual that at my university I did not join a fraternity (which were all reactionary) but founded and managed for years educational courses for workmen.

4.) The members of the Opel family, on account of their liberal leanings, were nicknamed "Die roten Fabrikanten" ("the red industrialists"). We were among the first to establish a workmen's council and to put to work all kinds of social measures.

My grandfather got his technical education in France; my father worked in the United States for Singer Sewing Machine; I went over Europe and through the United States to study manufacturing. Our market was the world, and I always lived in an atmosphere of international cooperation and exchange, an air deadly to the bacillus of chauvinism.

5.) The first socialistic president of the German Republic, Friedrich Ebert, distinguished me by personally coming to congratulate me on my record-shattering victory in the first automobile race after the revolution (to-wit: picture of Friedrich Ebert and myself on the front page of the "Berliner Illustrierte Zeitung", September 25th, 1921, New York Public Library).

I was the first German sportsman to compete in France after World War I, thereby displaying for the first time the republican colors. Having won both prizes (of the Secretary of the Navy and the City of Paris), I was welcomed by several Ministers; I replied in my speech that the change which had taken place in Germany could not be better illustrated than by the fact that I as an industrialist had come to present the colors of the new republican Germany and that the "new Germany" was eager to fully cooperate with France.

6.) In 1928 over a national hook-up I spoke from Berlin demonstrating the principle of rocket-propulsion. Here again I put emphasis on the necessity of international cooperation and the influence which faster and better communication should have on the mutual understanding among nations.

7.) About the same time a leading German newspaper inquired from dozens of well-known people whether or not Germany could pay the contributions of the Young plan. This was categorically denied by everybody for obvious "patriotic" reasons. I was the only one who answered in the affirmative, stating that Germany could meet its obligations through the export of goods. The paper was so ashamed about this answer—correct as it proved to be—that my answer was put in an inconspicuous corner and printed in smaller type.

8.) In 1928 the former Kaiser Wilhelm, twice by wire and letter, invited me to come to Doorn for a lecture on some of my inventions. I bluntly refused to see him, in spite of the fact that the majority of Germans and quite a number of foreigners would have felt deeply honored.

9.) In 1928 or 1929 (after the death of Stresemann) the German People's Party dissolved and my father, who did not want to join the influential "German Nationals" (a reactionary movement), asked me to find out whether he should join the newly rising "National Socialistic Party". I heard several speeches of Hitler and attended a private gathering of industrialists where the then famous Gottfried Feder made a speech. I reported to my father: "If those fools and cheap comedians ever come to power, Germany is bound to smash on the rocks." (More than ten years later my father reminded me of these words, saying: "If I would have joined them it would have spared me a lot of troubles and difficulties." I replied: "One day you will be proud to have kept out of it", these being about the last words we exchanged at the train station in Zuerich at my departure for the United States in April, 1940.)

10.) My father sponsored a monument for the late Dr. Stresemann who through his cooperation with the French returned order to the Rhineland. This monument was some years later destroyed by the Nazis, who considered Stresemann's peaceful endeavors as treacherous.

11.) In the spring of 1930, while working in the Chevrolet plant in Flint, Michigan, I was invited by the German-born workmen of the Chevrolet, Buick and Fisher plants to address them at a gathering.

At this time most German-Americans felt still attached to the old imperial colors (black-white-red) and disliked the new black-red-gold republican colors. The tenor of my speech was to point out the political and economical difficulties the German republic was confronted with and to show the astounding headway the republican Germany had made in ten difficult years.

12.) It is well known that the Nazi movement was subsidized by several industrialists, particularly Mr. Thiessen. I take pleasure to state that the Opel Corporation, as long as it was under my family's control, never made one single contribution, small or large, to the Nazi party or its affiliates. Likewise, no member of the Opel family ever became a member of the Nazi party.

13.) In the summer of 1934, after the "bloodpurge" (which included the murder of Roehm and General Schleicher), we succeeded in getting tickets to the "Kroll Opera House", where Hitler was about to address the Reichstag.

The whole diplomatic corps (if I remember correctly, with the exception of the American and the French Ambassadors) was present, being seated in the center loges on the second floor gallery. Mrs. von Opel and I had two front seats on the same gallery about fifty feet to the right of the diplomats. When our friend, the Egyptian Minister Nachat Pacha (now Ambassador to the Court of St. James), took his seat we nodded to him.

At about this time Hitler entered and made his speech which I am sure history will classify as the most shameless of them all, excusing the wholesale murder of friends and foes alike with the vilest lies. At the end of the speech the whole house, deputies as well as visitors, jumped to their feet in a roaring ovation, and with hands raised in the Hitler salute burst into the two national anthems.

We alone in the midst of thousands of people were standing in the front row, visible to everybody, not singing and with the arms down. The next day I drove Mrs. von Opel to the Grunewald to visit her friend Mrs. Barschall. Minister Nachat Pacha was there and he, who had observed us on the gallery, reproved us and admonished us not to endanger ourselves by senseless demonstrations. I replied that I would rather die than, by raising my arm, actively underwrite crimes which put a whole nation on sub-barbarian standards.

It must have been this or a similar incident which prompted Mrs. Barschall to write about us in her affidavit: "I was always worried for their safety because of my knowledge of their anti-Nazi attitude."

* * * * * *

15.) My father never worked with so-called "private" banks but exclusively with the big "Disconto Gesellschaft".

After the Nazis had openly proclaimed the boycott of all Jewish firms, I told him the least he could do to show that he did not agree with these measures was to open an account with a Jewish bank. So he did. Reversing his life-long policy, he opened a large account with the Jewish bank, Arnhold & S. Bleichroeder in Berlin, and he continued to deal with them even after he had received a threatening letter from another banker.

To an American such an act looks insignificant. In Germany, however, where everyone's back was bent in obedience to every whim of the "Fuehrer", it was a courageous demonstration.

16.) With one of the partners of this bank, Mr. Merzbach, I had several thorough discussions of the political situation, inside Germany and at a time when even the boycotted German Jews still acclaimed at least part of Hitler's measures (particularly in the field of unemployment): I already expected nothing but the complete collapse of Hitler's Germany.

17.) Mr. Merzbach (see his general affidavit) can furthermore testify to the fact that I personally—and at long last successfully—pressed my father to sell out all his government, city, and private bonds and to prepare for the collapse by acquiring real estate or similar inflation- and disaster-proof values.

As to my own policy, Mr. Merzbach, as well as Dr. Frankenberg, can testify that I never had any investment in Germany after I had left, but to the contrary took everything out, even if such transfer involved high losses.

18.) Around 1936 Germany began a campaign called "Rueckwanderung von Auslandsdeutschen" (repatriation of Germans living abroad). To induce Germans to return they were offered very favorable rates of exchange, in some cases twice the official rate. After the foregoing it sounds almost sarcastic to ask: Why did I not use this splendid opportunity, thereby settling once and for all the permanent troubles my father had, returning to Germany as the welcome "lost son" as did thousands of other people?

19.) When we lived in Switzerland we ordered our groceries from two or three local firms in St. Moritz. After one of them had tried to cheat us and we had learned that the proprietor was a Nazi-German (though married to a Swiss girl), we stopped buying from this firm.

Some time later Mrs. von Opel had to go to Davos to see the German consul on passport matters. He asked why we did not buy our supplies from the German firm Weren-Biffi. Mrs. von Opel replied that they should first teach this man to be honest and secondly that it was our policy after having been nicely received and accepted by the Swiss community to give all our business to Swiss firms.

We never again bought a cent's worth from Weren-Biffi, who, being more or less boycotted by the community, went out of business.

20.) I feel I should—besides the friends already mentioned—name some more people who have been guests in our house in St. Moritz: Lord and Lady Jellicoe, son and wife of the late English admiral of Skagerac fame; the late Dutch sportsman and flyer, Antony Fokker; Mrs. Vansittart and daughter, sister-in-law of the adviser of the British foreign office; the famous British airplane manufacturer, Sir Handley-Page (whom we have known for twelve years); Lady Duncan and her sons; the eminent French scientist, Esnault-Pelletier; Martha Dodd, who spent three weeks with us; Mrs. Sert, the late wife of the famous painter.

In addition, many Jewish people have been our guests: the well known singer, Gitta Alpar (after her emigration from Germany); Charlie Chaplin (introduced by Mr. Fokker), whose pictures have been banned in Germany right after the beginning of the Nazi rule; Conrad Veidt, the famous Hollywood actor who for ten years specialized in anti-Nazi pictures; the well known Hollywood director, Joseph von Sternberg.

Is it reasonable to assume that all these people of high standing, who were all free to go or to stay away wherever they wanted, would have chosen the company of Nazis?

21.) Who in Switzerland (and the Swiss are rather critical) ever thought that I was sympathizing with Hitler? The friends who vouched for my nataralization, the Liechtenstein Government which accepted me, or the Swiss Secret Police (Fremden Polizei) who assisted in my release from Gibraltar!

22.) The FBI seized a letter, written by a certain Ferdinand Jauda. This letter caused me a black mark ("friend held in Australian concentration camp").

This "friend", a German socialist, had behind him three years of concentration camp in Germany, one and a half years of war against Franco, and another two years of Franco concentration camp when I met him after his escape to Gibraltar. We were detained together and I bought him (a decent German carpenter) some clothes and shoes as he was in rags and barefooted. I continued to help him with small sums after he was sent from Gibraltar to Australia. I even sent him English school books which he wanted for his studies.

Please note that this suspicious "friend" voluntarily returned to England, that he is unconditionally released, works in a machine shop and wants me (by letter of December 27th, 1942) to buy him some tools. He will be dumbfounded to learn that I am interned as an "enemy" alien.

23.) Among the more than one thousand people my corporations employed in this country there was not one single German (except three or four Jewish refugees working on special research in connection with my inventions in my defense plant). Among these thousands were to my knowledge only two German-born citizens, both around seventy years old and naturalized since thirty or forty years (one being a brewmaster and the other a long-time employee of Ladenburg-Thalman & Co.).

24.) The British in Gibraltar (and later the FBI) found in my possession a rather funny "Schnaderhuepferl" (funny song) I had written in 1938, sarcastically playing up how the Austrians had benefited by the "Anschluss". This little song cannot be translated on account of the frequent use of puns. Anyhow, the last part, mentioning the German drive for the collection of "rags" and playing on the double meaning of "Lumpen" (meaning "rag" as well as "scoundrel") closes: "After having collected all the "Lumpen" (rags), why shouldn't we as well be ruled by "Lumpen" (scoundrels)?

25.) The FBI found in my possession a notebook of poems I had written in the summers of 1940 and 1941, poems of religious and rather resigned leanings. Among them were translations of Byron, Keats and Ruppert Brooke, some of them highly praised by experts. Ruppert Brooke's "Soldier", written shortly before his early death in 1915, must be counted among the outstanding glorifications of England.

Can anybody imagine that a person who is in the remotest way a Nazi would spend many months in the thorough study of British "enemy's" poetry?

26.) Every time I had an opportunity to assist or advise American industry I did so unselfishly. I mention one typical example: the firm of Ladenburg & Thalmann with whom I have no business connections was "most interested in learning to what extent Germany is developing the use of producer gas for automobiles", and they asked me "for a fairly exhaustive survey of what your opinion and study of this particular subject matter has been."

To this day I do not know who their "valued client" was, whether a manufacturer or—as the question referred to the possible substitutes for gasoline—the Army Intelligence.

I wrote a survey and on February 13th, 1941, received Mr. Rosenthal's answer: "I greatly appreciate your courtesy and kindness in respect to your letter of February 11th. It has covered the ground most thoroughly and has given me everything I desire. Again many thanks and with the hope that I might have the pleasure of seeing you in New York son * * *"

Can anybody imagine that a Nazi-minded person would go out of his way to give valuable information free of charge to a Jewish banker? On the other hand, through a number of years I had numerous discussions with the Ladenburg partners on the economical and political situation in Germany. Would they consult and invite a person whom they are not sure of?

27.) Long before Pearl Harbor I asked the Department of Justice for permission to put my professional knowledge at work on defense problems.

I offered to the Government numerous inventions (long before they were seized by the Alien Property Custodian), among them:

a) a process for forging magnesium, aluminum, brass and bronzes

b) a gun crew training device

c) a moulding machine for plastics

d) a navigating device

e) a fastener for airplane cowlings

f) a suggestion for the balancing of the steamer "Normandy" during the lifting operations (rejected)

g) an improvement in rocket-propulsion (bazooka-gun)

h) a "river-mine" of revolutionary design, usable against bridges and dams

I do not want to enlarge upon the very depressing fact that these brain-children of mine are—as soon as they are born—taken away from me, that they grow up without my, the legitimate and loving father's, assistance. I can only hope that they always find the shortest way to the battle front.

At least in one case much damage was done: The Alien Property Custodian, overriding the expressed wish of the War Production Board, sold the Ergo Machine Works on the auction block, thereby destroying all chances to continue the already successful research on forging I had conducted there.

Let us take one single example: the basic idea of the "river-mine" struck me (strange to say, but the accompanying guard will remember) when we passed the Mississippi River on the way to the internment camp "for the duration". I spent several months working out the details and then sent the plans (with six weeks' delay through censorship) to the Ordnance Department.

Describing the purpose and use of my "river-mine", I say: "the crux of the invention is a new method of igniting floating mines, a method which requires neither an impact, as do the present horn-type mines, nor the presence of a mass of iron, as do the present magnetic mines. Furthermore, against this type of mines no counteraction seems possible. The drifting mine can hardly be seen and cannot be sunk or ignited by machine gun fire, as the float is invulnerable and the charge and the delicate parts are well below the surface. If, for the protection of the bridge, a mine is strung across the river, the first mine stopped would immediately explode, destroying the wire and thus opening the way for the following mines. The charges by which the bridge is blown up can be placed outside of the protected area without the necessity of any accuracy."

A short time ago all newspapers carried articles and pictures regarding the sensational attack on the Moehne and Eder dams which were blown to pieces. The paper said: "New Method Used. The R.A.F. apparently had devised a nev technique to attack successfully the power dams, but it was secretive on that point. Unofficial sources said, however, that a way had been found to float the mines past the ordinary safeguards through the sluicegates into the vital machinery. Destruction of the structures by bombing would have required an extraordinary amount of explosive as well as marksmanship of the greatest skill, it was said."

I, as an enemy alien under suspicion, have apparently no right to learn whether it was my, or a fully identical and contemporaneous, invention which worked this miracle. To top this irony of fate: the Moehne dam which was blown up is less than two miles from my father's estate. I am sure that no window on it remained in its frame. Need I tell to what my feelings are:

Messrs. Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Reed,

New York,

In connection with our first letter of today we wish to give you the following additional information:

1. We wish to draw your attention to the fact that a large part of this stock is encumbered with a right of usufruct in favor of Mr. von Opel Sr. In addition our company has considerable obligations towards the Adler & Co. Aktien-Gesellschaft presently amounting to approximately 3-400,000.00 francs. The stock of our company is at the power of disposal of the Adler & Co. Aktien-Gesellschaft as security for this debt, in that Dr. Frankenberg of Adler & Co. Aktien-Gesellschaft delegate to the Board of Directors, has in his possession the only key for the safe No. 1917 with the Schweizerische Kreditanstalt in Zurich.

2. The management of our company is handled entirely independently by the three members of the Board of Directors. I refer to enclosed certificate of the commercial register of the canton Zurich. Aside from these three gentlemen no one has the right to manage the affairs of our company.

3. As regards the transfer of the different assets we refer to the lists of the participating banks which were enclosed to our first letter.

Since 1932 our company has been examining the question of considerable increase in the capital stock and it has already conducted negotiations in that matter with the fiscal authorities in Chur with a Mr. Janett. * *

4. To prove that the disputed assets had been in possession of our company already in 1932, we refer to the deposit statements. These assets were then securities used to acquire dollar coins for which we likewise enclosed in our first letter confirmation of the transfer.

5. Mr. Fritz von Opel did not have an account with the Adler banking house in 1932 as yet but opened the account only in March 1933.

* * The intention has always existed to reach a settlement with Mr. Fritz von Opel in regard to these assets in connection with the increase in capital stock.

The correctness of the preceding statements can be sworn to at any time by Dr. Frankenberg and Dr. J. Hengeler. Please transmit to us, if necessary, the drafts of the affidavit.

In the event that anything should still remain unclear, please give us notice by telegram so that we may still furnish you with any statements that may be necessary.

Very truly yours,

Overseas was instrumentality for executing gift agreement therefore my assignment 1932 was not in trust because made without right to re-claim since any demand of return would have frustrated concentration and safeguarding of his and sister's rights demanded by my father. Transfer of assets took place at cost to be set off later against capital increase thus full property Overseas regardless of balance sheets. If in agreement with this legal position confirm attorneys in full cable and letter.

[Geh. v. Opel]

at present: Westerland/Sylt,
Haus Kleemann

August 2, 1935

S. H.
Herrn Rechtsanwalt Dr. Gros
Berlin-Potsdamer Platz
Columbushaus

Dear Doctor,

I thank you for your ingenious statement concerning

a) the evaluation of speculative profits,

b) the status of a German residing abroad as a member of the Board of Directors of a corporation with regard to foreign exchange and to taxation, and

c) the deed of gift [usufruct].

re a) I, then, take it to be a fact that the view which you expressed to me verbally is correct, namely that it is at the purchaser's discretion to set off individual sales against individual purchases; this amounts, practically, to saying that it is left to the purchaser's discretion to make belated payment of a tax or possibly not to make payment at all. As I told you, the American way of evaluation seems to me to be more correct, namely to apply the first sale against the first purchase or vice versa.

re b) Your opinion* confirms in all essentials my view that my situation is clear as far as the question of taxation is concerned, but that the flexible clause 'essential interest' may lead to difficulties at least with regard to foreign exchange legislation. The one thing that is certain is, of course, that the expression 'essential interest' refers to the management of the business only and has nothing to do with the stockholdings as such. Nevertheless, I have got a feeling that large shareholdings may possibly be taken as a basis to construe an essential participation in the management, namely inasmuch as it might be claimed that the owner of a majority may logically be expected to take a very active interest in his business. (p. 2) If the clause were interpreted reasonably, I would see no difficulties, but this weasel word 'essential interest' allows for all sorts of malevolent interpretations. I believe, therefore, that one should await, at any rate, the advice of the Devisen-

* Translator's note: 'Guthaben' is evidently written in error for 'Gutachten' stelle before accepting membership on the Board of Directors.

re c) I also agree with you with regard to the deed of gift and I know that it is a mutilation of the Hachenburg draft and devoid of any legal foundation. I fought, at the time, against the insertion of the usufruct provisions, for all the reasons which you mentioned, namely

1. because it is self-evident that I would take care of my parents in case of need (and the usufruct was intended for this purpose) and

2. because I am legally obliged to take care of my parents anyhow,

3. because the entire wording of the right of usufruct is inadequate, and

4. because I feared from the very beginning complications connected with the law governing foreign exchange which could have been avoided.

So you are by no means the only one to hold that opinion of the contract, and I believe, as I did before that the exact wording of the Hachenburg draft should have been used.

Your opinion that at the time of the Berlin negotiations I was not aware of the subtle difference between a claim to the creation of a usufruct and the usufruct itself is by no means correct. I know today, just as I did then, that the charges against my father were wholly unjustified and that his conviction for an unlicensed waiver was nothing but a fiction, which we had to put up with under the pressure of circumstances. You may be sure that if my uncle had not been involved we would have fought over this point like lions, and left to ourselves we certainly would have been able to accomplish something.

So I still believe that, what we did achieve was the best we could expect in view of the unfortunate fact that we were linked with my uncle, and that your legal arguments would have helped us very little. Nowadays I understand decisions are required to be made no longer on the basis of the written law, but that all the circumstances of the case are taken into consideration in reaching a decision. These circumstances had become rather unfavorable for us the moment our own case was mixed up with that of my uncle. (p. 3)

Your argument that a usufruct had not yet been created, did not seem very effective to me at the time, nor do I believe that your opinion will prevail today. But your arguments may be of use even in the present situation, namely insofar as they will serve to ascertain whether or not my father will have a claim to any income which may accrue in the future.

From a purely legal point of view the situation, I think, is such that he is not allowed to waive any usufruct which has accrued without a foreign exchange license. But since in your opinion a usufruct has not yet been created, so that proceeds from such a usufruct cannot accrue, you believe that a waiver or a license to waive such a claim is not necessary either. I am of an entirely different opinion. I would see a waiver, not from a legal but from an economic point of view, in the mere fact that my father waives his right to have a usufruct created.

So, opinion stands against opinion. But since the question is still of a very practical importance, you have now got a chance to prove that your point of view is correct. You would, in that case, of course, operate under far more favorable circumstances than you did a year ago, for today it is very much more a question of right and not of might than it was then. I would therefore ask you to examine this question very carefully, especially with a view to ascertain which office would be in a position to give an authentic and binding answer to it. (I presume it is the Office of Foreign Exchange Control). But please do not take any steps before discussing the pros and cons with me thoroughly. As to the facts I may say that all the assets which were given to me, or their substitutes, have been transferred to a holding company, so that only the dividends of this holding company are to be deemed a usufruct under the terms of the deed of gift. Since all my American companies are highly under-capitalized (e.g. my brewery operates with only one third of the capital which is customary for breweries having the same gross receipts), it would in any event be years before the subsidiaries could think of distributing dividends and it would be still longer before the holding company itself had accumulated the customary reserves. So there can be no reasonable prospect of the holding company paying dividends within the next few years. (p. 4)

These plain facts, which can be proved at any time, have become still more complicated by the fact that I shall probably have to reorganize the holding company. The reasons are as follows:

The revised American income tax law considers all companies whose majority is held by 5 persons or less as private holdings, i.e. these companies are required to pay not the customary corporation taxes of 13½%, but the rates applying to private individuals, which are several times higher. That means practically that only such companies are recognized as holding companies which have eleven or more stockholders.

After extended consideration I have finally found a way to meet this requirement, namely by selling to outsiders all the stocks I own. To be able to do this I have to keep my credits with the holding company on a loan account and to obligate myself towards the prospective stockholders not to claim any interest until the stockholders have been satisfied and sufficient reserves accumulated.

I thought I should explain to you the above facts in detail in order to show you that it will be a long time before a usufruct will accrue. Nobody would regret that more than I myself, for I, too, am waiting for my 20%. In spite of this situation, which was brought about for economic reasons, my father continues to be deeply troubled by this usufruct matter and it would therefore be desirable to elicit, if possible, a statement from the Devisenstelle as discussed above. As I said before, I personally doubt whether we shall succeed, but maybe you will find a suitable way.

I approve of your draft of an amendment to the deed of gift. I believe a provision of that kind is more suitable than a testamentary provision, and since my father and I agree in this respect, this way seems to be the right one. But before making final proposals to my father I want to think over the particulars, especially the question of evaluation. The evaluation of 9 millions, which you mentioned, comes very near the balance sheet which I made up for the Reichsbank a year ago. The values specified in it have not changed materially, except that I shall probably have to expect a substantial loss in connection with the recent delivery of foreign exchange, a loss which I estimate at about $60,000.00 to 70,000.00. I presume that I shall know the exact amount within the next 6 weeks, so that all figures will then be available. (p. 5) My father is at the moment still in Berlin. You might take the opportunity to discuss with him the different questions I raised in this letter, especially the usufruct question.

I remain with best regards,

Yours

FRITZ VON OPEL

In reply to your letter of the 14th inst. we wish to inform you of the following:

1. The entire capital of our company comes from a single group which also has a controlling interest in the capital stock. Our company refuses categorically to accept any funds from third parties.

2. In keeping with this structure of our company all the corporations financed by us belong to the same concern and form one economic entity. Our company contemplates the purchase of majority holdings of stock of American corporations; however, it is engaged in a litigation with the American government in regard to a deposit of gold which the American government refuses to release.

Very truly yours,

Dear Mason:

Many thanks for your cable informing me about the trip you intend to take to Tyrol. I hope very much you enjoyed the journey you had and that your route took you from Frankfurt or Mainz either through the Black Forest (Baden Baden and Freudenstadt) or via Rothenburg & Nurnberg, where the Party-Congress is just being prepared.

In Munich of course you will be able to find your way all by yourself. I very much recommend a visit of the "Deutsche Museum" (Museum of Technic) and the WEW & OH Art Galleries.

Leaving Munich you will surely take the most wonderful Reichs-Autobahn (State Auto Road) to Salzburg. On the way back from Tyrol, I suggest you the following route which brings you to the finest spots of Switzerland and Northern Italy:

Salzburg—Landick—St. Moritz (6 & 7 hours). Stop in the Palace Hotel or Suvretta-House in St. Moritz. Visit from there by car (½ hours trip) Morteratsch Glacier and go up by the funicular to Zmottas Muraugh. From St. Moritz take the Maloyo Pass to Italy. On the way down have a look at the small village of Soglio (1 hour extra).

From the Italian border take the new Gundria-Road to Lugano. On your way along the Lake of Lugano stop 10 minutes at Gandria, a village of fishermen. Take lunch in Lugano and continue to Stresa (Sago Maggione). Stop over night at Hotel des Isles-Boromae. Visit next morning the Boromae Islands. From Stresa follow the Lago Mag-giori to Locarno and over the 3 passes to Gotthard, Turla, Gramsel to Lucerne. Stop a day in Lucerne & Clarne alongside the Vierwaldstaetter See to Kuessnacht & back.

You can of course save a day or two by dropping the detour from Lugano to Stresa and Locarno going directly from Lugano to the St. Gotthard Pass.

From Lucerne go to Zurich (2 hours) and stop there at the Grand Hotel Dolder. My friend and banker Dr. Frankenberg who lives there will be very glad seeing you. From Zurich you can go to Paris either directly or over Verdun, visiting the battlefields, what as I remember you have done already.

As I do not know how many time(s) you are going to spend in Europe and we(a)ther at all and when you pass Zurich I can off-hand not tell you we(a)ther I can arrange to see you there, especially as I don't know we(a)ther you leave from Hamburg, Bremen or Cherbourg. As things look now, I shall remain here till September 15th, then leave from Berlin, Wiesbaden and Budapest. In the second half of October I am sailing to New York, Lowell (see Chapter 77 by of the bankruptcy law) and Shreveport. On the way back or forth I naturally would very much like seeing you in Nashville.

A fortnight ago I had a conference with Crittendon and Bayer in Zurich who with Mrs. Crittendon and Mrs. Bayer made the trip above mentioned; which they very much liked. They are sailing Aug 26th on the Manhattan.

I very much hope that Mrs. Houghland and you will enjoy this new trip through Europe and that there will be an opportunity for me of joining you for some time in Hamburg or Berlin.

With heartiest regards to you both

CONFERENCE IN WASHINGTON APRIL 29, 1935

Present:

B. Bernstein, attorney of the Treasury Department, at the start of the conference another gentleman who left immediately after the introductory sentences, a female office employee, who, however, did not participate in the conference, but was engaged in other matters,

Dr. Eugen Meier,

Dr. Schlatter of the Swiss embassy.

Mr. Bernstein spoke English, I spoke German; Dr. Schlatter interpreted.

Upon my request that a decision should be rendered in the pending matter if possible during my stay in the United States so that I may take the necessary measures, Mr. Bernstein replied that the decision in this case was difficult and that therefore final disposition had not been made as yet. Several items, without which a decision could not be reached, have not been clarified until now. In regard to these points, he then proceeded to question me as follows:

1. Relations of Mr. Fritz von Opel to Uebersee.

I answered, in accordance with the information given at the time by wire, that he was stockholder, depositor of assets, and from time to time technical advisor to the company.

Upon the question as to the stock holdings of Mr. F. von Opel I replied that I did not know since we had bearer shares. I knew positively that no American citizen and no person having residence in America was a stockholder. Mr. Bernstein insisted that it should be known to me whether Mr. von Opel had a controlling interest; I replied that a group of which Mr. von Opel was a member had a controlling interest but that I did not know the composition of that group. If my information was correct, that group also included other members of the von Opel family. The extent of the participation of Mr. F. von Opel was not known to me.

I answered negatively to the question whether Mr. F. von Opel was a member of the management. I described the full powers as a limited authority to act and to sign [Handlungsvollmacht] granted on March 17, 1933 which was of limited duration and had been revoked in the meantime, and which did not make Mr. von Opel a representative organ of the company.

I answered negatively to the question whether other stockholders had acted for the company in similar fashion.

2. Business of the Uebersee.

In regard to the nature of the business of the Uebersee I referred to section 2 of the by laws and remitted a notarized copy of the by laws as well as an excerpt from the commercial register, Zurich, which shows that Dr. Frankenberg, Dr. Henggeler, and Dr. Maier are members of the board of directors.

Questioned regarding the nature of the banking operations, I declared that they consisted mainly of the administration of property.

When questioned about the place where business is transacted, I stated Switzerland and denied that business was transacted in the United States, but held that only investments of capital had been made here. The amount and composition could be determined from the statements made by Mr. Friedrich Willie of Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., which could be found in the files. When asked about the existence of other assets particularly other gold in the U.S., I answered in the negative. I replied in the affirmative the question whether a considerable part of the property was located in the U.S.

3. Assets of the corporation.

Mr. Bernstein then questioned me regarding the amount of the assets and liabilities of the corporation. I stated these to be approximately 7 million francs. He demanded the balance sheet of the corporation whereupon I handed him the balance sheet as of December 31, 1934.

4. Relations to Mr. Hoffacker and the firm Theodore Hoffacker & Co.

When questioned on above, I declared that I had absolutely no knowledge of such relations, and that also nothing was known to me of an exchange of letters or telegrams between Uebersee and Mr. Hoffacker or the firm Theodore Hoffacker & Co. Mr. Bernstein then asked about the relations between Mr. Fritz von Opel and Mr. Hoffacker or the firm Theodore Hoffacker & Co. I replied that it was not known to me whether such relations existed.

Finally Mr. Bernstein also questioned me about the purpose of my coming to the United States, whereupon I stated that I had come in order to intervene in the matter of the release of the gold.

Dr. Frankenberg, for information with best regards

IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

In the Matter of the Application of FRITZ VON OPEL for a License under the provisions of Executive Order No. 6560 of January 15, 1934, and subsequent Executive Orders.

CITY OF NANTUCKET
COUNTY OF NANTUCKET
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, ss.:

FRITZ VON OPEL, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I am 42 years of age. I am a citizen of and hold a passfort from the Principality of Liechtenstein. I was born a German but renounced my German citizenship in 1939 and became a citizen of Liechtenstein. I have been in the United States since May 9, 1940; when I arrived here on a visitor's visa. I now have pending an application for an extension of my visa until May 13, 1942. My wife and I are now living on the island of Nantucket, where we have rented a house for the summer months. My wife immigrated from Cuba in May 1941, and I intend to do likewise. We have no children.

I left Germany in the Fall of 1929 and have since resided outside of Germany, most of the time in Switzerland. I have no property in Germany. I took all my property out of Germany under circumstances hereinafter described.

After leaving Germany in 1929, I spent two years in the United States and in Belgium in the employ of General Motors Corporation (1930-31). In the meantime, the economic and political situation in Germany had undergone such a drastic change that I decided not to return to Germany at all, but to invest practically all my funds, i.e., all the property I received from my father by a deed of gift, hereinafter referred to, in the United States.

By profession I am a mechanical engineer. I hold a degree as such from the Darmstadt Hochschule in Germany. After graduating from the University in 1923 or 1924 I was employed as mechanical engineer in the Adam Opel Motor Works at Russelsheim-am-Main, Germany. The Adam Opel Motor Works was a family enterprise organized as a partnership and engaged in the manufacture of motor cars at Russelsheim, with various branches in other parts of Germany. The factory had originally been founded by my grandfather, Adam Opel, in 1862, for the manufacture of sewing machines, bicycles, etc.

My father (Wilhelm Von Opel) and his brothers inherited the business from my grandfather and continued to conduct it as a partnership. In time the business grew to very large proportions. In 1928 it was the largest automobile concern in Germany. My father, my uncle, Dr. Fritz Opel, the heirs of Heinrich von Opel, and the heirs of Karl von Opel, were then the only partners in the business.

In 1928 the Adam Opel Motor Works was reorganized as a corporation under the title Adam Opel Aktien Gesellschaft, with the former partners as shareholders. The capitalization of the new company was 60,000,000 Reichsmarks divided into 6,000 shares of a par value of 10,000 Reichsmarks each.

In March or April 1929, the stockholders of Adam Opel A.G. sold to General Motors Corporation 80% of the stock of Adam Opel A.G. Of the remaining 20%, one-half, or 10%, was retained by my father.

In October 1931, my father made me a gift of his 10% of the stock of Adam Opel A. G., having a par value of 6,000,000 Reichsmarks. My father reserved certain rights in that stock and in its proceeds, but in 1937 my father surrendered all such rights.

In April 1929 my father had deposited said 10% of stock with the National City Bank in New York under an agreement whereby he had a right to call upon General Motors to buy the stock at certain agreed prices, while General Motors had an equal right to call upon my father to sell said stock to General Motors.

In November 1931, General Motors Corporation bought said 10% of the stock, the purchase price amounting to $3,737,748.64. The purchase price was paid part in cash and part in General Motors stock. They paid $2,594,748.64 in cash and delivered 47,625 shares of General Motors common stock. Subsequently this stock was sold and the proceeds were deposited in my name in the City Bank Farmers Trust Company, where also the cash received from General Motors Corporation had been deposited.

During November and December 1931 substantially all the cash in my accounts with the City Bank Farmers Trust Company was invested in high-grade American securities upon cable instructions from me to City Bank Farmers Trust Company.

In 1931 I bought substantially all of the outstanding capital stock of a Swiss corporation, organized in 1922, known as Uebersee Finanz Korporation A.G.* The entire purchase price of Uebersee stock was paid out of the proceeds of the sale of said 10% of Opel stock, which I received as a gift from my father.

In May 1932, I transferred to Uebersee's account with City Bank Farmers Trust Company in New York, all the securities and all the cash the Trust Company then held in my accounts, these constituting the proceeds of the sale of said 10% of Opel stock to General Motors Corporation.

* I shall refer to this hereafter as "Uebersee"

The total cost of the securities so transferred, plus the cash likewise transferred to Uebersee, amounted to approximately 12,000,000 Swiss francs. In this wise I became and still am a creditor of Uebersee in that amount.

In about 1936 I sold the stock of Uebersee to Swiss citizens, who now own it. I am not a stockholder nor director or officer of Uebersee, but act as its adviser in technical matters. As set out above, however, I am its principal creditor.

By far the greatest part of the proceeds of the sale of the 10% of the Opel stock to General Motors have been invested in various American enterprises, which I shall now mention. Besides these American interests, Uebersee has only relatively small investment consisting of a plantation in British East Africa, a part interest in a mine in Hungary, which is operated under a five year lease by Hungarians, and a house in St. Moritz, Switzerland.

The important American investments of Uebersee are in Harvard Brewing Co. and Spur Distributing Co.:

Harvard Brewing Co., a Delaware corporation organized in December 1932, is engaged in the business of manufacturing and distributing malt beverages. Its brewery is located in Lowell, Mass., and it does business exclusively in the New England States. Uebersee owns approximately 345,000 out of the 625,000 shares of common stock of Harvard outstanding.

Spur Distributing Co. Inc., is also a Delaware corporation organized in 1928. It is engaged in operating a gasoline distributing system through a chain of filling stations in states east of the Mississippi River. It also distributes mineral oil, tires and soft drinks. Uebersee owns approximately 73,000 out of 139,000 shares of common stock of Spur outstanding.*

*Spur has two affiliated companies: Winn Oil Co. and Ajax Transportation Co.

Uebersee also had large investments in other oil companies, such as Oil Refineries, Inc., Oil Production, Inc., and Hurricane Petroleum Corp., all Louisiana corporations. These corporations owned oil leases, produced crude oil and operated refineries. Within the past two years these corporations have met financial reverses resulting in a very substantial loss to Uebersee.

Uebersee owns all the stock of the following corporations:

1. Amerlagene, Inc. of Shreveport, La., engaged in crude oil production and in liquidating certain production refinery and pipe-line assets formerly owned by Hurricane Petroleum Corp.

2. Westminster Industrial Corp., a New York corporation with an office at 630 Fifth Avenue, New York City, engaged in financing small accounts, especially financing patents and the development of new manufacturing methods.

3. Ergo Machine Works, a New Jersey corporation, located in Dunellen, N. J., engaged in general machine work.

This affidavit is being submitted primarily in support of the application (N. Y. 169054) made by W. L. Schoenheimer for permission to open a $25,000. credit in my favor pursuant to cable instructions from Adler & Co. of Zurich, Switzerland. Further than that, however, I want to present to the Government a comprehensive statement of my relation to and interest in Uebersee, which controls the American enterprises hereinabove referred to. Every one of these enterprises, by reason of the foreign interest therein, i.e., the interest of Uebersee, may be under necessity of applying for licenses under the Executive Orders and Regulations. If in connection with these applications information is required as to the nature and extent of that foreign interest, perhaps this affidavit will serve a useful purpose.

(Signed) FRITZ V. OPEL

Defendant's Exhibit 69

Application No. NY246362

STATE OF NEW YORK }
COUNTY OF NEW YORK } ss.:

ISIDOR J. KRESEL, being duly sworn deposes and says:

On September 12th, 1941, I filed an application on behalf of Overseas Finance Corporation of Liestal-Basle, Switzerland, for a license permitting it to draw 25,000 Swiss Francs (approximately $6,000) out of an account which its bankers, Adlet & Co. of Zurich, Switzerland, maintain for the applicant's benefit with Arnhold & S. Bleichroeder, Inc., investment bankers, 30 Broad Street, New York City.

On October 19th, 1941, I received a letter from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York requesting information concerning the applicant on Treasury Form TFBE-1 (Revised). I submit herewith the information required, as far as it has been made available to me; I cannot give any of the information upon my own knowledge:

1. The name of the business enterprise is the Overseas Finance Corporation (Uebersee Finanz Korporation A.G.); it was organized under the laws of Switzerland in 1922 and has been operating as a holding company since that time; the principal office is located at Liestal-Basle, Switzerland; it has no other branches, subsidiaries, affiliates, or sales offices located outside of the United States.

2. Report on TFR-100 has not yet been filed.

3. The applicant is a holding company, having its principal investments in the United States. The chief investments in the United States are in the following corporations:

Harvard Brewing Co., Lowell, Mass.	a Delaware Corporation
Spur Distributing Co. Nashville, Tenn.	a Delaware Corporation
Amerlagene Inc. Shreveport, La.	a Delaware Corporation
Westminster Industrial Corporation, 630 Fifth Ave., N. Y. C.	a New York Corporation
Ergo Machine Works Inc. Dunellin, N. J.	a New Jersey Corporation

4. The directors of the applicant are:

Dr. Eugene Meier, Liestal-Basle, Switzerland

Dr. Joseph Henggeler, Zurich, Switzerland

Dr. Hans Frankenberg, Hotel Ritz-Carlton, New York City

Dr. Frankenberg, a Haytian national, immigrated to the United States from Cuba on March 25, 1941.

Dr. Meier and Dr. Henggeler are Swiss nationals.

5. Deponent has no information with respect to the names, addresses, present whereabouts and nationality of persons directly or indirectly controlling the business enterprise, except that Fritz von Opel is its principal creditor for about 12,000,000 Swiss Francs. The certificates of stock of the applicant are, I am informed and believe, made out as "bearer" shares and there is no information as to the identity of the owners of the stock.

6. The business has not since January 1st, 1939, nor is it presently affiliated with, owned by, or possessed of any interest in any other enterprise, foreign or domestic, (except as noted under Number "3" above) and except that it has a small investment in a plantation in British East Africa, a part interest in a mine in Hungary, operated under a five year lease by Hungarians, and a house in St. Moritz, Switzerland. To deponent's best knowledge, information and belief, there have been no transactions since January 1st, 1939, having as their effect any material change in its affiliations, ownerships or interest.

7. The applicant has no funded debt outstanding. It has outstanding only one class of stock.

8. The principal assets of the corporation consist of:

approximately 345,000 shares of common stock of Harvard Brewing Company approximately 73,000 shares of common stock of Spur Distributing Company, Inc.

all the stock of Amerlagene, Inc., Westminster Industrial Corp. and Ergo Machine Works.

The other assets are enumerated in paragraph "6" hereof.

The principal assets, consisting of the shares in the aforementioned corporations, are in the United States. The remaining assets are in Switzerland.

As far as the undersigned has been informed the liabilities of the corporation in addition to those for which this application seeks to make payment, are approximately 12,000,000 Swiss Francs due to Fritz von Opel, a citizen of the Principality of Liechtenstein, who has been in the United States since May 9th, 1940 on a visitor's visa and who resides at the Hotel Delmonico, New York City.

The undersigned has no information available bearing on questions (a), (b) and (c) except as shown in the application in support of which this affidavit is submitted, from which it appears that the applicant maintains a dollar account with Adler & Co. its bankers in Zurich, Switzerland, who in turn are holding said dollar balances with Arnhold & S. Bleichroeder, Inc., investment bankers, of 30 Broad Street, New York City, in an account called "Adler & Co. re Overseas". The amount in said dollar account as of September 12th, 1941, the date of this application, was approximately $60,000.

9. No person or enterprise owns, controls or licenses the use of any patents, copyrights, machinery, processes or operating methods used by the Corporation.

10. There are no agreements between the applicant and any other persons, which have as their purpose or effect influence or control by such other persons over the business enterprise conducted by the Corporation, or by the Corporation over such other persons.

11. The applicant is a holding company and has no regular monthly income. Its expenditures consist mainly of the payment of taxes in Switzerland, as shown in Number "12" below, and also for the payment of directors' salaries and accountants' fees which amount to approximately 1,200 Swiss Francs a month.

12. The transactions or operations to be covered by the license for which application is filed are the payment of various liabilities of the applicant, as follows:

(amounts stated are in Swiss Francs)

"Cantonal Tax St. Moritz, 1940, due September 1941	2,500

nr. Korbecke, Kr. Soest, Westphalia

My dear Mr. von Opel,

Having returned from my trip I hasten to reply to your letter of the 12th inst. receipt of which I had confirmed to you through my office already on July 14. We, too, have been informed in the meantime about the development of the conditions in the mines and with Koranyi. We had once again sent Mr. Lucovnik to Hungary; meanwhile, however, he left, since, due to the unsettled conditions, it was not possible for him to find a way to maintain productive work in the mines. The Balazs Group also, which had given financial assistance to Mr. Koranyi and which was willing to continue such assistance, now seems to have withdrawn in view of the unfavorable statements which you had made to these gentlemen in Budapest at the time regarding the person of Mr. Koranyi.

I am not in a position to form a clear picture of your present attitude towards Mr. Koranyi since I noticed from a newspaper article that, in contrast to your previous aggressive intentions, you have withdrawn your civil suit against Koranyi. It seems certain to me, however, that a continued exploitation of the mines under Koranyi is impossible. Therefore, in order to make any progress in this matter, other ways must be found to avoid any misunderstanding. I believe it proper to present to you once more briefly the attitude of my firm in this entire situation.

My firm maintains that in this whole matter it went to the limits of the possible, if not beyond. It closed the delivery contract with Koranyi and, by making available to him large advance payments as well as technical experts, had given him every opportunity to insure orderly operation of the mines. My firm is deeply disappointed by Mr. Koranyi's actions in violation of the contract, and therefore cannot, and furthermore in view of the foreign exchange regulations would be unable, to assume any additional financial guarantees. Thus, if the operation of the mines is to be resumed, the most logical step in the opinion of my firm would be to have your company take over their operation.

You yourself have expressed this idea, making it contingent, however, on the condition that quantities of bauxite far in excess of the Koranyi contract be purchased at the terms and prices of the Bauxit Trust. In order to follow up your proposal, will you please furnish me in detail the prices and other terms at which your firm would deliver. May I ask you right from the start to keep your requirements as low as possible, for increased bauxite imports from Hungary should definitely give us a certain equivalent for our financial support of Koranyi.

If there are no objections from the point of view of the law, we would agree in principle to transfer our mining rights to your company. This could be accomplished within the framework of a general agreement.

Looking forward with interest to further news from you, I remain, with best regards,

Very truly yours,

Giulini Bros.
Attention Dr. Edgar Giulini
Ludwigshafen on the Rhine

My dear Dr. Giulini,

I regret that I delayed answering your kind letter of July 19 for a few days because, unfortunately, Dr. Salusinszky, recently met his death in an automobile accident. Moreover, Ministerialrat Tassonyi was leave and absent from Budapest.

Koranyi.

Concerning the newspaper item mentioned by you Mr. von Krausz wote me as follows: "The newspaper item was erroneously interpreted. Dr. Salusinszky never withdrew the lawsuit against Koranyi but merely stayed it pending the duration of the agreement with Koranyi. It is possible to continue the proceedings at any time. At the present time, several criminal charges have been filed against Koranyi and I have been told that he is a steady guest at the Police Office."

I further understand that the mining authorities have ordered all owners, i.e., Lucovnik, Norhianszky and Transdanubia to pay the overdue wages and payments on government charges owed by Koranyi. The mining authorities are particularly interested in the payment of the wages. The half share of wages charged to me is said to be 1,598.31 pengoes. Allegedly, Horianszky has already paid the wages which were in arrears and I believe that we cannot avoid payment without risking levy of execution or at the very least, the thorough displeasure of the mining authorities.

Shipments.

Upon receipt of an order for about 150,000 tons of which annually 30-40,000 tons would be shipped,—doubling the annual quantity being possible if new mines are opened—I could make shipments at a price of RM 13.20 per ton f. o. b. car or ship Gyoer. Such shipment would be made on the basis of 56% aluminum, 3% silica, and [illegible]% humidity, the price to be increased or reduced by RM 1.00 for each 1% of an additional or lesser amount of aluminum, and to be increased or decreased by RM 2.00 for each 1% lesser or additional amount of silica. Carloads containing less than 55% aluminum or more than 3% silica will not be shipped.

As to the assumption of Koranyi's liability to which I declared my readiness within the framework of a long-term agreement, the simplest way would be for Transdanubia to undertake that liability towards you, of course, upon assignment of your rights against Koranyi. We are examining at the present time whether that is legally possible, and in particular whether such a step would prevent the re-emergence of Koranyi.

If a solution is found, and I will report to you about that within a few days, I propose that Transdanubia will reimburse you, on a continuing basis, in the amount of [Note in handwriting: "Is higher"]

RM. 0.60 per ton until the entire liability of RM. 160,000.00 is paid off.

The basic price of RM 13.20 mentioned to you hereinabove is substantially below the price charged by the trust and, in my opinion, will not include the profit margin of 15% considered as adequate by the Mining Authority. Should that profit margin be reached, however, I am ready to pay off the Koranyi liabilities at a correspondingly faster rate. If, upon examination of the legal aspects of the question, you decide to assume the liabilities of Koranyi mentioned above I shall be willing to advance the corresponding amounts; you may repay them by way of preference, from the reimbursement fund. If you agree with the above proposals which, I believe, would constitute a final settlement of the matter satisfactory to all concerned, please advise me, at an early date, and state the quantities which can be supplied within this year. You can also reach me at any time—best by making a person to person call—by No. Westerland 772.

I remain, with best regards,

very sincerely yours,

Dear Mr. von Opel:

At the request of Dr. Edgar Giulini who had urgently to go on a short trip, I should like to inform you of the following telegram which we sent yesterday to Mr. Lucovnik, engineer, and to our bauxite mine:

> "Have Lucovnik extend time limit set by Budapest Mining Authority in view of general situation and to declare agreement to Sükkösd"

This will show you that we also have caused Mr. Lucovnik to request from the Mining Authority in Budapest an extension of the time limit fixed for September 10 and that we have also agreed with the appointment of Dr. Sükkösd as joint representative.

According to our information you also agree to the appointment of this agent.

At the present we are occupied with getting full control of the mining rights assigned to us in order to clear the way for further arrangements. We shall then again refer to this matter.

With best regards and Heil Hitler,

sincerely yours,

My dear Mr. Frick,

Thank you very much for your kind letter of September 8. The gentleman whom the Mining Authority has been considering is not Dr. Sükkösd but Oberbergrat [Mining Official] Dr. Somogyi. I request you therefore, to inform your Budapest agent accordingly. I have already declared my agreement to the appointment of Dr. Somogyi.

The most important question, of course, is what is being done about resumption of production. From the reports of my agents I gained the impression that the Mining Authority more than ever insists on continuation of production and, conceivably, may expropriate the mining rights if we do not comply with their wish.

If you are not interested in the shipments it is an easy matter to sell the production elsewhere since everywhere, also in Switzerland, there is a shortage of bauxite because of the war and the blockade. Unless I hear from you to the contrary I assume that you agree that the production may be sold to third parties.

Please give Dr. Giulini my regards,

I remain,

We acknowledge with thanks receipt of your letter of September 11, addressed to the individual signing below on the right side. We note from it that the gentleman under consideration by the Mining Authority, Budapest is not Dr. Sükkösd but Oberbergrat (mining official) Dr. Somogyi. We immediately got in touch with our attorney concerning this matter in order to make, if necessary, the correction.

We share your view that, under present conditions the interest and demand for Hungarian bauxite will increase. This situation will also afford to us the opportunity of overcoming the present difficulties. We are also of the opinion that, in view of the mobility which you have as a German residing abroad, and in view of the funds at your disposal, you would do meritorious service for the raw-material supply of the German aluminum industry and the entire war economy of Germany if you would tackle with all your energy the resumption of production in the mines. We ourselves are by all means interested in a resumption of Hungarian bauxite deliveries in view of the present situation and, depending on the possibilities of production would also urge that the Vereinigte Aluminiumwerke (United Aluminumworks) to whom we sent just recently a sample from the previous Koranyi-shipments and possibly, also the Martin Works should take a share of the deliveries.

Please advise us as immediately, if possible, of your reaction to this suggestion.

Very truly yours,

Heil Hitler,

Defendant's Exhibit 83

(Letterhead of Bayer & Clauson, New York)

August 13, 1936

Dr. Hanns Frankenberg,
Uebersee Finanz Korporation, A.G.,
Zurich, Switzerland.

Dear Dr. Frankenberg:

We have received your letter of July 21, 1936 and based upon the figures with respect to traveling expenses and legal fees, have completed the Federal income tax returns of Uebersee Finanz Korporation, A. G., for the year 1935. We are enclosing herewith the original and duplicate copies of the regular income tax return and the personal holding company tax return. The duplicate copies are for your files. The original copies should be signed by two officers and sworn to before the American consul, and should have the corporation's seal affixed. Upon return to us, we will complete our necessary affidavits and will file them before the required date.

As you were informed, these returns were due for filing June 15, 1936, but we have obtained an extension until September 15, 1936 and believe that we can obtain a further extension until December 15, 1936. Based upon the returns as prepared, there is no regular income tax to be paid. The personal holding company tax of $28,736.64 is payable in quarterly installments, and if the return is filed December 15, 1936, it would be necessary at that time to pay three-fourths of the tax together with interest at the rate of 6% on the quarterly installments due June 15, 1936 and September 15, 1936.

We are also in receipt of your letter of July 28, 1936 with respect to the question of doing business in the United States. Since we were informed by you in June that Uebersee is no longer a personal holding company, we will eliminate that tax from our consideration. The new tax law does not fully define what constitutes doing business in the United States, but does provide that it does not include the effecting of security transactions in the United States. The law itself, therefore, does not provide an answer to the question of whether the holding of a total or a majority of the stock of an American company by a non-resident foreign company would constitute doing business in the United States. There have been practically no rulings on this general subject and the only one with respect to the present question states that "the mere investment by a foreign corporation of any of its funds in United States securities does not constitute carrying on or doing business in the United States." If the foreign corporation does not exercise its control of the United States company in the United States, does not have an agent or agents act on the board of directors, or as an officer, and merely executes proxies from abroad for stockholders' meetings, it could certainly be argued that the foreign corporation is not carrying on business in the United States. It is possible that the Treasury Department would contend that the possession of control of a United States company in itself constitutes doing business in the United States. However, our opinion is that the answer would be based on the facts in each case, that the mere possession of control does not necessarily involve the carrying on of business, and that it would depend upon whether the foreign corporation by its acts exercised its control in the United States.

As a non-resident foreign corporation not doing business in the United States, Uebersee would only be subject to a flat tax of 15% on interest received and 10% on the full amount of dividends received. As a foreign corporation doing business in the United States, it would be subject to a capital stock tax and an excess profits tax, if any, and to a regular income tax of 22% on its net income from interest, 15% of any dividends received, profits from securities sold in the United States, less its American operating expenses. In neither case would Uebersee be subject to the present tax on undistributed profits. Under the circumstances where the amount of dividends received was relatively large compared with the other income, less tax would be paid by the foreign corporation if it had an office or was carrying on business in the United States.

For example; take the case of a foreign corporation having interest income of $50,000.00, domestic dividends received of $150,000.00, and American operating expenses of $10,000.00. Under the first case it would pay a tax of $22,500.00, consisting of $7,500.00 on the interest and of $15,000.00 on the dividends. Under the second case it would pay an income tax of $13,750.00, 22% of its net income determined as follows:

Interest income	$50,000.00
Domestic dividends received (less credit of 85% thereof)	22,500.00
Total	$72,500.00
Less—American operating expenses	10,000.00
Net taxable income	$62,500.00

In addition, under the second case, it would have been necessary for the corporation to have declared a capital stock value of $625,000.00 entailing a capital stock tax of $625.00 in order to avoid an excess profits tax on its net income of $62,500.00, which tax ranges from 6% to 12%.

The question of the liability of the stockholders of the foreign corporation for United States income taxes on any dividends paid to them by such corporation, would also have to be considered, but the section of the law which states that dividends received from a foreign corporation, which derives more than 50% of its gross income from sources within the United States, is income from the United States, makes no distinction between resident and non-resident foreign corporations. The present law requires any corporation paying a taxable dividend to a non-resident alien to withhold a tax of 10% of such dividend. As a practical matter with respect to the enforcement of this section of the law, it would not seem to make much difference whether Uebersee was construed as carrying on business in the United States or not. If attempt was made at enforcement, which is not now anticipated, the Treasury Department in either case would attach such assets as were in the United States and would undoubtedly place restraining orders on the American subsidiary companies.

Based upon all of the foregoing, it would appear that it might be advantageous for Uebersee to consider itself as carrying on business in the United States, but without having an office or domicile here, provided that it is going to have a relatively large amount of dividend income as compared with its other income and that it is not going to have large profits from the sale of securities in the United States. In the event of the occasional sale of any of its holdings, it would be necessary to be very particular that such sale was effected and consummated abroad. Under such a set-up it would be necessary for Uebersee to file capital stock tax returns as doing business in the United States, declaring a value sufficiently high to avoid paying any excess profits taxes.

We trust that the foregoing will furnish you with some additional information on the subject of United States taxes, and we are looking forward to hearing from you further in the matter.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) Bayer & Clauson

MEMORANDUM FOR DR. FRANKENBERG

Re: Overseas

In pursuance of our memorandum of the 19th inst. we enclose:

1. Copy of our letter of June 20 to Dr. Henggeler,

2. copy of Dr. Henggeler's letter of June 22 to Adler, and

3. copy of the letter by the Bankgesellschaft of June 19 to Dr. Henggeler,

4. copy of the letter by Dr. Henggeler of June 22 to Bankgesellschaft,

5. copy of the statement furnished to the Bankgesellschaft, called "confirmation" (Bestaetigung) in letter No. 4.

In the absence of Dr. Henggeler we have asked the Bankgesellschaft to enlighten us regarding the word "actual" (effektiv). The Bankgesellschaft answered us that it should be understood in the meaning of section 756 of the O.R. (Law of Obligations). This section reads as follows:

"If a draft is made out in a currency which is not in circulation at the place of payment or in an account currency (?), the amount shown on the draft may be paid at the time it becomes due in the local currency, unless the maker has expressly stipulated payment in the currency named in the draft by the usage of the word "actual" (effektiv) or by a similar term."

6. copy of the letter of June 23 by Adler to the Bankgesellschaft,

7. copy of the letter of June 18 by the Bankgeselischaft to Dr. Henggeler. The Bankgesellschaft informed us tonight that the names of the stockholders will be made known to Dr. Henggeler tonight. Thereupon we cabled to Dr. Frankenberg as follows: "Will probably be able to cable names of stockholders tomorrow." Zurich, June 23, 1936.

Dr. J. Henggeler, Attorney, Zurich,

Dear Doctor,

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 18th inst. regarding the Overseas Finance Corporation, which contains the supplemented draft agreement. It finds our approval, except that in the matter of the dollar transfer, we.

would like to see the word: "actual" included, in view of the present international situation; since in our opinion the purchasers of the shares, or later we in our capacity as the bank, as well as later on at the repurchase, the Frima Verwaltungsanstalt, Vaduz would have to furnish actual dollars for capital and dividend. Should the agreement already be signed, the "actual" clause may be included in a separate letter. We believe that this would be to the advantage of both parties. Furthermore, under section 2 in the purchase agreement should be included that the transfer tax stamp, not only the one for the sale but also the one for the option, charged to the seller, that is to the Frima Verwaltungsanstalt, Vaduz. Under section 3, fourth line, the supplement "free from the Swiss coupon tax" is missing.

We are looking forward to receiving the agreement for signature, and meanwhile we shall make the necessary preparations with the buyers. We have 14 to 16 persons and firms in prospect, to whom we intend to allot differing amounts, so that the set-up does not appear too artificial. We are prepared to meet with you in the near future for the final clarification of the correspondence and the figures connected with it.

As you may recall, we have provided for the Bank in Baden to act as agency holding the shares. A short agreement with this bank would have to be concluded, stipulating a modest trusteeship * fee.

Very truly yours,

SCHWEIZERISCHE BANKGESELLSCHAFT

Dear Sirs,

We are in receipt of your letter dated October 23rd and beg to hand you enclosed certificate from the Union Bank of Switzerland, Zurich, duly legalised by the British Consulat General, Zurich, which you may present to the Custodian. We assume that this certificate will induce the Custodian to convince himself that all holders of our shares are of Swiss nationality. At the same time he may gather from it that Mr. von Opel is not a shareholder of our company. For these reasons we presume that the release of our property will take place in due time.

On this occasion we wish to state that at the time we have assigned our claim against the estate of the late R. N. Clark to Messrs. Adler & Co. Société Anonyme, Zurich. You would oblige by informing us about the present situation of this matter as well as when the entry of this amount might be expected.

Thanking you, we are, dear Sirs,

Dear Sirs,

We are obliged for your letter of 6th October which reached us last week by airmail.

The certificate from the Union Bank of Switzerland has been submitted to the Custodian of Enemy Property here. Our translation of the German is as follows: "97 parts are lying with us and are in Swiss possession" and the Custodian points out that the actual ownership of the shares is not stated.

Would you please therefore obtain from the Bank a similar letter giving the names of the actual holders of the shares at 3rd September 1939 and their nationality in each case. Should the 97 shares, or a majority of them, be held by a company the Custodian will eventually require similar information regarding the holding company.

It is believed locally that Mr. von Opel is a German subject and a majority shareholder in your company and the Custodian requests full information regarding his relation to the company.

At the same time we could point out that your estate has not been confiscated. The Custodian, following the internment of the manager, placed watchmen and caretakers on the estate to safeguard the assets. These, he will be pleased to withdraw on receipt of evidence that the estate belonged at 3rd September last to neutral subjects.

It will assist us if you will include an English translation of any certificate obtained from the Bank.

We are informed that Mr. Tessin was a member of the Nazi party and although some of the internees have been released, there is no immediate possibility of his being released on parole.

Yours faithfully,

Referring to your letter of January 23, 1942, we wish to advise you as follows:

If we deduct the 1566.9 tons finally settled in lot 1 from the 1608.1 tons shipped in October, the difference is 41,200 kg instead of 56,900. If this weight is added to the 1608.1

tons the weight to be settled in lot 2 properly amounts to 1649.30.

The quantities established by you for the November shipment fully agree with the weights set forth in the bills of lading; on that basis the full weight of lot 3 is 1,189,400 instead of the 1,189,350 kg claimed by you.

The difference in the December shipment (Lot 4) is only 50 kg. and the proper weight is 617,000 kg. We have gratefully noted your correction in that respect.

We have most rigorously urged our plant management in Zalahalap to handle the advices immediately, and in the promptest fashion. These mistakes are solely due to the fact that substantial changes occurred in the personnel of our plant management.

We noted that you stand, as before, by your offer of July 31 and thereupon promptly got in touch with the V.A.W. and the Martin Works in order to make it possible, by their participation in the receipt of deliveries, to give you a total order up to 150,000 tons. We have communicated to both firms the prices for shipment and the conditions of your offer of July 31 and, upon receiving their reply, will immediately refer to the matter again. Dear Mr. von Opel:

We confirm our letter of September 19 and regret to be unable today to give you any final statement concerning your offer of July 31, 1939.

As a result of our efforts to induce also the firms of V.A.W. and Martin Works to participate in the receipt of bauxite deliveries we have, in the meantime, first heard from the V.A.W. that they have no interest in such participation because of the price which they say is too high while the Martin Works for the time being, has advised us of no more than its agreement in principle to a participation in accepting bauxite shipments. Thereupon the three firms have agreed to meet again in the immediate future for a discussion of the bauxite problem. We will then give you further information.

We will again refer to the question of a joint representative if we have information about the matter from Budapest.

Dear Mr. von Opel;

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 28 addressed to the individual signing on the right which has just now reached us. We advise you in reply that, both, the Martin Works and our firm are disposed, now, as they were before, to accept, bauxite shipments from the Koranyi mines whereas the V.A.W.—as we informed you already—cannot see their way to take part in this deal because of the price which they say is too high.

A substantial change in the situation, however, has occurred as a result of the bankruptcy of Korany which, we assume is known to you. It is therefore a fortunate co-incidence, that because of your postponement of your trip to the United States you now intend to stay for several weeks in Hungary in order to be able to observe the development of the matter on the spot.

Please advise us whether you will again stay in the Hotel "Gellert" so that, if necessary, we can get in touch with you by letter since a trip to Budapest will not be possible for us in the immediate future.

FRITZ
OPEL

Grand Hotel Dolder, Zürich, November 10th, 1939.

Mr. Walter E. Guyette
Harvard Brewing Co.
Lowell, Mass.

My dear Walter,

This is to acknowledge receipt of your letter of Sept. 30th which is so full of pleasant facts and figures that it is really outstanding among the news one is used to get nowadays. The last weeks have been very stormy indeed for everybody in the old country, and there were so many things to arrange and to care for that I had to restrict all communications to U. S. A. to a bunch of cables which I exchanged mostly with Mr. Ulrich.

It was therefore comforting for me to know you at the steering wheel of the Harvard ship, clearing out in time of dangerous storm-zones and paddling along now in a calm sea and sunshine.

I was very sorry indeed not to have been able to pay you my regular visits but until September my broken leg was not yet fit for a longer trip and then in October I twice had to cancel my reservations on account of still more urgent matters. I am now on the way to Hungary to speed up production in my bauxit-mine but I hope to be home in St. Moritz for Christmas.

It was my idea to bring you personally an invitation to St. Moritz for any time in January or February but I am afraid now that you, as far away American and not used to war as we are, might look upon an invitation to Europe more as a liability instead of an asset. In my opinion of course there would be no danger at all, using an Italian liner to Genua, from where it is a short ride of about 8 hours to St. Moritz. Food is not rationed yet in Switzerland, nor is liquor and wine, neither girls nor sun. So I could guarantee you an all round pleasant stay, whether you want to come alone or bring Mrs. Guyette along. In case Italy would go into war, or Germany would start fighting England with the throttle wide open, then naturally you would better postpone your visit to the first winter after the war. You have to make your own decision but please keep in mind that it would be all too pleasant for me to see you after so long a time and to discuss with you in details all the problems Harvard is confronted with.

I don't know if you remember the last meeting in Mr. Clauson's office when we tried to calculate the probable barrelage of the past season. My figure has been by far the highest viz. 185'000 and I am now, as you surely believe, not only proud of my exact calculation but even more proud of all the men under your leadership who managed to pass this figure by 300 barrels. I think it would be worth while if we all, you, Ulrich, Protzman, Clauson and I would do some calculating again as to the barrelage of the coming season and then use the average so arrived at as basic figure for the budget. As my guess in the "calculation-competition" is, I want you to enter the figure of 203'000 barrels (I hope you are not afraid of the high expectations.) I earnestly believe that it would be much more practical to have the budget figured on 200'000 barrels than on a lower figure which we are sure to overshoot. The gone years budget showed 50'000 $ profit on a production of 150'000 barrels what means that the "breaking even point" lies at around 135'000 barrels. In all circumstances it should be left there or even brought down by virtue of all experience we gathered in the meantime.

As to the earnings they look less favourable than the sales. I did not yet receive the statement per September 30th but I figure the total earnings for the fiscal year to be around 165'000 $. This figure is, as I have to confess, exactly 25,000 $ lower than I expected, due to the fact that the 35,000 barrels above the budget did not bring 4$ net profit per barrel, as I assumed, but only 3.25 $. Assuming the same rate of expenses for next year (based upon 200'000 barrels), the earnings would be 222'000, whereas, according to my former calculation, it should be 262'000.—.

As soon as the final figures are available, I am going to analyze them but as there was no change in cost of material, either I must have been wrong in calculating the savings realizable by plus-production or some of the departments did not succeed in getting the full amount of savings I figured with.

Your assistance in solving the problem I am puzzled with is the following:

In last year's budget we figured with 150'000 barrels and net earnings of 50'000 $, each barrel of the basic production being charged with definite amounts of different expense items. The moment the production runs above the basic figures, the rate of expenses changes, for instance the net cost of material per barel produced will be as high as before or will remain 100% of the basic costs.

On the other hand general and administrative expenses, being already absorbed by the basic production, will be null percent i.e. can be disregarded at all. In between lie different items f.i. delivery which is reduced to say 20%, it being nearly equal if a truck unloads 2 or 3 barrels at the time. Cooperage on a big scale ought to be more economical and so other items. In other words, it must be possible to calculate exactly the savings of plus-production by analyzing each expense as to its influence on same. It is hard to explain in a few words what I mean but I hope you underand the principal I am after and I feel that with these figures at our disposal we should better than now be able to check the expenses within the different departments.

There's one more question left. I was very much embarrassed to see the prices of all farm products shoot up, whether such a rise is unjustified, as I believe, or not, I don't know yet to what an extend hop and malt went up, or to put it better, how crazy the people got who sell it. I hope anyhow that you stuck to the plan we agreed upon viz: to have so big a stock and forward orders on hand to cover our supply for at least 1 1/2 years. Please let me know some details.

While having this letter typed I receive your letter of October 30th. I fully share your views regarding Arthur Sullivan and his law-firm and I am convinced that the new arrangements you made, will work out satisfactory to all concerned. The promotion of Hughes Sudall to the position as secretary must be applauded in every respect, as he already did the work and he is able and willing to render to the company his best services.

Sullivan's resignation however leaves the question open of who in the future is going to look after the special problems he was supposed to solve. You certainly remember the numerous discussions we had regarding our policy in respect to the import of beer into the state of Massassuchets. I mentioned five different ways, all of which should lead to an increase of Mass. production against the out-of-state breweries:

1. I suggested one or the other form of import-tax and while I personally had some doubts as to its possibility, Sullivan felt that it should be possible to have a 1 or 2 $ tax per barel imposed upon the imports.

2. I suggested that the commonwealth should create a kind of "health-certificate" with the effect that all breweries selling in Mass. should be checked monthly by Mass. commissioners in respect of the sanitary conditions and their production facilities. The cost of such control should be based on each single brewery's capacity and the time used for this inspection. My idea was that this would place an extra burden upon the out-of-state competitors, most of them being large and far-away breweries.

3. We discussed the discrimination against Mass. products, caused by our paying taxes in advance, whereas the out-of-state brewers were, in many cases, not taxed at all on account of their distributors or wholesalers having gone broke in the meantime.

4. I mentioned the unfair competition i.e. the unjustified price-cutting, masterfully engineered by some out-of-state brewers of lesser reputation for whom our commonwealth is just one more dumping ground. Such a practice is undoubtedly illegal and I told Sullivan to go after these boys and establish a test case as quick as possible, what he promised to do.

5. We discussed the engagement of a first class lawyer or political talent by the Mass. brewers association, who should work along the lines mentioned and who, furthermore, should look to a really brotherly unification of all Mass. brewing interests. I suggested, as you certainly remember, some joint advertising which should emphasize the importance of the Mass. brewing industry to all trades and the heavy losses especially to Mass. labour and wage earners, caused by the import of beer.

The underlying idea of all these suggestions was that half of the supply of beer consumed in Mass. comes from out-of-state. It always seemed unwise to me to fight our neighbours in some or the other dirty way (Hofacker's famous green ale) instead of uniting our efforts and licking the enemy where he really is viz. out-of-state. There's plenty of room in Mass. for all Mass. brewers and we all could run with full capacity if we only succeeded in reducing the common enemy's share in the mass. market from 1/2 to 1/3. For Harvard it would mean a rise from 200'000 to 266'000 barrels, or based on the present earning power—a net-income of 430'000 $.

You see it is worth while to go after these things and it drove me mad that so far Sullivan did not show any results. It is up to you now to choose or supervise the right man, able and willing and full of energy to do the trick.

It is most welcome to me that you have been elected to the board of the U. S. Brewers Association, this being not only a well served honour to the brewery but also to yourself. It means even more to the association itself: I doubt whether there is another brewer in the states who can compare in good looks to our president!

Now at least a few words about the preferred shares matter. Although sharing your views in most of the points, I cannot agree to, that subscription and sale of the preferred stock was in any way against the interest of the holders of the common stock. Every single stockholder was entitled to subscribe and to buy his equal share what however was not done by virtue of the fact that, as you mention in your letter, the conditions in the brewery were quite uneasy and the common stock quoted far below par at the respective time. I am therefore quite satisfied that the mere misunderstanding is settled, as the firm of Bleichroeder & Co. and all office partners were very helpful to me in a lot of respects.

Now to the last paragraph of your letter. When I saw the war coming and when I thought of the ill feelings or even the hate it might bring along towards Germany, I felt I should not endanger the interests of the Overseas Finance Corporation and the even more important interest of Harvard itself, by continueing in my position especially as director of Harvard. Today however things became different. After 10 years of residence in Switzerland, I was able to acquire another nationality. I felt myself obliged to do so in the endeavour of protecting the interests of all people and companies in your country and abroad I am connected with and you therefore can rest assured that there is not the slightest change in our relationship. As I already cabled you I will be always at your disposal either for the company or for you personally.

As I might not be able to write to you in time for Christmas, I take this opportunity to send you and all your men, especially Dr. Jurst, Mr. Protzman, Mr. Dionne and Mr. Gross my best wishes. Shortly after Xmas I hope to have the pleasure of seeing you in St. Moritz.

I remain, dear Walter, with best personal regards,

Yours sincerely,

Dr. Edgar Guilini
Giulini Bros. G. m. b. H.
Ludwigshafen on the Rhine

Dear Dr. Guilini:

I take the liberty of restating in writing the contents of our telephone conversation which we had this morning. According to Dr. von Krausz, the Mining Authority, at the beginning of this week, has objected to the start of production on the ground that we were required to pay not only the overdue wages amounting to about 3000 pengoes a payment to which both of us had long agreed but, in addition, the wages for two weeks' notice in the amount of about 4400 pengoes. Moreover, from the Korany are unpaid social insurance contributions and the constantly disputed claims of the property owners are due. Mr. von Krausz believes to be able to satisfy the social insurance with 1500 pengoe and the property owners with 3000 although they ask much more; accordingly, a total of 8900 pengoes would have to be additionally paid.

Although our agreement clearly provides that we will pay these overdue fees one half share each, I thought it nevertheless correct to advise you of the matter and to obtain your consent to the payment. It goes without saying that we will take no action without informing Dr. Ballay appropriately.

I further gratefully noted that you will see to it that funds are made available in the Clearing procedure as quickly as possible since we cannot ship without being paid because the Hungarian banks refuse—a thing which I cannot understand—to advance pengoes on claims payable in marks. In view of the impossibility of transferring foreign exchange from Hungary, particularly in view of the worsening balance of payments of Hungary, you will understand that I would like to avoid to have excessive foreign exchange funds frozen beyond those already invested. Of course, I share your opinion that, within a few weeks, the entire dealings will run smoothly so that, in the long run, both of us, as I hope, will derive pleasure from our business association.

On April 16, I am leaving on the Conte di Savoia for the United States where you can reach me, if necessary, at the address set forth below. If I can render you any service in the United States in business or private matters, I shall of course be glad to do so.

Hoping to be able to see you soon again, I remain with kind regards,

yours sincerely

[Enclosure to letter Dr. Ballay of 3-20-40]

Budapest, March 14, 1940

To Messrs.
Giulini Brothers
Ludwigshafen

[Stamped Received March 26, 1940]

We acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 6, 1940 which reads as follows:

Ludwigshafen, on the Rhine, March 6, 1940

Transdanubia Bauxit A.G.
Budapest

On the basis of the negotiations conducted by your Mr. Fritz von Opel, on the one hand, and by our attorney-in-fact, Dr. Georg Ballay, attorney at law in Budapest, we confirm the fact that we concluded with you the following supply contract:

You undertake to ship to us 100,000 tons of bauxite at a basic price of RM 10.00 (ten reichsmarks) f.o.b. car Suemeg or Zalahalep stations (Komitat (country) Zala, Hungary), shipment to be made from the "Margot I-IV" and "Edgar" mines, one half of which is owned by you, one half by Mr. Lucovnik, engineer, and subject to the following conditions:

Quality: the bauxite which is to be supplied shall contain not less than 55% Al_2O_3 and not more than 4% SiO_2.

The quality shall be determined for every 1000 tons supplied. The procedure to be followed in making the analysis shall be subject to a special provision entitled "bauxite analysis" which was signed simultaneously with this agreement by the parties. The costs of the analysis shall be borne in equal parts by both parties.

Discounts and additional payments: The basic price of RM 10.00 shall refer to a quality of bauxite containing 58% Al_2O_3 and 3% SiO_2 and exhibiting a humidity of 7%.

[stamped: Contracts folder]

If the bauxite which is supplied shall contain more or less Al_2O_3, RM 1.00 for each 1% and ton shall be added or deducted, as the case may be. If the bauxite should contain more or less than 3% silicic acid, RM 2.00 for each 1% and ton shall be deducted or added as the case may be.

Shortages because of humidity in excess of 7% shall be made up by compensating shipments made without charge. One half of the freight charges to the German frontier shall be charged to you and will be credited to us. You are at liberty to pay off the credit thus accruing in our favor by making shipments to us without charging us therefor.

Price: As of today, RM 10,00 equal 16.10 Pengoe (sixteen Pengoe and ten heller). If, as a result of a change in the foreign exchange situation, the pengoe equivalent should decrease by more than 5% and we should not be willing, to compensate you for the decrease in proceeds by increased payments in marks you shall be authorized to cancel this agreement.

Payment: Payment shall be made against duplicate bill of lading through the German-Hungarian Clearing. The Reichmark payments shall be made by us to the German Clearing Fund (Verrechnungskasse) on your behalf to the account of the Hungarian National Bank.

Shipments: Shipment of the 100,000 ton of bauxite shall be started in the spring of 1940 as soon as weather conditions permit. You undertake, to deliver not less than 25,000 tons during the year 1940, another 35,000 tons during the year 1941, and the balance during the year 1942.

The obligation to make shipments terminates if bauxite of the agreed quality shall no longer be available in the mentioned mines in quantities which make mining commercially feasible and if substitute shipments from other mines shall not be possible.

In the event of disputes the parties agree for every controversy arising out of this final letter to submit to the exclusive jurisdiction and arbitration of the Royal Budapest Central Circuit Court in Budapest.

This final letter, as a confirmation of an oral agreement and as commercial letter is deemed to be exempt of fees; if, upon presentation of this letter to any authority fees should become payable they will be borne in equal parts by both parties.

We request you to confirm to us this oral agreement in identical form.

Very truly yours,

Giulini Bros., G.m.b.H.

Enclosure 1

Aide Memoire

Recorded on October 24, 1940 in the office of Dr. Georg Ballay, attorney-at-law. Present were the undersigned.

In view of the Government decree on the changed operation of the foreign trade, the Hungarian National Bank has permitted the continuation of the delivery contract closed on March 6, 1940 between the Transdanubia Bauxit A. G. of Budapest, and Gebrüder Giulini G. m. b. H., of Ludwigshafen, for a period of three months, on the condition that the price be Reichsmarks 14.50 per ton free on rail at the mine. For this reason, the contracting parties have agreed to raise the price from Reichsmarks 10.00 to Reichsmarks 14.50 per ton, free on rail at mine, in accordance with the regulations of the Hungarian National Bank, for a period of three months, without affecting the other provisions of the delivery contract,* the start and the expiration of the three months' period will be governed by the decision of the Hungarian National Bank.

(Handwritten Note: * [Subject to approval by the Government of Nov. 26, 1940, Feb. 26, 1941.])

Dr. Georg Ballay, as authorized agent for Rudolph Lucovnik, engineer, and the representatives of the Transdanubia have agreed that Article 3 of the lease of March 4, 1940 be raised from P(engö) 1.25 to P. 3.20 for those quantities of bauxite which are delivered within the period of three months mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

This increase will be duly reported to both the Royal Office of Duties and Taxes and the Hungarian National Bank.

The other provisions of the lease shall remain unchanged.

In addition, the Transdanubia Bauxit A. G. and Gebrüder Giulini G.m.b.H. have agreed that the provision of the delivery contract of March 4, 1940 regarding the guaranty of quality of the bauxite be changed as follows:

A bauxite shall be considered as conforming to the quality guaranty if it contains at least 47% aluminum oxide (Al_2O_3) usable for further processing. The yield of the bauxite will be determined by deducting the disilicic acid content from the actual Al_2O_3 content.

The authorized agent of Rudolph Lucovnik, engineer, and the Transdanubia Bauxit A.G. have agreed to authorize Lessee to mine and utilize the Sekunda bauxite up to a quantity of 20,000 tons provided a yield of 47% is obtained.

Lessee shall be obliged to pay 50 Heller rent on each ton of Sekunda bauxite mined.

The provisions of Article 3 of the lease of March 4, 1940 shall determine the due dates of such lease payments.

Dear Fritz:

Friday, the 17th, I am leaving here for an inspection trip which will be interrupted at Charleston, S. C. by a three-day stop.

Leaving there, Friday, the 24th, I will go to Savannah, Georgia and I wondered if it would be possible for you to meet me there for a conference. If that point would not be convenient to you, I would be glad to adjust my trip to your convenience. I cannot well come all the way to Southern Florida at this time. Please wire me so I can make my plans.

We do not yet have the Spur December earnings, but I feel confident that they will be quite satisfactory. Of course, the taxation clouds grow darker, but there is nothing we can do about those.

Do not forget to give the best wishes of the entire family to Margot.

Sincerely yours,

C. R. Krigbaum, Esq.
Internal Revenue Agent in Charge
225 Broadway
New York City

Attention: Mr. Albert Schwartz, Internal Revenue Agent

Dear Sir:

Pursuant to a tentative closing arrangement made with Mr. Albert Schwartz, Internal Revenue Agent, I enclose herewith and am filing for the respective taxpayers therein named, the following:

1) Form 870 containing waiver of restriction on assessment and collection of deficiencies in tax for the taxable years 1939, 1940, 1941, executed by Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., by the undersigned as attorney-in-fact.

2) Income tax returns on Form 1120-NB of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A.G. for the calendar years 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940 and 1941, executed by me as attorney-in-fact.

3) Three affidavits of Hans Frankenberg, explaining the late filing of the returns for the years 1939, 1940 and 1941.

4) Form 870 containing waiver of restriction on assessment and collection of deficiencies in tax for the calendar years 1936, 1937, 1940 and 1941, executed by Fritz von Opel.

5) Form 972, containing consent of Fritz von Opel as share holder, to exclude $137,890.25 in his gross income in his return for the taxable year ending December 31, 1937, as a taxable dividend received by him on the shares of stock of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A.G. (in duplicate).

6) Income tax returns on Forms 1040-NB, for the calendar years 1936 to 1941, inclusive, executed by Mr. von Opel, together with his affidavit explaining the late filing of each of said returns.

7) Form 973, information return, filed by Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A.G., for the calendar year 1937 under §-28 of the Internal Revenue Code, executed by me as attorney-in-fact.

8) Personal holding company returns for the calendar years 1936 to 1941, inclusive, (some in duplicate as required by law) executed on behalf of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G. by me as attorney-in-fact, together with affidavit of Hans Frankenberg setting forth the reasons for the late filing of each of said returns.

This will further advise you that every effort will be made to expedite the payment of taxes, interest and penalty, if any, covered by the foregoing returns, by having Uebersee Finanz-Korporation authorize the Alien Property Custodian (which has vested all of Uebersee's property) to make payment out of funds and property of Uebersee so vested with said Custodian.

This will further confirm my arrangement that the tentative agreement of settlement reached with Mr. Schwartz covering the tax liability both of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation and Mr. von Opel, for the years 1936 to 1941, inclusive, includes the assessment of a delinquency penalty of 25%, even though the same is not specifically set forth in Forms 870 executed by Uebersee and Mr. von Opel, respectively.

Yours very truly,

St. Moritz, April 14th, 1936

My dear Mason,

a friend of my father is the manufacturer of so-called "exact pumps", which are used for the distribution of all kinds of heavy liquids, as i.e. varnish, salad-oil, motor-oil, linseed-oil and so on. They are used as well in grocery-stores as in garages and filling-stations and they are the only German system, which passed the Government's test for exact measurement. Figure 19 and 20 of the enclosed pamphlet show a filling-station-device and I wonder whether Spur can profitably use these pumps. In my opinion this problem is worth while studying it, as such pumps would cut out all expenses connected with the handling of glassbottles and so on. Furthermore it would enable you to get a closed cheque on the quantity sold, as I count the gallons are sold in the same way as done with gasolene. They may also be used to fill glassbottles with the exact amount of oil, which may be useful for certain distributions.

I can't quote you an exact price, not knowing the number of pumps you may be interested in, but I guess, that the price will be about $50.-.- to $70.-.-

The reason I write you about this is 1. because I think it may be of some interest to you, 2. because I meditate about buying these patents for a German factory, we control and with the idea in mind, of selling the patents in U.S.A. By this reason I ask you the favour of going over the whole matter and of telling me, whether or not you see a market for these devices in U.S.A.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely

RULES AND REGULATIONS NO. 6 IMPLEMENTING THE ORDER OF THE REICHSPRAESIDENT CONCERNING FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL ISSUED ON OCTOBER 2, 1931

RGBl. Part. I, p. 533

Pursuant to Sections 15, 17, Subsections 1, 22 of the Order of the Reichspraesident concerning Foreign Exchange Control, dated August 1, 1931 (RGBl. pt. I, p. 421) the following Rules and Regulations are enacted:

ARTICLE I

Section I

(1) Individuals having their domicile or usual residence in the German Reich and provided that they have their domicile or place of management in Germany,

a. Corporations, corporations with limited partners, colonial corporations, incorporated and unincorporated mining associations, limited companies, cooperatives, mutual insurance associations, mortgage banks, ship mortgage banks;

b. Incorporated and unincorporated associations, incorporated funds, foundations, other funds devoted to a special purpose and other associations recognized by private law but not included under "a" above;

c. Commercial partnerships, limited and similar partnerships recognized by the law merchant in which the partners are deemed to be entrepreneurs (co-entrepreneurs);

d. Credit institutions governed by public law, shall offer and upon request sell and transfer, not later than October 10, 1931, to the Reichsbank branch established for their locality (either directly or through a banking institution which has been granted authority by the Reichsbank to buy and sell foreign exchange), foreign currency, claims payable in foreign currency, foreign securities acquired after July 12, 1931 and domestic securities payable in a foreign currency which are not listed for trading on a German stock exchange, and gold (gold coins withdrawn from circulation, refined gold, gold in alloyed, crude or semi-manufactured form), whenever such currency, claims, securities and gold exceeds, on October 2, 1931, a total value of two hundred Reichsmarks; for purposes of computing this amount spouses not permanently separated, parents and minor children (see Section 23 of the Income Tax Act) shall be deemed to be one individual.

(2) Persons subject to the provisions of Subsection (1) who are not in Germany on the effective date of these Rules and Regulations shall comply with the requirements of Subsection (1) not later than one week after their return to Germany.

(3) Persons whose foreign currency, claims payable in foreign currency, securities and gold do not have a value exceeding the amount referred to in Subsection (1) may be required to surrender such holdings within a period to be determined by a later notice.

(4) The companies referred to in Subsection (1)a and c, shall comply with the requirements set forth herein even if, for practical purposes, they must be deemed to be subsidiaries of a foreign firm.

Section 2

(1) The requirements of Section 1 shall also be complied with by persons who have complied with Rules and Regulations Nos. 1 and 2 implementing the Order of the Reichspraesident against the Flight of Capital and the Flight from Taxation of July 21 and 25, 1931 (RGBl. pt. I, pp. 387 and 396) and with Rules and Regulations Nos. 3 and 4 implementing the Order of the Reichspraesident concerning Foreign Exchange Control, issued August 29 and September 4, 1941 (RGBl. I, pp. 561 and 477) even if the assets have been declared exempt by the Reichsbank or a banking institution authorized by it in accordance with Section 1, Subsection (2) of the Order against Flight of Capital and Flight from Taxation dated July 19, 1931 (RGBl. pt. I, p. 373) or pursuant to Section 16, of the Order concerning Foreign Exchange Control.

(2) . . . . . .

(1) The persons referred to in Section 1, Subsection (1) are required to offer and upon request to sell and transfer to the Reichsbank branch established for their locality (directly or through a banking institution which has been granted authority by the Reichsbank to buy and sell foreign exchange), within three days after their acquisition, currency, claims, securities and gold as defined by Section 1, Subsection (1) acquired after October 2, 1931 in any manner other than pursuant to a license issued in accordance with Section 2, Subsections (2) and (4) of the Order concerning Foreign Exchange Control and Section 10 of these Rules and Regulations, even though these assets do not have a value of two hundred marks.

(2) With respect to assets acquired within the exemption as provided for by Section 9, Subsection (2), the requirement established pursuant to Subsection (1) shall be complied with within one month after the acquisition if the person who acquired them shall then still be in possession thereof.

(3) Section 1, Subsection (1), second half of the sentence, Subsections (2) and (4) shall apply.

(4) . . . . . .

ARTICLE II

Section 9

(1) The exemption of one thousand Reichsmarks established by Section 1 of the Order concerning Foreign Exchange Control in connection with Section 10 of the Rules and Regulations No. 3 shall be reduced to two hundred Reichsmarks.

(2) . . . . . .

(3) . . . . . .

Section 10

Gold (as defined by Section 1, Subsection (1)) shall be acquired or transferred or brought to a foreign country or the Saar Territory, with the written approval only of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control Transactions affecting gold (as defined by Section 1 Subsection (1)) shall be entered into only with the written approval of the Office of Foreign Exchange Control.

Section 12

The term "transaction" as referred to in Section 3, 4, and 6 of the Order concerning Foreign Exchange Control and Section 10 of this Order shall include changes in legal relationships effected by levy of execution or of attachment.

Order of the Reichspraesident Against the Flight of Capital From Germany and From German Taxation

Issued July 18, 1931

(RGBl. Part I, pp. 373 et seq.)

Pursuant to Section 48, Subsection (2) of the Reich Constitution the following Order is hereby issued:

Chapter 1. The Duty to File a Report.

Title 1. The Duty to File a Report with the Reichsbank.

Section 1.

(1) Persons, as defined by Section 2 of the Property Tax Act, of May 22, 1931 (RGBl. Part I, p. 237) who own foreign money instruments or claims payable in foreign currency shall, within a period to be determined by the Reich Cabinet, offer and upon request sell and transfer to the Reichsbank pursuant to the general conditions governing its transactions, such monetary instruments and claims.

(2) The requirements as established by Subsection (1) shall not apply to any person who, within the period as determined pursuant to Subsection (1), shall report to the Reichsbank (Section 4) the foreign money instruments or claims and state that he needs the assets reported for purposes which are justified by the public interest in the national economic welfare.

(3) In the event that a statement is submitted pursuant to Subsection (2) the Reichsbank (Section 4) shall determine whether the purposes stated are justified by the public interest in the national economic welfare. If the Reichsbank does not deem the purposes thus justified it (Section 4) may demand that the foreign assets shall be sold and transferred in accordance with Subsection (1).

(4) Persons subject to the requirement of Subsection (1) to (3), who, upon the beginning of the period so determined pursuant to Subsection (1), shall be in a foreign country, shall comply with their duties within a period which shall not end prior to the lapse of one week after their return.

(5) The requirements set forth in Subsections (1) to (4) shall also apply with respect to such foreign securities which, after July 12, 1931, were acquired in exchange for foreign money instruments or claims payable in foreign currency.

Section 2.

(1) The duties established for owners by Section 1 shall also be complied with by any person who

1. is in possession of a reportable asset and claims it as his own;

2. exercises control over a reportable asset through a fiduciary, a holding company or in any other fashion.

(2) Any person, who, in accordance with the Reich Code of Internal Revenue, particularly Sections 103 et seq. thereof, is subject to the duties of a taxpayer, shall also be required to perform the duties of the taxpayer owed to the Reichsbank (Section 4) in accordance with Section 1.

Section 3.

(1) "Money instruments" for purposes of this Order shall mean money (coins, notes, bank notes and the like), remittances, drafts, checks and bills of exchange with the exception of small coins.

(2) "Claims payable in foreign currency" for purposes of this Order shall mean claims which the creditor may require to be paid in actual foreign currency. The term shall not include foreign securities and claims which do not fall due except upon notice exceeding three months.

Section 5.

(1) Any person who intentionally or negligently violates the provisions of Sections 1 to 4 shall be punishable by imprisonment. Whenever an intentional violation is particularly grave, the Court may sentence the accused to hard labor for a term not exceeding ten years.

(2) In addition to imprisonment, the Court may impose a fine. In imposing such fine the Court shall not be limited to a maximum amount.

(3) In addition to the sentence, the Court shall order confiscation of the assets with respect to which an intentional or negligent violation of Sections 1 to 4 has been committed. If the order of confiscation cannot be enforced, payment of an amount equal to the value of the assets shall be ordered. Upon confiscation title to the confiscated assets shall vest in the Reich. If an equal amount shall be ordered to be paid, payment shall be made into the treasury of the State.

(4) In addition to the sentence, publication of the sentence at the expense of the defendant may be ordered. The scope and manner of such publication shall be determined by the judgment. No publication shall be made later than six months after the judgment has become final.

Title 2.

Duty to file reports with the Tax authorities.

Section 6.

(1) Any person, as defined by Section 2 of the Property Tax Act of May 22, 1931, shall report to the Collector's Office, not later than July 31, 1931, interests as defined in Subsection 3. The report shall set forth the nature and amount of such interest.

(2) If a company is formed or an interest in a company acquired after July 24, 1931, the report shall be filed within one week upon formation of the company acquisition of the interest.

(3) Interest in a company shall be reportable if no more than five individuals or members of their family (Sections 67, Subsections (2) and (3) of the Reich Code of Internal Revenue, of May 22, 1931) shall jointly hold an interest therein exceeding fifty percent. The interest is reportable whether held directly or through a fiduciary or a holding company.

(4) Intentional violation of the provisions of Subsections (1) to (3) shall be punishable like a tax fraud; for particularly grave violations the defendant may be sentenced to hard labor for a term not exceeding ten years. Negligent violations of Subsections (1) to (3) shall be subject to the penalties provided for violations jeopardizing the collection of taxes. The provisions governing the criminal procedure for violation of the revenue laws shall apply.

Section 7.

(1) Compliance with the duties owed to the Reichsbank (Section 4) in accordance with Sections 1 to 4 shall not constitute compliance with the duty to file a property return with the Collector's Office with respect to foreign money instruments and claims payable in a foreign currency.

(2) With a view to such compliance and to the provisions granting immunity from prosecution for violation of the revenue laws (Section 8) the period for filing property tax returns shall be extended to July 31, 1931. A taxpayer who has filed a return but failed to include reportable assets shall report these assets to the Collector's Office not later than July 31, 1931.

(3) Any taxpayer who, in violation of any provision of law, fails to report, not later than July 31, 1931, taxable assets to the Collector's Office shall be punishable for such violation of the revenue laws in accordance with the provisions of the Reich Code of Internal Revenue. Particularly grave, intentional violations may be punished by imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding ten years.

Second Chapter.

Amnesty granted for Violation of the Revenue Laws.

Section 8.

(1) Any taxpayer who has failed to report taxable property, income or occupational earnings in violation of applicable law shall be granted an amnesty from the penalties incurred because of such violation of the revenue laws and shall not be liable to make the additional payments set forth in Subsection (2) if, after publication of this provision in the Reichsgesetzblatt, but not later than July 31, 1931, he reports the assets not previously reported to the Collector's Office having jurisdiction or another agency of the Reich Finance Administration or to the proper agency charged with collection of occupational taxes.

(2) . . . . . .

Dear Sirs,

In connection with the memorandum of agreement be tween Uebersee Finance Corporation and Rodessa Oil & Refining Corporation dated August 5, 1937, a copy o which is enclosed, we, as the nominees of Uebersee Financ Corporation and as stockholders of record of Rodessa Oi & Refining Corporation and Hurricane Petroleum Corpo ration, hereby appoint either or both of you to act for u as our attorneys and representatives in voting our stock executing documents or taking any other necessary action which may be required in order to carry out and con summate the plan, conditions and terms provided for i such agreement.

Yours truly,

/s/ Hanns Frankenber

/s/ Adolph Gaeng

Memorandum of Agreement between Uebersee Finance Corporation and Rodessa Oil and Refining Corporation.

AGREEMENT.

Rodessa Oil & Refining Corporation represented by its stockholders M. J. Grogan and B. P. Crittenden hereby agrees to transfer to and register in the name of the nominees of "Uebersee", Frankenberg and Gaeng of Zurich, Switzerland, one third (1/3) of its capital stock, viz. three hundred shares, in consideration of the payment to Rodessa, of the sum of two hundred fifty thousand dollars, New York U. S. A. Funds on or before November 1, 1937, of which

$148.729.— shall be furnished by Uebersee

$ 50.243.50 shall be furnished by Hurricane

$ 51.028.50 shall be furnished by De Soto

in consideration of cancellation of Crude oil advance, subject the following conditions and terms:

1. Rodessa shall acquire all of the capital stock of the Caddo Pipe Line Corp. and Pullman Oil Co. at cost price of each subject to the retention by Grogan and Crittenden of an oil payment obligation payable out of gas oil or other minerals produced from the acerage owned by Pullman and in a total amount of one million dollars, payable one third out of 3/8 of the entire production, one third out of 1/4 of the entire production and one third out of 1/8 of the entire production.

2. It is agreed between the contracting parties that the respective money contributions of "Crittenden and Grogan" and Uebersee shall be considered advances, repayable out of current funds, when available and upon agreement and in that proportion to each as is represented by the respective advances of each to the total of advances. It is agreed at all times the advances of the parties shall be maintained in the same ratio as their respective capital stock ownership.

3. Uebersee agrees that, if necessary, it will hypothecate the producing leases, owned by Hurricane Petroleum Corporation in the style named "East Texas Field", in order to furnish its cash contributions at dates nominated in this agreement.

4. The contracting parties agree that the Grogan Oil Co. Sales Contract with Rodessa shall be adjusted to a basis of one eighth cent per gallon on all products sold from the beginning of operations of Rodessa to date and for the remainder of the contract period.

5. Uebersee agrees that it will as soon as possible execute a power of attorney in the name of Walter V. D. Bayer —67 Wall St., New York, N. Y., authorizing him under their cabled or written instructions to act in their behalf regarding matters pertaining to Hurricane and Rodessa and affiliated companies.

6. Uebersee agrees that it will pledge its Rodessa capital stock along with the stock of Grogan & Crittenden if required, in connection with any necessary financing of Rodessa. Also the parties agree that each will not sell, pledge or otherwise dispose of their capital stock holdings without first notifying the other owners who shall have the right to acquire such shares on the same terms and conditions as those included in a "Bona Fide" offer by others.

7. It is agreed between the parties that any dividends received from Rodessa prior to February 28, 1938, will be reinvested by the stockholders as advances to Rodessa less amounts applicable to personal income taxes.

8. The stockholders of Rodessa hereby extend Hurricane Petroleum Corporation an option to acquire all of the stock of Rodessa at any time up to December 1, 1937, under the following terms and conditions:

a) The stockholders of Rodessa shall receive a 22-1/2% interest in the total outstanding capital stock issue of Hurricane Petroleum Corporation and Hurricane and/or Uebersee guarantees to increase the authorized capital stock issue of Hurricane in order to provide the additional shares required.

b) Hurricane and/or Uebersee agree that all stockholders of Hurricane shall have the right to subscribe proportionately to any additional issues of capital stock by Hurricane.

c) Uebersee or its associates hereby agree to advance as working funds the additional sum of one hundred fifty-thousand dollars to Hurricane if the stockholders of Rodessa consider such payment necessary in view of the working capital situation. If so required, Uebersee shall have until February 28, 1938, to make such payment, and actual exchange of the shares will be postponed until that time. Withdrawal of such advances shall be governed by terms of Paragraph 2.

d) Uebersee and/or Hurricane agree that the operations of the properties so acquired shall be included under the existing G&C management contract and, further, that earnings of Rodessa and its subsidiaries subsequent to August 31, 1937, shall be included in the earnings upon which the management fee is based.

8. General: It is agreed by Crittenden on behalf of himself & Grogan that consideration will be given the following, from time to time as business conditions require:

a) That Grogan & Crittenden will leave, in the business, at interest, some part of their unpaid and earned management fees.

b) That Grogan Oil will defer collection of some part of their sales commission.

We revert to your inquiry of April 13, 1937 and wish to make the following comments thereto:

1. The purchases of majority blocks of American stock, which we had contemplated, have taken place. The companies whose share we have acquired do not constitute a concern with each other.

2. The creditors are recruited from the same circles as our stockholders, and the stockholders belong exclusively to a very small (close) group. We emphasize that our company has no relations whatsoever with the general public, but conducts business solely with the groups closely associated with it.

In accordance with your wishes we enclose a copy of our last balance sheet.

Very truly yours,

UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION, A. G., Appellant,

v.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Attorney General, as Successor to the Alien Property Custodian, Appellee

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia

OPINION

Argued November 13, 1950. Decided February 8, 1951

Mr. Thurman Arnold, with whom Messrs. Edward J. Ennis and Walter E. Gallagher were on the brief, for appellant. Mr. Milton V. Freeman also entered an appearance for appellant.

Mr. James L. Morrisson, Attorney, Department of Justice, with whom Assistant Attorney General Baynton and Mr. Joseph Laufer, Attorney, Department of Justice, were on the brief, for appellee. Mr. George B. Searls, Attorney, Department of Justice, also entered an appearance for appellee.

Before Clark, Prettyman and Fahy, Circuit Judges

PRETTYMAN, Circuit Judge:

Appellant brought this civil action to recover shares of stock in certain American corporations, which shares had been seized by and vested in the Alien Property Custodian. The underlying and surrounding circumstances are extended and complicated. For present purposes we need state only the few which control the conclusion to the controversy.

On October 5, 1931, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, who were then and always remained nationals of Germany, gave by a written instrument, to their son, Fritz, six hundred shares of stock in a German corporation. The instrument provided, in part:

> "I, Wilhelm von Opel, herewith transfer title to these shares to our son Fritz von Opel by assigning to him our claim for the delivery of these shares to us.
>
> "The usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereafter called the parents Opel, until the death of the surviyor of them. However, 20% of all dividends and interest received will accrue to Fritz von Opel."

The instrument also provided that the proceeds of any sale of, or the property taken in exchange for, the transferred shares should be substituted for those shares. The [fol. 2327] property presently involved is governed by the above-quoted provision, being successor to and substituted for that property.

The instrument of gift created an in personam right in Wilhelm von Opel to demand that a usufruct be established, and such establishment could be effected at any time by actual or symbolic delivery of possession to the usufructuary or his agent. Such a delivery was accomplished by placing the shares (except qualifying directors' shares) in a safety deposit box and giving the key to an agent of Wilhelm von Opel. The District Court concluded that a valid usufruct was thus created, giving Wilhelm and his wife in rem rights in the shares, among which rights was the right to the income from the shares. We agree with that conclusion. Indeed it is not seriously contended before us that the usufruct was not at one time established or that, if established, such usufructuary interest did not include the right to the income from the shares.

Appellant says that the usufruct was disestablished in 1936, when the particular shares were sold and the essential co-possession of them was thus lost. But it appears that the sale was a form only, conceded by appellant to have been for the purpose of tax avoidance, and the transaction was thereafter reversed; indeed it does not appear that the co-possession was ever actually disturbed. This was the view of the District Court, and we see no reason to disagree with it. Appellant also says that the usufruct was waived. It appears that waiver was discussed by the parties, but we are shown no evidence that a waiver was ever effectuated or intended to be effectuated.

The essence of the legislation dealing with enemy ownership or control of property[1] is the prevention of economic benefit to the enemy.[2] The epitome of such economic benefit would be the flow into enemy hands of earnings from American efforts. No phase of interest in property in this country fits more precisely into the intent and purpose of this legislation than does the ownership of the right to the dividends on the stock of domestic corporations. The language of the statute is sufficient to encompass that interest; a usufruct is the sort of "interest" of which the statute speaks. In the case at bar that right was owned by German nationals. The usufruct, a right in rem, which included a right to the dividends, was owned, apart from the title to the shares themselves, by German nationals. This case does not involve a diluted "taint"; it involves the ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business. This seems to us to be a more obvious objective of the vesting provisions of the statute than is the bare ownership of a sterile legal title. As between the right to the naked tree and the right to the periodical fruit, the benefit to the enemy would be more in the latter than in the former.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed on the foregoing ground. It is unnecessary that we consider other matters deemed by that court to support its conclusion.

Affirmed.

vs.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Attorney General, as Successor to the Alien Property Custodian, Appellee

Appeal from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia

Before Clark, Prettyman and Fahy, Circuit Judges

JUDGMENT—Filed February 8, 1951

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, It is now here ordered and adjudged by this Court that the judgment of the said District Court appealed from in this cause be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

Per Circuit Judge Prettyman.

[Title omitted]

MOTION FOR CLARIFICATION, REHEARING OR MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT—Filed February 16, 1951

Comes now Appellant and respectfully moves this Honorable Court that it clarify certain matters in its opinion of February 8, 1951 in the above-entitled case or, in the alternative, that it grant a rehearing or a modification of its judgment.

As grounds for this motion, Appellant states that it intends as soon as possible to file a petition for a writ of certiorari in the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court in a previous decision in this same cause has indicated that the questions raised are of importance and await judicial clarification. (Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, 332 U. S. 480, 489-490). This decision was rendered after reargument ordered by the Court (331 U. S. 870). Appellant believes that it will assist the Supreme Court in acting on the petition for a writ of certiorari if the basis of the affirmance of the lower court set out in the opinion is clarified in the following particulars, which for convenience will be set out as questions:

I

Is it the meaning of the Court that a right in rem (i.e., the usufruct) in shares of a Swiss corporation (Appellant, Uebersee Finanz-Korporation) creates a right in rem in stock of American corporations owned by and held as assets of the Swiss corporation? Does the Court believe that "ownership" of a right to dividends on the shares of [fol. 2330] Uebersee, a Swiss corporation, constitutes "ownership" of a right to dividends on the shares of the American corporations which Uebersee holds in its treasury?

A reading of the opinion indicates that the Court has answered both the above questions in the affirmative. The opinion states that by an original instrument of gift executed in 1931, Wilhelm von Opel transferred to his son Fritz 600 shares of a German corporation (Adam Opel A. G.). The Court states that this instrument created in Wilhelm von Opel a right in personam to demand that a usufruct be established in the German shares or in property taken in exchange for them. The opinion then refers to the Finding (Finding 37, R. 57-58) of the District Court that in 1935 Fritz von Opel established a usufruct in favor of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel by placing all his shares in Uebersee Finanz-Korporation (the appellant here) in a safe deposit box in Zurich and delivering the key to one Frankenberg, their agent for that purpose. Then the Court concludes without setting forth its reasons that this usufruct in stock of Uebersee was a "right in rem" and "ownership of the right to dividends" in the stock of the American corporations, which were the principal assets of Uebersee.

While this seems to be the ruling of the Court, Appellant is not entirely certain such an interpretation of the opinion is correct for two reasons: (1) It has not heretofore been held in corporation law that a right in rem to shares of a corporation constitutes a right in rem or indeed any direct interest in the assets of the corporation; (2) Since the opinion does not discuss this point, it may be that the Court was under the impression that the District Court had found there had been a delivery of possession and a resulting usufruct in the shares of the American corporations which were seized by the Custodian.

The lower court approved confiscation and retention of the American shares, not on the ground that the enemy had any direct right in them, but because of alleged enemy taint of the Swiss corporation which owned them. This Court rejects enemy "taint" as a basis for its decision and seems to rely on enemy "ownership of the right to dividends" in the American shares. Clarification of the reasoning by which the Court concluded that there was an enemy-owned right in rem in the American shares and that enemy taint as found by the District Court is unim-[fol. 2331] portant would assist the Supreme Court in determining the questions raised on certiorari.

II

Assuming the Court believes that there is a usufructuary right in rem in the American shares for 80% of the dividends during the life of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, the following question arises:

Is it the meaning of the opinion that a life interest in 80% of the dividends on the stock of the American corporations, which the Court found to exist in the enemy, is a ground which justifies the Custodian retaining and confiscating the remaining interest of Fritz von Opel, a neutral?

It is, of course, Appellant's view that the stock in the American corporations was owned by Uebersee and that stockholders of Uebersee have no legal right to it any more than the stockholders of an American corporation have a legal right to its assets. If, however, the Court is correct in holding that the usufruct in the shares of Uebersee creates an equivalent right in rem in Uebersee's American assets, the opinion does not explain why it permits the Alien Property Custodian to retain more than that right which it finds the enemy "owns". The remaining interest in the stock after the death of the enemy, confiscated in this case, is extremely valuable because the enemy Marta von Opel is over 75 years old.

The lower court approved confiscation and retention of the whole property because of its conception of "enemy taint". But the opinion of this Court does not appear to rest on this ground. Appellant believes that the Supreme Court will be aided in determining the character and importance of the questions presented if the basis for confiscation of a substantial and important interest in the shares owned by a neutral is clarified.

III

In the event the Court did not intend to hold that the Alien Property Custodian can retain absolute ownership in the American assets of Uebersee, because of Fritz von Opel's remaining interest in the shares of Uebersee, Appellant respectfully petitions for a modification of the Court's judgment. In that event, Appellant requests that the Dis-[fol. 2332] trict Court be ordered to modify its judgment so as to award to Uebersee the interest in the shares of the American corporations other than the usufruct.

Wherefore, Appellant respectfully moves this Honorable Court that it clarify its opinion of February 8, 1951, in the above-entitled case, or, in the alternative, that it grant a rehearing or a modification of its judgment.

UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION, A. G., Appellant,

v.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Attorney General, as Successor to the Alien Property Custodian, Appellee

Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court

OPINION—June 22, 1951

Messrs. Thurman Arnold, Edward J. Ennis and Walter E. Gallagher for appellant.

Assistant Attorney General Baynton and Mr. George B. Searls, Attorney, Department of Justice, for appellee.

Before Clark, Prettyman and Fahy, Circuit Judges

PRETTYMAN, Circuit Judge:

Appellant asks for clarification of the opinion of the court in this matter [1] in three respects, or, in the alternative, for modification of the decision.

1. The first point upon which the appellant asks clarification concerns the view of the court as to whether the usufruct in shares of the Swiss corporation created a usufruct in the shares of American corporations owned by the Swiss corporation.

The usufruct here involved was originally created in 600 shares of stock in the Adam Opel Works, a manufacturer of motor cars in Germany. In 1931 these shares were sold, and the proceeds consisted of approximately $2,500,000 and 47,625 shares of General Motors stock. Thereafter the major part of those proceeds was used to purchase certain investments in the United States, consisting of stock in corporations located in the United States. These shares were the assets vested by the Alien Property Custodian and the subject of the present lawsuit. The plaintiff is a Swiss corporation, which is a holding company acquired for the purpose of holding the proceeds of the sale of the 600 shares in the Adam Opel Works. It owned the vested property. All of its shares except three qualifying shares [fol. 2334] were placed by Fritz von Opel in lock box, and the key was delivered to an agent of Wilhelm von Opel. The interposition of this wholly owned holding company did not destroy or disturb the usufruct in the proceeds of the 600 shares of Opel stock. The interposition was of form only and not of substance. The co-possession of the shares of the holding company, pursuant to the terms of the usufruct agreement, was sufficient to perfect that usufruct. Appellant would establish what seems to us to be a purely formal separation between the ownership of the assets and the ownership of the shares of a wholly owned holding company. Whatever ownership the Swiss corporation had in its assets was subject to the usufruct agreement, and the co-possession of the shares of the holding corporation was sufficient to establish the requisite co-possession of its assets.

In the course of its discussion appellant says, "This Court rejects enemy 'taint' as a basis for its decision . . ." Appellant misunderstands the statement in the opinion. We said, "This case does not involve a diluted 'taint'; it involves the ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business." That statement was an a fortiori statement. The Supreme Court had made it clear that enemy taint was sufficient to support seizure and vesting and that indirect as well as direct interest was within the phraseology of the statute, "any property or interest". Our observation was to the effect that in the case at bar the enemy interest was the complete and perfect sort of interest to which the statute was directed, and was not merely a taint. This is not a borderline case, in our view.

2. Appellant inquires as to our meaning in respect to 20 per cent of the shares, which it says is owned by Fritz von Opel. The usufruct agreement recited:

> "The usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereafter called the parents Opel, until the death of the survivor of them. However, 20% of all dividends and interest received will accrue to Fritz von Opel.

That provision is perfectly clear. No part of the usufruct in the shares was assigned to Fritz von Opel. The whole of the usufruct remained with Wilhelm and his wife. Fritz von Opel was given a contract right to receive from Wilhelm and his wife 20 per cent of the dividends and interest received by them. This right in Fritz was a contract right and not a right in rem.

3. Appellant's third request for clarification is really a request for modification and is premised upon Fritz von Opel's ownership of a 20 per cent interest in the shares. Since we hold that he had no such ownership, except a contractual right to receive a portion of the dividends received by the enemy owners, we need not consider further this portion of the motion.

Clark, Circuit Judge, did not participate in the foregoing memorandum.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT.

Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., prays that a writ of certiorari be issued to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, entered in the above-entitled cause on February 8, 1951, affirming the judgment of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia rendered for the respondent and an order denying petitioner's Motions for a new trial in an action instituted pursuant to the Trading with the Enemy Act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat. 411) as amended, to recover shares in domestic corporations owned by petitioner, a Swiss corporation, and vested by respondent and his predecessors as Alien Property Custodian. A "Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court" was entered on June 22, 1951, and on June 27, 1951, the Court below entered an order denying Petition for Rehearing or Modification of Judgment.

OPINION BELOW.

The opinion of the District Court (R. 41) is reported in 82 F. Supp. 602. The first opinion of the Court below, Circuit Judge Clark dissenting without an opinion, (R. 2326) and the second opinion of the Court "Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court", Circuit Judge Clark not participating (R. 2333), have not yet been reported.

JURISDICTION.

The judgment of the Court below was entered on February 8, 1951. On February 16, 1951, petitioner filed a "Motion for Clarification, Rehearing or Modification of Judgment." On June 22, 1951, the Court below filed a "Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court". On June 27, 1951, the Court below entered an order denying the Petition for Rehearing or Modification of Judgment.* The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

1. Whether a usufruct in the stock of a neutral corporation under which an enemy had during his lifetime the right to 80% of the dividends and the limited rights, if any, to vote the stock to protect the dividends constitutes such ownership or enemy taint that the Alien Property Custodian may retain the American property of that neutral corporation in a situation where the enemy never exercised either his right to collect dividends or attempted to vote the stock and where legal title to the shares, and all other rights in those shares (except those covered by the usufruct) were owned by neutrals.

*On May 7, 1951, petitioner filed with this Court an Application for Extension of Time within which to File Petition for Writ of Certiorari since it was not clear what action the Court below would take with respect to petitioner's "Motion for Clarification, Rehearing or Modification of Judgment." By order, dated May 8, 1951, an extension of time for filing was granted until July 8, 1951. In view of the action of the Court below granting the petitioner's Motion to Clarify the Opinion, and denying the Petition for Rehearing or Modification of Judgment, the ambiguity has been removed and the time for filing the petition runs from the date of the last order above.

2. Assuming that the Alien Property Custodian is not required to return any indirect beneficial interest in the property given to the enemy by the usufruct, may he retain in addition to such enemy interest the rights and beneficial interests of a neutral. In other words, should not the Custodian's right of confiscation of American property of a neutral corporation be limited to the confiscation of interests held directly or indirectly by an enemy?

STATUTES INVOLVED.

The relevant portions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, are set forth in the Appendix.

STATEMENT.

Petitioner, Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., (herein called "Uebersee"), is a corporation organized under the laws of Switzerland. Sometime prior to 1936 it purchased a majority of the stock in two American corporations—about 345,760 out of 625,000 shares in Harvard Brewing Company, a Delaware Corporation, which owned the Harvard Brewing Company (a Massachusetts corporation) and 73,039 out of 140,000 shares in Spur Distributing Company, Inc., which sells gasoline to the public through filling stations. These shares were held by Uebersee continuously until 1942 when they were vested by the Alien Property Custodian, respondent's predecessor in this case (R. 2, 3, 2240).

Virtually all of the stock in Uebersee is held by Fritz von Opel, a citizen and resident of Germany from birth until December, 1929. At that time Fritz von Opel left Germany and never returned except for short visits. He lived successively in the United States, Belgium and Switzerland and in 1934 he became a Swiss domiciliary. On November 21, 1939, he was naturalized as a citizen of Liechtenstein. The record shows that he has been in the United States since May, 1940, and since 1939 he has not been in Germany at all (R. 52, 53).

The facts and circumstances surrounding Fritz von Opel's acquisition of his interest in Uebersee are necessary for an understanding of the issues in this case. In 1931, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, Fritz' parents, executed an instrument giving to Fritz 600 shares in Adam Opel, A. G., a German corporation. All provisions of the gift instrument were made applicable to any property received as a result of a sale or exchange of the above shares. The property involved in this suit was purchased with the proceeds of the sale of this stock. The instrument of gift contained the following clause: (R. 1806)

> The usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereafter called the parents Opel, until the death of the survivor of them. However, 20% of all dividends and interest received will accrue to Fritz von Opel.

The instrument further provided that in the event that Fritz should predecease his parents without leaving legitimate issue the gift would become void and the property would revert to the parents or surviving parent. If the parents should predecease Fritz, the gift would be considered as an advancement and be deducted from Fritz' share in the property otherwise inheritable by him from his parents. It further provided that "in the event that the parents shall not have drawn in full or in part the income from the shares accruing to them by virtue of their usufruct" such income should also be accounted for by Fritz as an advancement (R. 1807).

The record is clear as to the nature of rights under German law created by a usufruct, except for voting rights.

The District Court's finding is that a usufruct creates the right (R. 60-61):

> (a) to the enjoyment of the property or, in the case of money or securities, to the income from the securities;
>
> (b) to co-possession of the property together with the person holding legal title to the property;
>
> (c) to a voice in the management of the property insofar as the maintenance and preservation of the usufructary's rights under sub-section (a) above are concerned;
>
> (d) to prevent the sale or disposition of the property as a result of his right to co-possession;
> (e) The German Civil Code does not mention whether the usufructary, for the protection of his income, has any voting rights. In the absence of a decided case the legal commentaries speculate in three different directions. One position is that the title owner has all voting rights and the usufructary no voting rights whatsoever. The second position is that the title owner has a voting right for all measures which have nothing to do with income while the usufructary can vote in regard to income. The third position is that the usufructary has all the voting rights.

The District Court did not attempt to make a finding resolving the divergent opinions as to the right to vote.

The record is clear that Wilhelm and Marta von Opel never exercised any of the rights which they had on account of the usufruct. They did not request or receive any of the dividends (R. 61), and whether or not they had any voting rights in the stock, the District Court after examining all the evidence did not find that they exercised any such rights.

The District Court found against Uebersee and refused to order a return of any of the property on the ground that the circumstances surrounding the ownership of stock in Uebersee constituted enemy taint within the meaning of this Court's opinion in Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., 332 U. S. 480, 68 S. Ct. 174, and hence precluded recovery under the Trading with the Enemy Act.

There were three circumstances upon which the District Court relied to establish enemy taint. The first is the usufructary interest of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, plus the contingent interest which they or their daughter owned in the stock if Fritz predeceased his parents with no issue. Since Fritz' parents were enemy aliens at the outbreak of war, the above interests, according to the District Court, were sufficient in and of themselves to constitute enemy taint (R. 48).

The second circumstance relied on by the District Court pertains to Fritz von Opel himself. The court stresses the fact that Fritz von Opel was born in Germany and from his birth in 1899 until 1929 lived in that country together with his family, prominent industrialists known not only in Germany but in other parts of the world. He himself achieved wide-spread distinction in sports in Germany and participated in its behalf in international events. The District Court felt that while after 1929 he spent a large part of his time out of Germany, his roots remained firmly in Germany. The Court, however, explicitly found that Fritz von Opel left Germany permanently in 1929 and that since that time he has resided elsewhere and that as early as 1934 he became a domiciliary of Switzerland. The total amount of time he spent in Germany between 1929 and 1939 did not exceed 10% and he spent no time in Germany after 1939 (R. 48-49, 52-53).

The Court also stressed that Fritz von Opel did not obtain new citizenship until November, 1939, after the war had started. At that time he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein. The Court points out that he paid $10,000 to obtain the citizenship and signed certain formal documents. The Court states that he never has been in Liechtenstein more than a few hours at any one time; that his visits have been few and of short duration; that he has never established a place of abode there; that he never took an oath of allegiance there; and that he did not formally renounce citizenship in Germany. Nevertheless, the Court did conclude that he was a citizen of Liechtenstein and that his status as such citizen was not open to attack in this case. The Court concluded that, while Fritz von Opel is a citizen of a neutral country, between 1939 when he became a citizen of Liechtenstein and 1941 when war was declared by the United States, he had a continued interest in the welfare of and sympathy for Germany; the Court in its opinion did not even intimate that such was the case after war was declared (R. 48-49).

The final circumstance relied upon by the District Court to show enemy taint arises from the fact that Uebersee owned complete stock interest in Transdanubia Bauxite, A. G., a Hungarian corporation, which mined bauxite, an essential ingredient in the production of aluminum. The Court found that Transdanubia shipped bauxite to Germany during October, November and December, 1941. The Court did not find that any bauxite was shipped after that date although the company had a contract to ship bauxite to Germany through 1942. On the contrary, the Court specifically found that in the spring of 1941, Fritz von Opel refused requests from the officers of Transdanubia for additional funds in order that mining operations could be continued; he suggested that the mines be sold or leased. The Court apparently felt that some enemy taint attached to Uebersee in that it never took any affirmative steps after December 7, 1941 to sever its relations with Transdanubia. The Court admitted, however, that there was no evidence that Uebersee voted the stock in Transdanubia from 1940 through 1945 or that either Uebersee or Fritz von Opel received any income from Transdanubia at any time (R. 49-50, 55-57).

The District Court refused to consider petitioner's contention that even if it were appropriate for respondent to retain any interest which Wilhelm and Marta von Opel had in the stock, Fritz von Opel had a well-defined separate interest which he was entitled to recover. The Court stated that this question was not presented by the pleadings and hence could not be passed upon (R. 50-51).

On February 8, 1951, the Court below, with one Judge dissenting, affirmed the judgment of the District Court. It held that the usufruct is a right in rem which includes a right to the dividends. This usufruct was owned apart from the title to the shares themselves by German nationals. Hence, according to the Court below, "this case does not involve a diluted 'taint'; it involves the ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business. This seems to us to be a more obvious objective of the vesting provisions of the statute than is the bare ownership of a sterile legal title." (R. 2327).

On February 16, 1951, petitioner filed a "Motion for Clarification, Rehearing or Modification of Judgment" (R. 2329). Three points were made in the Motion. The first point inquired whether the Court was of the opinion that the right in rem which Wilhelm and Marta von Opel held in Uebersee by virtue of the usufruct also created a right in rem in stock of American corporation held in Uebersee's treasury. The District Court had held against Uebersee on the theory that it was tainted. The Court below did not adopt this reasoning but instead seemed to rely on the "ownership of the right to the dividends"—a right in rem which respondent could vest.

In the Court's Memorandum issued on June 22, 1951, the Court addressed itself to this first point and held that whatever ownership petitioner "had in its assets was subject to the usufruct agreement, and the co-possession of the shares of the holding corporation was sufficient to establish the requisite co-possession of its assets". The Court explained that in its view this case did not present a situation of diluted taint but rather an a fortiori situation of "ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business." (R. 2333-34).

The second point raised by petitioner in its Motion was that assuming the usufruct created a right in enemy nationals, since by its very terms it was a life estate only and conferred rights to receive only 80% of the dividends, on what basis could respondent retain all the rights in the property—i. e. the right to 20% of the dividends during the lifetime of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, the voting rights, incident to legal title, and full legal rights after the death of the von Opel parents" (R. 2331). The Court in its Memorandum addressed itself only to the right in Fritz von Opel to receive 20% of the dividends during the period of the usufruct. As to this right the Court dismissed it by calling it a contract right and not one in rem. The Court did not attempt to explain what difference it makes whether a right is in personum or in rem. Nor did it explain why the rights of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel to 80% of the dividends constituted a right in rem while the right of Fritz von Opel to 20% of the dividends was not an in rem right despite the fact that it was created by the same instrument and Fritz von Opel had co-possession of the shares as much as did his parents. Finally, the Court completely ignored Fritz von Opel's legal title to the stock, his right to vote the stock, and his ultimate remainder interest in the stock (R. 2334).

The third point raised by the Motion requested the Court to modify its judgment so as to award to petitioner the interest in the shares other than the usufruct (R. 2331-32). The Court in its Memorandum treated this request in the same way as the second point and denied it (R. 2334).

The Court's Memorandum was issued on June 22, 1951. On June 27, 1951, the Court below entered a further order denying petitioner's Motion for Rehearing and also its Motion for Modification of Judgment (R. 2336).

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS TO BE URGED.

The Court of Appeals erred:

1. In holding that the limited usufructuary interest in Uebersee's shares constituted enemy ownership or taint of Uebersee's American assets either within the meaning of this Court's opinion or otherwise within the Trading with the Enemy Act.

2. In holding that the usufructuary right to 80% of the dividends from Uebersee's shares constituted a right to dividends from the shares in American corporations owned by Uebersee.

3. In holding that Uebersee's corporate identity could be virtually destroyed for purpose of treating an alleged enemy usufructuary interest in Uebersee's shares as an enemy usufructuary interest in property owned by Uebersee.

4. In holding that an enemy usufructuary interest in American property of Uebersee, even if such interest existed, was sufficient to warrant confiscation not only of that alleged enemy interest but of all other non-enemy interests in such property.

5. In holding that the neutral Liechtenstein citizen who was Uebersee's sole stockholder merely had a contract right to 20% of the dividends from Uebersee's shares.

6. In holding that a valid usufruct under German law existed in the property in question at the time of vesting.

7. In not holding that the alleged usufruct was insufficient ownership or control of Uebersee to constitute "enemy taint" of Uebersee subjecting its American property to confiscation within the meaning of the Trading With the Enemy Act.

8. In not holding that Uebersee's ownership of a Hungarian subsidiary was no evidence of "enemy taint".

9. In not holding that the circumstances of the acquisition of Liechtenstein citizenship by the owner of Uebersee's shares and his sympathy for Germany prior to the war between the United States and Germany was not evidence of "enemy taint".

10. In not holding that at the most the alleged enemy usufructuary life interest in 80% of the income from Uebersee's shares should be retained and confiscated and the remaining interest should be released to Uebersee or its sole stockholder and in not remanding the case for this purpose.

11. In not granting a new trial to consider additional evidence on the question of waiver of the alleged usufruct.

12. In affirming the District Court.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT.

1. This is the second time this case is before this Court. The first time—Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., 332 U. S. 480, 68 S. Ct. 174—only the procedural question was presented as to whether petitioner had the right to bring this suit. Because of mutually conflicting statutory provisions this Court had to choose between one section of the statute which appeared to confer a right to prevail simply upon the showing that the suit was brought by a neutral corporation, irrespective of who owned the stock, and another section which seemed to bar recovery if the suit was brought by any foreign person, no matter how friendly or neutral it might be. This Court attempted to give effect to the policies implicit in both sections by adopting an in-between result. It held that foreign persons as a group were not barred from maintaining suits but that in individual cases their right of recovery could be barred if they had an enemy taint.

The Court recognized that this was a compromise solution which was made necessary because of the hasty nature of the legislation in question. The Court explicitly refused to delineate "the extent of holdings necessary to constitute an enemy taint" recognizing the importance of the problems but pointing out that its solution "must await legislative or judicial clarification."

Judicial clarification is urgently needed in this case. The Court below has decided that when a usufructuary interest in a corporation of a neutral country—which interest has not been exercised—is owned by enemy nationals, an a fortiori case of enemy taint is presented which results in the confiscation of all the property which such neutral corporation owns in this country plus the interest over and above the usufruct which a neutral stockholder holds in the stock of the foreign corporation.

It is submitted that this constitutes a decision on an important aspect of federal law and that the matter should be settled by this Court. Admittedly, the doctrine of enemy taint is new but the Court below did not even make a conscientious effort to deal with it. The property in question consisting as it does of shares in a brewing company and a gasoline distributing company is by its very nature incapable of being used in economic warfare against the United States. The usufruct itself is a very limited interest and the record is clear that it was not exercised. Moreover, the usufruct was provided for in an instrument executed long before there was any suggestion of war between Germany and the United States and was created not for the purpose of waging economic warfare against the United States but to make financial provision for Fritz von Opel. Nevertheless, the Court below without even considering these factors concluded that a case of a fortiori enemy taint exists simply because a bare usufructuary interest was held by enemy nationals. On the contrary, the interest of enemy nationals is so unimportant and remote that it is difficult to see how any taint at all attaches to Uebersee because of its existence. There is thus no reason at all for respondent to retain any interest in Uebersee, a neutral corporation.

It is important that this question should be settled by this Court as soon as possible. Many other cases are bound to arise which involve the application of the doctrine of enemy taint. As guidance to the courts, this Court should undertake the "judicial clarification" of the doctrine which it enunciated for the first time in the earlier case. If the opinion of the Court below is a fair criterion, it is apparent that there is no real comprehension of the nature of the problem.

A quick settlement of the question by this Court is important for the additional reason that relations with friendly and neutral countries are involved. The property that is involved here is that of a Swiss corporation and of a citizen of Liechtenstein who, according to the record, is a resident of the United States. While the exigencies of war may require extensive powers over the use of property of neutrals, the confiscation of that property should not be lightly countenanced; only the most compelling reasons would justify such a result. Moreover, since American citizens have extensive investments abroad, we should be careful as to the type of precedents created in this country with respect to confiscation of the property of neutrals which can be used against our citizens in any foreign countries that may happen to go to war. The problem is important enough and urgent enough to require a prompt solution by this Court.

2. Even if this Court is of the opinion that the usufruct of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel was properly vested by respondent and does not have to be returned, there is sound reason for not permitting the judgment of the Court below to stand. The Court below in its "Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court" found that the usufruct created a right in rem with respect to Uebersee which in turn created a right in rem to the property owned by it. The Court did not spell out how it arrived at this result but presumably it did so by piercing the corporate veil and treating directly with the stockholders as though they were the corporation. Under the earlier provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, such a result was not permissible, Behn, Meyer & Co. v. Miller, 266 U. S. 457, 45 S. Ct. 165, but presumably the Court was of the opinion that it is sanctioned by the 1941 amendments to the Act.

Assuming this to be the case, the Court below went too far. For having pierced the corporate veil for the purpose of getting at the usufruct interest of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, the Court immediately reestablished the veil between Fritz von Opel and the property owned by Uebersee. This it accomplished by the fiction of calling the right of the parents one in rem and that of Fritz a contract right which in the eyes of the Court below precluded any recovery by Fritz.

In the earlier case this Court left for later clarification the question as to "what part of a friendly alien corporation's property may be retained where only a fractional enemy ownership appears". This was a clear indication that this Court contemplated that the entire interest in property should not be confiscated when it is held partly by a friendly alien and partly by an enemy alien. The Court below nevertheless completely ignored the problem and although the matter was specifically raised and argued, refused to consider any interest other than that of the usufruct.

The reasoning of the Court below cannot stand the test of logic nor does it carry out the policy underlying the 1941 amendments to the Trading with the Enemy Act. Certainly, if an intermediate corporation were not involved, it would not be urged that where fractional interests in American property are held by a friendly alien and an enemy alien, the United States can confiscate the interests of both persons. In such a situation if the United States vested the property, surely it could not successfully retain the interest of the friendly alien. This being so, it is difficult to see how the fact that American property is held by a friendly alien corporation—in which fractional interests are held by a friendly alien and an enemy alien—should cause a different result to be reached. Indeed, until the 1941 amendments to the Trading with the Enemy Act, the interposition of a friendly alien corporation operated to prevent the United States from going behind the corporation at all. If after the 1941 amendment the government can pierce the corporate veil and treat directly with the stockholders as though the corporation did not exist, surely it must do so with all stockholders and not merely some? The effect of the ruling by the Court below is to disregard the corporation so far as enemy alien stockholders of a friendly neutral corporation are concerned but to reestablish the corporate veil so far as friendly alien stockholders are concerned. Such an arbitrary and irrational result cannot be read into the 1941 amendments to the Act. Hence, we have the situation that if the corporation is disregarded, fractional interests by friendly and enemy aliens exist in American corporations. The most the government can do is to retain the interest of the enemy alien. It has no legitimate right to retain the interest of the friendly alien.

The Court below apparently was of the opinion that no fractional interests existed. In part, this reasoning was based upon its recreation of the corporate veil with which we have already dealt. But in some respects its reasoning was based upon a purported distinction between rights in rem and contract rights.

It will be recalled that when the usufruct was created, at least three separate rights were created. First, the usufruct retained by Wilhelm and Marta von Opel was by its terms limited to 80% of the income; the remaining 20% was specifically given to Fritz. Secondly, legal title to the stock and voting rights went to Fritz. Finally, Fritz had rights of remainder to the stock after the death of his parents.

The Court below discussed only the first right. As to it, the opinion stated that Fritz von Opel's right to 20% of dividends was a contract right and not a right in rem. What significance this formalistic distinction, if true, can have is difficult to understand. The same instrument which created a right to 80% of the dividends in his parents created a 20% right in Fritz von Opel. The co-possession of the stock which the parents needed for the usufruct they shared with Fritz. It is thus difficult to see how the rights of the parents turn out to be in rem while those of Fritz are merely contractual. But if such a formalistic distinction does serve some purpose, it can hardly serve the substantive purpose of depriving a friendly alien of property. A firmer basis is necessary for this result than mere formalities of classification.

Even more important than Fritz von Opel's right to 20% of the dividends, are the other two rights mentioned above. These the Court below completely neglects. Surely legal title to stock, voting right in such stock, and the remainder interest in such stock are as much in rem rights as a usufruct. Whatever right respondent may have to retain the usufruct, it is difficult to see how it can be extended to the rights of Fritz von Opel, a friendly alien.

The compelling reasons we have discussed above (supra, pp. 12-13) as requiring review by this Court are equally applicable to this point. An important question of federal law is presented which affects our relations with friendly countries. There are undoubtedly numerous situations where fractional interests in corporations are held by friendly and enemy aliens. Moreover, American business investments abroad are undoubtedly in many instances merely fractional interests and fractional interests in the same business enterprises are held by foreign persons. The decision in the instant case will be a precedent that foreign governments may well apply to these American business interests if any of those countries go to war.

3. There are two matters in the District Court's opinion which were not discussed by the Court below but which will undoubtedly be urged by respondent to support the judgment in its favor. The first point is the intimation that Fritz von Opel had enemy taint. The basis for such a conclusion appears to his German parentage, his residence in Germany for the first 30 years of his life, his participation in international athletic events on behalf of Germany, his getting Liechtenstein citizenship only in 1939, and the feeling of the District Court "that between 1939, when he became a naturalized citizen of Lichtenstein, and 1941, when war was declared by the United States, he had a continued interest in the welfare of any sympathy for Germany." (R. 49).

We do not believe that there is any rational basis on the record for finding enemy taint of Fritz von Opel. There is no dispute that he left Germany permanently in 1929 when he was 30 years old and that his visits to Germany from 1929 to 1939 covered only 10% of the time. While he did not acquire non-German citizenship until 1939, he became a domiciliary of Switzerland as early as 1934. The District Court adverted to no overt act of assistance to the German cause but instead relied on his continued interest from 1939 to 1941 in the welfare of Germany. It is not at all surprising to find an interest in German welfare on the part of someone who was born there. Many American citizens have a genuine interest in the welfare of foreign states where they or their parents were born. Certainly much more than interest in the welfare of the land of your birth is required to establish enemy taint.

4. The second matter in the District Court's opinion that we desire to comment on is its statement that Uebersee's ownership of stock in Transdanubia Bauxite, A. G. indicated enemy taint. Admittedly, Uebersee continued to own its interests in Transdanubia during the war. But the record is bare of any evidence that Uebersee had anything to do with voting the stock, contributing assistance to or receiving profits from the company during that period. The District Court apparently felt that some sort of enemy taint attached to Uebersee because it did not take affirmative steps to sever its relations with Transdanubia. It certainly is a novel doctrine to suggest that in order to avoid enemy taint a friendly alien must renounce his property which he may own in the enemy country. On the contrary, such renunciation enhancing as it would the economic capacity of the enemy would more accurately be the basis for enemy taint than non-renunciation.

CONCLUSION.

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that this Petition for a Writ of Certiorari should be granted.

APPENDIX.

Trading With the Enemy Act, c. 106, 40 Stat. 411, as amended (50 U.S.C. App. 1-31):

SEC. 2. The word "enemy", as used herein, shall be deemed to mean, for the purposes of such trading and of this Act—

(a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of any nation with which the United States is at war or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory.

(b) The government of any nation with which the United States is at war, or any political or municipal subdivision thereof, or any officer, official, agent, or agency thereof.

(c) Such other individuals or body or class of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war, other than citizens of the United States, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "enemy."

SEC. 5 [as amended by the First War Powers Act of 1941, c. 593, Sec. 301, 55 Stat. 839]:

* * * * * * * * *

(b)(1) During the time of war or during any other period of national emergency declared by the President, the President may, through any agency that he may designate, or otherwise, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, by means of instructions, licenses, or otherwise—

(A) Investigate, regulate, or prohibit, any transactions in foreign exchange, transfers of credit or payments between, by, through, or to any banking institution, and the importing, exporting, hoarding, melting, or ear-marking of gold or silver coin or bullion, currency or securities, and

(B) investigate, regulate, direct and compel, nullify, void, prevent or prohibit, any acquisition, holding, withholding, use, transfer, withdrawal, transportation, importation or exportation of, or dealing in, or exercising any right, power, or privilege with respect to, or transactions involving, any property in which any foreign country or a national thereof has any interest, by any person, or with respect to any property, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and any property or interest of any foreign country or national thereof shall vest, when, as, and upon the terms, directed by the President, in such agency or person as may be designated from time to time by the President, and upon such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe such interest or property shall be held, used, administered, liquidated, sold, or otherwise dealt with in the interest of and for the benefit of the United States, and such designated agency or person may perform any and all acts incident to the accomplishment or furtherance of these purposes; * * * and the President may, in the manner hereinabove provided, take other and further measures not inconsistent herewith for the enforcement of this subdivision.

* * * * * * * * * *

SEC. 9 (a) Any person not an enemy or ally of enemy claiming any interest, right, or title in any money or other property which may have been conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the Alien Property Custodian or seized by him hereunder and held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States, * * * may institute a suit in equity in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or in the district court of the United States for the district in which such claimant resides, or, if a corporation, where it has its principal place of business (to which suit the Alien Property Custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall be made a party defendant), to establish the interest, right, title, or debt so claimed, and if so established the court shall order the payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery to said claimant of the money or other property so held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States or the interest therein to which the court shall determine said claimant is entitled. * * *

SEC. 39 [as added by the Act of July 3, 1948, Sec. 12, 62 Stat. 1246]. No property or interest therein of Germany, Japan, or any national of either such country vested in or transferred to any officer or agency of the Government at any time after December 17, 1941, pursuant to the provisions of this Act, shall be returned to former owners thereof or their successors in interest, and the United States shall not pay compensation for any such property or interest therein. The net proceeds remaining upon the completion of administration, liquidation, and disposition pursuant to the provisions of this Act of any such property or interest therein shall be covered into the Treasury at the earliest practicable date. Nothing in this section shall be construed to repeal or otherwise affect the operation of the provisions of section 32 of this Act or of the Philippine Property Act of 1946. * * *

UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION, A. G., Petitioner,

v.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Attorney General and as successor to the Alien Property Custodian, Respondent.

PETITIONER'S REPLY BRIEF.

I.

It is difficult to understand the Government's contention that the issues raised by the petition do not present "any question of general interest calling for further review by this Court" (Br. 29). In support of it the Government argues (Br. p. 13) (1) that the sole question is whether Petitioner is an enemy or is enemy tainted within the principles stated by this Court in Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, 332 U. S. 480; (2) that the District Court properly followed those principles; and (3) that therefore there is no question of importance raised here.

But this argument flies in the face of the language of this Court in the former Uebersee case, that the principles governing enemy taint must await further clarification. The opinion there recognized that fractional ownership by a neutral corporation does not necessarily constitute enemy taint and justify confiscation of the property. The opinion states (332 U. S. at 489-90):

> "It is said that the entire property of a corporation would be jeopardized merely because a negligible stock interest, perhaps a single share, was directly or indirectly owned or controlled by an enemy or ally of an enemy. It is also pointed out that securities or interests other than stock might be held by an enemy or ally of an enemy and used effectively in economic warfare against this country. But what these interests are, the extent of holdings necessary to constitute an enemy taint, what part of a friendly alien corporation's property may be retained where only a fractional enemy ownership appears, are left undecided. Since we assume from the allegations of the complaint that respondent is free of enemy taint and therefore is not within the definition of enemy or ally of an enemy, those problems are not now before us. We recognize their importance; but they must await legislative or judicial clarification."

The case is again before this Court and the findings below present the precise question as to the principles of enemy taint reserved for future decision by the former opinion. The alleged enemy taint here is as follows: The property seized was owned by a neutral corporation. The shares of this corporation are owned by a neutral citizen, Fritz von Opel. His parents, who were German citizens, own a partial life interest in these shares. This interest was created by a usufruct established in 1931, long before there was any question of war between Germany and the United States and for reasons that had nothing to do with German-American relations. Instead, it arose out of a gift by the Opel parents to make financial provision for their son. The usufructuary right found by the Court gave the parents a claim on 80% of the dividends of the neutral corporation for their lives and certain rights of management to protect that claim. The reversionary interest was in Fritz von Opel. No dividends were ever received by the parents and no actual enemy management was exercised after 1940 or at the time of outbreak of war in 1941 or vesting in 1942. The neutral property was always actually controlled and managed solely by American or neutral citizens. It was never utilized by the Axis in any way.[1]

Yet the court below permitted the Alien Property Custodian to confiscate as enemy tainted not only the life interest of the enemy in 80% of the dividends, but also the neutral interest in the remaining 20% and the entire reversionary interest of the neutral.

Not only is the Government's argument that there is no issue of importance here inconsistent with the former decision of this Court; it is also inconsistent with the position taken in the Government's brief in No. 172 (Kaufman v. Societe Internationale) which states, with reference to this Court's former Uebersee opinion (p. 11): "Some of the questions raised by Uebersee were of undoubted importance." In a footnote (p. 11) the Government quotes the very language from the opinion which we rely on here. The precise question left for future decision by the former opinion is "the extent of holdings necessary to constitute an enemy taint," (332 U. S. at 489).[2]

Respondent is not a private litigant who is free to take one position in one case and an entirely diametrically opposing position in another. It is rather a public official under a duty to administer the law fairly and uniformly. In the light of this obligation we suggest that Respondent should welcome the Supreme Court's determination of the question which it concedes (No. 172, Br. p. 11) to be important in the administration of the Trading With the Enemy Act.

In order to extricate itself from the inconsistency involved in conceding that the Uebersee case presents an important question and at the same time suggesting that it should not be decided, Respondent, in its brief in No. 172 (pp. 11-12), refers to several bills pending before Congress which concern the question in this case. We have examined the hearings on these bills. They reveal that Respondent when it appears before Congress has opposed them and so far prevented their adoption. Respondent thus appears to be using every effort to prevent clarification of this issue either by the Court or by legislation.

II.

In our Petition for Certiorari we raised as a separate point the fact that the decision of the Court below confiscates the entire property of petitioner, a neutral corporation, notwithstanding the reversionary and other interests in a neutral citizen. It should be noted that the legal ownership of the American property was in a neutral corporation, Uebersee, and that only by disregarding the corporate entity and treating the American assets of Uebersee as if they were owned directly by a stockholder can the enemy interest be spelled out. Eliminating the corporate entity, it is found that Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, the enemies, own a life interest in 80% of the American corporate shares while Fritz von Opel owns the remaining 20% and the reversion in the 80%. Whether the life interest taints the reversion and justifies its confiscation even though it is owned by a neutral is clearly one of the important questions reserved for future decision by the opinion of this Court in the former consideration of this case.

Respondent argues that it is not a question of importance for the following reasons: (Br. 24-25) (1) that the claim was advanced too late, (2) that Uebersee Finanz-Korporation was in no position to assert it, and (3) that the non-enemy interest was "neither separate nor non-enemy".

As to timeliness, (1) above, the record shows that the question was raised first in the District Court (R. 50-51) and then on appeal. It was raised again in the petition for rehearing (R. 2329) and the court below expressly ruled on it. The matter is therefore squarely before this Court.

(2) As to the right of Uebersee to assert that part of its property was not tainted, certainly a corporation should be able to protect its assets from confiscation by the Alien Property Custodian by showing they are neutrally owned either in whole or in part. Here Uebersee is asserting, not a stockholder's right, but its own right to prevent the Custodian from stripping it of its property.

In spite of this the Government seems to imply that a suit by Fritz von Opel rather than Uebersee is the appropriate method for preventing the seizure of the neutral interest in a neutral corporation's assets. In contradiction of this position, as appears from Respondent's brief in No. 172, when such suits are filed by stockholders, Respondent contends they must be dismissed on the ground that stockholders have no right to sue. All of these inconsistent positions fundamentally relate to the undecided question as to what constitutes enemy taint. They are important and they urgently need clarification.

As to Petitioner's argument in support of (3) above, that the reversionary interest in Fritz von Opel is not an enemy interest, Respondent again disregards the findings of the District Court from which it did not appeal. The District Court found that there was no evidence of actual control by the enemy after 1940 or during the course of the war (F. 40, R. 58),[3] that Fritz von Opel's interest in the welfare of Germany existed only up to the outbreak of war, and that his citizenship in Liechtenstein was valid.

It is true that the District Court, taking all of the circumstances together, concluded that an enemy taint existed solely because the usufruct existed, but this conclusion presents the precise question held to be important by this Court and reserved in its opinion for future decision in the former consideration of this case.

Certain side issues are introduced by Respondent in its statement of facts which are in conflict with the findings of the Court and which, therefore, Respondent cannot raise

[3] Finding 41 (R. 59) is based on a mere inference of control after the war based on the existence of the usufruct and a presumption that in absence of evidence former control continued. When it was pointed out that Frankenberg, the alleged agent for enemy control, was in America and had applied for citizenship, the court explained the extent of the inference as follows (R. 1779, 1782-83):

> "I do not care whether he was an agent after the war or not. My point is the usufructuary interest had been set up * * *."
>
> "There are two forms of control that I am talking about. There are two forms. One of them exists by virtue of this usufructuary interest. That is number one. Now, that did not end, in my judgment.
>
> "I might grant that you are right on this other kind of control, * * * namely, that Frankenberg was over here bossing and telling them what to do. * * * I mean to say where an agency of another one over here, an American with an agency in Germany, would end at the outbreak of war, * * *.
>
> "You may be right, but I am inclined to think that, so far as bossing the company is concerned, I am not entitled to presume that after the outbreak of the war; * * *."

here. For example, Respondent argues in effect that the transaction creating the usufruct was a sham since it cites evidence introduced to establish this point including an alleged inconsistent position taken by the attorneys for Uebersee in the previous suit for the return of gold.[4] This evidence was all before the trial court. After considering it the District Court explicitly found (F. 18, R. 54-55) that the transaction was intended to be a gift "and was not intended to be a sham transaction, * * *". Since Respondent did not appeal from that finding it cannot collaterally attack it.

Conclusion.

The question of "the extent of holdings necessary to constitute enemy taint" was reserved for decision in the first opinion in this case because of its importance. The Government has conceded its importance in its brief in No. 172, now pending before the Court. It is also apparent that orderly administration of the Trading With the Enemy Act can be had only after the clarification of the problem through the exercise of this Court's power of review.

[4] The legal memorandum in support of an application for a Treasury export license, discussing usufruct under Roman law, cited Justinian's reference to nudum proprietatem or "naked title" or "bare ownership" (R. 2082). The same language was included in Fritz von Opel's affidavit. (R. 2000) However, the affidavit of the German law expert who prepared the gift agreement actually sets forth the rights of the legal owner and the usufructuary in a usufruct (neissbraueh) under the provisions of the German Civil Code and does not use the inaccurate catch phrase "bare ownership" (R. 1986-90). The trial court placed no reliance on this alleged former inconsistent position in making its findings on the nature of usufruct under the German law upon the testimony of the German law experts (R. 60-61). The trial court rejected the respondent's contention of inconsistency when it decided the sham issue against the respondent.

For the foregoing reasons it is respectfully submitted that this Petition for Certiorari should be granted.

OPPOSITION TO MOTION BY THE SOLICITOR GENERAL TO TRANSFER FROM THE SUMMARY DOCKET

The issues in this case can be very briefly stated. While the record is a lengthy one all the relevant questions can be decided by reference to the findings of fact which are short and simple. It will be unnecessary to refer to any testimony whatever in the course of argument.

It is true, as the Solicitor General says, that the principal issue depends on the legal incidents under German law of a usufructuary interest held by an enemy citizen in the stock of petitioner, a neutral corporation. Those legal incidents, however, are clearly spelled out in the findings of the Court. Petitioner contends the usufruct amounts only to an interest of the enemy citizen in a portion of the dividends, secured by keeping the stock in escrow. The Government's opposing contention as to the legal effect of the usufruct as defined by the Court can be equally brief.

It is true that the Government may differ with petitioner as to the interpretation of and inferences to be drawn from some findings. But the findings on which such differences may exist can be set out in a page and the differences between the Government and petitioner are pure questions of law as to the legal effect of these findings.

The further question whether the Government has seized more property than it is entitled to keep, assuming that the enemy interest is sufficiently important to justify any confiscation of the property of this neutral, is equally simple. Petitioner will contend that where stock is pledged or put in escrow or used otherwise as security for the obligation of a stockholder to pay eventual dividends to another party, the interest of the pledgor, or however he may be called, and that of the beneficiary of pledge, escrow or similar agreement are entirely separable. They are not fractional interests in the stock in the sense that a stockholder might be held to have a fractional interest in the assets of an enemy tainted corporation (a question raised by the petition in Kaufman v. Societe Internationale, etc., and J. Howard McGrath, No. 172).

Therefore, we assert the Custodian was at the most entitled to confiscate only the separable interest of the enemy in the American assets and not the entire interest of the neutral corporation. This presents a simple question of law under the findings of fact of the Court defining the legal incidents of the usufruct.

In the present posture of the case on the summary docket, petitioner's opening brief will approximate only twenty-five pages.

Petitioner opposes this motion because granting it would be an invitation to the Government to go into the record, as it did in the court below, and present questions of fact which, while within the power of the Court to review, are not a proper ground for a writ of certiorari. Such a presentation would require petitioner in the interest of caution to answer these irrelevant issues, and thus add to the burden of the Court.

Respectfully submitted,

Petitioner,

v.—

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Attorney General, as Successor to the Alien Property Custodian

ON A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR PETITIONER

Opinions Below

The opinion of the District Court (R. 41) is reported in 82 F. Supp. 602. The first opinion of the Court of Appeals, Circuit Judge Clark dissenting without opinion (R. 2326), is reported in 191 F. (2d) 327. The second opinion of the Court of Appeals "Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court" (R. 2338), Circuit Judge Clark not participating, is not reported.

Jurisdiction

The judgment of the Court of Appeals (R. 2328) was entered on February 8, 1951. An order of May 8, 1951 (R.

2337) extended the time for filing the petition for writ of certiorari to July 8, 1951. The petition for writ of certiorari was filed July 7, 1951 and was granted by an order filed October 15, 1951 (R. 2336). The jurisdiction of this court rests on 28 U. S. C. 1254(1).

Questions Presented

1. Whether a certain usufruct in the stock of a neutral corporation under which an enemy had during his lifetime the right to 80% of the dividends and perhaps the limited right to vote the stock to protect the dividends constitutes such ownership or enemy taint that the Alien Property Custodian may retain and confiscate all the American property of that neutral corporation in a case where the enemy never exercised either his right to collect dividends or attempted to vote the stock and where legal title to the shares, and all other rights in those shares (except the rights of the usufruct) were owned by neutrals.

2. Assuming that the Alien Property Custodian is not required to return to the neutral corporation any indirect beneficial interest in the vested property given to the enemy by the usufruct, may he retain in addition to such enemy interest rights and beneficial interest of a neutral which are separable from the enemy interest. In other words, should not the Custodian's right of confiscation of American property of a neutral corporation be limited to the confiscation of interests held directly or indirectly by an enemy?

Statutes Involved

The relevant portions of the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended, are set forth in the Appendix.

Statement of the Case

The following brief statement we think presents all the facts necessary to decide the issue before this Court, i.e., whether the property seized by the Alien Property Custodian can be confiscated under the Trading With the Enemy Act.[1]

The property involved is practically all the assets of petitioner, a neutral Swiss corporation. These assets consist of a majority interest in the stock of a brewing company and of a company engaged in the retail distribution of gasoline. These American corporations were not and could not have been used for the purpose of economic war. They were never used for the concealment of enemy assets. No dividends or credits of any kind were ever accumulated and held as assets of or for the use of any enemy government or of any enemy citizen.

The legal title to the entire capital stock (except neutral directors' three qualifying shares) of petitioner, which owned these seized American assets, has always been held by Fritz von Opel, a neutral citizen of Liechtenstein who resided in the United States from 1940 to 1950. Petitioner (the neutral Swiss corporation) never engaged during the war in any activity on behalf either of an enemy government or an enemy citizen. It accumulated no dividends or credits in Switzerland which were held for any enemy government or enemy citizen. No control over the petitioner either by voting stock, or by any other action, was exercised by an enemy during the war.

1 The detailed facts set forth in the long record are concerned principally with the claim of the Government that the former German owners of the property made a sham gift in 1931 (R. 43). The District Court, however, found that a bona fide gift was made (R. 54-55), and thus eliminated from further consideration much of the material in the record.

The only enemy interest in petitioner's stocks arose out of a gift agreement (R. 1805-7) made in 1931 between Fritz von Opel and his German parents, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, which obligated Fritz to pay his parents 80 per cent of the dividends on his stock in petitioner which had been purchased out of the proceeds of the gift. The dividends were payable only during the lives of the parents and only in the event that demand for them was made. Failure to demand dividends during the parents' lives forfeits the right to dividends which then become part of the gift to their son (R. 1807) and consequently are not property of the parents to be distributed as part of their estate. The purpose of the agreement reserving an option on 80 per cent of the income was to provide against possible need of the parents in their old age (R. 130, 134, 559, 1825). The parents were wealthy and never demanded the dividends.

In 1935, as security for the performance of the obligation of Fritz to pay his parents 80 per cent of the dividends on his stock, the certificates of petitioner's stock owned by Fritz were put in escrow under an arrangement which, in German law, is called a usufruct (neissbrauch). Since the term "usufruct" has caused some confusion in the opinions below, it is important to understand the precise legal and equitable rights which the German parents acquired under it.

Section 1081 of the German Civil Code[2] provides "Whenever a bearer security * * * is the object of a usufruct, then in such case the usufructuary and the holder of legal title jointly have the right of possession * * * " (R. 1989). That joint right to possession is secured by the same sort of arrangement which in American law would be achieved by placing the stock in escrow. Thus Section 1082 provides that on request of either party the securities are "to be deposited with a depositary with the stipulation that the release of the instrument may only be requested jointly by the usufructuary and the holder of the legal title" (R. 1989).

2 Two English translations of the German Civil Code are available. Loewy, The German Civil Code (1909) and Chung Hui Wang, The German Civil Code (1907).

The effect is to give the usufructuary the security of an escrow to carry out whatever agreement has been made with respect to his right to dividends, in this case 80 per cent during the lifetime of the usufructuary. At the same time it gives the legal owner of the stock joint control identical with control under similar escrow agreements under American law.

In addition, the usufructuary has a voice in the management of the property limited to the protection of his right to dividends. How that voice in the management is to be exercised is unsettled. There are no decided cases. Some commentators hold that the usufructuary has no voting right whatever; others hold that the usufructuary can only vote with regard to income; and a third position is that a usufructuary has all the voting rights. We set out below the finding of the trial court in this respect in its entirety.[3]

3 "52. A right of usufruct, once established, is under German law an in rem right in property. A person having a usufruct in property has a right:

(a) to the enjoyment of the property or, in the case of money or securities, to the income from the securities;

(b) to co-possession of the property together with the person holding legal title to the property;

(c) to a voice in the management of the property insofar as the maintenance and preservation of the usufructuary's rights under subsection (a) above are concerned;

(d) to prevent the sale or disposition of the property as a result of his right to co-possession;

For purposes of decision in this case, it is unnecessary to speculate which of these three theories on the right of a usufructuary to vote would be adopted if presented to a German court. The German parents never claimed any right to vote and throughout the existence of the usufruct, the stock was voted by or for the neutral holder of legal title, Fritz von Opel (R. 1479, 2048, 2058).

The trial court found that up to 1940 major policies of petitioner were managed by Hans Frankenberg (R. 58), a Swiss banker who represented Wilhelm in 1935 for purposes of the escrow of the stock. This management was not accomplished by voting control. The control is inferred by the District Court simply because Frankenberg was consulted and his advice obtained (R. 2014). Even if the following of such advice could be called "control" by Wilhelm von Opel it ended before the United States was at war. Frankenberg prior to the war had become a resident of the United States in 1940. At the time of the outbreak of the war was an applicant for United States citizenship, which was later granted him. The trial court found that there was no evidence that he exercised any control over the petitioner after the United States entered the war or even after he came to the United States in 1940 (R. 58). The Government attempted to escape the effect of this finding by resting its case on a presumption that the management control, found by the trial court to have been exercised by Frankenberg as agent for Wilhelm before he was an enemy and before the war, was presumed to continue during the war.[4] This was in effect a charge without evidence that Frankenberg had committed the grave offense of trading with the enemy while his application for citizenship was pending. The trial court therefore made it clear that its finding that Frankenberg's agency continued during the war only meant that his technical co-possession of petitioner's shares necessary to continue the usufruct was presumed to continue and not that actual control over the affairs of petitioner, as agent of an enemy, could be presumed to continue in these circumstances (R. 1782-3).

(e) the German Civil Code does not mention whether the usufructuary, for the protection of his income, has any voting rights. In the absence of a decided case the legal commentaries speculate in three different directions. One position is that title owner has all voting rights and the usufructuary no voting rights whatsoever. The second position is that the title owner has a voting right for all measures which have nothing to do with income while the usufructuary can vote in regard to income. The third position is that the usufructuary has all the voting rights."

In the light of these facts, the findings of the court show that the following rights existed in the stock of the Swiss corporation at the outbreak of the war:

(1) Fritz von Opel, a neutral, had both legal title and beneficial ownership in the stock of the neutral corporation. That right was subject only to an option, never exercised, on the part of his parents to compel him to pay them on demand 80 per cent of the dividends during their lives. At the time of the seizure of the property in 1942 the parents were over sixty-five years of age. The father died in 1948 and the mother survives.

(2) The stock of the petitioner was delivered to a Swiss depositary in escrow as security for the future performance of Fritz von Opel's obligation to pay 80 per cent of the dividends to his parents if demanded.

4 Under these circumstances the legal presumption is directly to the contrary and such agency is terminated by the outbreak of war. Sutherland v. Mayer, 271 U. S. 272, 285, 297; Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 55, 73; Insurance Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425, 429-30.

(3) Both legal control and actual control of the corporation were in the neutral Fritz von Opel who continuously voted the stock; directly or by proxy, his right to do so being subject only to a disputed question of German law in the event his parents should demand the right to vote. This demand was never made.

(4) The American corporate stocks which the Office of Alien Property, seeks to confiscate under these circumstances was wholly owned by the neutral Swiss Corporation.

Specification of Errors to Be Urged

The petitioner urges that the Court of Appeals erred as set forth in the petition for a writ of certiorari (pp. 9-10).

The Opinions Below

The District Court held that the mere existence of the unexercised enemy usufructuary interest in the stock of the petitioner standing by itself justified the permanent confiscation of the American assets of petitioner. As two additional and make-weight considerations, the District Court stressed certain biographical facts concerning Fritz von Opel and a stock interest which petitioner held in a Hungarian subsidiary.

The court noted that Fritz von Opel lived in Germany from his birth in 1899 to 1929 and had participated in behalf of Germany in international sports events, as indicating that his roots remained in Germany. The court also stressed that, pursuant to the naturalization laws of Liechtenstein which require some payment, Fritz von Opel paid approximately $10,000 in connection with his naturalization there (R. 53). The court also stated that he did not take an oath of allegiance to Liechtenstein, which could be waived under the law, and until 1941 indicated a continued interest in the welfare of Germany. The court, however, explicitly found that Fritz had not resided in Germany since 1929, that the total amount of time he spent in Germany between 1929 and 1939 did not exceed 10 per cent and then he spent no time whatever in Germany after 1939. The court also found that Fritz von Opel's status as a citizen of Liechfenstein was not open to attack and the court did not intimate that any sympathy he may have had for Germany existed after war was declared on the United States (R. 53).

The court found that petitioner owned the entire stock interest in Transdanubia Bauxite A.G., a Hungarian corporation, which shipped bauxite to Germany just prior to the war with the United States. The court did not, however, find that any bauxite was shipped after the war with the United States (R. 56). On the the contrary, the court found that in the spring of 1941, Fritz von Opel refused requests from the officers of Transdanubia for additional funds to continue mining operations (R. 57). The court admitted that there was no evidence that petitioner voted the stock in Transdanubia from 1940 through 1945, or that either the petitioner or Fritz von Opel received any income from Transdanubia at any time (R. 56-57). The court did not suggest that any question of trading with the enemy was involved under these circumstances. The only inference made adverse to the petitioner was that it never took any affirmative steps after war broke out to sever its relations with Transdanubia without indicating what possible steps could have been taken (R. 56).

The Court of Appeals did not mention or rely on these two make-weight considerations in the District Court decision. It held that the usufruct agreement itself gave to the enemy "ownership of the economic benefits of American business." It stressed the fact that delivery of the stock in escrow to secure the enemy in that "ownership" was a right in rem in the Swiss stock. It concluded that because of this "right in rem" all the American assets of the Swiss neutral corporation could be confiscated.

Since the usufruct, which was the sole right which the enemy had, was only a life interest in 80 per cent. of the dividends and was clearly separable and could be seized without taking the assets of the neutral corporation, a petition was filed to clarify the opinion as to why, if any property of petitioner should be confiscated, the Custodian should not be limited to the seizure of the enemy owned usufruct, i.e., the right to demand dividends and the exercise of whatever voice in management existed to protect that right. In answering this question the court mistakenly said that the interest of Fritz von Opel in the stock was a mere contract right against his father[5] and for that reason the American assets of petitioner, a neutral corporation which had never been utilized by the enemy, could be confiscated.

The trial court suggested that Fritz von Opel might have an independent suit against the Custodian for his neutral interest in the assets (R. 51). This question is not relevant here. We do not represent Fritz von Opel in this case. We are here asserting the right of a neutral corporation, not utilized by or under the command of the enemy, to prevent its own property from being confiscated in a case where it never lost its neutral status by becoming a cloak for the enemy.

---

5 This is contrary to all the testimony, to the German law, and to the specific finding of the District Court which reads in part as follows: "Legal title to the 600 Opel shares passed to Fritz von Opel by the agreement of October 5, 1931." (R. 55.)

Summary of Argument

I

By the wartime amendment of Section 5(b) of the Trading With the Enemy Act, extending the vesting power to property here of all foreign nationals, Congress did not intend to authorize the Custodian to retain and confiscate the vested property of a neutral Swiss corporation not shown to be utilized by an enemy for economic warfare or concealment of enemy interests or, at least, not shown to be subject to enemy command and control.

The former opinion of this Court in this case makes it clear that the purpose of the amendment was to reach property utilized or actually controlled by the enemy. The petitioner was not in fact utilized by an enemy in any manner. Its stock was voted by neutrals. The management of the two American companies, producing and distributing beer and gasoline, was continued by the Custodian after he vested the stock. Moreover, the enemy's limited usufruct in petitioner's shares did not give an enemy power to utilize petitioner for enemy purposes even if that had been desired. The petitioner was not utilized to conceal or cloak any enemy interest in American property. The only enemy interest was in Swiss property, petitioner's bearer shares, and this interest was well known and not concealed.

The relevant statutory provisions and judicial decisions make it clear that actual de facto control of the corporate affairs by enemies in enemy territory or ownership of a majority of the stock is necessary to establish enemy control or enemy taint. Weighty practical considerations involving protection of American property abroad and friendly alien property here support this view. In this case no enemy control or ownership of petitioner's shares was present. Consequently the limited enemy usufruct in petitioner's shares did not make petitioner an enemy.

II

Even if the enemy usufruct in petitioner's shares, at all times located in Switzerland, can be confiscated any separable neutral interests in petitioner's property owned by neutrals should be returned. If petitioner's shares were in the United States the Custodian could vest the enemy interest in the shares. In other words where, prior to the war, stock is innocently pledged or put in escrow to secure a collateral enemy obligation only the interest of the enemy can be confiscated.

III

The fact that the neutral owner of petitioner's shares was born in Germany and was a German citizen before he left Germany and became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein in 1939 is irrelevant on the question whether petitioner is an enemy. Similarly irrelevant is the fact that petitioner owned all the stock of a Hungarian corporation in view of the trial court's determination that petitioner did not carry on trade with the enemy within the meaning of the Act.

Argument

The Fifth Amendment protects friendly aliens, including Swiss corporations, from confiscation of their property by the Government of the United States. This protection is removed only if a hitherto friendly alien becomes an enemy as defined in the Trading With the Enemy Act. The Custodian's power to confiscate enemy property is wholly statutory and limited to the terms of the Act. His claimed authority to confiscate all of petitioner's United States property depends entirely upon whether or not petitioner is an enemy or ally of enemy within the meaning of the Act. The petitioner, which since 1932 has invested practically all of its assets in the United States, in reliance on its economic and governmental stability, submits that it has never been, or acted as, an enemy or ally of enemy of the United States within the meaning of the Trading With the Enemy Act or otherwise.

I

In the absence of any enemy utilization of a neutral corporation or any enemy voting control of its stock, its property, if seized by the Alien Property Custodian, should thereafter be returned.

The effect of the opinion in the court below is to hold that the mere delivery in escrow of stock in a neutral corporation by a neutral stockholder long prior to the war, in order to secure the future performance of a personal agreement between that stockholder and an enemy, justifies the confiscation of the entire American assets of such neutral corporation.

Such an extreme view can only be supported on the theory that the 1941 amendment of Section 5(b) of the Trading With the Enemy Act (amended by Section 301 of the First War Powers Act of December 18, 1941, c. 593, 55 Stat. 838) has made a revolutionary change in our attitude towards neutral corporations; that the aim of seizure of the American assets of neutral corporations is not protection against economic warfare or against concealment of enemy assets but rather to reach out and confiscate all of the American assets and business of those neutral corporations in order to confiscate any German interests in such corporations. This we think was not intended by Congress in amending Section 5(b) in the absence of utilization, or at least in the absence of control, of the neutral corporation by enemies.

The petitioner made its investments in the vested shares in the two American companies which sell beer and gasoline, in 1932 and 1933, long before the war. When petitioner purchased the controlling stock interest in both companies it continued their former American management (R. 2026-28). The Custodian has continued the same management which demonstrates that the Custodian was convinced that this management was never a cloak for the enemy (R. 1183). Report, Office of Alien Property for the Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1945, page 89.

At the outset the fundamental distinction must be drawn between the vested American assets of petitioner, a neutral corporation, and vested American assets owned directly by enemy nationals which may be not only vested but also confiscated by virtue of such ownership. It is submitted that in the present case where petitioner is the sole owner of the vested property, and the only asserted enemy interest is a limited usufruct in its shares, the petitioner does not become an enemy within the meaning of the Act unless it is utilized by the enemy either as a cloak for enemy assets or for economic warfare. Section 2 of the Act defines a corporate enemy as including a corporation incorporated in enemy territory or incorporated elsewhere outside the United States and doing business in enemy territory. Section 7(c) authorizes vesting of any property found to be "owing or belonging to or held for, by, or on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of an enemy or ally of enemy . . . ." Section 9(a) provides that any person not an enemy or ally of enemy may sue to recover vested property. Under these original provisions property of a neutral corporation could not be confiscated because of enemy ownership of even a majority of its stock. The Custodian's contention that because of such stock ownership alone the vested property was held "on behalf of" the enemy stockholders was rejected in the absence of actual utilization of the neutral corporation's property by the enemy. Behn, Meyer & Co. v. Miller, 266 U. S. 457. The Custodian was restricted to obtaining the enemy owned stock. Hamburg-American Co. v. United States, 277 U. S. 138, 140.[6]

The reason for this policy was not tenderness towards our enemies. It was rather consideration of the economic interests of allies and friendly neutrals. To seize the American assets of a corporation organized in a neutral country on the sole ground that prior to the war an enemy had acquired an interest in its stock is a serious injury to the neutral country. It interferes with the wealth which is subject to taxation in that country, it puts a handicap upon the trade of the corporations domiciled there which is also a source of wealth. And finally it takes away dollar balances where the assets of a neutral corporation are seized in the United States. Such injury to neutral interests was not contemplated by the original Trading With the Enemy Act.

The 1941 wartime amendment of Section 5(b) extended the vesting power to the property of any foreign national.

6 Even in the case of property directly owned by private enemy nationals vested during the hostilities it has been the practice of modern nations to return it or arrange for compensation after the war. See generally for the history of treatment of enemy property by the United States: John Dickinson, Enemy Owned Property: Restitution or Confiscation, 22 Foreign Affairs, 126 (1943); Gathings, International Law and American Treatment of Alien Enemy Property (1940); John Bassett Moore, International Law and Some Current Illusions (1924), pp. 14-25.

It is clear that Section 5(b) was not amended in derogation of the sound principle not to inflict injury on allies or neutrals because of the mere existence of a German interest in the stock of a neutral corporation. On the contrary, the amendment was passed only to protect against neutral corporations engaging in economic war or concealment of enemy assets under the cloak of neutrality.[7]

The former rule was changed not because it was wrong in principle, but because it was too inflexible to afford adequate protection. This is clear from the former opinion in this case. In discussing the change made in Section 5(b), Justice Douglas said (332 U. S. 484):

> "* * * The scheme of the Act as it was then drawn was 'to seize the shares of stock when enemy owned rather than to take over the corporate property.' Hamburg-American Co. v. United States, 277 U. S. 138, 140.
>
> That was at least one respect in which the Act had a 'rigidity and inflexibility' that was sought to be cured by the amendment to §5(b) in 1941. See H. R. Rep. No. 1507, 77th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 3. It was notorious that Germany and her allies had developed numerous techniques for concealing enemy ownership or control of property which was ostensibly friendly or neutral. They had through numerous devices, including the corporation, acquired indirect control or ownership in industries in this country for the purpose of economic warfare. Sec. 5(b) was amended on the heels of the declaration of war to cope with that problem. Congress by that amendment granted the President the power to vest in an agency designated by him 'any property or interest of any foreign country or national thereof.' The property of all foreign interests was placed within reach of the vesting power not to appropriate friendly or neutral assets but to reach enemy interests which masqueraded under those innocent fronts.

---

[7] The report of the Judiciary Committee on Title III containing the amendment of §5(b) stated (Senate Report No. 911, 77th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 2): "This provision of the bill to a considerable extent follows the operation of existing law and is a logical extension of the present foreign property control system which has been operating very satisfactorily for almost two years. The extension could be put into immediate operation with a minimum amount of trouble or dislocation of legitimate activities. It is essential that the Government have this power, a power exercised by every other wartime government and exercised by this Government during the last war." Thus it is clear that the principal purpose of the amendment was to extend the vesting power but there is no intimation of an intention to extend the confiscation power to property of neutrals not acting for an enemy.

Thus the President acquired new 'flexible powers' (H. R. Rep. No. 1507, supra, p. 3) to deal effectively with property interests which had either an open or concealed enemy taint." (Emphasis supplied.)

The Court was precise in pointing out why the former rule was inflexible. The reason was not that it failed to permit confiscation of minority enemy interests in neutral corporations. The Court explains the loophole that the amended Section 5(b) was intended to close was the fact that under the former Act (332 U. S. 486):

"All a corporate claimant would need do to recover the property seized would be to show that it was organized in this country or in some friendly or neutral country and was not doing business within the territory of an enemy or any of its allies. The fact that it was owned or controlled by enemy interests and might sap the strength of this nation through economic warfare would be immaterial. We agree that a construction so destructive of the objectives of the 1941 amendment to §5(b) must be rejected."

* * * * *

"We find not the slightest suggestion that Congress was concerned under this Act with property or controlled by friendly or neutral powers and in no way utilized by the Axis. Those interests were not waging economic warfare against us."

To the same general effect is the following statement from the opinion (332 U. S. 488):

"The power of seizure and vesting was extended to all property of any foreign country or national so that no innocent appearing device could become a Trojan horse."

The Court did not define enemy taint in this opinion but it did clearly enunciate that the purpose of the amendment was protection, and not enlarged powers of confiscation at the expense of a neutral corporation which was not utilized by the enemy during the war.

Here we have no concealment of enemy assets and no utilization for economic warfare.[8] If the true purpose of the amendment is protection, it follows that the property of the neutral corporation must be utilized by the enemy or the enemy must exercise voting control. The Custodian may, of course, seize the assets on suspicion of such utilization. But when the neutral corporation affirmatively shows that it was not so used the property must be returned.

Relevant legislative provisions.—Our position is supported by the statutory provisions permitting the return of vested property to a neutral corporation where the enemy control or ownership was less than 50 per cent of the corporate stock after December 7, 1941, provided that it was not actually utilized by the enemy.[9]

1931. All of the facts at all times have been completely revealed by the petitioner, which made all of its records in Switzerland available to the Government, and by the individuals concerned. Similarly, Beck v. Clark, 182 F. (2d) 315 (C. A. 2), is wholly different because it involved a sale of American shares by German owners in Germany after the beginning of the European war in November, 1939, and a concealed reservation of the right to buy the stock back. No reservation whatsoever of the rights transferred to Fritz von Opel was made and there was no concealment.

9 Section 32(a)(3)(E) of the Act, noted in the former opinion (332 U. S. 490), provides that administrative return of vested property shall not be made to "a foreign corporation or association which at any time after December 7, 1941, was controlled or 50 per centum or more of the stock of which was owned" by enemies. A cognate provision, Section 32(a)(3) provides for the return of vested property upon a determination that it was not after September 1, 1939 "held or used, by or with the assent of the person who was the owner thereof immediately prior to vesting in or transfer to the Alien Property Custodian, pursuant to any arrangement to conceal any property or interest within the United States of any" enemy. The phrase "enemy taint" in the legislative history first appears in the discussion of the bills which became Section 32. Senate Rep. No. 920 of February 4, 1946 (p. 8) on H. R. 4571. House Rep. No. 1219 of November 20, 1945 (p. 8), Hearings on H. R. 3750 (77th Cong., 1st Sess.), p. 33.

The petitioner's position is further supported by the Brussels Agreement of December 5, 1947, approved by the Joint Resolution of September 28, 1950, c. 1094, 64 Stat. 1079 (50 U. S. C. App. 40), in respect of conflicting Allied claims to German property. Article 11(b) defines a German enterprise as one in which at least 50 per centum of the voting rights, stock, or other proprietary interest is owned by German enemies or in which German enemies "directly control policy, management, voting power or operations of the enterprise * * *."[10]

These statutory provisions indicate the intent of Congress to require actual enemy ownership of at least 50 per cent. of the stock of a neutral corporation or direct control of its policy and operation to condemn it as enemy tainted. This represents the policy of Congress even in cases of administrative return under Section 32 in which a judicial remedy may not be available. It is a clear indication of what Congress intended should be returned where, as here, the neutral corporation is given a right to sue under the Act. See also Section 9(b)(11) of the Act, infra page 41.

10 Article 11(b) provides that an enterprise shall be deemed German controlled if German enemies hold directly or indirectly (Dept. State Bull., Vol. 18, No. 444, Jan. 4, 1948, p. 6)

> "(i) 50 per cent. or more of the voting rights, outstanding capital stock or other proprietorship interests, or (ii) participating rights in a voting trust arrangement which rights represented 50 per cent. or more of such voting rights, outstanding capital stock or other proprietorship interests; or if at the material date German enemies directly controlled the policy, management, voting power or operations of the enterprise."

This and similar international agreements are discussed in Senate Report No. 2508, 81st Cong., 2nd Sess., 2 U. S. Code Cong. Service, p. 3968 (1950); Domke, The Control of Corporations, The International Law Quarterly, Vol. 3 (1950), pp. 52, 55-56.

The English decisions.—The English decisions never followed the rigid rule of the Behn, Meyer decision, supra. They adopted the more practical principle that only actual control of a neutral corporation by enemies residing in every territory made a neutral corporation an enemy. At the same time they held that an enemy interest short of de facto control was not sufficient to condemn a neutral corporation as an enemy.

The decisions treat a neutral or domestic corporation as an enemy either because its conduct constitutes "doing business" in enemy territory within the statutory definition or because its conduct in enemy territory, such as management of its corporate affairs in enemy territory, gives it a residence in enemy territory thus making it a statutory enemy. De facto control of the corporation must be exercised in enemy territory. It has been stated that "the true test is control, the analogue of that residence which invests an individual residing in an enemy country with enemy character." Re Badische Co. Ltd. [1921] 2 Ch. 331, 371. See also Daimler Co. Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co. [1916] 2 A. C. 307, 303, 351; *Overseas Trust Corp. The concept of enemy taint also

It is this practical solution of the international problem of seizure of a neutral corporation's property that Congress accepted as shown by the legislation we have outlined above.

Practical Considerations.—These are the strongest practical reasons for increasing rather than decreasing protection of foreign investments from confiscation. The increased protection promotes and encourages expansion of world trade in order to promote a stable world social order which is the basic policy of the United States. In this respect the precedent which the Government here urges has dangerous implications. Suppose, for example, that as a result of the present difficulties Iran or Egypt should declare war on Great Britain. It would follow from the Government's position in this case that Iran or Egypt could seize or confiscate all of the assets of American corporations within their borders if these corporations happen to represent a substantial British investment, or if their stock had been pledged or put in escrow to secure a British loan.

Any test other than utilization or actual control leaves the assets of neutral corporations subject to confiscation within the uncontrolled discretion of the Custodian and the courts. There are no possible standards for the evaluation of minority interests if the test of utilization or control is not relevant. Here we have something like a pledge to secure an unexercised option to demand dividends. In other cases the interests of the enemy might run from 1% to 49% of the stock. There is no way of evaluating the comparative importance of such minority interests in the abstract, in the absence of actual voting control or use by the enemy. Such absence of reasonable standards for confiscation would have dangerous possibilities for our own foreign investments.

We submit that the purpose of amended Section 5(b) was solely to prevent corporations organized in neutral countries from being utilized as a cloak for enemy assets or to wage economic warfare. If this be true the purpose of the Act is accomplished by seizure of the neutral property during hostilities on suspicion of its subsequent return if it be shown that it was neither utilized by nor controlled by the enemy.

However, if the position we have just outlined is not upheld, and if minority interests in a neutral corporation justify the confiscation of all of its assets, we submit there must be some limit to that power. And we think that limit was reached and exceeded here. Here we have in substance nothing but an escrow of stock of a neutral corporation to secure the performance of an agreement which does not concern the management of the corporation until some future time (1) if and when an option to demand dividends is exercised, and (2) if and when there is a demand to vote the shares to protect a right to dividends, and (3) subject to the final and further legal contingency that there is no decided case upholding such a right to vote and respectable authority against it. Thus the German interest is subject to contingency piled on contingency piled on contingency.

Apart from a possible right to vote petitioner's shares, the only other control which could be exercised in war time would be through persuasion of Frankenberg in America to commit a criminal offense by trading with the enemy.

There is no such evidence and not even such a possibility because of the trusted American management of the American companies. We think that the use of the word "enemy taint" by Justice Douglas in the former opinion necessarily implies the following conclusions:

1. A neutral corporation which is owned and controlled by enemies and utilized for the purpose of assisting an enemy's war effort is clearly a "trojan horse" and, therefore, precisely within the purview of the Supreme Court opinion.

2. A neutral corporation which is owned and controlled by enemies, which was not actually used to assist in the enemy's war effort, but the evidence indicated that it was designed and set up for that purpose, would appear to fall within the purview of "enemy taint." (It could even be admitted that if the claimant failed to establish by the preponderance of evidence that it was not so designed then the Alien Property Custodian could keep and retain the property as "enemy tainted.")

3. A neutral corporation which is owned and controlled by enemies but which was not used for the purpose of assisting the enemy's war effort and where it has been affirmatively established by the claimant that it was designed and established for a purpose other than to be utilized for the enemy's war effort, would appear to be a doubtful case as to whether it would fall within the purview of "enemy taint."

4. A neutral corporation which is not owned or controlled by enemies, which was not used to aid and abet the enemy in its war effort, and which the claimant has established through uncontroverted evidence was acquired for the purpose of precluding the enemy from obtaining or utilizing its assets, clearly does not fall within any concept or any definition of "enemy taint."

This case must be classified within the fourth of the above categories.

Therefore, we assert that even if control or utilization is not the test of enemy taint, there must be some limit to the right of confiscation and this case certainly goes beyond that limit.

II

At the most the Custodian may confiscate the separable enemy usufruct and not petitioner's entire vested property.

Petitioner has contended, Point I, supra, that the asserted usufruct in petitioner's shares is wholly insufficient to characterize petitioner as an enemy and to confiscate any of its vested assets in the absence of concealment of enemy interest or utilization of petitioner by the enemy. But even if we assume that because of the usufruct in the Swiss shares there is an enemy interest in the American assets which can be confiscated here, certainly confiscation cannot go beyond that interest. The rights of the usufructuary are as separable from the rights of the neutral owner of the Swiss shares as the rights of pledgee and pledgor. Confiscation of the usufructuary interest will remove all enemy rights and vest them in the Custodian. There is no possible justification for going further.[12]

12 The normal method for liquidation of a German interest in Swiss shares (instead of seizing the property here of the Swiss corporation) was provided by the Washington Accord, the international agreement of May 25, 1945, between Switzerland and other Allied Powers (Dept. State

This is not a case where part of the stock of a neutral corporation is held by enemies and part by citizens or friendly aliens. In such a situation if the corporation by virtue of enemy stock ownership had become no longer neutral because of the utilization of its property on behalf of the enemy, or had become subject to command and actual control by the enemy, the entire corporate assets in the United States might be seized and the corporation itself could not recover them. In such a case the question would arise whether the non-enemy stockholders could not recover their pro tanto interest in the vested assets. But that question is not presented here. The legal title to all the stock, except directors' qualifying shares, is in the neutral. These shares have been placed in escrow in a bank deposit box in Zurich to secure the performance of a collateral obligation with which the corporation itself is not concerned. The enemy's interest is entirely separable and the Custodian is limited to the rights given to the enemy by the escrow agreement.

For example, had petitioner's stock been deposited in an American bank under the same terms and conditions we have no doubt that the enemy's interests could have been seized, and the depositary notified that from the time of vesting the Custodian had acquired all rights of the German parents. The Custodian could have demanded dividends during the lifetime of the parents. He could have exercised such voice in the management as the law permitted. But it is unbelievable that he could confiscate any more.[13]

Bull., Vol. 14, No. 365, dated June 30, 1946, p. 1121), under which Switzerland has liquidated German property in Switzerland for the benefit of the Allies. The Washington Accord, the Brussels Agreement, supra, p. 20, and the Act provide a comprehensive scheme for control of enemy property under which an enemy interest in Swiss shares is dealt with by seizure of that interest in Switzerland rather than by seizure here of all of the American property of the Swiss corporation.

Here the stock was in Switzerland. But assume the novel doctrine that Section 5(b) authorized the Custodian to reach such German interests in stock of neutral corporations held in escrow abroad by seizing the corporate assets in this country. Certainly it cannot be contended that because the stock itself is not available the right to confiscate is enlarged beyond what it would have been had the stock of the neutral been in this country.

The extent of the enlargement of that right to seize and retain more than the enemy interests indulged by the courts below in this case is fantastic. The enemy had the right to 80 per cent of the dividends from this corporation during the lifetime of two people both of whom were over 13 The District Court saw fit to disbelieve that the Opel parents waived their usufructuary interest (R. 60) although, petitioner submits, the waiver was established by the uncontradicted testimony (R. 39, 456, 1001, 1053, 1611) and documentary evidence (R. 1825, 1899, 1907, 1912, 1950). Moreover the petitioner has contended that the usufructuaries never obtained and maintained that copossession of petitioner's shares, excluding the owner from independent access to them, which under German law was the absolutely essential legal prerequisite to the establishment and maintenance of the usufruct. The District Court correctly found that such copossession was necessary under German law (R. 57, 314, 1351) but incorrectly concluded that such copossession was established by delivering a key to Frankenberg for Fritz Von Opel's deposit box where the shares were kept. Such copossession was not established because at all times Fritz von Opel had independent access to his deposit box, and furthermore Fritz von Opel gave Frankenberg access to the box not alone but only together with Adolph Gang, another director of petitioner (R. 816, 857, 2060).

---

65 years old at the time of vesting. By invoking amended Section 5(b) the Custodian seeks to confiscate practically the entire corporate assets worth perhaps a hundred times the value of the enemy interest.

The error of the court below lies in its misconception of the word "taint." It is treated as if it were some kind of infection which spread from the Swiss shares in escrow to the assets in America as rot spreads through an apple, and thus rendered them unfit to be retained by a neutral corporation even though the neutral corporation had in no way subjected itself to any control by the enemy.

What the court in the former Uebersee case clearly means is that enemy taint exists where a corporation has so conducted itself or been so directed by the enemy that it has lost its neutral status by becoming a cloak for the enemy. This did not happen here. The neutral corporation which seeks to get back its assets here was never enemy directed, utilized or controlled. It never lost its neutral status.

If, therefore, Section 5(b) can be construed (which we deny) as a method of reaching enemy interests in pledged or escrowed certificates of stock which certificates of stock cannot be reached in this country, it is an unbelievable extension of that novel doctrine to say that interests greater than that of the enemy pledgee or beneficiary of the escrow can be confiscated.

The court below laid great emphasis on the fact that the escrow agreement created a right in rem in the enemy. But even so, on what theory can anything more than that particular right in rem be confiscated by the Custodian? It is like saying the mortgage on property to an enemy taints the equity which the mortgagor has in the property after the debt is satisfied.

The consequences of such a precedent are far-reaching indeed. It abandons the sound theory that the only reason for confiscating a neutral corporation's property is that it has become an enemy or ally of the enemy. It subjects neutral corporations to the destruction of their entire property because of some entirely collateral interest which an enemy has in its negotiable certificates of stock held in escrow to secure the performance of agreements by its non-enemy stockholders. Certainly a neutral corporation does not become tainted as an ally of the enemy because its stockholders pledged their stock to a German unless as a result of that pledge the corporation becomes controlled by German enemies.

Petitioner submits, therefore, that at least its vested property should be returned subject at most to retention of the usufructuary right to 80 per cent of the dividends for the lives of the German beneficiaries.

III

The two make-weight considerations relied on by the District Court to support its conclusion of enemy taint of petitioner are actually irrelevant to that issue.

The District Court below affirmatively held that the Liechtenstein citizenship of Fritz von Opel, petitioner's principal stockholder, was valid (R. 52).[14] However, the Court stressed the fact that Fritz von Opel paid approximately $10,000 in connection with obtaining his citizenship, was in Liechtenstein only very briefly, and never took an oath of allegiance to Liechtenstein or formally renounced his German citizenship (R. 49).

14 The Court of Appeals made no reference to and apparently placed no reliance on these make-weight considerations but relied solely on the view that the usufruct alone in petitioner's shares constituted enemy "beneficial ownership" of petitioner's assets warranting their confiscation.

The Liechtenstein law required a payment to be fixed by the Government for acquisition of citizenship (R. 53, 1953). It was not disputed that under German law upon acquisition of Liechtenstein nationality Fritz von Opel lost German nationality unless it was expressly reserved by application approved by the German government (R. 1097). Fritz von Opel testified that he never applied for such approval (R. 392) and other evidence supported his testimony and proved his desire to renounce German nationality (R. 1617). Indeed, there was no way of formally renouncing citizenship except by failing to apply for approval. Complete severing of his ties with Germany is further supported by the fact that in spite of his acquaintances and connections in Germany, Fritz von Opel in 1929 left Germany and abandoned his residence there and returned only for brief visits amounting to only ten per cent. of the time (R. 52). Finally, it should be noted that in 1940, after war broke out in Europe, he came to the United States, where he resided until 1950.

Of course, prior to the war with the United States it was natural that Fritz von Opel should have interest in, and sympathy for, the welfare of Germany. The court, however, did not find that he had any Nazi sympathies and affirmatively limited its findings (R. 53) concerning his German sympathies to the period before the war with the United States. This was very necessary because, as the record shows, he was not a Nazi sympathizer (R. 392, 2199-2211) and aided the United States war effort (R. 393).

There is, therefore, no basis in the record for utilizing Fritz von Opel's former nationality and his Liechtenstein citizenship as evidence that he was a person likely to submit to enemy control and on such evidence concluding that petitioner was enemy tainted.

An additional circumstance stressed by the District Court as evidence of enemy taint was the fact that petitioner owned a Hungarian subsidiary, Transdanubia Bauxite, A.G., which mined bauxite in Hungary. In 1939 petitioner through a Swiss bank arranged for a guarantee of a Hungarian bank loan to Transdanubia in the amount of approximately $7,000. The Court concluded in its opinion (R. 50):

> "While it is true there is no showing that plaintiff executed any control over it's subsidiary after December 1941, it appears plaintiff never took affirmative steps to sever its relations with Transdanubia. Thus plaintiff had an interest in and an association with an enemy corporation during World War II which apparently supplied war materials to the enemies of the United States."[15]

Certainly the ownership of stock by a parent corporation does not constitute doing business by the parent in the state where the subsidiary does business.[16] Even limited

15 The trial court said "apparently" because there was no evidence of such activity after war between the United States and Germany commenced.

16 Peterson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 205 U. S. 364, 391; cf. Cannon Manufacturing Co. v. Cudahy Packing Co., 267 U. S. 333; People's Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 246 U. S. 79; Echeverry v. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co., 175 F. (2d) 900 (C. C. A. 2). The definition of "doing business" in these decisions was the meaning of "doing business" intended by Congress in using this phrase in Section 2 of the Trading with the Enemy Act. Senate Report No. 113, p. 4 and Hearings, pp. 136-7 on H. R. 4960 (65th Cong., 1st Sess.). In Compagnie Internationale de Produits Alimentaires v. Miller, 266 U. S. 473, the case was remanded to determine whether the Swiss corporation had been "doing activities in enemy or enemy-occupied territory necessary to preserve a corporation's entity is not "carrying on business."[17]

The District Court, therefore, correctly held that the relationship of petitioner with its Hungarian subsidiary was not trading with the enemy preventing recovery of the vested assets (R. 49). The only fault the court found was with petitioner's failure to take affirmative steps to sever its relationship with its subsidiary. The court did not point out what these affirmative steps might be. The only one we can think of would have been to transfer the subsidiary to the Hungarian government or sell it to a Hungarian citizen. That certainly would have been an act friendly to the enemy and could not have improved Uebersee's position. The only other step we can conceive of is to sell the subsidiary in enemy territory to some neutral, an obvious impossibility during wartime.

We, therefore, submit that neither of the make-weight considerations advanced by the trial court in behalf of its position had any bearing whatever on enemy taint.

business" in Germany. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia stated (Equity No. 42058 unreported decision of November 6, 1928, Bailey, J.): "It is clear that Congress in using the words 'doing business' had in mind the construction placed upon them by the Supreme Court and I think that Court in the case of Cannon Mfg. Co. v. Cudahy Packing Co. is conclusive of this case. It results therefore that the plaintiff is led to the relief sought in its bill."

For the foregoing reasons it is respectfully submitted that the decision of the Court of Appeals should be reversed.

APPENDIX

Trading with the Enemy Act, c. 106, 40 Stat. 411, as amended (50 U. S. C. App. 1-40) provides in part:

Section 2. The word "enemy" as used herein, shall be deemed to mean, for the purposes of such trading and of this Act—

(a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States, and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of any nation with which the United States is at war or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory.

(b) The government of any nation with which the United States is at war, or any political or municipal subdivision thereof, or any officer, official, agent, or agency thereof.

(c) Such other individuals, or body or class of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation with which the United States is at war, other than citizens of the United States, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require, may, by proclamation, include within the term "enemy".

The words "ally of enemy", as used herein, shall be deemed to mean—

(a) Any individual, partnership, or other body of individuals, of any nationality, resident within the territory (including that occupied by the military and naval forces) of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, or resident outside the United States and doing business within such territory, and any corporation incorporated within such territory of such ally nation, or incorporated within any country other than the United States and doing business within such territory.

(b) The government of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, or any political or municipal subdivision of such ally nation, or any officer, official, agent, or agency thereof.

(c) Such other individuals, or body or class of individuals, as may be natives, citizens, or subjects of any nation which is an ally of a nation with which the United States is at war, other than citizens of the United States, wherever resident or wherever doing business, as the President, if he shall find the safety of the United States or the successful prosecution of the war shall so require may, by proclamation, include within the term "ally of enemy".

Section 5 (as amended by Section 301 of the First War Powers Act of 1941, c. 593, 55 Stat. 839) provides in part:

* * * * *

(b)(1) During the time of war or during any other period of national emergency declared by the President, the President may, through any agency that he may designate, or otherwise, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, by means of instructions, licenses, or otherwise—

(A) investigate, regulate, or prohibit, any transactions in foreign exchange, transfers of credit or payments between, by, through, or to any banking institution, and the importing, exporting, hoarding, melting, or earmarking of gold or silver coin or bullion, currency or securities, and

(B) investigate, regulate, direct and compel, nullify, void, prevent or prohibit, any acquisition holding, withholding, use, transfer, withdrawal, transportation, importation or exportation of, or dealing in, or exercising any right, power, or privilege with respect to, or transactions involving, any property in which any foreign country or a national thereof has any interest,

by any person, or with respect to any property, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and any property or interest of any foreign country or national thereof shall vest, when, as, and upon the terms, directed by the President, in such agency or person as may be designated from time to time by the President, and upon such terms and conditions as the President may prescribe such interest of property shall be held, used, administered, liquidated, sold, or otherwise dealt with in the interest of and for the benefit of the United States, and such designated agency or person may perform any and all acts incident to the accomplishment or furtherance of these purposes; and the President shall, in the manner hereinabove provided, require any person to keep a full record of, and to furnish under oath, in the form of reports or otherwise, complete information relative to any act or transaction referred to in this subdivision either before, during, or after the completion thereof, or relative to any interest in foreign property, or relative to any property in which any foreign country or any national thereof has or has had any interest, or as may be otherwise necessary to enforce the provisions of this subdivision, and in any case in which a report could be required, the President may, in the manner hereinabove provided, require the production, or if necessary to the national security or defense, the seizure, of any books of account, records, contracts, letters, memoranda, or other papers, in the custody or control of such person; and the President may, in the manner hereinabove provided, take other and further measures not inconsistent herewith for the enforcement of this subdivision. * * *

* * * * * *

Section 7 provides in part:

* * * * * *

(c) If the President shall so require any money or other property including (but not thereby limiting the generality of the above) patents, copyrights, applications therefor, and rights to apply for the same, trade marks, choses in action, and rights and claims of every character and description owing or belonging to or held for, by, on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy not holding a license granted by the President hereunder, which the President after investigation shall determine is so owing or so belongs or is so held, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or the same may be seized by the Alien Property Custodian; and all property thus acquired shall be held, administered and disposed of as elsewhere provided in this Act.

* * * * * *

The sole relief and remedy of any person having any claim to any money or other property heretofore or hereafter conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or required so to be, or seized by him shall be that provided by the terms of this Act, and in the event of sale or other disposition of such property by the Alien Property Custodian, shall be limited to and enforced against the net proceeds received therefrom and held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States.

Section 9 provides in part:

(a) Any person not an enemy or ally of enemy claiming any interest, right, or title in any money or other property which may have been convened, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the Alien Property Custodian or seized by him hereunder and held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States, or to whom any debt may be owing from any enemy or ally of enemy whose property or any part thereof shall have been conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the Alien Property Custodian or seized by him hereunder and held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States may file with the said custodian a notice of his claim under oath and in such form and containing such particulars as the said custodian shall require; and the President, if application is made therefor by the claimant, may order the payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery to said claimant of the money or other property so held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States, or of the interest therein to which the President shall determine said claimant is entitled: Provided, That no such order by the President shall bar any person from the prosecution of any suit at law or in equity against the claimant to establish any right, title, or interest which he may have in such money or other property. If the President shall not so order within sixty days after the filing of such application or if the claimant shall have filed the notice as above required and shall have made no application to the President, said claimant may institute a suit in equity in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia or in the district court of the United States for the district in which such claimant resides, or, if a corporation, where it has its principle place of business (to which suit the Alien Property Custodian or the Treasurer of the United States, as the case may be, shall be made a party defendant), to establish the interest, right, title, or debt so claimed, and if so established the court shall order the payment, conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery to said claimant of the money or other property so held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States or the interest therein to which the court shall determine said claimant is entitled. If suit shall be so instituted, then such money or property shall be retained in the custody of the Alien Property Custodian, or in the Treasury of the United States, as provided in this Act, and until any final judgment or decree which shall be entered in favor of the claimant shall be fully satisfied by payment or conveyance, transfer, assignment, or delivery by the defendant, or by the Alien Property Custodian, or Treasurer of the United States on order of the court, or until final judgment or decree shall be entered against the claimant or suit otherwise terminated.

(b) In respect of all money or other property conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered or paid to the Alien Property Custodian or seized by him hereunder and held by him or by the Treasurer of the United States, if the President shall determine that the owner thereof at the time such money or other property was required to be so conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid to the Alien Property Custodian or at the time when it was voluntarily delivered to him or was seized by him was—

(1) A citizen or subject of any nation or State or free city other than Germany or Austria or Hungary or Austria-Hungary, and is at the time the return of such money or other property hereunder a citizen or subject of any such nation or State or free city, or

* * * * * *

(11) A partnership, association, or other unincorporated body of individuals having its place of business within any country other than Germany, Austria, Hungary or Austria-Hungary, or a corporation organized or incorporated within any country other than Germany, Austria, Hungary, or Austria-Hungary, and that the control of, or more than 50 per centum of the interests or voting power in, any such partnership, association, other unincorporated body of individuals, or corporation, was at such time, and is at the time of the return of any money or other property, vested in citizens or subjects of nations, States, or free cities other than Germany, Austria, Hungary, or Austria-Hungary: Provided, however, That this subsection shall not affect any rights which any citizen or subject may have under paragraph (1) of this subsection; * * *.

Sec. 32(a). The President, or such officer or agency as he may designate, may return any property or interest vested in or transferred to the Alien Property Custodian (other than any property or interest acquired by the United States prior to December 18, 1941), or the net proceeds thereof, whenever the President or such officer or agency shall determine—

* * * * * *

(2) that such owner, and legal representative or successor in interest, if any, are not—

* * * * *

(E) a foreign corporation or association which at any time after December 7, 1941, was controlled or 50 per centum or more of the stock of which was owned by any person or persons ineligible to receive a return under subdivisions (A), (B), (C), or (D) hereof: Provided, That not withstanding the provisions of this subdivision (E), return may be made to a corporation or association so controlled or owned, if such corporation or association was organized under the laws of a nation any of whose territory was occupied by the military or naval forces of any nation with which the United States has at any time since December 7, 1941, been at war, and if such control or ownership arose after March 1, 1938, as an incident to such occupation and was terminated prior to the enactment of this section; and

(3) that the property or interest claimed, or the net proceeds of which are claimed, was not at any time after September 1, 1939, held or used, by or with the assent of the person who was the owner thereof immediately prior to vesting in or transfer to the Alien Property Custodian, pursuant to any arrangement to conceal any property or interest within the United States of any person ineligible to receive a return under subsection (a) (2) hereof; * * *.

Joint Resolution of September 28, 1950, c. 1094, 64 Stat. 1079 (50 U. S. C. App. 40) provides:

The President, or such officer or agency as he may designate, is authorized to conclude and give effect to agreements to further the amicable and expeditious settlement of intercustodial conflicts involving enemy property, subject to the following:

(1) The authority granted in this section shall extend only to agreements with governments with which the United States was not at war in World War II.

(2) Such agreements shall be in accordance with the policy of protecting and making available for utilization the American and nonenemy interests in such property and further the elimination of enemy interests in such property and the efficient administration and liquidation of enemy property in the United States.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the United States as to any intergovernmental agreements hereafter negotiated shall seek treatment equal to that accorded United States nationals for persons who, although citizens or residents of an enemy country before or during World War II, were deprived of full rights of citizenship or substantially deprived of liberty by laws, decrees, or regulations of such enemy country discriminating against racial, religious, or political groups: Provided, That on the effective date of this Resolution such persons were (1) permanent residents of the United States and (2) had declared their intention to become citizens of the United States in conformity with the provisions of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended; and that such persons shall have acquired citizenship of the United States prior to the effective date of any intergovernmental agreement hereafter negotiated.

(4) Reimbursement to the United States by other governments pursuant to such agreements shall be administered as vested property: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall hinder, restrict or limit the payment of claims from the War Claims Fund established by section 13 of the War Claims Act of 1948 * * * as amended.

No. 178

UEBERSEE FINANZ-KORPORATION, A.G.,
Petitioner,

v.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, Attorney General, as Successor to the Alien Property Custodian

ON A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

REPLY BRIEF FOR PETITIONER.

At the outset, the Custodian's brief misstates the issue before this Court. It says that the first question presented is (Br. 2):

> "1. Whether findings that enemies had substantial ownership in and complete control of Petitioner are supported by the evidence."

We do not believe that this Court granted certiorari in order to review the weight and sufficiency of evidence and therefore have raised no issue here attacking the findings of fact. The only question before this Court is whether the conclusions of law with respect to enemy taint made by the courts below on the basis of findings are correct.

The reason the Custodian attempts to distort the issue here into one of fact rather than one of law is that he is unwilling to accept the conclusions of law either of the District Court or of the Court of Appeals. Both of these opinions held that the mere existence of a right to receive dividends, secured by escrow of corporate stock in neutral hands, when held by an enemy justified the confiscation of the entire corporate property of the Petitioner.

The Custodian does not even discuss the principles of an enemy taint adopted by the courts below as a basis of their decisions. The entire defense rests on repeated assertions in his brief, which have no foundation in the findings, that the enemy Wilhelm von Opel, actually controlled and managed Petitioner corporation during the war. Since these assertions are contrary to the findings, the Government is forced to go at length into the record and pick up odds and ends of testimony with which it tries to stretch the findings so as to establish actual wartime enemy control of Petitioner.

If, therefore, we show that the courts below did not find, and that the evidence does not establish, wartime control or ownership of the Petitioner by the enemy, Wilhelm von Opel, we will have met the only argument on which the Government now relies as a defense to Petitioner's claim.

I.

The Courts Below Did Not Find, and the Evidence Does Not Establish, Wartime Control or Ownership of Petitioner by Wilhelm Von Opel.

The Court of Appeals in its opinion (R. 2325-7) and subsequent memorandum (R. 2332-4) does not even mention any enemy control of Petitioner. It rests its decision not on enemy control but solely on the ground that the usufructuary interest "including the right to the income from the shares" (R. 2326) of Petitioner constituted, "the ownership of the right to the dividends on the stock of domestic corporations" (R. 2327) owned by Petitioner and thus "involves the ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business." (R. 2327.) The District Court was affirmed on this "foregoing ground" without considering "other matters deemed by that court to support its conclusion." (R. 2327.)

The District Court's Opinion and the Custodian's Position.—It appears clearly from the District Court's opinion that the Custodian's position at the end of the trial was not based on any sort of reliance upon control of the Petitioner by the enemy during the war. After the evidence was in, the District Court in its opinion outlined the claims of the Custodian as follows:

1. That the gift agreement was void as a matter of German law.

2. That it was a sham transaction and not bona fide.

3. That at the very least Wilhelm and Marta von Opel had a "substantial part ownership in the securities" (R. 44) either by way of a right in rem or in personam by contract.

4. That Petitioner was an enemy because it did business in enemy territory through Transdanubia Bauxit.

5. Finally, that Fritz von Opel himself, although concededly a Liechtenstein national, was also a German national and therefore an enemy.

With respect to these contentions, the District Court held that the gift agreement was valid but that there was established a substantial enemy interest in the Petitioner's shares, i.e., a usufruct in rem. The District Court relied on its findings of Frankenberg's agency for Wilhelm von Opel solely for the purpose of proving compliance with the admitted requirement of German law that a usufructuary, personally or through an agent, must obtain and maintain copossession of the corporate shares subject to the usufruct. Without such copossession, the enemy would have had a mere contract right to receive dividends and not a right in rem in the shares. The opinion contains no further reference to Frankenberg's agency and no suggestion that that agency continued for management purposes or control at any time during the war. It merely states that the Opel parents continued to hold and own their usufructuary interest until the assets were vested in 1942. This reference to the transaction whereby the usufruct in rem was created is the only reference to the Frankenberg agency in the eleven pages of the opinion. (R. 41-51.)

It was on the basis not of control but of the mere existence of a usufructuary interest that the District Court decided the case.

The District Court's Findings.—There is no finding of control during the war for management purposes. The finding on the subject, taken in connection with the Court's opinion and explanation of the finding shows that the Court did not consider that any such control existed or that it was an issue in the case. The finding is as follows (Finding 40, R. 58):

> "Thereafter Hans Frankenberg continued to be at all times and still is managing director of Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, and there is abundant evidence establishing that up to and including 1940 he exercised control over the major policies of the corporation. From 1932 until the date of vesting, Dr. Eugene Meier was President and chief officer of plaintiff corporation. Dr. Meier testified that in the year 1940 plaintiff corporation was without connection with Fritz von Opel or with Hans Frankenberg and that it became necessary for Dr. Meier to have a direct hand in the management of the affairs of the corporation. The Court is not able to find from this testimony the extent to which, if any, Dr. Meier, after 1940, participated in the management of the corporation. The record is bare of evidence that after 1940 Frankenberg exercised control over plaintiff, but the record is also bare of any evidence of a termination of such control. From all of the evidence, including the evidence establishing that Frankenberg did exercise control during the years 1932 to 1940 inclusive, and establishing motive and intent for such exercise of control, and in the absence of any evidence that Frankenberg ceased to exercise such control, the Court draws the inference and finds as a fact that Frankenberg continued to exercise control over plaintiff corporation until the date of vesting." (Italics supplied.)

It is clear from this finding with respect to control of Petitioner:

1. That until some time in 1940 Hans Frankenberg exercised control over Petitioner.

2. That in the year 1940 Frankenberg severed all connection with Petitioner, and it became necessary for Dr. Meier, its President and chief officer, to manage its affairs.

3. That there is no evidence in the record that after 1940 Frankenberg exercised any control whatever over Petitioner.

The apparent inconsistency in the finding between the Court's recital of Dr. Meier's testimony that Frankenberg had severed all connection with Petitioner in 1940 and the stated "inference" that he continued in control after 1940 is explained in a colloquy between counsel and the District Court after the findings were drafted.[1] In that colloquy the Court made it clear that in indulging in a presumption or inference that Frankenberg's control had not terminated he was not speaking of management control but only of that copossession of Petitioner's shares necessary to maintain the integrity of Wilhelm von Opel's usufructuary right (R. 1782-3).

> "The Court: There are two forms of control that I am talking about. There are two forms. One of them exists by virtue of this usufructuary interest. That is number one. Now, that did not end, in my judgment.

[1] The same colloquy also explains the inconsistency between the detailed findings of fact in Finding 40 (R. 58) and the general statement in Finding 41 (R. 59) which reads as follows:

> "Hans Frankenberg acted at all relevant times as managing director of Uebersee Finanz Korporation as agent for Wilhelm von Opel."

This general finding simply refers to the continued existence of the copossession necessary for the existence of the usufruct.

"I might grant that you are right on this other kind of control, by virtue of what the Supreme Court said, namely, that Frankenberg was over here bossing and telling them what to do. As you say, that might violate the Trading with the Enemy Act. I do not know whether it does or not. Let us say it does, though. I might say that if it violated the Trading with the Enemy Act—or, as the Supreme Court says, an agency—the boss over here—between a person not a resident of Germany and one who is a resident and a citizen of Germany would be a rational deduction—that is true. I mean to say where an agency of another one over here, an American with an agency in Germany, would end at the outbreak of war, that is not going to break down his control by virtue of this usufructuary interest.

"You may be right, and I do not know whether you are right. You may be right, but I am inclined to think that, so far as bossing the company is concerned, I am not entitled to presume that after the outbreak of war; but on that usufructuary interest, I simply do not think that the declaration of war by the United States with Germany would break down Wilhelm's—

"Mr. Gallagher: That is a different point that I won't labor with you.

"The Court: That is right, but that very point would constitute the enemy taint and would constitute the right in rem that I am talking about in this conclusion of law. Do you see what I mean?

"Mr. Gallagher: I know, and I am not trying to dissuade you, and I know you have made up your mind on that.

"The Court: That is the heart of my decision, and I cannot believe it is wrong." (Italics supplied)

The Court also stated (R. 1779):

"The Court: I do not care whether he was an agent after the war or not. My point is the usufructuary interest had been set up and it existed as of the time of the war and that the breaking out of the war between the two sovereigns would not kill this man's rights, according to the laws of Germany, which we now respect."

The Court further stated (R. 1787):

> "The Court: For that reason that the usufruct in my judgment, did exist, even though we concede that the outbreak of war stopped his agency."

This Finding 40 alone, as explained by the colloquy, is a complete refutation of the entire case of actual control argued by the Custodian. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the evidence. We do so only to make our reply to the Custodian's brief complete.

The Evidence.—Not only is it true that the Courts below did not base their decisions on any finding of actual control, it is also true that under the uncontradicted evidence no such finding of actual control could have been made. It is the uncontradicted testimony of Dr. Meier, President of Petitioner, that after Frankenberg left Switzerland in 1940, it was Meier, not Frankenburg, who managed Petitioner's corporate affairs (R. 1486). Moreover, Frankenberg in 1940 left Switzerland permanently, not temporarily, and it is not to be presumed in the absence of contrary evidence which the District Court found lacking (R. 58), that he continued to manage the affairs of Petitioner, a Swiss corporation domiciled in Liestel. He obtained permanent residence in the United States, filed a declaration of intention to become a United States citizen, and took the statutory oath (8 U.S.C. 731) preparatory to his subsequent naturalization. As one of several directors of Petitioner, he had limited authority to act for it and could act and sign for Petitioner only jointly with another director (R. 1461, 2049). Furthermore, the evidence is clear that the Harvard and Spur companies, before and after vesting Petitioner's shares in them, were managed and operated by their own boards of directors, American citizens, with a free hand and not by Wilhelm von Opel, through Frankenberg or otherwise (R. 1197, 2026-8); Report of the Office of Alien Property for 1945, p. 89. It has never been and could not be suggested that the American management of these companies was in any way dominated and controlled by enemies.

The straw on which the Government attempts to rely is that the control by Frankenberg must be presumed to have continued after the war commenced because of the finding that he controlled in 1940. As we have shown by the colloquy explaining the Court's findings, no such inference or presumption was indulged by the District Court with respect to management control as opposed to copossession of Petitioner's shares under the usufructuary agreement. But if the Court had indulged in such a presumption of the continuance of management control, it would have been not only contrary to evidence but erroneous as a matter of law.

It would have been contrary to the evidence because the record shows and the Court found that Dr. Meier, a neutral, had testified that Frankenberg's control had terminated in 1940 over a year before the war, that he had lost connection with the company; and that Dr. Meier had taken over the control. If an inference or presumption of continued control in 1942 is to be made, it can only be the control of the last person found to be in control, namely, Dr. Meier. It is erroneous as a matter of law to infer or presume that a prior control of Frankenberg in some unexplained manner revived and replaced Dr. Meier's control. The only available explanation is that given by the District Court to the effect that he presumed Frankenberg's control of Petitioner's shares by copossession continued. It was never suggested that Meier replaced Frankenberg for this purpose in 1940.

The Custodian (Br. 41) attempts to infer some sort of control in the following statement:

> "Wilhelm was in no way barred from communicating with petitioner in Switzerland and petitioner, in turn, was free at all times to communicate with the United States."

The Government is not entirely frank here because Dr. Meier, who was in control at the outbreak of the war testified that he never met or had any communication at any time with Wilhelm von Opel (R. 1462). Furthermore the companies were managed by American directors whose loyalty is not questioned.

But even without the testimony that Frankenberg abandoned control in 1940 when he came to America, no presumption or inference of his continued control during the war could be drawn as a matter of law from his control prior to the war. Certainly it cannot be presumed that Frankenberg, a permanent resident of the United States and an applicant for American citizenship, was committing the crime of trading with the enemy. The legally correct presumption is that under such circumstances any agency of Frankenberg's, executory in nature, ceased when the war commenced. Sutherland v. Mayer, 271 U. S. 272, 288, 297; Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 55, 73, affirming 7 App. D. C. 116; Insurance Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425, 429-430.

Evidence Cited by Custodian.—It is probably irrelevant to comment upon evidence cited by the Custodian, the sole purpose of which is apparently to create an unfavorable impression of Fritz and Wilhelm von Opel. Nevertheless, for the sake of completeness, we will refer to it briefly.

A great point is made of the fact that one of the purposes of the gift to Fritz was to get money out of Germany and another was to use that money for his support away from Germany. This does not have the defogatory implication which the Government suggests. Quite the contrary, it shows that Fritz and Wilhelm von Opel were attempting to deprive the German Reich of funds rather than to build up enemy assets abroad. This removal of funds was so contrary to Government policy that Wilhelm von Opel was fined 3,500,000 Reichsmarks for the transaction (R. 448).

Another typical distortion of the facts is the statement that Wilhelm von Opel (a prominent manufacturer) was a prominent Nazi party member (Br. 6). The record shows that he joined the Nazi party upon orders from General Motors Corporation (R. 141), which he represented on the board of directors of Adam Opel A.G. and no doubt to protect the valuable asset of the Opel name in Germany which General Motors had purchased (R. 400). There is no evidence whatever that he was a prominent party member and, as a matter of fact, he was not.

In its effort to establish actual enemy management and control of Petitioner and its American assets at the time the United States entered the war on December 8, 1941, and at the time the assets were vested beginning on June 4, 1942, the Custodian makes repeated reference to isolated bits of oral testimony culled from the long record and coming from strongly biased witnesses concerning conversations allegedly occurring many years before 1941 and 1942. For example, in an effort to give the erroneous impression that the Opel parents exercised their usufruct the Custodian at three places in his brief (pp. 16, 43, 53) asserts that Petitioner's assets were sold to pay a fine imposed by the Nazi German government in 1934 on Wilhelm von Opel. These assertions flatly contradict the trial court's specific findings and misstate the record. The District Court found (Fdg. 53, R. 61) that "neither Wilhelm nor Marta von Opel ever demanded or received any income of any nature from the usufruct". It was stipulattd (R. 448) that a fine was imposed on Wilhelm von Opel but it was not stipulated, claimed, proved or found that any income from the usufruct was sought or obtained to pay the fine as the Custodian asserts.

The Custodian also attempts to show management control of Petitioner and the Harvard and Spur companies in 1941 and 1942 by arguing that four years before the war in 1937 an officer of these companies, one Hoffacker, employed by Fritz von Opel, not Wilhelm von Opel, was discharged after Wilhelm von Opel in Germany discovered some allegedly adverse information about Hoffacker who formerly resided in Germany. The Custodian ignores the fact that it was Fritz, and not Wilhelm, who employed Hoffacker, and also ignores the fact that Hoffacker's connection with the companies was severed after he had a business disagreement with Fritz von Opel (R. 1996, 2020, and 1235). The fact that the alleged adverse information about Hoffacker came first to the attention of Wilhelm von Opel, quite naturally because Wilhelm von Opel was in Germany, falls far short of establishing that Wilhelm von Opel and not Fritz von Opel discharged Hoffacker and fails wholly to prove management and control of Petitioner by Wilhelm von Opel.

Control and management of Petitioner in 1941 and 1942 by Wilhelm von Opel is not proved by testimony of John Houghland, for example, to the effect that Fritz von Opel in 1937 and 1939 made remarks indicating the interest of Wilhelm von Opel in the operation of properties which were the proceeds of his gift to his son. Even if true[2] this trivial remark at the most indicates that Fritz von Opel was interested in having his business associates meet his father and in having his father aware of the manner in which the substantial gift was being administered.

Similarly, Wilhelm von Opel's control of Petitioner in 1941 and 1942 is not proved by such testimony as that of Rudolf Deku concerning a remark attributed to Wilhelm von Opel at a dinner party many years earlier to the effect that it was worth a German fine, imposed in 1934, "to have his assets outside of the German locked safe" (R. 569; Custodian's Br. 43).[3] It was argued that the assets referred to was the gift (R. 576). Even if such a remark was made, and it was denied by Dr. Gros, another member of the dinner party (R. 1014), it is clear from the record that the court did not give weight to this testimony. It was introduced for the sole purpose of proving the gift was a sham. The court disregarded it and held the gift was valid. In so finding the court must have relied upon the testimony of Dr. Gros who was present at this party and categorically denied that such statement was ever made (R. 1014).

[2] Houghland, a biased witness hostile to Fritz von Opel, admitted his desire to get control of the Spur Company away from Fritz von Opel and even admitted his willingness to do everything to get Fritz von Opel deported (R. 1209-10). In fact Houghland attempted unlawfully to dilute Petitioner's equity in the Spur Company by issuance of additional unauthorized stock and was prevented from doing so only under threat of criminal proceedings by the Alien Property Custodian (R. 945-946; 1183-1184).

[3] This witness had been associated in a private banking business in Berlin with his brother, Erich Deku, who defrauded Wilhelm von Opel of millions of marks and, through the efforts of Fritz von Opel, was brought to justice and given a long prison sentence (R. 573). The witness' bias was evident.

The Custodian refers (Br. 36) to the transcript of the record on appeal in the "Gold case" which the Custodian introduced into evidence not to prove the German law on the rights of a usufructuary but in support of his contention that the gift was a sham (R. 1481). The District Court rejected this contention but now the Custodian attempts to use Fritz von Opel's affidavit in the "Gold case" as evidence of German law of a usufructuary's rights. In effect this is an attack on the findings which set forth the rights of a usufructuary. Moreover, it is an erroneous use of a conclusion of law contained in a memorandum of law (R. 2082) prepared by Petitioner's counsel in the "Gold case" and then also included in a long affidavit of factual matters (R. 1998-2018) prepared by counsel for Fritz von Opel who is not an attorney.[4] The affidavit has no relevance here to change the findings which, on the basis of the expert testimony on German law, determine the rights of the legal owner and the usufructuary in Petitioner's shares.

[4] It is noteworthy that the "Gold case" affidavit of Dr. Wronker-Flatow (R. 1986-90), the German attorney who prepared the gift agreement, does not state that Fritz von Opel, legal owner of the Petitioner's shares, had mere "naked title" but sets forth the provisions of the German Civil Code disclosing the owner's substantial interests in shares subject to a usufruct. Apparently influenced by a Roman law precedent that in a usufruct by legacy the heir had "bare ownership" (nudum proprietatum), rather than by the German law expert's affidavit, the reference to "naked title" was included in the legal memorandum and Fritz von Opel's affidavit. The only purpose of the memorandum (submitted in support of Petitioner's application for a gold export license) on this point was to reply to the Government's contention that Petitioner's corporate entity, as a foreign corporation not present in the United States or subject to the Treasury's gold regulations, should be ignored and the gold treated as the property of Fritz von Opel who was present in the United States. The case was decided on the entirely different ground that the regulations applied to all gold in the United States without regard to the presence of the owner. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation v. Rosen, 83 F. 2d. 225 (C. A. 2) cert. denied 298 U. S. 679.

II.

The Usufruct Alone, Without Wartime Enemy Management Control of Petitioner, is Not Enemy Taint.

The sole issue in the case (an issue which the Government does not argue) is whether the ownership of the usufruct, standing by itself in the absence of enemy management control, is enemy taint. The enemy right to part of the dividends on Petitioner's shares for life is certainly not ownership of those shares themselves. Therefore Petitioner is not tainted as a neutral corporation might be if actually owned by an enemy. Section 1054[5] of the German Civil Code expressly recognizes that a usufruct is not ownership but rather is a usufructuary right in property owned by another.[6] A usufruct, unlike more substantial rights usually associated with ownership, is so limited and personal that it cannot be transferred by deed or will.[7] The [5] Section 1054 (Wang translation) provides: If the usufruct violates the rights of the owner to a serious extent, and if he continues the injury in spite of a warning by the owner, the latter may apply for an injunction.

[6] Similarly in Roman and American law it is recognized that a usufruct is not ownership but merely a right in property owned by others (R. 371, 1296-7). Justinian's Institutes, (Lib. II Tit. IV). A usufruct may be granted without surrendering ownership, Radin, Handbook of Roman Law (1927), p. 338; Heubner, History of German Private Law (1918) pp. 349-51; Restatement of the Law of Property, Sec. 10; Wright v. Central of Georgia Ry., 236 U. Co.*, 131 Misc. 305, 226 N. Y. S. 630, 635.

[7] Article 1059 of the Civil Code (Wang translation) provides: "Usufruct is not transferable. The exercise of the usufruct may be transferred to another." The translator's annotation provides: "The transferee has, in such a case, only a jus in personam against the usufructuary."

usufructuary interest in Petitioner's shares was limited to the right to income or dividends and the trial court so found (R. 60). Even the right to demand income in this case may have been limited by the fact that the purpose of the reservation of income, support of the usufructuaries if in need in their old age, never materialized (R. 134, 1825). The usufructuaries' voice in management of the property, even if it included any voting rights, was limited to protection of the usufructuary "right to the income from the securities" (R. 60).

The Petitioner submits that its shares were directly and legally owned by the neutral, Fritz von Opel, and the usufruct was not "ownership" as ownership is understood either in general legal usage or in the decisions discussing enemy taint.

In conclusion on this point, it is submitted that the right here consists in an executory agreement in 1931 to pay dividends on stock secured in 1935 (R. 57-58) by escrow of the shares. It was made solely for a business purpose. It was never intended to be and never was used to build up enemy assets abroad. The sole and limited control which the enemy might have exercised would have been the degree of control available to a usufructuary of shares under German law who was found by the Court to have symbolic co-possession of Petitioner's shares through an agent, Frankenberg, who was a resident of the United States and an applicant for citizenship long before the war. Any executory and limited agency which he might have had under the usufruct to control property on behalf of the enemy was revoked as a matter of law when war commenced. The actual control of the American companies during the war was in their American management established long before the war and so trusted by the Custodian that no changes were made after vesting. There was therefore neither an enemy legal right to control Petitioner and its American companies nor a possibility of exercising enemy control.

III.

Neither Fritz Von Opel's Ownership of Petitioner's Shares Nor Petitioner's Ownership of Shares of Transdanubia Bauxit Are Evidence of Enemy Taint of Petitioner.

The Custodian's contention that the circumstances of the acquisition of Liechtenstein citizenship by Fritz von Opel transmits an enemy taint to Petitioner through Petitioner's shares owned by Fritz von Opel is answered completely by the finding that he did lawfully and validly become a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein more than two years before the United States was at war. (Fdg. 7, R. 52-53). His Liechtenstein citizenship was conceded, and it was conceded that his neutral citizenship was not open to collateral attack (R. 48).

The Custodian states (Br. p. 57) that "the court found that to the extent Fritz carried on activities on behalf of petitioner, he did so under the guidance and control of his father, Wilhelm von Opel. (Fdg. 45, R. 59.) "This statement takes unwarranted liberty with Finding 45 which is that the activities of Fritz "to a large degree were carried on with the guidance and direction of Wilhelm von Opel, or his agent, Hans Frankenberg." (Italics supplied.) It also ignores the fact that such guidance ceased more than a year before the war. In fact, there was evidence that Fritz acted independently without advice from Wilhelm or Frankenberg on corporate matters including, for example, the employment of Hoffacker to assist him in the management of Petitioner's investments in shares of the Harvard and Spur companies. Fritz exercised his own judgment in the important transaction whereby all of the 600 Opel shares were sold instead of modifying the option and retaining 300 shares (R. 668-70). It was after this transaction was completed by Fritz that Wilhelm indicated his approval of it (R. 2229).

Moreover, the transactions which the Custodian relies upon (Br. p. 58) happened long prior to the war. If at that time Fritz was guided by his banker Frankenberg and by his father who made him this substantial gift, both older men presumably with longer business experience, this fact cannot transmute Fritz, a neutral citizen, into an enemy and thus constitute Petitioner an enemy because of Fritz' ownership of its shares. On the findings, which control here, Fritz was not "as much his father's agent as was Frankenberg" as the Custodian erroneously asserts (Br. p. 57).

In the absence of a direct finding that Fritz as Petitioner's stockholder acted at all relevant times as agent of Wilhelm, the Custodian cannot here substitute random remarks attributed to Fritz by financially interested and hostile witnesses, which were denied by Fritz (R. 1567, 1573), and which were not relied on by the District Court in its findings. In this respect again the Custodian has stretched the record beyond plausible or tolerable limits.

We suggest, however, that it is not necessary for this Court to go beyond the findings which were made and the opinions of the courts below and to laboriously check the accuracy of our references of the record. It is sufficient to apply to the findings made the correct rule of law.

The Custodian refers to "Petitioner's doing of business in Hungary" (R. 21, 58), but the District Court refused to make such a finding. The Court did find that in the Spring of 1941, long before war between the United States and Hungary commenced on December 13, 1941, Fritz von Opel refused requests from Transdanubia for additional funds to continue mining operations and suggested that the mines be sold or leased (Finding 31, R. 56-57). Neither Petitioner nor Fritz received any income from Transdanubia at any time (Finding 31, R. 57).

Section 2 of the Act includes within the definition of "enemy" a foreign corporation doing business in enemy territory. It is clear as a matter of fact and as a matter of law that Petitioner did not do business in enemy territory (Petitioner's Brief, pp. 31-32). The statutory definition of enemies cannot be expanded and circumvented, as the Custodian attempts to do, to mean that mere ownership of stock in an enemy corporation by a neutral corporation makes it an enemy. Certainly it would not be contended that an American corporation was made an enemy by taint because of ownership of stock in Hungarian or other enemy corporations. Similarly, a neutral Swiss corporation, entitled to the protection of the Fifth Amendment and equal treatment with an American corporation in this respect, cannot be condemned as an enemy by this indirect method where it is not an enemy under the statutory definition.

IV.

Petitioner's Claim for the Return of the Non-Enemy Interest in Its American Securities is Valid.

The Government argues that it may confiscate the entire vested property of Petitioner because its stockholder, Fritz von Opel, many years before the war pledged his certificates of Petitioner's stock to secure an agreement to pay his enemy parents 80% of the dividends for their lives.

We have contended first that the pledge of this neutral Swiss corporation's stock does not create an enemy interest in the American assets of the said corporation. As an alternative, we contend that if it is proper to pierce the Petitioner's corporate veil, as the Court of Appeals did, on the ground that Petitioner is a personal holding company of investments, the only possible result is to create in Wilhelm, the enemy, an interest in the American securities equivalent to his interest in the Swiss stock. If that is the enemy's interest, that is the only thing which the Custodian can confiscate. Certainly Wilhelm's right cannot be increased by ignoring the difference between Petitioner's assets and shares of Petitioner's stock.

This enemy usufructuary interest is not a proportionate interest in the Petitioner's stock any more than a mortgage is a proportionate interest in real estate or than a remainder is a proportionate interest in property because it follows a life estate. To assert, as the Custodian does here, that the non-enemy interest of Petitioner in its assets can be confiscated is like saying that where property is mortgaged to an enemy the interest of the mortgagor ought to be confiscated, or is the same as asserting that where there is a life estate in an enemy any remainder in a neutral may be confiscated. Such a conception of enemy taint involves a a shocking appropriation of the property of friendly neutrals which could be equally applied to the property of Americans in neutral countries. The Custodian's contentions obscure the issue but do not answer this argument.

The Custodian suggests that Petitioner would have him go to Switzerland and sue in the Swiss courts to compel the payment of dividends on Petitioner's shares. The answer to this contention is that if the enemy usufruct is in Petitioner's shares the Custodian can have that enemy interest liquidated under the Washington Accord (Pet. Br. 25-26) by the Swiss Government without recourse to the Swiss courts. If, on the other hand, the Petitioner's corporate veil is pierced and the usufruct is held to be an interest in the American property (as the courts below held), that interest can be enforced in the courts here. The American shares could be subjected to the usufruct by a direction from the Court that they be held in escrow to secure copossession in Petitioner, the owner, and the Custodian in place of the usufructuaries. The Custodian would have such voting rights to protect the right to dividends on the American shares as were accorded by German law.

The Custodian's argument proposes first that the Petitioner's corporate veil be ignored for the purpose of claiming an enemy usufructuary interest directly in the American shares and then that the Petitioner's corporate entity be respected for the purpose of claiming that he could not seize the usufruct in this country and therefore should be allowed to confiscate all of Petitioner's American assets including not only the usufruct for life but the remainder as well.

The Custodian also argues that the Petitioner's claim that it should recover the non-enemy interest in its American assets was not made in time. But the record shows that this claim was raised first in the District Court when that Court had indicated its belief that there was an enemy interest (R. 50-51). In passing on this claim, the District Court erroneously treated it as a claim by Fritz von Opel, rather than by Petitioner as the proper claimant for Petitioner's property in which the enemy had no interest. Since Fritz was not a plaintiff the Court held his right could not be adjudicated in this suit. But this error of the District Court in denying the Petitioner's claim does not affect the fact that the question was raised. The question was raised again in the Court of Appeals in the argument and raised the third time in a motion to clarify the opinion of the Court of Appeals. The Court of Appeals decided the question against the Petitioner not on the technicality urged by the Government but on the merits. It held that Petitioner could not get back any of the property because Wilhelm, the enemy, was the owner of the shares of Petitioner and Fritz von Opel had only a contract right to 20% of the dividends.

It is clear from the record and the Custodian concedes (apart from its attack on the loyalty of Fritz) that Petitioner owns assets in this country which are enemy owned only to the extent that they are subject to a usufructuary right in the enemy. It is equally clear that if the corporate veil is pierced the American courts may enforce that right for the Custodian. Nowhere in the Custodian's brief is there any argument justifying the confiscation of the entire property as enemy-owned other than the technicality that the claim was not made in time and the second technicality that in order to enforce the usufructuary right the Custodian would have to go to Switzerland. Neither of these technicalities have any validity. Neither were considered by the Court of Appeals.

CONCLUSION.

Petitioner's first contention is that the existence of the usufruct in the absence of wartime showing of control by the enemy does not justify the confiscation of its property. Its second contention which it advances only in the event the Court finds against it on the first, is that in no event can the Custodian confiscate, in the absence of control, anything more than the right of the enemy in this case to 80% of the dividends for their lives.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit

BRIEF FOR THE RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the District Court (R. 41) is reported at 82 F. Supp. 602. The opinion of the Court of Appeals (R. 2326), supplemented by a "Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court" (R. 2333), has not yet been reported.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals (R. 2328) was entered on February 8, 1951. By order of May 8, 1951 (R. 2337), the time for filing the petition for a writ of certiorari was extended to July 8, 1951. The petition for a writ of certiorari was filed July 7, 1951. The judgment of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the holding of the courts below—that petitioner, a Swiss corporation, was substantially owned by enemies and therefore ineligible to recover vested property in an action under Section 9(a) of the Trading with the Enemy Act—was supported by the evidence.

2. Whether recovery of part of the vested property, proportionate to an asserted fractional non-enemy interest in petitioner, could be awarded to petitioner in this action.

STATUTE INVOLVED

The pertinent provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, are set forth in the Appendix to the Petition (pp. 18-20).

STATEMENT

This is an action brought under Section 9(a) of the Trading with the Enemy Act (40 Stat. 411, as amended, 50 U.S.C. App. §§ 1-39) by petitioner, a Swiss corporation, to recover certain property vested by the Alien Property Custodian[1] pursuant to that Act. On a motion to dismiss the complaint, this Court held that the mere fact the petitioner was incorporated in Switzerland was not a ground for dismissal but that petitioner could recover only if it established that it was free of enemy taint. Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A.G., 332 U.S. 480. On remand, the District Court for the District of Columbia, after answer and extended trial, entered judgment for defendant on the merits. The court below affirmed, with one dissent (R. 2326-2328, 2333-2334).

The following facts were established by the evidence:—

1. At the outbreak of World War II, petitioner, a Swiss corporation, was the owner of record of majority share interests in several American corporations (Fdgs. 1, 2; R. 52). Their principal assets included a brewery, a chain of gasoline filling stations and oil producing and refining properties (R. 2, 7-8).

Petitioner had acquired the shares under somewhat unusual circumstances. Until 1929, Wilhelm

[1] By Executive Order No. 9788, October 14, 1946, 11 F.R. 11981, the authority, rights, privileges and powers of the Alien Property Custodian were transferred to the Attorney General. The term "Custodian" will be used to indicate either official, as the context may require. The complaint was originally brought against James E. Markham, as Alien Property Custodian. Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, was later substituted, and J. Howard McGrath, the present respondent, was substituted on December 8, 1949 (R. 112).

von Opel and his brothers, citizens and residents of Germany, owned the Adam Opel works, a German concern manufacturing motor cars. Wilhelm dominated its management. (R. 1998-1999.) In 1929, General Motors Corporation acquired control of the concern but agreed with Wilhelm that he could retain 10% of the Opel stock (amounting to 600 shares—here called the Opel shares) (Fdg. 12, R. 53-54). He was also granted an option enabling him to sell the stock thus retained to General Motors at a predetermined price (R. 1803). Under the terms of the option (and of a reciprocal purchase option given General Motors) the Opel shares were placed in escrow with a New York bank (R. 1803).

In July 1931, Germany adopted regulations that required residents of Germany to secure licenses for transactions involving foreign exchange (R. 2313). Wilhelm and Marta, his wife, as such residents, were subject to the regulations. Fritz von Opel, their son, was not, because although a native-born citizen of Germany he had lived abroad since 1929 and thus had become a non-resident for purposes of the German foreign exchange laws. (Fdg. 16, R. 54.) On October 2, 1931, the scope of the new exchange rules was expanded (R. 2309) and farther expansion was in prospect (Fdg. 13, R. 54; R. 590). With this in mind (Fdg. 18, R. 54-5), Wilhelm, Marta, and Fritz, on October 5, 1931, signed a brief and informal instrument, (R. 1805,

Fdgs. 17, 18 (R. 54-55) that had been prepared with the utmost haste (R. 225-232, 239, 611). Its terms, applicable to both the Opel shares and the proceeds from their sale or exchange, were briefly these:

Fritz was given the 600 Opel shares that Wilhelm had retained under the arrangements with General Motors. Wilhelm and Marta, however, reserved the usufruct in the shares and their proceeds. The instrument provided as to this (R. 1806):

> The usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm and his wife * * * until the death of the survivor of them. However, 20% of all dividends and interest received will accrue to Fritz von Opel. [Italics added.]

Usufruct income not fully drawn by his parents was to be deemed an advancement to Fritz, for which he was accountable. Wilhelm insisted on the inclusion of the usufruct provisions and would not have signed the instrument without them (R. 160, 1987, 2000-2001). The instrument also provided that the gift was to revert to the parents if Fritz should die before them without leaving legitimate issue. Should they die before him the gift was to be treated as an advancement to Fritz which was to be taken from his share in his parents' estate (Fdg. 54, R. 61).

A "usufruct" in German law is an interest in rem that includes as a minimum the right to the income from the res (here subject to Fritz's claim to 20% of the income), a right to co-possession of the res, a voice in its management, a right to veto its transfer, and, in the view of some German commentators, certain voting rights where the res, as here, consists of shares of stock (Fdg. 52, R. 60-61).[2] The 1931 instrument did not, under German law, create an in rem interest because Fritz, the grantee, failed in terms to re-deliver possession of the res to his parents, but it did create their right to have the usufruct duly established (Fdgs. 32, 33, R. 57). It was in fact established prior to 1935 by delivery of the res to Dr. Frankenberg, a Swiss banker and Wilhelm von Opel's agent (Fdgs. 34-38, 42, 53, R. 57-58, 59, 61).

The written instrument did not fully reflect the understandings reached between Fritz and his parents (R. 240, 241, 2001, 2073). Thus, although the instrument indicated the contrary (R. 1806), it had been agreed that Fritz should convert the shares promptly into gold or dollars (R. 229, 234, 613-617, 2001). Accordingly, he sailed immediately for New York and there, on October 17, 1931,

[2] In view of the intent of the parties, as disclosed by their contemporaneous and subsequent actions, that Wilhelm retain complete control over the subject of the gift and its proceeds, the trial court found it unnecessary to resolve the conflict among German commentators over the voting rights in shares held under usufruct. See infra, pp. 6-11, 17-21.

sold the 600 Opel shares to General Motors (Fdg. 19, R. 55). He did so not as donee but as his father's attorney-in-fact under a power given him after the gift (R. 1807). He deposited the proceeds, consisting of cash and General Motors shares, in a New York bank in Wilhelm's name; later, still acting as his father's attorney-in-fact, he transferred them to custodian accounts in his own name (R. 1861, 1863, 1862). He directed that 80% of the income be credited to a principal account and 20% to a special account of his own and that duplicate statements be sent to Wilhelm who also held a power of attorney to draw on the custodian accounts (R. 1865, 1869, 1870). Between 1931 and 1934, these funds were, with the approval of Wilhelm's agent Frankenberg, invested in properties that substantially correspond with those here in suit (supra, p. 3) (Fdgs. 2, 20, 21, 39, 40, 43, 46, R. 52, 55, 58, 59).

Another of the oral understandings was that Fritz would transfer the proceeds to a holding company so as to protect the several interests in the funds (R. 1987, 2001, 2008). This was also done early in 1932 when Fritz, after securing his father's approval, acquired with Dr. Frankenberg's help all the shares of petitioner and had the American assets transferred to it (Fdg. 20, R. 55, 2005-2006).

2. The purpose of these written and oral understandings among the Opels and their effect upon the ownership and control of the funds in question were fully explained by petitioner itself in litigation with a federal instrumentality, in 1935 and 1936, which eventually reached this Court (R. 1968-2104).[3] Similar explanations were made orally and in writing to Swiss and American authorities.

In 1935, petitioner sued the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and others for the return of $1,250,000 of United States gold coins (R. 1970-1977). After petitioner had acquired the gold in 1933, the Secretary of the Treasury seized it under the Gold Acts (Acts of March 9, 1933, and June 30, 1934, 48 Stat. 1, 337). In its suit, as in its previous applications to the Treasury Department, petitioner asserted that under the 1931 instrument Wilhelm and Marta were the real and beneficial owners of this gold and that the Gold Acts did not apply to persons who, like Wilhelm and Marta, neither resided nor did business in the United States (R. 2081, 2084, 2085, 2067).

Petitioner filed, inter alia, supporting affidavits of Fritz (R. 1998-2018) and the German draftsman of the 1931 instrument (R. 1986-1990). Fritz declared that under the 1931 instrument he had acquired only "naked title" to petitioner's shares (R. 2090) and that he was left with a "mere legal title" and 20% of the income (R. 2001). He added that 97 of the 100 bearer shares (representing petitioner's entire capitalization) were deposited in a vault of a Swiss bank and that Dr. Frankenberg held the key as Wilhelm's agent and representative for the purpose of safeguarding his usufruct (R. 2017). Meier, petitioner's president, swore that Frankenberg conducted substantially all of its affairs (R. 1982-1983). He also told the United States Treasury Department in 1935 that members of the Opel family had a controlling interest in petitioner (R. 2234).[4] Petitioner also advised Swiss authorities that "a single group" controlled petitioner's capital stock (R. 2222).

3. The actual conduct of all participants in these arrangements conformed to the interpretation offered by petitioner to the federal courts and other authorities in 1935. From the outset, Wilhelm considered himself as being in control of the subject matter of the 1931 gift and was so considered by the others. It was he and not Fritz who had the final say about the sale to General Motors (R. 1967, 1968, 2227, 2229). When the German authorities later fined him 3,500,000 Reichmarks (R. 448) because of the 1931 instrument, he observed that it was well worth that sum to have his assets "outside of the German locked safe" (R. 569). To help raise the funds that Wilhelm needed to pay this fine, petitioner had an oil lease sold by one of its American subsidiaries for about $150,000 (R. 1229, 1230). When Wilhelm became dissatisfied with Mr. Hoffacker, one of petitioner's principal agents in the United States (R. 1236), Frankenberg dismissed him (R. 1243-1244). Fritz advised officers of petitioner's American subsidiaries that he was accountable to his father (R. 1236) and that they worked for the latter (R. 1143). In 1939, Fritz informed Mr. Houghland, the president of one of the subsidiaries, that the "investors" in petitioner had decided to sell the stock of the subsidiary, a decision which Fritz deeply regretted (R. 2301). He amplified (R. 1143-1144) this cable by explaining to Mr. Houghland that his father, against Fritz' wishes, had ordered Frankenberg to sell the stock. Wilhelm apparently reversed this decision since the stock was not sold. Later, in January 1941, when the positions were reversed and Houghland suggested that, in view of the approaching war, Wilhelm might now be willing to sell the stock in the subsidiary, Fritz replied that his father would not be receptive to the idea (R. 1148).

[4] Significantly, petitioner's account book entitled "Foreign Management Accounts—Current Accounts" showed between 1932 and 1934 credits of $2,613,840.21 and from June to December 1933 credits of 2,500,000 Swiss francs, to "Consortium O" (Def. Ex. 49, R. 2220). "Consortium" means a group or syndicate (R. 845). It is apparent that "O" in "Consortium O" stood for Opel and that these entries showed the interest of the Opel family on petitioner's books.

For the most part, Wilhelm, in his management of petitioner's affairs, acted through Frankenberg, who represented him, and who had at Wilhelm's request become petitioner's managing director (Fdg. 39, R. 58). Throughout the years and until the vesting, Frankenberg, as Wilhelm's agent, among other things, directed petitioner's major policies (Fdgs. 43, 45; R. 59). It was he who gave binding instructions regarding its investments and activities (Fdg. 43, R. 59). He also passed on important questions dealing with its subsidiaries. When he had to fill the positions formerly held by Mr. Hoffacker (see supra p. 10), he selected Mr. Ulrich, an old friend of his (R. 1243-1244; 1246). In all these matters his word was final. While Fritz participated from time to time in petitioner's affairs, he did so under the guidance of Wilhelm or Frankenberg (Fig. 45, R. 59); he never was an officer of petitioner; his authority depended on powers of attorney that Frankenberg issued to him (R. 1985, 2009-2010). In keeping with this status Fritz reported to Frankenberg and obtained his approval before important action was taken (R. 2014, 1242, 1137). Fritz on a number of occasions disagreed with decisions made by Frankenberg or Wilhelm but let it be known that there was nothing he could do about them (R. 1139, 1144). As the District Court pointed out, Frankenberg was the "guiding genius" (R. 1725). This guidance, however, was strictly vicarious; it was exercised on behalf of and for the benefit of Wilhelm, and so the trial judge found on the basis of "overwhelming evidence" (R. 1729, see also Fdg. 40, R. 58).

4. As has been indicated, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel were, at all relevant times, German citizens and residents. Wilhelm was a prominent and honored member of the Nazi party and various other Nazi organizations (R. 165-166). His son Fritz was, at least until November 21, 1939, a German citizen. He resided in Germany until December, 1929. Between then and 1939, he spent about 10% of his time in Germany (Fdg. 6, R. 52). He was in the United States from May 1940 until the trial.[5]

After the outbreak of World War II in Europe, Fritz applied for Liechtenstein citizenship (R. 1849-1852) and in a matter of weeks was naturalized by that country on November 21, 1939 (Fdg. 7, R. 52). In connection with his acquisition of this citizenship he paid sums totalling $10,000 to the national government and one of its communities, an amount equal to 3% of the country's annual budget (Fdg. 8, R. 53, 494). The Liechtenstein naturalization statute requires three years' residence, although this requirement may be waived "under extraordinary circumstances that ask for special consideration" (R. 1951). Fritz never resided nor was ever physically in Liechtenstein except while in transit to some other destination (Fdg. 7, R. 52-53). The statute also requires an oath of allegiance, which may be taken after citizenship has been granted and may also be waived "under extraordinary circumstances". (Fdg. 9, R. 53, 1951). Fritz never took that oath, assertedly because he was too sick to travel, although the record shows that on the day of his naturalization he was in Budapest for the purpose of expediting production of bauxite for sale to a German aluminum producer (R. 893, see also R. 894, 1641, 2286). Significantly, Fritz advised an officer of one of petitioner's subsidiaries that he felt "obliged" to acquire a new citizenship for business reasons (R. 2294), and described his Liechtenstein passport as something he had bought for $10,000 and by which he was able to "fool the English" (R. 1146). He continued to regard himself as German and cheered the initial successes of the German armies (R. 1142, 1148, 1149, 1105, 1106). As the court below put it, he had a "continued interest in the welfare of and sympathy for Germany" (Fdg. 10, R. 53).

[5] Between February 1942 and May 1945, he was interned by the United States Government as a potentially dangerous alien enemy (R. 394, 597).

ARGUMENT

The sole question presented on this record is whether petitioner is eligible to recover any of the property in suit. That question turns on whether the petitioner is an enemy or is enemy-tainted within the principles stated by this Court upon its consideration of the motion to dismiss the complaint. 332 U.S. 480. After careful review of voluminous evidence, the District Court concluded that "it would be difficult * * * to find a stronger case of enemy taint" (R. 50); the majority of the Court of Appeals likewise emphasized that "this is not a borderline case" (R. 2334). We think those courts correctly applied the legal principles laid down by this Court to the facts found by the District Court, and that the petition presents no issue calling for further review.

I.

A. Section 2 of the original Trading with the Enemy Act defined a corporation as an enemy if it was incorporated or did business in an enemy country. In 1925, this Court construed the statutory definition as exclusive and explicitly rejected the doctrine established in England by Daimler Co. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co., [1916] 2 A. C. 307, that a corporation, although incorporated in non-enemy territory, was an enemy if it was owned or controlled by enemies.[6] Behn, [6] The Daimler case established that "the character of those who can make and unmake * * * [the corporate] officers, dictate their conduct mediately or immediately * * * and call them to account" may be material in determining the corporation's enemy character. A corporation was to be deemed an enemy if its "agents or the persons in de facto control of its affairs, whether authorized or not, are resident in an enemy country, or, wherever resident, are adhering to the enemy or taking instructions from or acting under the control of enemies". [1916] 2 A. C. at 340, 345 (italics added). See also The St. Tudno, [1916] P. 291; The Polzeath, [1916] P. 241; The Michigan, [1916] V Ll. P. C. 421; The Hamborn, [1919] A.C. 993; In re Badische Company, [1921] 2 Ch. D. 331.

Like principles were applied in early American decisions in the field of prize law (to which the Trading with the Enemy Act is historically and constitutionally related). Stoehr v.

Meyer & Co. v. Miller, 266 U. S. 457; cf. Hamburg-American Co. v. United States, 277 U. S. 138. Under this strict territorial construction, the World War I Custodian lacked power to seize enemy property whenever an enemy had placed his American assets into a neutral corporation in exchange for all of its shares.

In order to cope with the new patterns of corporate control and economic warfare that had emerged since World War I, Congress, at the outbreak of World War II, amended Section 5(b) of the Act so as to authorize the vesting of "any property or interest of any foreign country or national thereof." First War Powers Act, 55 Stat. 838, 50 U.S.C. App. § 5(b). This Court recognized, on its consideration of the motion to dismiss the complaint, that this amendment required the reformulation of the concept of "enemy". It therefore held that Section 2 must now be regarded as "merely illustrative, not exclusionary" (332 U. S. at 488-489), and that persons or corporations affected with an "enemy taint" are now within the reach of the term "enemy". It also abandoned (at 486), as "destructive of the objectives of the 1941 amendment to § 5(b)", the doctrine of Behn, Meyer & Co. v. Miller, supra. It pointed out that one of the evils at which the 1941 amendments were aimed was that enemies "had through numerous devices, including the corporation, acquired indirect control or ownership in industries in this country for the purposes of economic warfare" (pp. 484-485). It refused to assume that Congress intended the seizure and retention of property of "friendly or neutral foreign interests whose investments in our economy were in no way infected with enemy ownership or control" (p. 487). But it unequivocally rejected the view, adopted in the Behn, Meyer case, supra, that a plaintiff which "was owned or controlled by enemy interests" could recover vested property (p. 486). (Italics added throughout.) In the light of this opinion and the findings made by the trial court, we think it clear that petitioner is an enemy within the reach of Section 2 of the present Act.

B. It is not disputed that the Opel parents were enemies within the literal terms of that section. Nor is it disputed that they had a usufruct—an in rem property interest under German law—in all of the shares of petitioner, a Swiss holding company. As to the scope and effect of the rights thus held by the enemy parents, petitioner has taken two diametrically opposite positions. In 1935, in its "Gold" case (supra, pp. 7-9), it contended that Fritz von Opel had only bare legal title and that his parents had the entire beneficial interest. Now it asserts that the beneficial inter.est was in Fritz and seeks to dismiss the interest of the parents as "remote" and "unimportant". Thus, the question presented to the courts below and to this Court is fundamentally not one of the interpretation of this Court's prior opinion, but one of fact as to which of these two conflicting views of the rights and powers possessed by the parties to the underlying agreements is correct.[7]

C. The courts below were clearly warranted in accepting the view of the facts which petitioner had urged in 1935. There was ample evidence before them that all parties, at all relevant times, regarded the Opel parents as the owners of petitioner, and, through it, of the properties in suit. Thus, Wilhelm stated in 1934 that the effect of the 1931 agreement was to place "his [Wilhelm's] assets outside of the German locked safe" (R. 569). Fritz in 1937 told Crittenden (president of one of the American subsidiaries) that "he was entrusted with the use of a considerable amount of money by his father under what he described as a usufruct contract and, in a general way, he had the handling of the funds and accounted back to his father" (R. 1236). Fritz in 1939 invited Houghland, the president of another subsidiary, to meet

[7] In the District Court counsel for petitioner candidly admitted that it would lose this case if its assertions in the "Gold" case that the Opel parents owned the beneficial interests were true (Tr. 2677-86; Tr. will be used herein to refer to the unprinted transcript of the trial, a copy of which petitioner has filed with this Court).

Wilhelm because "after all, you work for my father" (R. 1143). Fritz in January, 1941, declined because his father would not be receptive to the idea, to consider Houghland's suggestion that petitioner sell the shares of that subsidiary (R. 1148).

Examination of the nature of the rights conferred by a usufruct, and of the conduct of the parties with respect to the petitioner and the properties here in suit, confirms this view. In the first place, it is undisputed that by virtue of the usufruct the Opel parents had the right to receive the income derived from the American enterprises (subject to Fritz's contractual right to 20% of that income). We agree with the court below that this, without more, was sufficient to preclude recovery. As that court said (R. 2327):

> This case does not involve a diluted "taint"; it involves the ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business. This seems to us to be a more obvious objective of the vesting provisions of the statute than is the bare ownership of a sterile legal title. As between the right to the naked tree and the right to the periodical fruit, the benefit to the enemy would be more in the latter than in the former.

In addition, the Opel parents had the important rights to co-possession of the shares and to prevent any transfer of them. Finally, whatever uncertainties there may have been in the German law as to the location of voting rights under the usufruct, there can be no doubt that the understanding of the parties and their consistent practice was that entire control of the enterprise remained with Wilhelm. Wilhelm's agent Frankenberg, as managing director of petitioner, was the "guiding genius" to whom all matters of importance were referred, who hired and fired officers of the American subsidiaries and determined their policies, and who had the unquestioned power to override Fritz's wishes.[8]

D. Petitioner attacks the lower court's conclusion—and, by the same token, its own pre-war position—by asserting (Pet. p. 5; see also p. 12) that "the record is clear that Wilhelm and Marta von Opel never exercised any of the rights which they had on account of the usufruct". This assertion ignores the realities of the situation.

Petitioner emphasizes, for instance, that "Wilhelm and Marta * * * did not request or receive any of the dividends" (Pet. p. 5). But this fact is [8] The fact that petitioner, through a wholly-owned subsidiary, did business in Hungary after the outbreak of war was properly regarded by the District Court as "an additional circumstance which of itself perhaps would not prevent recovery by plaintiff * * * but which with the other facts of the case tends to indicate enemy taint" (R. 49). The facts as to this aspect of the case are set out in the District Court's opinion (R. 49-50), and findings (Fdgs. 22-31, R. 55-57).

wholly irrelevant when seen in its context. For though it is true that it does not appear that the petitioner ever paid dividends to anyone, it is also true that there was every reason why Wilhelm would not want it to. Under the German exchange regulations, Wilhelm and Marta would have been compelled to convert any dividends received into reichmarks. Like most Germans similarly situated, they knew the truth of the saying then current in Germany that "money alone shouldn't make you happy; you should have it in Switzerland to be happy about it" (R. 228) and they acted accordingly (ibid.). Voluntarily to return assets of the petitioner into "the locked German safe" (R. 569) would have run counter to all that the Opel family and Frankenberg had accomplished since 1931. Indeed, Wilhelm did make use of petitioner's resources whenever he was in need of foreign exchange. Thus, $150,000.00 was raised by one of petitioner's American subordinates to help pay Wilhelm's fine to the German government (R. 1229-1230) and petitioner provided Wilhelm with funds for a trip to South America (R. 131).

The assertion that the usufruct was not exercised disregards the facts in other respects. The Opel parents exercised not merely the right to co-possession which the German Civil Code granted them explicitly; they had, in fact, exclusive possession, through Frankenberg who had been installed as petitioner's managing director at Wilhelm's request and as his representative. And, finally, it was Frankenberg who completely controlled, on his master's behalf, petitioner's policies and operations and the policies and operations of its American subsidiaries until the date of vesting.[9] Significantly, petitioner omits all reference to this aspect of the case.

[9] Nor can petitioner argue that Frankenberg's agency and with it Wilhelm's control ceased upon the outbreak of war because Frankenberg could not thereafter lawfully act as Wilhelm's agent. The following grounds fully justify the rejection of this argument by the trial court (See Fdgs. 41, 43, R. 59):

(1) Agencies are not necessarily terminated by war and, in particular, the agent's authority to preserve his principal's property continues. Sutherland v. Mayer, 271 U.S. 272, 288, Williams v. Paine, 169 U.S. 55; see also Fujino v. Clark, 71 F. Supp. 1 (D. Haw.), affirmed, 172 F. 2d 384 (C.A. 9), certiorari denied, 337 U.S. 937; Second Russian Insurance Co. v. Miller, 297 Fed. 404 (C.A. 2), affirmed, 268 U.S. 552; Pipe v. The La Salle, 49 F. Supp. 662 (S.D.N.Y.); and Daimler Co. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Company, supra, [1916] 2 A.C. 307, 326, 349.

(2) It is sufficient if this agency and control existed at the outbreak of the war. Schrijver v. Sutherland, 57 App. D. C. 214, 19 F. 2d 688, certiorari denied, 275 U.S. 546; Société Suisse v. Cummings, 69 App. D.C. 154, 99 F. 2d 387; Sarthou v. Clark, 78 F. Supp. 139 (S.D. Cal.); Beck v. Clark, 86 F. Supp. 565 (D. Conn.).

(3) Termination of Frankenberg's agency would in any event not establish that Wilhelm's control terminated. Wilhelm may have acted in person or through other agents. Indeed, the court found (Fdg. 45, R. 59) that, throughout, Fritz acted under his father's direction. The record is bare of any suggestion that, up to the date of vesting, the relationships between Fritz and Wilhelm, or between petitioner and Wilhelm, underwent any change whatever.

E. It is thus clear not only that the usufruct rights were exercised, but that the rights granted a usufruct holder under German law were considered by the parties as the very minimum to which the Opel parents were entitled. Petitioner cannot dispute that had Wilhelm and Marta von Opel owned all of the Uebersee shares outright, its American assets could properly have been vested and retained. Petitioner now in effect argues that they could escape seizure and retention of these assets by placing the same shares under a usufruct arrangement which left in them all the powers of control and substantially all the rights of beneficial ownership which they could have had as outright owners. This argument is in startling contrast to the admission by petitioner's counsel in the District Court that it would lose its case if its assertions in the "Gold" case concerning the beneficial ownership of petitioner were true.[10] In any event, such an argument would receive short shrift in other fields of the law.[11] To allow it to prevail under the Trading with the Enemy Act would sanction easy evasion of that Act. It would reduce the 1941 amendment and the prior decision of this Court in this case to a mere requirement of one additional link in the chain through which enemy ownership and control are exercised.

[10] Tr. 2677-8. See fn. 7, supra, p. 17.

[11] See e.g., Hormel v. Helvering, 312 U.S. 552, Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U.S. 331; Commissioner v. Lamont, 127 F. 2d 875 (C.A. 2).

F. Petitioner also suggests (Pet. p. 12) that the vested properties in suit were not useful for economic warfare. It appears to argue that under this Court's prior decision the Custodian has no authority to retain vested property, unless it can be used for that purpose. We can read no such requirement in the Court's opinion. Moreover, petitioner's suggestion misconceives the very purposes of the Trading with the Enemy Act. In the first place, most property is convertible into cash and may serve as basis for the extension of credit. For this reason, the Custodian has vested thousands of bank accounts, negotiable instruments, estates and other interests in real and personal property, both tangible and intangible. See Annual Report, Office of Alien Property (1949, pp. 46, 59, 67, 69). These assets have been vested because their aggregate value is substantial, and if not vested they might have enabled our enemies to mobilize considerable financial resources in this country. By that vesting our enemies were denied "the opportunity to secure advantages to themselves or to perpetrate wrongs against the United States * * * through the use of assets that happened to be in this country." Propper v. Clark, 337 U. S. 472, 481. Secondly, "the purpose of the Act was to reduce to possession all accessible enemy property, not only to cripple Germany, but to prosecute the war" (italics added). Lizrodt v. Miller, 17 F. 2d 533 (C. A. 2). Finally, enemy property of every character was vested so as to make it available to satisfy the claims of American citizens.[12]

II.

Although petitioner claims the vested property in its own right and in its own name, it argues (Pet. pp. 13-16) that the courts below erroneously failed to return the "fractional" non-enemy interest represented by Fritz. We think that this claim was properly rejected for a number of reasons. We need not consider the question whether such a partial recovery could be awarded in any case, or the further question whether, on the facts of this case, Fritz von Opel had any present interest on which such a recovery could be predicated.[13]

[12] Section 34 of the Act provides a comprehensive scheme for the payment of American creditors of the former enemy owners of vested property; Section 39, enacted as part of the War Claims Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 1246), prohibits return of vested assets to nationals of Germany and Japan. The War Claims Act earmarks these assets for the compensation of Americans who suffered at the hands of our enemies.

[13] As the court below rightly held, Fritz's claim to 20% of the dividends was a purely contractual right not rising to the dignity of a property interest in the shares (R. 2334). His bare legal title to the shares is clearly not an interest entitled to recognition under the Trading with the Enemy Act. Stoehr v. Wallace, 269 Fed. 827, 835 (S.D.N.Y), affirmed, 255 U.S. 239. Nor does the third interest claimed by Fritz—a remainder interest in petitioner's shares which will vest in possession if Fritz or his legitimate issue should survive both his parents—support a partial recovery. This is because the

For in any event (a) this claim was advanced too late, (b) petitioner is in no position to assert it on its stockholder's behalf, and, finally, (c) the asserted separate non-enemy interest is neither separate nor non-enemy.

A. Neither in its pleadings nor during pre-trial proceedings did petitioner indicate that it might seek recovery of Fritz's "fractional" interest. Moreover, as petitioner's counsel frankly stated (Tr. 2711), they declined throughout the trial to argue that question. Not until the close of the argument on the twenty-fourth day of the trial did petitioner's counsel indicate that a question of partial recovery was involved.[14] At that stage, however, petitioner's failure to present evidence concerning the feasibility and method of separating the respective interests and their value had left the trial judge without guidance for framing a decree in its favor. Although the court indicated its surprise over petitioner's claim to a partial recovery and repeatedly called counsel's attention to the inadequate record made in its support (Tr. 2951, 2953, 2954, 2959, 2960, 2961), petienemy character of a corporation and the extent and nature of the asserted non-enemy interests cannot be changed after the date of vesting. Swiss National Insurance Co. v. Miller, 267 U.S. 42.

[14] Similarly, petitioner did not advert to this contention in the Court of Appeals until it filed its reply brief.

tioner did not move to correct this deficiency. In these circumstances we think the trial judge acted entirely within the scope of the discretion entrusted to him in the conduct of a lengthy and complicated trial when he refused to adjudicate a claim so unseasonably and inadequately presented.

B. But even if the claim had been seasonably presented the courts below could not have sustained it in the procedural posture of this case. The sole plaintiff in this action is petitioner, a Swiss corporation, which seeks recovery of its vested assets. To succeed, petitioner must establish, under this Court's decision, that it is not an enemy, that it is free from enemy taint. Since it has failed to establish that it is eligible to recover its property under Section 9(a) of the Act, judgment was properly entered for the respondent. Plainly, no recovery can be awarded to Fritz in this action, for he is not a party plaintiff.[15] Nor do we perceive any theory on which petitioner could sue on his behalf. We know of no basis on which a corporation can sue for the benefit of its individual stockholders. See the Government Respondents' Brief in Opposition, Kaufman v. Société Internationale Pour Participations Indus- trielles et Commerciales, S.A., No. 172, this Term, pp. 12-14. And to allow an enemy tainted corporation to secure even a partial recovery would plainly defeat the purposes of the act, for then the property recovered would enure, in part, to the benefit of the enemy interests in the corporation.

[15] Fritz is the plaintiff in three suits now pending in the Southern District of New York and the District of Columbia. Fritz von Opel v. McGrath, Civ. 50-70; Fritz von Opel v. Clark, Civ. Action No. 1910-49; Fritz von Opel v. Clark, Civ. Action No. 1923-49.

C. Finally, the "fractional" interest of Fritz is separate and non-enemy in the most superficial sense only. As the trial court put it, "the neutral aspect of ownership in the property is insignificant" (R. 50). This is not a case of enemies and non-enemies dealing at arms length with each other. Fritz was subject in a very substantial degree to the influence and control of his father. In numerous fields of the law, transactions between members of a family are treated differently from those between strangers. In tax cases, for example, ownership by a family is often regarded as equivalent to ownership by the head of the family, e.g., Helvering v. Horst, 311 U. S. 112, 118; Harrison v. Schaffner, 312 U. S. 579, and arrangements between the members of the family are subject to special scrutiny. Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U. S. 331, 335; Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, 291. Like principles have been applied under the Trading with the Enemy Act. Fujino v. Clark, 71 F. Supp. 1 (D. Haw.), affirmed, 172 F. 2d 384 (C. A. 9), certiorari denied, 337 U. S. 937. Similarly, in considering the neutral aspects of Fritz's alleged separate interest the family relationship between Fritz, the "non-enemy", and Wilhelm, the enemy, is most significant. This relationship imposed upon petitioner the burden of establishing convincingly that Fritz was not subject to enemy influence and control. Such a showing has not been made. On the contrary, the evidence clearly establishes that Fritz participated in the management of petitioner as his father's tool and agent. As the District Court found, his activities for petitioner were largely carried on "with the guidance and direction of Wilhelm von Opel, or his agent, Hans Frankenberg". (Fdg. 45, R. 39) Obviously, therefore, Fritz was anything but an innocent bystander. Moreover, the extraordinary circumstances under which, after the outbreak of World War II, he purchased a Liechtenstein passport, and the sentiments he expressed on the early successes of the German armies clearly indicate that his allegiance to a neutral country was one in name only. In the light of the foregoing facts, it seems fanciful to argue that this Court, in referring to "friendly or neutral foreign interests whose investments in our economy were in no way infected with enemy ownership or control" (332 U. S. at 487), was visualizing an interest of the sort here asserted.

CONCLUSION

Petitioner asserts two issues. The issue whether petitioner is an enemy turns, not on questions of law, but on the inferences to be drawn from a particular, and relatively unique, factual situation. The claim to a partial recovery was not seasonably made below, cannot be asserted by this plaintiff, and rests on erroneous assumptions of fact. Thus, neither of the issues sought to be raised by petitioner presents any question of general interest calling for further review by this Court. On neither is there any conflict with decisions of this or any other court. Accordingly, the petition should be denied.

v.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, ATTORNEY GENERAL, AS SUCCESSOR TO THE ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE RESPONDENT

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit (R. 2326) is reported at 191 F. 2d 327. This opinion was supplemented by a "Memorandum on Appellant's Motion for Clarification of the Opinion of the Court" (R. 2333) which has not yet been reported. The opinion of the District Court (R. 41) is reported at 82 F. Supp. 602.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals (R. 2323) was entered February 8, 1951. By order of May 8, 1951, the time for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari was extended to July 8, 1951. The petition for a writ of certiorari was filed July 7, 1951, and was granted on October 15, 1951 (R. 2336). The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. 1254 (1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The principal questions presented are:

1. Whether findings that enemies had substantial ownership in and complete control of petitioner are supported by the evidence.

2. Whether, by reason of such ownership and control, petitioner is an enemy ineligible to recover anything in this action.

STATUTE INVOLVED

The relevant portions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, are set forth in the Appendix to the Brief for Petitioner (pp. 35–43).

STATEMENT

This is an action, brought by petitioner under Section 9 (a) of the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended (40 Stat. 411, 50 U. S. C. App. 1–40), for the recovery of certain properties vested by the Alien Property Custodian[1] pur-

[1] The functions of the Alien Property Custodian were transferred to the Attorney General by Executive Order 9788, October 14, 1946, 11 F. R. 11981. The action was brought against James E. Markham, as Alien Property Custodian. Tom C. Clark and J. Howard McGrath, as Attorneys General, were successively substituted as defendants suant to that Act. Petitioner is a Swiss holding company. Through subsidiary corporations, it held various operating properties, principally in the United States. At various times in 1942, the Custodian vested the stock interests owned by petitioner in its American subsidiaries, and it is for those interests that petitioner sues.

The principal American properties held by petitioner, and the interests in them vested by the Custodian and here claimed, are as follows:

1. Harvard Brewing Company, a Delaware corporation, which through its wholly owned Massachusetts subsidiary of the same name operated a brewery in Massachusetts. 382,700 shares of Harvard (Delaware) out of a total of 625,000 shares were vested by the Custodian. Of these, 345,760 are claimed in this action.

2. Spur Distributing Company, a Delaware corporation, operating a chain of retail gasoline stations in Tennessee and 20 other states. 73,039 shares of Spur out of a total of 139,000 shares were vested and are here claimed.

3. Oil Production, Inc., and Oil Refineries, Inc., Louisiana corporations, owning oil producing and refining properties. Their assets eventually came into the hands of Amerlagene, Inc. (D. Ex. 68, R. 2241). All of Amerlagene's capital stock was vested and is here claimed.

(332 U. S. 480; R. 112). We shall use the term "Custodian" interchangeably to refer to the former Alien Property Custodian or the Attorney General as his successor.

4. Westminster Industrial Corporation, a New York corporation, engaged in commercial financing operations. Its entire stock was vested, and is here claimed.

In addition, petitioner owned the entire stock of Transdanubia Bauxite, A. G., a Hungarian corporation, operating bauxite mines in Hungary (Edg. 22, R. 55; Concl. 5, R. 62–63).

On a prior appeal, this Court held (Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., 332 U. S. 480) that a motion to dismiss the complaint, on the ground that petitioner was a foreign national, should have been denied, since on the allegations of the complaint, taken as true for purposes of the motion, petitioner was "free of all enemy taint" (332 U. S. at 482). On remand, after answer denying the allegations of the complaint relating to petitioner's asserted lack of enemy taint, and after extended trial, the district court entered judgment for respondent on the merits (R. 64). Upon appropriate findings (R. 52–62), it concluded that by reason of enemy ownership and control of petitioner and the vested properties, petitioner was barred from recovery under Sections 2 and 9 (a) of the Trading with the Enemy Act (Concl. 4, R. 62). This conclusion it found was reinforced by two subsidiary elements of enemy taint, discussed infra, pp. 21–26. (Concl. 5; R. 62–63.) The court said in its opinion (R. 50):

> From what has been stated, it would be difficult in my opinion to find a stronger case of enemy taint in vested property short of full ownership by an enemy than exists in this case. The neutral aspect of ownership in the property is insignificant and it seems to me the plain intent of the Trading with the Enemy Act would be defeated by ordering a return of the vested securities.

The Court of Appeals, Judge Clark dissenting, affirmed on the ground of enemy ownership and control of petitioner, without deeming it necessary to consider the subsidiary elements of taint. It stated (R. 2327):

> This case does not involve a diluted "taint"; it involves the ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business. This seems to be a more obvious objective of the vesting provisions of the statute than is the bare ownership of a sterile legal title.

The Facts

The facts on which these conclusions rested, as found by the district court and as disclosed by the evidence,[2] may be summarized as follows:

[2] Petitioner makes the surprising assertion (Br. p. 3, n. 1) that most of the evidence in the record can be disregarded, as relevant only to a contention, which the district court rejected, that the 1931 transaction was sham. The principal issue at the trial was whether petitioner was owned or controlled by enemies; the Government's case on this had three

It is undisputed that the entire beneficial ownership and control of petitioner rested in one or more members of the von Opel family. The significant members of that family for present purposes are Wilhelm von Opel, his wife Marta, and their son, Fritz von Opel.

Wilhelm von Opel, and his wife Marta, were at all relevant times citizens and residents of Germany (Fdg. 4, R. 52) and concededly became enemies upon the outbreak of war between the United States and Germany. Wilhelm was a leading German industrialist. From 1933 on, he was a prominent member of the Nazi party, as well as other Nazi organizations (R. 165). He received a medal and a personal telegram of congratulations from Hitler on his 70th birthday in 1941 (R. 165–166).

major branches: (a) that the 1931 "gift" was a sham, (b) that assuming the gift instrument was an effective legal transaction, the interests and powers retained by the Opel parents in petitioner, and exercised after October 5, 1931, constituted such ownership and control as to make petitioner an enemy, and (c) that these retained interests and powers were not relinquished by the Opel parents after October 5, 1931. (See R. 42–44.) The district court decided (b) and (c) in the Government's favor. Most of the evidence received at the trial was relevant to all of those issues.

While we can understand why petitioner would prefer to brush aside most of the evidence, and most of the findings, we perceive no basis on which that could be done. On the contrary, the decision of the district court, affirmed by the court of appeals, that petitioner was an enemy because owned and controlled by enemies, necessarily rested on all the evidence as to the understandings and actions of the members of the von Opel family, and the officers of petitioner and its subsidiaries, between 1929 and the date of vesting.

This son, Fritz, was born in Germany in 1899 and resided there until December 1929, achieving some fame as a balloonist and racer (Fdg. 5, R. 52; R. 479). After December 1929, he traveled extensively in Europe and the Western Hemisphere, spending about 10% of his time in Germany (Fdg. 6, R. 52). He established a residence in Switzerland in 1934 (Fdg. 6, R. 52), but did not have sufficient continuous residence in Switzerland to be eligible for Swiss naturalization (Pl. Ex. 49, R. 1849). On November 21, 1939—almost three months after the outbreak of the war in Europe—Fritz von Opel became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein, under unusual circumstances which we shall discuss infra, pp. 23–25. He came to the United States in May 1940, as a visitor, and remained here during the war. From February 1942 to May 1945 he was interned pursuant to the Alien Enemy Act (40 Stat. 531, 50 U. S. C. 21) as a potentially dangerous alien enemy (R. 394, 597).

Acquisition of petitioner by the von Opel family.—Petitioner, and the properties owned by it, were acquired by the von Opel family with the proceeds of a 10% stock interest in the Adam Opel Works, one of the largest German motor car manufacturing firms (Fdgs. 12, 16; R. 53–54, 59). That firm had been founded by Wilhelm von Opel's father. Until 1929 it was owned by Wilhelm and his brothers. Wilhelm was the dominant figure in its management (R. 116–117.)

In 1929, General Motors Corporation purchased 80% of the stock of the Opel Works. Wilhelm retained a 10% interest, which was subject to a "put-and-call" agreement giving General Motors an option to buy and Wilhelm von Opel an option to sell at stated prices on or after April 11, 1929 (Fdg. 12, R. 53–54; Pl. Ex. 3, R. 1803).

In July 1931, Germany adopted laws which required residents of Germany to secure licenses for any transactions involving foreign exchange or foreign assets (Def. Exs. 31, 114, R. 2137–2142, 2313–2318). Wilhelm and Marta von Opel, as residents of Germany, were subject to these laws, but Fritz von Opel was not, because, although a German citizen, he had lived outside the country after 1929 (Fdg. 16, R. 54). These laws were progressively strengthened during 1931 (Fdg. 13, R. 54). Wilhelm and Fritz von Opel were very concerned about the possibility of German financial collapse and had discussed means of avoiding the danger (Fdg. 14, R. 54).

On October 2, 1931, there were issued new decrees drastically tightening the application of these foreign exchange laws (Def. Ex. 113, R. 2309). Also on or about October 2, 1931, Fritz came from Belgium to his father's house in Germany (R. 405, 406). On October 5, 1931, an instrument, hastily drawn in an hour or two (R. 239, 611), was executed, purportedly giving to Fritz the von Opel shares then held by his parents (Pl. Ex. 5, R. 1806). The attorney who drafted the instrument testified that its primary object was to place the shares and their proceeds outside the scope of the German foreign exchange legislation (R. 227). As he further testified, the saying was then current in Germany that "money alone shouldn't make you happy; you should have it in Switzerland to be happy about it" (R. 228).

The instrument of October 5, 1931, provided, among other things (R. 1806):

> The usufruct in the shares is not assigned to Fritz von Opel. It remains with Wilhelm von Opel and his wife, hereafter called the parents Opel, until the death of the survivor of them. However, 20 percent of all dividends and interest received will accrue to Fritz von Opel.

The instrument further provided that if Fritz predeceased his parents without leaving legitimate issue, the gift was void and was to revert to the parents. If the parents died before Fritz, the gift was to be considered an advancement to be deducted from his share in his parents' estate. Usufruct income not drawn by the parents was also to be accounted for by Fritz as an advancement.

In the light of the foregoing evidence, the district court found (Fdg. 18, R. 54–55) that the primary object of the 1931 transaction was to obtain payment upon sale of the Opel shares in the form of gold or American currency instead of German marks, while a second purpose was to make financial provision for Fritz von Opel.[5] The court further found (ibid.) that the 1931 gift was not intended to be a sham transaction, but was intended to be a gift of part interest of the owners, and that legal title to the 600 Opel shares passed to Fritz von Opel by the agreement.[6]

To effectuate the primary object of the agreement, Fritz sailed on October 7, 1931, for New York and on October 17, pursuant to the "put and call" agreement, sold the shares to General Motors (R. 650–651; Pl. Ex. 6, R. 1807) for approximately $3,500,000, some two-thirds of which was paid in cash and the balance in General Motors stock (Pl. Exs. 65, 68, R. 1861, 1863). Between 1931 and 1934, these funds were invested in properties which substantially correspond with those vested by the Custodian. Early in 1932, Fritz, with his father's specific approval, purchased all of the shares of petitioner and had the [5] This purpose was accomplished by the contractual stipulation that Fritz was to receive 20 percent of the income from the property. In fact, the record indicates that once petitioner was established Fritz received money by way of salary or expenses from petitioner rather than by way of dividends (see Pl. Ex. 75, R. 1873–1874).

[6] The remaining 10 percent interest in the Opel works had been retained by Wilhelm's brother Fritz Opel (the uncle of the Fritz von Opel here involved). These shares were purportedly sold by the senior Fritz to his nephew Hans, a resident of Switzerland, in October 1931, a transaction which was later reversed as in violation of German foreign exchange laws (R. 1590–92).

American investments and funds transferred to it (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2001, 2008–2010).

The usufruct in favor of Wilhelm and Marta von Opel.—The gift agreement of October 5, 1931, provided, as stated, that the usufruct in the entire property remained with Wilhelm and Marta von Opel and that Fritz was to receive 20 percent of the dividends and interest. Wilhelm von Opel insisted on these provisions and would not have signed the agreement without them (R. 160, Def. Ex. 8, R. 2000–2001).

A usufruct in German law is an interest in rem which includes as a minimum the right to the income from the res (here subject to Fritz' contractual right to 20 percent of the income), a right to co-possession of the property, a voice in its management and, in the view of some German authorities, certain voting rights where the property, as here, consists of shares of stock (Fdg. 52, R. 60–61).[5] These rights retained by Wilhelm and Marta von Opel attached to any proceeds of the property (Pl. Ex. 5, R. 1807; Fdg. 36, R. 57). The district court found that such a usufruct was established in the shares of petitioner (Fdgs. 35–

[5] In view of the intent and agreement of the parties, as disclosed by their conduct, that Wilhelm and Marta von Opel retain complete control of the property and in view of the evidence that such control was in fact exercised, the trial court found it unnecessary to attempt to resolve the conflicting theories of German law with respect to voting rights. See infra, pp. 14–21.

38, 42, R. 57–59) and that the usufruct continued in existence to the date of vesting (Fdg. 53, R. 61).*

Other understandings between Fritz von Opel and his parents.—The written instrument, however, did not fully reflect the understandings reached between Fritz and his parents (R. 240, 241; Def. Ex. 8, R. 2001, 2073). Thus, although the instrument recited (R. 1806) that it was the desire of the Opel parents that the 600 Opel shares "remain with the male line of our family in order to preserve a personal connection between the bearers of the name of Opel and the work of our father Adam Opel," it had been agreed by all parties that Fritz von Opel should promptly leave for New York to convert the shares into gold or dollars (R. 229, 234, 613–617, 2001; cf. Fdg. 18, R. 54–55). In selling the shares, moreover, Fritz acted, not as donee, but as attorney in fact for Wilhelm von Opel under a power of attorney given him after the date of the gift (Pl. Exs. 4, 6, R. 1804, 1807). At no time did he inform any official of General Motors that he was the donee of these shares (R. 651).[7]

* Petitioner seems to attack these findings (Br., p. 27, n. 13). They were affirmed by the Court of Appeals (R. 2327). Petitioner suggests no reason—and we can conceive of none—for departure from the ordinary rule that this Court will not review findings of fact which have been concurred in by two courts below. Allen v. Trust Co. of Georgia, 326 U. S. 630, 636; Comstock v. Group of Institutional Investors, 335 U. S. 211, 214; Anderson v. Abbott, 321 U. S. 349, 356. That rule is particularly applicable where, as here, the evidence consisted largely of testimony and raised issues of credibility. In any event, the findings were abundantly supported by evidence.

Another oral understanding was that Fritz would transfer the proceeds of the sale to a holding company to protect the interests created (Def. Ex. 8, R. 1987, 2001, 2008). In fact, petitioner was acquired by the von Opels within a few months of the October 1931 agreement (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2006, 2008). Fritz von Opel swore, in an affidavit filed in 1935, that upon the execution of the 1931 deed "my father received an oral stipulation from me which was not included in the document, to the effect that these shares or their proceeds would be transferred by me immediately to a corporation whose shares would be distributed or held so as to safeguard the various interests in the stock or its proceeds set forth in the deed of gift" (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2001). Fritz further stated that he discussed with his father the proposed purchase of petitioner, and that his father agreed that petitioner "might serve as the holding company originally contemplated between us" (R. 2008; see Fdg. 20, R. 55). One reason for the selection of petitioner as that [7] Indeed, while Fritz was in New York, Wilhelm von Opel was negotiating a modification of the option agreement with General Motors' European representative (Def. Exs. 6, 7, R. 1967, 1968). At first he authorized Fritz to conclude an agreement on the basis of his modification (Def. Ex. 6, R. 1967) but later ratified the sale on the terms on which Fritz and the officers of General Motors had agreed (Def. Ex. 58, R. 2229).

vehicle was that Hans Frankenberg, a Swiss businessman in whom Wilhelm von Opel had confidence, had already agreed to act as director of petitioner (R. 954–955). Upon the purchase of petitioner by the von Opels, Frankenberg was, at Wilhelm's request, made its managing director (Fdg. 39, R. 58).[8]

Control by the Opel parents of petitioner and its American investments.—A further understanding of the parties was that Wilhelm von Opel was to exercise complete control over petitioner's management. The district court found that Hans Frankenberg, as managing director of petitioner, acted at all relevant times as agent for Wilhelm von Opel (Fdg. 41, R. 59); that as such agent Frankenberg, from the spring of 1932 to the date of vesting, exercised control over the investments and activities of petitioner (Fdgs. 40, 43, R. 58–59); and that Fritz von Opel's activities in connection with petitioner were to a large degree carried on with the guidance and under the direction of Wilhelm von Opel, or his agent, Hans Frankenberg (Fdg. 45, R. 59).

Petitioner sharply attacked these findings in the district court (R. 1711 et seq.). The trial judge refused to modify them, stating that the [8] The choice of a Swiss corporation may also have been influenced by the fact, which Frankenberg candidly admitted in justifying a fictitious sale of petitioner's shares in 1936, that "after all, Switzerland was the place where capital from all over the world used to come to, just for the purpose of hiding" (R. 842).

evidence as to Frankenberg's agency was "just overwhelming, in my judgment" (R. 1729) and characterizing Frankenberg as "the guiding genius" in petitioner's affairs (R. 1725).

The record amply demonstrates the control exercised over the proceeds of the 600 Opel shares, and over petitioner and its American investments, by Wilhelm von Opel, acting in person or through Frankenberg as agent. A few illustrations of the scope of that control will suffice. We have already noted Wilhelm's participation in the sale of the Opel shares to General Motors. (P. 13, n. 7, supra.) The proceeds of that sale were placed in custodian accounts in New York (Pl. Ex. 66, R. 1862); in conformity with the usufruct agreement, the cash and securities were placed in a principal account and the income accrued was divided monthly, 80 percent of income to the principal account, and 20 percent to a separate account for Fritz; Wilhelm was authorized to draw on these accounts (Pl. Ex. 70, R. 1865, 1869–1870). As indicated, Wilhelm agreed to the purchase of petitioner, and caused Frankenberg to be made petitioner's managing director (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2008). Thereafter, Fritz, in acting for petitioner, did so under powers of attorney signed by Frankenberg (Def. Ex. 8, R. 1985, 2009–2010). He was neither an officer nor a director of petitioner. As petitioner's president testified, "the general conduct of business—that is, the management of its affairs—was never entrusted to Mr. Fritz von Opel" (R. 1510).

Fritz stated that he frequently consulted with Frankenberg about investments, and that at the end of 1932 he discussed with Frankenberg the investments which had been made or contemplated and Frankenberg "approved of them" (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2011, 2014). In 1933, he was "told" by Frankenberg to convert petitioner's cash into gold; he thereupon purchased $1,250,000 in gold pieces which became the subject of litigation in 1935 (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2014) (see infra, pp. 18–20). In 1936 Frankenberg, in New York, directed a fictitious sale (R. 2327) of the stock of petitioner to a group of Swiss "purchasers" in order to avoid holding company taxes in the United States, a transaction which was later reversed (R. 838, 841, 937, 938, 946; Def. Exs. 67, 87, R. 2236, 2278).

During the period 1931–37, many of the detailed transactions in the United States were conducted by one Hoffacker, in whom Fritz von Opel had confidence (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2011, 2019–2036). Among other things, Hoffacker, in 1934, shortly after Wilhelm von Opel was fined 3,500,000 reichsmarks by a German court in connection with the 1931 gift agreement (R. 448), told the American vice president of the Louisiana oil corporations that Wilhelm had "become involved with the Nazis * * * and needed funds," and asked if the Louisiana companies could contribute (R. 1229). An oil lease was accordingly sold for approximately $150,000, which was transmitted to petitioner (R. 1230).

Hoffacker became a principal officer of most of the American subsidiaries of petitioner.[9] In 1937 Wilhelm von Opel expressed to Fritz strong disapproval of Hoffacker (R. 1236). Not long thereafter Frankenberg caused Hoffacker to be removed from all connection with these companies, and to be replaced by one Ulrich, an old friend of Frankenberg's (R. 1243–1244, 1246, 1197).

In addition to thus discharging a principal officer of the American companies, Wilhelm von Opel, in person and through Frankenberg, exercised the power of final decision over their affairs. For example, in 1937 the American officers of the Louisiana oil companies were summoned to Switzerland to discuss plans for future operation with Fritz and Frankenberg (R. 1239). During these conferences, Frankenberg told one of the Louisiana officials that he had been representing and assisting Wilhelm von Opel for many years, and at the close of these conferences, Fritz expressed to the same official his pleasure that Frankenberg had approved the plans (R.

[9] He held the following positions:

Director and Vice President of Harvard Brewing Co. (Delaware) and President and Chairman of the Board of its Massachusetts subsidiary (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2022, 2027–2028).

Director and Vice President of Spur Distributing Company (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2022, 2024).

Director and President of Oil Production, Inc., and Oil Refineries, Inc. (Def. Ex. 8, R. 2022, 2091).

1242). Later in 1937 the American officers of Spur Distributing Company discussed with Fritz a proposal to set up a system of subsidiary distributing companies (R. 1137). Fritz said that Frankenberg, as his father's agent, would have to "pass on anything of this magnitude"; Frankenberg rejected the proposal and Fritz explained that he regretted the decision but there was nothing he could do about it (R. 1137–1139). In 1938, Frankenberg directed a sale of some of the Louisiana oil properties (R. 1245). In September 1939, Fritz sent a telegram to the American president of Spur stating that "overseas investors" [10] intended to sell the Spur shares (R. 1143; Def. Ex. 105, R. 2301). Fritz later told this official by telephone that he personally regarded the stock highly and regretted the decision to sell it but that his father had ordered Frankenberg to sell it (R. 1144). Apparently, Wilhelm changed his mind, for the stock was not sold. Indeed, in January 1941, the president of Spur suggested that, in view of the possibility of war with Germany, it would be desirable to sell the stock; Fritz, however, then said that his father would not be receptive to the idea (R. 1147, 1148).

Recognition by petitioner and the parties to the 1931 arrangement of its practical effect.—Petitioner and the parties to the 1931 arrangement repeatedly disclosed their general understanding concerning the importance of the ownership and control retained by Wilhelm von Opel under the 1931 arrangement.

Thus, the position taken by petitioner in litigation in 1935 and an affidavit filed by Fritz von Opel in support of that position express an unequivocal recognition that petitioner and its assets were the property of Wilhelm von Opel. In that year, petitioner brought an action against the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and others seeking possession of $1,250,000 in United States gold pieces which had been purchased by petitioner in 1933 and were thereafter ordered seized by the Secretary of the Treasury under the Gold Reserve Acts. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation v. Rosen (S. D. N. Y., 1935), affirmed, 83 F. 2d 225 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 298 U. S. 679 (hereinafter referred to as the "Gold case").[11] In an effort to release the gold, petitioner asserted that the real and beneficial owners of it were Wilhelm and Marta von Opel who, as nonresidents of the United States, were not, so petitioner contended, subject to the Gold Reserve Acts. This assertion was supported, inter alia, by an affidavit of Fritz von Opel stating that under the 1931 deed "naked title only to the shares was transferred to me" (Def. Ex. 8, R.

[11] The pertiment portions of the record on appeal in that case are set out herein as Defendant's Exhibit 8 (R. 1968-2104).

2000) and that the reservation of a usufruct "left with me a mere legal title plus 20 per cent of the dividends and interest" (R. 2001). He further stated that the shares of petitioner were in Switzerland in a safe deposit box, the key to which was "held by Dr. Frankenberg as agent and representative of my father, Wilhelm von Opel, for the purpose of safeguarding his usufruct" (R. 2017). And in a memorandum filed with the court, petitioner stated that the establishment of the usufruct "means, of course, that the entire beneficial enjoyment * * * would inhere in Wilhelm and Marta von Opel * * * while * * * only a naked legal title analogous to trust or custody would remain in Fritz von Opel" (R. 2084; see also R. 2081–2084).

Nor were such statements made solely for the purposes of litigation. Thus it was testified that, in 1934, speaking of the fine of 3,500,000 reichsmarks imposed upon him by a German court in connection with the 1931 gift agreement, Wilhelm stated that "it was well worth three and a half million marks to have his assets outside of the German locked safe" (R. 569). In 1937, Fritz similarly stated to an American officer of one of petitioner's subsidiaries that he was operating under a usufruct contract with his father and that he had to account to his father for the funds subject to that contract (R. 1236). Again, the president of Spur Distributing Company testified that, while he was in England in August 1939, Fritz by telephone invited him to come to Germany to meet Wilhelm von Opel, saying "After all, you work for my father and it is rather important that you know him" (R. 1143).[12]

Petitioner's doing of business in Hungary.—Although resting its decision primarily on enemy ownership and control of petitioner, the district court referred to other circumstances as "further evidence of enemy taint" (R. 63). One of these concerned petitioner's Hungarian subsidiary. Petitioner, as we have mentioned, owned all of the stock of Transdanubia Bauxite A. G., a Hungarian corporation mining bauxite in Hungary (Fdg. 22, R. 55; Concl. 5, R. 62–63). It had acquired this property in 1935 for 78,750 Swiss francs and had advanced to the corporation between 1935 and 1942 approximately 110,000 Swiss francs (R. 727–729; Def. Ex. 70, R. 2251). A state of war between the United States and Hungary was declared on December 13, 1941

[12] Some of these statements and some of the testimony set forth in the preceding pages were denied by witnesses for petitioner. These denials raised square-cut issues of credibility which the trial judge unequivocally resolved. He stated that he "frankly believe[d]" the testimony of Mason Houghland (the president of Spur Distributing Company) and his son, denied by Fritz von Opel, as to discussions that they had had with Fritz (R. 1679; see also R. 1734). On the other hand, he found that "there was some evasiveness" about Frankenberg's testimony (R. 1729) and in connection with testimony of petitioner's president, Meier, he made the cogent observation that "there were a great many vague statements from some of these witnesses" (R. 1716–1717).

(Fdg. 31, R. 56). Petitioner held the shares of Transdanubia and carried the investment in that company on its books throughout the war (Fdg. 28, R. 56; Def. Ex. 70, R. 2251–2255). It never took any steps to sever its relationship (Fdg. 30, R. 56). To the contrary, in 1940 when Transdanubia borrowed 32,000 Swiss francs from a Hungarian bank, petitioner had caused a Swiss bank to guarantee the loan and deposited 32,000 francs as collateral (Fdgs. 23–25, R. 55–56), and at quarterly periods through September 1942, this loan was extended upon petitioner's request until Transdanubia repaid the loan in November 1942 (Fdgs. 26, 27, R. 56).

Fritz von Opel, on behalf of petitioner, made several trips to Hungary in 1939 to expedite the production of bauxite (R. 893, 894; Def. Exs. 76, 93, 95, R. 2262, 2286, 2288) and was active in Transdanubia's affairs and its business relationship with Giulini Bros., a German aluminum manufacturer which purchased its bauxite (Def. Exs. 76–82, 92–94, 96, 97, R. 2262–2271, 2285–2287, 2294, 2296). Thus, when on September 16, 1939, after the outbreak of war in Europe, Giulini Bros. wrote Fritz that (Def. Ex. 81, R. 2270) > you would do meritorious service for the raw-material supply of the German aluminum industry and the entire war economy of Germany if you would tackle with all your energy the resumption of production in the mines.

Fritz promptly telegraphed that "upon receipt of order" he was "immediately ready to travel Budapest for purpose of starting production" (Def. Ex. 82, R. 2271). Fritz, in fact, did go to Budapest in November 1939 (R. 893, 894, 1641; Def. Ex. 93, R. 2286) and shortly thereafter Transdanubia entered into a contract whereby it undertook to deliver 100,000 tons of bauxite to Giulini Bros. in 1940, 1941 and 1942 (Def. Ex. 97, R. 2296). This contract resulted from negotiations carried on by Fritz in Hungary (ibid.). Shipments were made pursuant to this contract at least as late as October, November and December, 1941 (Def. Ex. 90, R. 2282, 2283). There is no suggestion in the record that such shipments did not continue at least through 1942 as called for by the contract.

Fritz von Opel's asserted neutrality.—The other subsidiary element of enemy taint considered by the district court concerned Fritz von Opel. The district court found that his activities in connection with the affairs of petitioner were carried on to a large degree "with the guidance and direction of Wilhelm von Opel, or his agent, Hans Frankenberg" (Fdg. 45, R. 59). In addition, it pointed out that despite Fritz' acquisition of neutral citizenship his "roots remained firmly planted" in Germany (Opinion, R. 49).

As indicated above (p. 7), Fritz von Opel was a German citizen until after the outbreak of World War II in Europe. On November 21, 1939, he became a naturalized citizen of Liechtenstein under unusual circumstances. He at no time resided in Liechtenstein and had never been physically present in that country except while traveling through it (Fdg. 7, R. 52–53). Although Liechtenstein's citizenship law has a three year residence requirement, this may be waived "under extraordinary circumstances that ask for special consideration" (ibid.; Pl. Ex. 177, R. 1951). The law also requires the taking of an oath of allegiance, but Fritz at no time did so (Fdg. 9, R. 53). He claimed that his failure to do so was because he was too sick to travel to Liechtenstein (ibid.; R. 492). Yet on November 10, 1939, Fritz passed through Liechtenstein on his way to Hungary (R. 893, 492) and on the date of his naturalization he was in Hungary attending to bauxite matters (supra, p. 23) (R. 894, 1641; Def. Ex. 93, R. 2286). Fritz paid approximately $10,000 for his naturalization, two-thirds to the community and one-third to the principality (Fdg. 8, R. 53), a sum equivalent to 3 percent of the national budget of that country in 1939 (R. 494–495). While the Liechtenstein naturalization laws require some payment for naturalization, there was no evidence that payments of this magnitude were normal. Fritz explained his acquisition of Liechtensteinean citizenship by saying that he had bought a Liechtensteinean passport for the equivalent of $10,000, and that when captured by the British at Gibraltar in 1940 he had "succeeded in fooling them" with that passport (R. 1146).[13] In the light of such testimony, the district court, in its opinion, properly characterized Fritz' Liechtenstein citizenship as a "technical status" (R. 48), a matter of "technical form" only (R. 49).

The district court further found that Fritz' statements and acts between November 1939 and Pearl Harbor indicated "a continued interest in the welfare of and sympathy for Germany" (Fdg. 10, R. 53). This finding is abundantly supported. Mention has already been made of his ready response to an invitation to do "meritorious service for * * * the entire war economy of Germany" by speeding up bauxite production in Hungary (supra, pp. 22–23). He frequently spoke of "We Germans", and expressed his hopes for an early German victory.[14]

A statement made in January 1941 is particularly revealing not only of Fritz' personal attitudes but also of Wilhelm's dominant position

---

[13] He also wrote the president of Harvard Brewing Co. that he had felt "obliged" to acquire another citizenship for business reasons (Def. Ex. 95, R. 2294; see also R. 1609–1610).

[14] Illustrative statements are:

"There isn't going to be much of a war." The English won't fight. All we are going to do is take off a little slice of Poland" (August, 1939). (R. 1142).

"By using rockets and secret weapons, we will finish up this war in no time at all" (early summer, 1940) (R. 1105).

He expressed pleasure in the German progress in France and the low countries and in the fact that "some of his inventions were playing a particular part in it" (early summer, 1940) (R. 1105–1106).

in the enterprise. At this time, Houghland, the President of Spur Distributing Company, met Fritz in Savannah, Georgia, and pointed out the undesirability of German stock ownership in Spur. He urged that the shares held by petitioner be sold, observing that if the stock was not sold it might in the event of war between the United States and Germany be seized by the Government as had been done with German property in World War I (R. 1147, 1148). Fritz' reply was "We Germans and my father and I have all thought this out" (R. 1148). He explained that if war came, the Spur stock would be in the hands of Swiss nationals and that if Switzerland became involved in the war, it would be in a holding company in a neutral Latin American country (R. 1148).[15]

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I

On the prior appeal herein, Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, 332 U. S. 480, this Court

[15] In fact, it was at about this time that some 36,000 shares of Harvard Brewing Company, purportedly the property of Fritz von Opel's wife and not here in suit, were held for the account of Sociedade Commercial Montefranco, a Brazilian corporation (R. 813–816). Montefranco is a literal translation of the German name Frankenberg (R. 815). Petitioner also in 1939 had dealings in Argentina which involved the establishment of credits in the peso equivalent of $522,548 (R. 926–927; Def. Ex. 108, R. 2303).

Compare also the sham sale initiated by Frankenberg in 1936 in an unsuccessful effort to avoid taxes (supra, p. 16).

established the rule that a neutral corporation, owned or controlled by enemies, is itself an enemy, ineligible to recover property vested under the Trading With the Enemy Act. Petitioner concedes the correctness of this rule. It argues that there was no such ownership or control here; that the entire ownership of its shares, and legal and actual control of its affairs, rested in Fritz von Opel, an asserted neutral. Fritz is claimed to have acquired these interests by gift from his father in 1931. This contention is directly contrary to explicit findings by the courts below, which are supported by abundant evidence. The district court found that the primary purpose of the 1931 transaction was to place certain assets then owned by Wilhelm von Opel outside the scope of the German foreign exchange controls. It further found that Wilhelm, while transferring legal title to the assets, had reserved a substantial ownership interest in them, including a right to possession and the right to the income; that Wilhelm exercised complete control of petitioner; and that to the extent that Fritz von Opel acted in petitioner's affairs, he did so subject to the guidance and direction of his father.

II

Such ownership and control satisfy the rule laid down by this Court on the prior appeal. The test of enemy ownership or control is concerned with economic fact, not legal form. It disregards formal title and looks at beneficial ownership. It considers control exercised de facto, whether or not resting in legal basis, and is satisfied by potential control without requiring a showing of its actual exercise. If, as here, enemies have the power to "make and unmake [the corporate] officers, dictate their conduct mediately or immediately, prescribe their duties and call them to account", Daimler Co., Ltd. v. Continental Tyre and Rubber Co., [1916] 2 A. C. 307, 340; the corporation is an enemy. Here enemies not only exercised control but owned the primary beneficial interest.

Petitioner's further suggestion that there must be proof of actual utilization of the properties for economic warfare is in effect an argument that the barn door can be locked only after the horse is stolen. Seizure of enemy property has never operated on any such stultifying principle; it is designed to deprive enemies of the opportunity of benefiting from assets of any kind in this country, Propper v. Clark, 337 U. S. 472, 481, and it reaches any property "which the adherents of the enemy have the power of devoting to the enemy's use." Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 268, 306. Here, Wilhelm von Opel, an enemy, had substantially all the power over petitioner's American assets which he would have had, had he owned them directly.

III

While the ownership and control of petitioner by an enemy is sufficient, we believe, to defeat the present action, there are two additional circumstances, referred to by the District Court although not considered by the Court of Appeals, which confirm this result. In the first place, the only asserted non-enemy interest in petitioner is in Fritz von Opel. Fritz is a native of Germany, whose citizenship of Liechtenstein, hastily acquired in November, 1939, was properly deemed by the district court a matter of technical form only. In all his activities relating to petitioner, Fritz acted under the control of his father and as his father's agent. Accordingly, it is artificial in the extreme to describe any interest that Fritz may have owned as an independent neutral interest. In the second place, petitioner, through a wholly-owned subsidiary, did business in Hungary, an enemy country. Under Section 2 of the Trading With the Enemy Act a foreign corporation which does business in enemy territory is an enemy. In the light of this Court's decision on the prior appeal, we believe that the doing of such business through a subsidiary in whose affairs petitioner actively participated was properly regarded by the district court as constituting an additional element of enemy taint.

IV

Petitioner's claim for a partial recovery is in effect a claim for complete recovery. It seeks return to it of the entire vested assets, and suggests that the Custodian should instead vest, and enforce in Switzerland, interests created by an agreement concluded in Germany in shares of a Swiss corporation located in Switzerland. The suggestion is plainly illusory. Any claim which petitioner might make to a true partial recovery is precluded here, having been rejected by the trial judge in a proper exercise of his discretion as not having been seasonably advanced and as requiring in effect that the trial be reopened for additional evidence and arguments. In any event, as petitioner itself concedes, a claim to partial recovery must fail where, as here, the plaintiff is shown to have been controlled by an enemy.

ARGUMENT

The principal questions in this case are questions of fact. Petitioner apparently concedes, as it must under this Court's decision in Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, 332 U. S. 480, that under the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended during World War II, a corporation actually controlled by enemies is itself an enemy and is barred from recovering vested assets (Br. pp. 11, 14, 19, 20, 21, 24). It similarly concedes that where a corporation is thus controlled by the enemy "the entire corporate assets in the United States might be seized and the corporation itself could not recover them" (Br. p. 26). In such a case it agrees that any asserted neutral interest in the corporation can be recovered, if at all, only in a separate suit by the neutral stockholder and that the present suit is concerned exclusively with the right of the corporation to recover (ibid.; see also Br. p. 10).

Thus, petitioner concedes that all of its contentions in this case must fail if it is found to have been owned and controlled by enemies. Its argument is devoted primarily to the assertion that it was not so owned and controlled. That assertion is directly in conflict with explicit findings of fact by the district court, and with overwhelming evidence. In the first point of this brief, therefore, we shall discuss the findings and the supporting evidence which establish that petitioner was owned and controlled by enemies. In succeeding sections of this brief we shall demonstrate that petitioner's concession was required, and that by reason of enemy ownership and control, as well as other circumstances, petitioner is an enemy and may not recover any part of the property here sued for.

I.

PETITIONER WAS OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY ENEMIES

Petitioner asserts that "no enemy control or ownership of petitioner's shares was present" (Br. p. 11; see also p. 24). It asserts that the findings of the district court establish that Fritz von Opel had "beneficial ownership" of petitioner's shares, "subject only to an option, never exercised" on the part of his parents to demand 80% of the dividends, and that "both legal control and actual control of the corporation" were in Fritz von Opel (Br. pp. 7–8).

In fact, the district court found the exact opposite. It concluded that petitioner "is indirectly owned and controlled by enemies" (Concl. 2, R. 62). The scope and extent of that ownership and control is shown by the findings and evidence which we have summarized in the Statement, supra, pp. 7–21. Because petitioner's entire argument depends, however, on the correctness of its view of the facts we shall, at the risk of repetition, restate the actual scope of the interests held by enemies in petitioner.

In the first place, the Opel parents had the rights expressed by the German law concept of a usufruct. Those rights were found by the District Court (Fdg. 52, R. 60–61) to be rights, in rem, in all the shares of petitioner, and to include (i) the right to the income from the property (here subject to a contractual obligation to pay 20% of that income to Fritz von Opel (R. 2334)), (ii) the right to co-possession of the shares (in fact the evidence is clear that Wilhelm von Opel's agent had the exclusive possession),[16] (iii) the right to prevent sale or disposition of the shares, and (iv) certain rights of management of the shares and the corporation issuing them. These rights are clearly substantial property interests (R. 2327).

But these rights are only the minimum statement of what the Opel parents possessed. As we have pointed out (supra, pp. 12–31), the instrument of October 5, 1931, did not reflect the entire understanding between the parties. In particular, it was clearly understood that Wilhelm von Opel was to retain the entire control of the 600 Opel shares which were the subject of that instrument, and of their proceeds. For this reason, those proceeds were transferred to a holding company, petitioner, "to safeguard the various interests in the stock or its proceeds" (see p. 13, supra), and Frankenberg, Wilhelm's trusted agent, was at Wilhelm's request made managing director of petitioner. From that time until the date of vesting, as the district court found (Flgs. 40, 41, 43, 45, R. 58–59), Wilhelm von Opel, acting largely through Frankenberg as his agent, exercised control over petitioner and directed the activities of Fritz von Opel in so far as they related to petitioner.[11]

Petitioner's view of the facts is in flat contradiction to these express findings. In addition, [11] In the light of the foregoing, petitioner's unsupported assertion (Br. P. 24) that it "was acquired for the purpose of precluding the enemy from obtaining or utilizing its assets" must be dismissed as pure fantasy.

it is wholly inconsistent with the dominant purpose of the 1931 transaction as found by the Court. Petitioner's argument assumes, in effect, that in October 1931, Wilhelm and Marta von Opel made an outright gift to their son of property worth approximately $3,500,000. None of the circumstances surrounding the transaction suggest that that was its purpose. The transaction was initiated and carried out in great haste at a time when Wilhelm feared financial collapse in Germany and when German foreign exchange controls were being drastically tightened (Fdgs. 13, 14, R. 54). Its "primary object," as the district court found, was "to obtain payment upon sale of the Opel shares in the form of gold or American currency, instead of German reichmarks" (Fdg. 18, R. 55).[18]

In short, as the courts below in effect found, the 1931 transaction, although not a sham, was a transaction of only limited significance with respect to the economic rights of the parties to [18] That this was its purpose is shown not only by the express statements of the attorney who drafted the instrument (supra, pp. 8–9) but also by the way in which it was prepared and carried out. On or shortly before October 2, 1931, Fritz von Opel, then in Belgium, came to his father's house in Germany (R. 405, 408). On October 2, 1931 (the day on which amendments were adopted tightening the German foreign exchange laws (Def. Ex. 113, R. 2309)), Fritz consulted Hachenburg, Wilhelm's regular lawyer and a man of preeminent reputation (R. 323, 410, 590). Thereupon

it. It was effective to give Fritz von Opel legal title to the 600 Opel shares and their proceeds (Fdg. 18, R. 54–55). We may assume that it gave Fritz a valid contractual claim against his parents for 20% of the interest and dividends (see R. 2334). We may also assume that on the death of Wilhelm and Marta the entire property in the shares would pass to Fritz or his legitimate issue, provided they survived the Opel parents. In this aspect, the instrument made a transfer to take effect on death which did not affect the substantial beneficial ownership and complete control held by Wilhelm and Marta von Opel at the outbreak of the war and on the date of vesting. In Hachenburg drafted various preliminary papers, but in a letter dated October 5, 1931, stated that several aspects of the matter, especially the tax aspects, required further study (Pl. Exs. 7–10, R. 1809–1820).

Without further ado, however, Wilhelm on October 5, took the matter to another attorney who had not generally acted as counsel for any of the von Opels (R. 213, 592) and who, as he testified, in "about as much time * * * as you have for catching a lunch" (R. 239) prepared the instrument which the court found was signed the same day. Two days later, on October 7, Fritz sailed for New York to sell the 600 Opel shares for dollars and General Motors shares (R. 650–651, Pl. Ex. 6, R. 1807). This extraordinary haste in a transaction of this magnitude, this unwillingness to wait for the resolution of complex tax and other problems, is explainable only on the view that the transaction was not intended to have any important effect on the economic rights of the parties but merely to serve as a convenient device by which Wilhelm could avoid the impact of the German foreign exchange regulations.

view of that ownership and control the Court of Appeals was fully warranted in saying (R. 2337):

> This case does not involve a diluted "taint"; it involves the ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits of American business.

Petitioner's view of the facts is also completely inconsistent with the assertions made by petitioner itself in litigation against agencies of the United States in 1935. In an affidavit filed on petitioner's behalf in the "Gold case" (see supra, pp. 19–20) Fritz von Opel stated that the usufruct reserved by the 1931 instrument "left me with a mere legal title plus 20% of the dividends and interest" (R. 2001). And a memorandum submitted by petitioner similarly stated that the establishment of the usufruct "means, of course, that the entire beneficial enjoyment * * * would inhere in Wilhelm and Marta von Opel * * * while only a naked legal title analogous to trust or custody would remain in Fritz von Opel" (R. 2084).[19] Even if we assume that petitioner can now be heard to assert the falsity of its own representations to the courts of the United States, the courts below were clearly warranted in accepting the version of the facts insisted on by petitioner in 1936. Indeed, that version is reflected in every statement made by [19] A footnote added: "The 20% of dividends and interest * * * is a grant out of the reserved estate, proceeds from the usufructuary, and does not give Fritz von Opel any part of the beneficial use and enjoyment" (R. 2084).

Fritz and Wilhelm von Opel prior to the present suit.

A word further may be appropriate on petitioner's suggestion that the interests and powers retained by Wilhelm and Marta von Opel were contingent or unexercised. E. g., Br. pp. 7–8, 23. We do not believe it is necessary that they be exercised; the Trading With the Enemy Act looks to potentialities as well as to rights actually exercised (see pp. 48–50, 52–53, infra). In any event, they were exercised.

Thus, the district court found that Frankenberg, as Wilhelm von Opel's agent, "exercised control" over petitioner's affairs to the date of vesting (Fdgs. 40, 43, R. 58–59) and that Fritz' activities "were carried on" with the guidance and direction of Wilhelm and Frankenberg (Fdg. 45, R. 59).[20] We have summarized above the [20] Petitioner states that "the stock was voted by or for the neutral holder of legal title, Fritz von Opel" (Br. 6). This is surprising in the face of testimony by petitioner's witness Frankenberg, its managing director, that he had to have the key to the safe deposit box in which the shares were kept "to get the stock out from time to time to vote it" (R. 857). [Emphasis supplied.] In view of Frankenberg's status as agent of Wilhelm von Opel, the implications of this statement are obvious. Petitioner's record references are merely to an equivocal and unresponsive statement by Meier, petitioner's president, and to minutes of stockholders' meetings in 1932 and 1935 at which Fritz was recorded as not present and the entire shares were recorded as voted by Frankenberg (1932) or by various of the corporate officers including Frankenberg (1935). To the same effect see R. 2052 (1933 meeting), R. 2055 (1934 meeting).

abundant evidence showing that such control was in fact exercised. Thus Wilhelm specifically approved the decision to acquire petitioner; Frankenberg was made petitioner's managing director at Wilhelm's request; Frankenberg, in response to Wilhelm's expressions of disapproval, caused the removal of a key officer of the American subsidiaries in whom Fritz had confidence; Frankenberg passed on all important transactions and Fritz recognized that he was powerless to override Frankenberg's decisions.[21] Significantly, Fritz von Opel never participated even formally in the management of petitioner's affairs, but acted under specific powers of attorney issued by the corporate directors from time to time (R. 1510–1511).

Petitioner, in its statement of facts (Br. pp. 6–7), appears to argue, however, that Franken-

[21] Petitioner states (Br. p. 6) that control was inferred "simply because Frankenberg was consulted and his advice obtained." We need only refer to one incident, testified to by Houghland, the American president of Spur and a witness whom Judge Laws said he believed (R. 1679). Referring to a proposal to set up a chain of subsidiaries, Houghland testified that Fritz told him that Frankenberg "would have to pass on anything of this magnitude" (R. 1137). The matter was accordingly submitted to Frankenberg, who rejected the proposal (R. 1138). Houghland testified further (R. 1139):

"Well, [Fritz] said he was sorry that Dr. Frankenberg did not approve the idea; that he himself did approve the idea and he thought it was a wise one, which, incidentally, it certainly turned out to be; but that Dr. Frankenberg was his father's financial representative; that there was nothing that could be done upon a decision of this sort after Dr. Frankenberg did not approve."

berg's agency for Wilhelm ceased as a matter of law upon the outbreak of war between the United States and Germany, Frankenberg then being in the United States. From this it argues that all enemy control of petitioner automatically ceased with the outbreak of war. The premise on which the argument is based is erroneous. The very cases cited by petitioner (Br. p. 7, n. 4) establish that > Agencies, created before the war, and not requiring intercourse across the enemy's frontier, such as for the collection of debts, preservation of property, and so forth, are not terminated by war. [Sutherland v. Mayer, 271 U. S. 272, 288.]

[22] In Insurance Co. v. Davis, 95 U. S. 425, this Court, although holding that the particular agency before it had terminated said (at p. 430):

"If the agent has property of the principal in his possession or control, good faith and fidelity to his trust will require him to keep it safely during the war, and to restore it faithfully at its close."

Williams v. Paine limited the holding in the Davis case to cases of insurance agents who were required during the war to remit funds across belligerent lines—conduct necessarily involving prohibited intercourse with the enemy.

But even if the premise had been valid, the conclusion would prove too much. Petitioner asks this Court to hold that Wilhelm's complete control of petitioner and its assets, established as an integral part of the 1931 arrangements and consistently exercised during ten years, suddenly and automatically ceased. The very event—the outbreak of war—which creates the power to vest enemy-controlled property is said to immunize the property from its exercise. The contention almost answers itself.

Normally, the inference is warranted that a relationship or course of conduct, proven to exist over a period of time, continues to exist thereafter. E. g., Penn Oil Co. v. Vacuum Oil Co., 48 F. 2d 1008 (C. A. D. C.); Easterday v. United States, 292 Fed. 664 (C. A. D. C.), certiorari denied, 263 U. S. 719.[22] (See Fdg. 40, R. 58.) Here, however, we have more than a course of conduct; Wilhelm's powers of control were an integral part of the property arrangements made by the 1931 transaction. Those property arrangements were in force, unchanged, on the date of vesting, and there is no evidence that any of the parties to them, or any of petitioner's officers, by word or deed disavowed the prior explicit recognition of Wilhelm's dominant position (Fdg. 40, R. 58). Certainly there was no physical impediment to Wilhelm's continued exercise of control. Wilhelm was in no way barred from communicating with petitioner in Switzerland, and petitioner, in turn, was free at all times to communicate with the United States.

Accordingly, the absence of direct proof of the exercise of control after the outbreak of the war does not help petitioner. Although petitioner had the burden of proof, Thorsch v. Miller, 55 App. D. C. 295, 297, 5 F. 2d 118, 121, appeal dismissed, 274 U. S. 763; Von Zedtwitz v. Sutherland, 58 App. D. C. 153, 154, 26 F. 2d 525, 526; Sturchler v. Hicks, 17 F. 2d 321, 322 (E. D. N. Y.), the Government, with an abundance and explicitness of proof unusual on such a question as the control of a foreign corporation, clearly proved not only the existence but the exercise of German control from 1931 to 1941. To require, in addition, direct proof of the actual exercise of control by an enemy over American properties after the outbreak of war, would be tantamount to insisting that the Trading With the Enemy Act could become operative only after the enemy had succeeded in doing what the Act was designed to prevent. No such stultifying restriction can be read into this wartime statute. In general, enemy status under the Trading With the Enemy Act is established at the outbreak of war and is not lost by acts occurring thereafter. Schrijver v. Sutherland, 57 App. D. C. 214, 19 F. 2d 688, certiorari denied, 275 U. S. 546 (ownership); Société Suisse v. Cummings, 99 F. 2d 387 (C. A. D. C.) (doing business in enemy territory); Sarthou v. Clark, 78 F. Supp. 139 (S. D. Cal.) (acting as enemy agent); Beck v. Clark, 88 F. Supp. 565 (D. Conn.) (ownership). A fortiori, control shown to exist at the outbreak of war cannot be presumed thereafter to have ceased.

The suggestion that rights of ownership were not exercised is equally without substance. It is true that petitioner declared no dividends. This is precisely what might have been expected. Any distribution of dividends to Wilhelm and Marta von Opel would have defeated the very purpose of the 1931 arrangements. Their principal objective was to remove the funds from the reach of the German foreign exchange control laws. Once that was accomplished, the real value of these assets to Wilhelm and Marta was not that they represented capital or even a source of income—this they were even while they were subject to German laws—but that they were free assets, free, that is, from German monetary controls. Obviously Wilhelm, a man of great wealth, had no need for additional income in Germany. As long as he had sufficient funds within Germany for his support, it would have been utter nonsense to channel petitioner's dividends into Germany where the exchange control laws would have compelled their conversion into German marks.

To keep both the income and the principal "free" it had to be kept "outside the German locked safe". (see p. 20, supra). On the other hand, when he desired foreign exchange Wilhelm could and did draw on petitioner. Thus one of the American subsidiaries raised $150,000 by sale of oil properties to help pay Wilhelm's fine to the German government (R. 1229–1230). And petitioner paid Wilhelm's expenses on a trip to Hungary and a trip to South America (Fdg. 53, R. 61). In short, Wilhelm treated petitioner's funds like a bank acount on which he could draw at will.

II.

BY REASON OF SUCH ENEMY OWNERSHIP AND CONTROL PETITIONER WAS AN ENEMY INELIGIBLE TO RECOVER VESTED PROPERTY IN THE PRESENT SUIT

Originally the Trading With the Enemy Act adopted a strictly territorial concept of "enemy" as applied to corporations. Under Section 2 of the Act, as enacted in 1917, a corporation was an enemy if it was incorporated in or did business within enemy or enemy occupied territory. And it was held that a corporation incorporated in neutral territory was not an enemy under this provision even though wholly owned and controlled by enemies. Behn, Meyer & Co. v. Miller, 266 U. S. 457; cf. Hamburg American Co., v. United States, 277 U. S. 138. By the First War Powers Act, 1941, however, Congress amended Section 5 (b) of the Act to authorize the vesting of property of any foreign country or national thereof. The applicable executive definitions of the term "national" included "any * * * corporation * * * which on or since [the effective date of Executive Order 8389] was or has been controlled by, or a substantial part of the stock, shares, * * * or other securities or obligations of which, was or has been owned or controlled by, directly or indirectly," one or more "nationals" of the designated country.[24]

These amendments reflected a legislative awareness that the Axis countries and their nationals, by various means, had acquired indirect ownership or control of nominally neutral property. Indirect ownership was exercised through nominees, trusted agents and complex holding company structures, the stock of such holding companies generally being in the form of bearer shares whose ownership was exceedingly difficult to trace; control was often divorced from legal title or ownership and exercised through options, [24] Executive Order 8389 (April 10, 1940), 5 F. R. 1400, as amended by Executive Order 8785 (June 14, 1941) 6 F. R. 2897, sec. 5 E (ii); made applicable to the exercise of the vesting power by Executive Orders 9095 (March 11, 1942), 7 F. R. 1971, and 9193 (July 6, 1942), 7 F. R. 5205, sec. 10. As a corporation controlled and beneficially owned by nationals of Germany petitioner was a "national of a designated enemy country" within the meaning of Executive Order 9193, and was determined to be such by the Custodian, Vesting Order No. 51, 7 F. R. 6503; Amendatory and Supplemental Order No. 1 to Vesting Order No. 14, 9 F. R. 8083.

These executive definitions were ratified by Congress, Joint Resolution of May 7, 1940, 54 Stat. 179; First War Powers Act, 1941, sec. 302, 55 Stat. 840.

contractual relationships, gentlemen's agreements, possession of vital technical information and loyalty of key personnel.[25] By such devices American property could be made as readily available for purposes of economic warfare as if it were owned outright, but with less investment, less risk and greater possibilities for concealment.

On the previous appeal in this action, this Court recognized that the 1941 amendments were adopted to meet the challenge of such devices by giving the President power "to deal effectively with property interests which had either an open or concealed enemy taint" (332 U. S. at 485–486). It held that in order to give effect to those amendments the definitions set forth in section 2 must be regarded as "merely illustrative, not exclusionary" (pp. 488–489) so that all persons or corporations affected with an "enemy taint" are now within reach of the term "enemy".

Although this Court did not attempt a comprehensive definition of the new concept of enemy, it declared unequivocally that the result in Behn, Meyer & Co. v. Miller, supra, was "destructive of the objectives of the 1941 amendment" (p. 486) and had no current vitality (p. 488). It thus reversed completely the policy, embodied in that case, of refusing to determine the enemy status of a corporation by the status of those who owned or controlled it. It left no doubt that a corporation which "was owned or controlled by enemy interests" (p. 486) is itself an enemy.[26] As we understand its Brief, petitioner concedes that if it was owned and controlled by enemies it cannot recover anything in this action (see supra, pp. 30–31).

[25] See H. Rept. 1547, 77th Cong., 1st sess., p. 3; United States Treasury Department, Administration of the Wartime Financial and Property Controls of the United States Government (1942), pp. 29–31; Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs (Kilgore Committee) 79th Cong., 1st Sess., pursuant to S. Res. 107 and S. Res. 146, June–December, 1945, pp. 49, 52, 68–9, 564–85, 969–77, 1063, 1203–1221; H. Rept. No. 2398, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3.

[26] A similar test of enemy ownership or control has also been made applicable to claims for discretionary administrative return by Section 32 (a) (2) (E) of the Act (referred to by this Court, 332 U. S. at 490), and has been recognized in international agreements, see Art. 11 (b) of the Brussels Agreement of December 5, 1947, quoted at page 30, n. 10, of petitioner's brief.

In Section 39 of the Act, added July 3, 1948, Congress, in prohibiting judicial return to "nationals" of Germany or Japan, reaffirmed the tests embodied in the 1941 amendments and Executive Orders issued thereunder. Since petitioner, being owned and controlled by enemies, was both a "national" of Germany within Executive Order 8389 and a "national of a designated enemy country," within Executive Order 9193 (see note 24, supra), Section 39 affords an alternative ground for supporting the result below. See Brief for Petitioner in McGrath v. Nagano, No. 169, this Term. Respondent so urged in the court of appeals, but that court found it unnecessary to pass on the question.

Compare Section 8 of the British "Distribution of German Enemy Property Act, 1949," 12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6, Ch. 85, which includes in its definition of German property which will not be returned, the property of any corporation "which * * * was controlled by" German nationals resident in Germany.

This test of enemy ownership or control is concerned with economic fact, not legal form. Thus, it is immaterial that, for reasons of his own convenience, Wilhelm von Opel by the 1931 transaction placed "legal title" (Fdg. 18, R. 55) to the shares in his son's name. As the court below held, the "ownership by enemy nationals of the economic benefits" of the property is determinative, and the "bare ownership of a sterile legal title" is of no consequence (R. 2327). In administering the Trading With the Enemy Act the courts have always looked, not at legal title, but at "beneficial ownership." Stoehr v. Wallace, 255 U. S. 239, 251. See also the district court opinion in the same case, 269 Fed. 827, 835 (S. D. N. Y.); Standard Oil Co. v. Markham, 64 F. Supp. 656, [illegible] (S. D. N. Y.).[27]

[27] Compare Hodgskin v. United States, 279 Fed. 85, 90 (C. A. 2); Kind v. Clark, 161 F. 2d 36, 47 (C. A. 2); Standard Oil Co. v. Clark, 163 F. 2d 917 (C. A. 2), certiorari denied, 333 U. S. 873; Fujino v. Clark, 172 F. 2d 384, 385 (C. A. 9), certiorari denied, 337 U. S. 937. The cases cited in this note used language of "sham", and many of them disclosed an attempt by the parties to conceal the enemy's beneficial ownership. Whether or not there was concealment is immaterial; the Act reaches property having an "open or concealed enemy taint." Clark v. Uebersee Finanz-Korporation, A. G., 332 U. S. 480, 486. See Stoehr v. Wallace, 255 U. S. 239; Fujino v. Clark, supra. Nor do we perceive any essential difference, for present purposes, between a transaction which is disregarded as a sham, and a transaction which, when given effect according to its terms, leaves the beneficial interests in the enemy. Thus in Stoehr v. Wallace, supra, the district court assumed that legal title was in American hands (269 Fed. at 835) and the rationale of this Court's opinion was that

In construing the Act as giving the Executive "flexible powers" to reach interests which "masqueraded under * * * innocent fronts" and to deal with enemy "devices" for acquiring "indirect control or ownership" of American property (332 U. S. at 484–485), this Court, on the prior appeal in this case, reflected a concern for practical results without regard to the legal niceties by which they may be achieved. In other contexts this Court has emphasized that the existence of control turns on actualities and presents issues of fact "to be determined by the special circumstances of each case". Rochester Telephone Corp. v. United States, 307 U. S. 125, 145.[28] a transfer of legal title which was "made to avoid inconvenience" and which left "beneficial ownership" in an enemy could not prevent seizure (255 U. S. at 251).

[28] See the report of the House Committee on the bill which became the Federal Communications Act of 1934, 48 Stat. 1064, 47 U. S. C. 151, referred to by the Court, 307 U. S. at 145:

"* * * No attempt is made to define "control", since it is difficult to do this without limiting the meaning of the term in an unfortunate manner. Where reference is made to control the intention is to include actual control as well as what has been called legally enforceable control. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to enumerate or to anticipate the many ways in which actual control may be exerted. A few samples of the methods used are stock ownership, leasing, contract, and agency. It is well known that actual control may be exerted through ownership of a small percentage of the voting stock of a corporation, either by the ownership of such stock alone or through such ownership in combination with other factors." [Emphasis added.] (H. Rept. 1850, 73d Cong., 2d Sess., p. 5.)

And the courts have recognized that "control" and controlling influence "include the power to control and the power to exert a controlling influence, as well as the actual exercise of such power" (Public Service Corporation v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 129 F. 2d 899, 903 (C. A. 3); Detroit Edison Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 119 F. 2d 730, 739 (C. A. 6), certiorari denied, 314 U. S. 618) and "may spring as readily from advice constantly sought as from command arbitrarily imposed" (American Gas & Electric Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 134 F. 2d 633, 642 (C. A. D. C.), certiorari denied, 319 U. S. 763).

The English courts have applied an equally practical approach to the problem of determining whether a corporation incorporated in neutral territory is an enemy. Those courts adopted during World War I and have since applied, the rule that a neutral corporation, owned or controlled by enemies, is an enemy. Daimler Co. Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co., [1916] 2 A. C. 307; The St. Tudno, [1916] P. 291; The Polzeath, [1916] P. 241; The Michigan, [1916] V Ll. P. C. 421; The Hamborn, [1919] A. C. 993; In Re Badische Co., Ltd., [1921] 2 Ch. D. 331. They have said that "the true test is control," In Re Badische Co., Ltd., supra, at 371. Enemy ownership sufficient to carry proposals at a stockholders' meeting has been held to establish such control. The Polzeath, supra; see The Hamborn, supra, at 997. And a corporation has been said to be enemy "if its agents or the persons in de facto control of its affairs, whether authorized or not" are resident in enemy territory or taking instruction from persons so resident. Daimler Co. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co., supra, at 345.[29]

Applying these tests here, it is clear that Wilhelm von Opel, directly and through Frankenberg, exercised both as to petitioner and its American subsidiaries the power to "make and unmake [the corporate] officers, dictate their conduct mediately or immediately, prescribe their duties and call them to account." Daimler Co., Ltd. v. Continental Tyre & Rubber Co., supra, at 340. Such control, without more, justifies the seizure and retention of the properties here in suit.

[29] Comparable principles have long been applied by American courts in the field of prize law, to which the Trading with the Enemy Act is historically and constitutionally related (see Stoehr v. Wallace, 269 Fed. 827, 840 (S. D. N. Y.), affirmed, 255 U. S. 239). Thus, a neutral partner's share in a cargo left under the control and management of the other partners who were enemies, has been held to be properly condemned. The William Bagaley, 5 Wall. 377; The San Jose Indiano, Fed. Cas. No. 12322 (C. C. D. Mass); see also The Friendschaft, 4 Wheat. 105, 107, and The Cheshire, 3 Wall. 231, 233. Similarly, a ship surrendered by a neutral to enemy control is properly subject to condemnation when employed by the enemy in belligerent trade. The Hart, 3 Wall. 559, 560 (1865); The Bermuda, 3 Wall. 514, 556–557 (1865); The Adula, 89 Fed. 351, 355 (S. D. Ga.), affirmed, 176 U. S. 361.

It is not necessary for present purposes to resolve the problems that might arise in a case in which control was divorced from ownership, or accompanied by only a "negligible" ownership interest (332 U. S. at 489-490). As the Court of Appeals said, "this is not a borderline case" (R. 2333). Here the enemy's practical control is joined with a substantial ownership interest in all of petitioner's shares. Nor is there here any problem of protecting neutral investments. (See Pet. Br. p. 15.) The only assertedly neutral interest in petitioner is that of Fritz von Opel. That interest was acquired by gift; in acquiring and holding it Fritz understood, and indeed repeatedly asserted, that his father had the beneficial ownership and the entire control, and he acted, as the district court found, subject to his father's direction. Thus, quite apart from the question whether Fritz can in any real sense be deemed a neutral (see pp. 56–57, 63–64, infra), he bears no conceivable resemblance to a bona fide neutral investor who embarked his own funds in an enterprise without knowledge of the national character of those who controlled it.

Petitioner, although apparently conceding that enemy ownership and control are sufficient to sustain the seizure, at times suggests that there must in addition be proof of actual "utilization for economic warfare" (Br. p. 18; see pp. 11, 14, 23, 24). The Trading With the Enemy Act has, however, never been regarded as requiring such proof; it proceeds on the belief that the barn door should be locked before, not after, the horse has been stolen. The guiding principle of all such legislation has been that—> any property which the enemy can use, either by actual appropriation or by the exercise of control over its owner, or which the adherents of the enemy have the power of devoting to the enemy's use, is a proper subject of confiscation. [Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 268, 306.] [Emphasis added.]

Petitioner's suggestion that the vested properties "could not have been used for the purpose of economic war" (Br. p. 3) misconceives the objective of the Trading With the Enemy Act. The production, refining and distribution of oil and gasoline (see p. 3 supra), are certainly not unrelated to the prosecution of modern war. But in any event, the powers of seizure under the Trading With the Enemy Act are not limited to strategic and critical materials. Congress and the Custodian have acted on the theory that property, of whatever nature, which is owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by enemies is of potential use to the enemy; it is the purpose of the Act to deprive enemies "of the opportunity to secure advantages to themselves or to perpetrate wrongs against the United States * * * through the use of assets that happened to be in this country." Propper v. Clark, 337 U. S. 472, 481. Property of any kind is convertible into cash and may form the basis for extension of credit. For this reason the Custodian has vested thousands of bank accounts, negotiable securities, and interests in real property and tangible or intangible personal property. See e. g., Annual Report, Office of Alien Property (1948), pp. 71–78; Swiss Insurance Co. v. Miller, 267 U. S. 42, 59–60. Most such interests are relatively small, and viewed in isolation constitute far less of a threat of economic warfare than do the very substantial resources here involved. But they have been vested because in the aggregate their value is substantial and, if unvested, they might have afforded the basis for substantial realization of financial resources by the enemy.

The vested properties in suit constituted such a valuable financial resource of the enemy. The Opel parents were entitled to the income of the properties. By virtue of their absolute control over petitioner and its American subsidiaries they could dispose of the properties at will. The German government, through its physical control of the Opel parents and their allegiance to it, could have compelled them to make available to it the financial resources of petitioner and its American subsidiaries. Indicative of this is the sale of part of the assets of one of the Louisiana companies to satisfy the fine imposed upon Wilhelm von Opel. The properties were thus as fully available to the enemy as if the entire legal ownership had been vested in Wilhelm von Opel.

Had the Opel parents owned all of the shares of petitioner outright, there could be no doubt that its American assets could properly have been vested and retained. Petitioner urges, however, that it can escape confiscation of its American assets because its shares were placed in Fritz von Opel's name, although it was understood that the Opel parents retained all the powers of control and virtually all the rights of beneficial ownership which they would have possessed had they held full legal title to the shares. Petitioner would reduce the World War II amendments to the Act and the previous decision of this Court to a mere requirement of interposing one additional link in the chain by which enemy ownership and control are exercised. Such an argument would receive short shrift in other fields of law.[30] It is entitled to no more consideration here.

In this connection it should be emphasized that this case is concerned with dealings within a family group. In the tax field transactions within an intimate family group dominated by a wealthy father have long been held to be subject to special scrutiny. Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U. S. 335; Commissioner v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, 291. Like principles have been applied under the Trading with the Enemy Act. Fujino v. Clark, 71 F. Supp. 1 (D. Haw.), affirmed, 172 F. 2d 384 (C. A. 9), certiorari denied, 337 U. S. 937. In situations where the head of the family has retained less control than was the case here, he was treated, for tax purposes, as the owner of the property involved. See e. g., Helvering v. Horst, 311 U. S. 112, 118; Harrison v. Schaffner, 312 U. S. 579; Helvering v. Clifford, 309 U. S. 331, 335; Cf. Commissioner v. Estate of Church, 335 U. S. 632. Spiegel v. Commissioner, 335 U. S. 701. Here, Wilhelm von Opel, like the American taxpayers in those cases and for closely parallel reasons, sought to rid himself of formal legal title in order to avoid the impact of governmental measures—the German foreign exchange laws—while keeping as many strings to his property as he possibly could. In like circumstances our courts have not hesitated to cut across the legal refinements of title and conveyancing to find ownership in the grantor who has withheld substantial enjoyment and control from his grantee. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit has aptly observed that while in the law of trusts "the cutting edge of the pertinent rule must be razor-sharp," in income tax law "the helpful image is rather that of a broad-sword," Commissioner v. Buck, 120 F. 2d 775, 777 (C. A. 2). A fortiori, the broadsword is the proper tool to use in applying the Trading With the Enemy Act, which seeks to safeguard national interests, even more vital than those of the fisc.

III

ADDITIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES CONFIRM THE CONCLUSION THAT PETITIONER WAS AN ENEMY

In addition to the factors which have been discussed, the district court relied upon two additional elements of enemy taint. The Court of Appeals found it unnecessary to consider them, since in its opinion petitioner was clearly an enemy by reason of enemy ownership and control. While we agree that such ownership and control, without more, establish petitioner's enemy status, we believe the matters referred to clearly afford additional support for the result below.

A. The enemy taint of Fritz von Opel

As already indicated, the only persons asserted to have an interest in petitioner are Wilhelm and Marta von Opel and their son Fritz. Wilhelm and Marta were admittedly enemies. In addition, we also believe that any interest which Fritz von Opel owned is itself enemy tainted.

Fritz, a German by birth, acquired Liechtensteinean citizenship in a most unusual manner some time after the outbreak of World War II in Europe. It was, as he described it, a passport which he bought for $10,000 and with which he was able to "fool the English" (R. 1146). Elsewhere he spoke of it as acquired for business reasons (Def. Ex. 95, R. 2295). The statutory requirement of three years' residence was waived and the additional requirement of an oath of allegiance was ignored. In fact, Fritz von Opel had never lived in Liechtenstein and knew very little about that country. Thereafter, although ostensibly a neutral citizen, he spoke of himself as a German, cheered the progress of the German armies in the war and was pleased that some of his inventions were aiding that effort (supra, p. 25). The district court thus properly characterized his Liechtensteinean citizenship as a "technical status" (R. 48) and a "technical form" (R. 49).

In addition, the court found that to the extent Fritz carried on activities on behalf of petitioner, he did so under the guidance and control of his father, Wilhelm von Opel (Fdg. 45, R. 59). This guidance and control rested not merely on the family relationship but, more importantly, was understood to be part of the 1931 arrangements by which Wilhelm had given Fritz whatever interest Fritz may be deemed to have had in petitioner. On the findings, Fritz was as much his father's agent as was Frankenberg. Indeed, in selling the Opel shares, Fritz acted upon power of attorney from his father; thereafter, in dealing with petitioner's affairs, he acted under powers of attorney from petitioner, signed by Frankenberg (Def. Ex. 8, R. 1985, 2009–2010).[n] And he let the shares held formally in his name be voted by Frankenberg (see p. 37, n. 20, supra), a clear indication that such powers of management as he might have had were at his father's disposal.

In such circumstances it is unrealistic in the extreme to argue that such interest as Fritz may have had in petitioner is an independent neutral interest which precludes the retention of the vested assets. The interests of father and son were inseparably united, with the father unquestionably dominating the corporation. Fritz was, indeed, part of the apparatus through which his father controlled and administered petitioner.

B. Petitioner's doing of business in Hungary

Section 2 of the Act defines "enemy" as including any corporation incorporated outside the United States and doing business within enemy territory. The original Committee Report on this provision indicates that it was intended to include within this definition a foreign corporation "having a branch or ageney actively conducting business within" an enemy country (S. Rept. No. 113, 65th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 4). It was also made clear at the time the Act was debated in Congress that the condemnation of enemy should apply even though the doing of business in enemy territory constituted only a minor part of the total business of the corporation (55 Cong. Rec. 4843).

[n] While there is no suggestion that Fritz ever revolted against the "guidance and direction" of Wilhelm and Frankenberg, it may be noted that their control over him did not rest merely on his acquiescence; in addition they held the purse strings. Fritz' contractual right to 20% of dividends was valueless unless petitioner declared dividends—which Wilhelm and Frankenberg, through their practical control of the corporation, could control. In fact, petitioner's income was received not as dividends but as salary and expenses, something even more clearly within Frankenberg's control as managing director. See p. 10, n. 3, supra.

It cannot be disputed that if petitioner, after December 13, 1941, had itself mined and shipped bauxite from Hungary, it would have been doing business in enemy territory and would have been an enemy under Section 2 of the Act. Swiss Insurance Co. v. Miller, 267 U. S. 42. Under the 1941 amendment to the Act and this Court's previous opinion in this case, the fact that a petitioner conducted such business through a wholly owned corporate subsidiary should constitute another aspect of enemy taint. This is particularly true in view of the abundance of evidence that, far from being a passive investment of petitioner, Transdanubia's activities were actively dominated and controlled by petitioner and its agents. Thus, Fritz von Opel, acting for petitioner, made numerous trips to Hungary to conduct Transdanubia's affairs and carried on a fairly extensive correspondence for Transdanubia. He likewise negotiated the contract which obligated Transdanubia to ship bauxite to Giulini Bros. of Germany through 1942. In addition, petitioner itself guaranteed a loan to Transdanubia and repeatedly requested and secured extensions of the loan and the guarantee during the war."

In the light of these circumstances, we think that the district court properly held that the activities of petitioner's Hungarian subsidiary in enemy territory formed at least an additional ground for characterizing petitioner as an enemy.

IV

PETITIONER'S CLAIM TO PARTIAL RECOVERY IS WITHOUT SUBSTANCE

Petitioner's claim to partial recovery (Brief pp. 25-29) rests on the same mistaken assumption of facts as does its argument on lack of taint. Petitioner concedes that if it had been "subject to command and actual control by the enemy" it could recover nothing in this action (Brief p. 26). But it asserts that the entire ownership and control were in a neutral, and that the enemy's rights were limited to those created by a supposed "escrow agreement" or "mortgage" or "pledge" (Brief, pp. 26, 28, 29). Thus, in effect, it reargues the question of taint.

Upon analysis, moreover, it is apparent that what petitioner is asking for in this portion of [22] Presumably petitioner regards its participation in Transdanubia's affairs as a typical activity of a neutral corporation "acquired for the purpose of precluding the enemy from obtaining or utilizing its assets" (Br., p. 24).

its brief is not partial recovery but complete recovery. It urges that the entire vested property should be returned and that the Custodian should be relegated to demanding dividends during the lifetime of the Opel parents, and to exercising "such voice in the management as the law permitted." (Brief, pp. 26–27). This is to be done "without taking the assets" of petitioner (Brief, p. 10). The suggestion is purely illusory. Petitioner fails to explain how the Custodian, having surrendered all of petitioner's properties that are subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, could either compel a Swiss corporation to issue dividends to him or enforce in the Swiss courts a claim to management rights in the Swiss corporation.[33]

If it could be assumed, however, that petitioner is seeking a return of some proportionate part of the vested property, any such claim would be subject to two fatal infirmities. In the first place, no such claim was reasonably presented in the trial court. The case was tried by petitioner on an all-or-nothing theory. The complaint and the pretrial order contain no suggestion of a claim for partial recovery.[34] Evidence was taken for 21 days, during which no suggestion of such a claim was made and no evidence bearing on such a claim offered. During the closing arguments, counsel for petitioner flatly admitted that it would lose the case if the Opel parents owned the interests which petitioner in the "Gold case" had asserted the parents owned (Tr. 2677–2678).[35] Still later, counsel for petitioner suggested for the first time that even if enemy interests were found to exist, a partial recovery could be awarded. (Tr. 2711–2712.) Judge Laws expressed great surprise at this new contention (Tr. 2711); he pointed out that in the absence of evidence concerning the divisibility of the interests he would be unable to shape a decree directing such a separation (Tr. 2951–4, 2959–61). Even at this point, petitioner neither moved to amend the pleadings nor offered additional evidence. Accordingly, the trial judge refused to consider the claim, pointing out that had a claim to such a partial recovery been seasonably made,

[33] In general the Swiss courts have refused to give any effect to the trading-with-the-enemy legislation of the belligerent powers and any acts taken under such legislation. See the decisions of the Swiss Supreme Court in Guige, Déchandon, Auclair et Cie, contre Stromeyer (1941), 40 BGE II, 483; La Nationale contre Biermann (1916), Revue de Droit International Privé (1917), 348; Bachert & Cie. contre Zurich (1927), 53 BGE III, 54.

[34] The amended complaint (R. 1–6) simply alleged that plaintiff had at no time been an enemy or a national of a designated enemy country and that the vested properties had at no time been "owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, in whole or in part" (R. 5, 6) by any such enemy or national. The pre-trial order (R. 10) recited that (aside from certain issues as to Transdanubia) "the only issue of fact * * * is whether the stock of the plaintiff is owned by or the plaintiff is otherwise controlled by enemy aliens."

the Government might well have presented "other factual information and develop legal arguments which only partially have been made in this case." (R. 51)[36]

Plainly, this ruling was within the discretion of a trial judge charged with the conduct of a lengthy and complicated trial (Cf. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. v. Martin, 174 F. 2d 602 (C. A. 6); Moiger v. Johnson, 180 F. 2d 777 (C. A. D. C.)), particularly since the ruling did not prejudice any contentions that may be made by Fritz von Opel in suits filed by him (Fritz von Opel v. McGrath, Civ. 50–70 (S. D. N. Y.); Fritz von Opel v. Clark, Civ. Action No. 1910–49 D. D. C.); Fritz von Opel v. Clark, Civ. Action No. 1923–49 (D. D. C.)).

In the second place, there is no separate neutral interest. Petitioner was beneficially owned and controlled by enemies (see pp. 31–43, supra). As [36] Some of the problems to which proof of matters of fact and of foreign law, and arguments, would presumably have been addressed are these: Is the separability of the respective interests determined by the laws of the United States, the situs of the vested assets, or the laws of Germany which governed the 1931 agreement, or the laws of Switzerland where petitioner was incorporated? If the interests were separable, how, and by what law, were they to be evaluated? Could the interests of Wilhelm and Marta be measured by whatever standards might have been established for ordinary usufructuaries or would Wilhelm's complete dominance in the affairs of petitioner make these standards inappropriate? Could a decree be so fashioned as to avoid that any property returned inure to the benefit of the enemy interest?

such it was an enemy, lacking capacity under Section 9 (a) of the Act either to bring suit or to recover.[37] And petitioner concedes that partial recovery may not be awarded to a corporation which is controlled by enemies. See also the Government's brief in No. 172, Kaufman v. Société Internationale, etc. In addition, Fritz von Opel, the asserted neutral, was a neutral citizen as a matter of "technical" form only (R. 49); his roots and sympathies continued to be with Germany. He not only acceded to his father's control of petitioner; he served as his father's agent and in his father's interest in the conduct of petitioner's affairs, acting subject at all times to the directions of his father and his father's agent, Frankenberg (supra, pp. 13, 33). Having been a part of the enemy control of petitioner, he cannot now divorce himself from it.

[37] Section 9 (a) provides that "any person not an enemy or ally of enemy" may file a claim and bring an action thereunder, and may recover the property to which he establishes that he is entitled.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons the judgment below should be affirmed.

v.

J. HOWARD MCGRATH, ATTORNEY GENERAL, AS SUCCESSOR TO THE ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

MOTION TO TRANSFER FROM THE SUMMARY DOCKET TO THE APPELLATE DOCKET AND TO ALLOW ONE HOUR OF ARGUMENT TO EACH SIDE

The Solicitor General, on behalf of respondent J. Howard McGrath, Attorney General, as successor to the Alien Property Custodian, respectfully moves that the above-entitled case be transferred from the summary docket to the appellate docket and that one hour of argument be allowed to each side.

1. The petition, which was granted without limitation, raises a number of contentions relating to the question whether petitioner, a neutral corporation, was enemy tainted and hence disqualified from recovering property vested pursuant to the Trading with the Enemy Act. The present case is the only one which has reached this Court after trial of the facts on questions of enemy taint. The trial was a lengthy one, resulting a record totalling over 2,000 printed pages. The evidence at the trial covered a series of transactions and relationships involving persons and properties in five different countries and extending over more than 20 years.

The various legal contentions advanced by petitioner as to the scope of the doctrine of taint are necessarily to be decided on the whole record, not on a hypothetical statement of facts (see Pet. p. 2); their decision requires consideration of the incidents of ownership possessed by and the control exercised by the enemy Opel parents over the petitioner, the relationships between those parents and their assertedly neutral son, and a variety of other circumstances. It requires an understanding, for example, of the nature and purposes of the 1931 transaction resulting in the execution of an instrument of gift from the Opel parents to their son, the legal incidents under German law of the usufruct reserved to the Opel parents by that instrument, the practical control exercised by Hans Frankenberg, as Wilhelm von Opel's agent, over petitioner's affairs and over Fritz von Opel, and the function which all of these arrangements served for Wilhelm von Opel in view of the existing German foreign exchange regulations. Moreover, even a brief exposition of the underlying facts is rendered difficult by the circumstance that, despite the clarity and explicitness of the 56 findings of fact made by the District Court, the parties have repeatedly differed in important respects as to the interpretation of and inferences to be drawn from those findings. These differences are also reflected in petitioner's specification of 12 errors to be urged (Pet. pp. 9-10), many of which are essentially factual in nature.

A further question sought to be raised is whether, assuming petitioner to be enemy tainted, recovery can be awarded in this action of a proportionate part of the properties in suit, representing an asserted fractional interest of a neutral stockholder. This question may involve an issue which will also be presented in Kaufman v. Societe Internationale, etc., and J. Howard McGrath, No. 172. There are, however, a number of other issues on this aspect of the case which are not presented by Kaufman, and which in our view are decisive of this case. These include whether the District Court abused its discretion in declining to consider the claim to a fractional interest as having been suggested for the first time during the closing arguments following a lengthy trial, whether there is in this action a proper party plaintiff to present a claim to recovery of a fractional interest; and whether on the facts of this case there is any independent neutral interest to support such a fractional recovery.

This case may have been placed on the summary docket because of an apparent similarity to the Kaufman case. At most, however, the two cases may have but one point in common, and that is a point which, for a number of reasons, we believe this Court need never reach in the present case. It is, moreover, a point which the District Court expressly refused to consider and which the Court of Appeals did not think it necessary even to mention until its opinion on rehearing. In the event that full argument is permitted in this case it will be the Government's intention to devote almost its entire time to those issues raised on the present record which do not duplicate issues presented by the Kaufman case. We believe that a full hour's argument is needed for adequate presentation of those issues.

Respectfully submitted,

PHILIP B. PERLMAN,
Solicitor General.
